

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

BOOK XVI.

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE WITH FULL ANNOTATION
BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, HENRY
P. FARNHAM, ASSISTANT.

1892.

EXTRA ANNOTATED EDITION

WITH L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1905.

122078

JUL 29 1942

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year eighteen hundred ninety two, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred five, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

E. R. ANDREWS PRINTING COMPANY, Rochester, N. Y.

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK 16,

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.

Allen v. Allen (95 Cal. 184)	646	Daniel v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (36 W. Va. 397)	888
v. Kelly (17 R. I. 731)	798	Darling v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. (17 R. I. 708)	648
Archer v. Salinas City (93 Cal. 43)	145	Davis v. Bronson (2 N. Dak. 300)	655
Ar Foon v. Wedger (156 Mass. 462)	395	Delafoile v. State (54 N. J. L. (25 Vroom) 381)	500
Attorney-General, Gas & Electric Light Comrs. v. Walworth Light & P. Co. (157 Mass. 86)	399	Detroit v. Rentz (91 Mich. 78)	59
Bacot, Ex parte (36 S. C. 125)	586	Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (97 Mich. 329)	842
Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (91 Mich. 298)	154	Dougherty v. Austin (94 Cal. 601)	161
Ballard v. Burton (64 Vt. 387)	664	Dunlap v. Steere (92 Cal. 844)	861
Barnes v. Barnes (95 Cal. 171)	660	Edgerton v. Edgerton (12 Mont. 122)	94
Barrett v. Rockport Ice Co. (84 Me. 155)	774	Eidam v. Finnegan (45 Minn. 53)	507
Bates v. Babcock (95 Cal. 479)	745	Fay v. Pacific Improv. Co. (93 Cal. 258)	188
Bingel v. Volz (142 Ill. 214)	321	Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Fish (82 Wis. 546)	453
Blue Ridge Marble Co., Re (51 Fed. Rep. 15)	90	Fisher v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co. (22 Or. 533)	519
Blum v. Schwartz (— Tex. —)	668	Flack v. Gosnell (76 Md. 88)	547
Board of Improvement v. School Dist. of Little Rock (56 Ark. 354)	418	Flint v. Hutchinson Smoke Burner Co. (110 Mo. 493)	243
Board of Street Opening & Imp., Re (183 N. Y. 329)	180	Florida S. R. Co. v. Hirst (30 Fla. 1)	631
Bourget v. Cambridge (156 Mass. 391)	605	Fond du Lac Water Co. v. Fond du Lac (82 Wis. 322)	561
Bowers v. Smith (111 Mo. 45)	754	Frank v. Fraylor (180 Ind. 145)	115
Boyd v. Selma (96 Ala. 144)	729	Frerer v. People (141 Ill. 171)	492
Brown v. Republican Mountain Silver Mines (17 Colo. 421)	426	Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (150 Pa. 50)	554
Browne v. Boston Water Power Co. (157 Mass. 24)	353	Gay v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. (94 Ala. 303)	564
Buckley v. Humason (50 Minn. 195)	423	Georgia, S. & F. R. Co. v. Asmore (88 Ga. 529)	53
Burnham v. Wedger (156 Mass. 462)	395	German American Ins. Co. v. Commercial F. Ins. Co. (95 Ala. 469)	291
Butler v. Joyce (9 Mackey, 191)	205	Giddings v. Blacker (93 Mich. 1)	402
Central Trust Co. v. Marietta & N. G. R. Co. (51 Fed. Rep. 15)	90	Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salingier (56 Ark. 294)	526
Chase v. Jemmett (8 Utah, 281)	805	Gillespie v. Lincoln (35 Neb. 34)	349
Church v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (50 Minn. 218)	861	Glass v. Freeburg (50 Minn. 386)	335
Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen (49 Ohio St. 230)	674	Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. Haney School Furniture Co. (92 Mich. 558)	721
Clemans v. Supreme Assembly R. S. of G. F. (181 N. Y. 485)	38	Gratiot v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (116 Mo. 450)	189
Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. (44 La. Ann. 692)	43	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (84 Tex. 678)	318
Coleman v. New Orleans Ins. Co. (49 Ohio St. 810)	174	v. Looney (85 Tex. 158)	471
Columbus v. Columbus (82 Wis. 374)	695	Haeussler v. Missouri Iron Co. (110 Mo. 188)	220
Com. v. Allen (148 Pa. 353)	148	Hart v. Cole (156 Mass. 475)	557
v. Graham (157 Mass. 78)	578	Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. (3 Wash. 592)	808
v. Graves (155 Mass. 163)	256	Head v. Hornblower (156 Mass. 458)	510
v. Roberts (155 Mass. 281)	400	Heffron v. Detroit City R. Co. (93 Mich. 406)	845
Cooper v. United States Mut. Acc. Asso. (183 N. Y. 334)	138	Henderson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (144 Pa. 461)	299
Cotting v. De Sartiges (17 R. I. 668)	367
Craig v. State (49 Ohio St. 415)	358
Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. (156 Mass. 320)	490
Crocker v. Smith (94 Ala. 295)	576
Daly v. Wise (182 N. Y. 306)	236

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES

State, ex rel. Mize, v. McElroy (44 La. Ann. 796) -	278	Union Stove & Mach. Works v. Caswell (48 Kan. 689) -	85
Olson, v. Brown (50 Minn. 833) -	691	Vermillion County Counrs. v. Chipps (181 Ind. 56) -	228
Ransom, v. Black (54 N. J. L. (25 Vroom) 446) -	769	Vincennes v. Citizens Gas Light & C. Co. (132 Ind. 114) -	485
Sherman, v. George (22 Or. 142) -	787	Vorels v. Nussbaum (131 Ind. 267) -	45
Wiesenthal, v. Denny (4 Wash. 135) -	214	Walton Plow Co. v. Campbell (35 Neb. 173) -	468
Steeg v. St. Paul City R. Co. (50 Minn. 149) -	379	Waters v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (110 N. C. 338) -	834
Sterger v. Van Siclen (132 N. Y. 499) -	640	Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co. (48 Minn. 140) -	281
Stever v. People's Mut. Acc. Ins. Asso. (150 Pa. 132) -	446	Wilson v. Trenton (53 N. J. L. (24 Vroom) 645) -	200
Street Opening & Imp. Board of New York, Re (133 N. Y. 329) -	180	Wood v. McGrath (150 Pa. 451) -	715
Tappan v. Boston Water Power Co. (157 Mass. 24) -	353	Woodard v. Woodard (36 S. C. 118) -	743
Tittman v. Thornton (107 Mo. 500) -	410	Woodruff v. Painter (150 Pa. 91) -	451
Tufts v. Tufts (8 Utah. 142) -	482	Wronkow v. Oakley (133 N. Y. 505) -	209
Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lapsley (4 U. S. App. 542, 51 Fed. Rep. 174) -	800	Younger v. Judah (111 Mo. 303) -	553

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XVI

A.
Allen v. Allen (Cal.)	646	Boston Water Power Co., Browne v. (Mass.)	853
v. Kelly (17 R. L. —)	798	Tappan v. (Mass.)	853
Com., v. (Pa.)	148	Bourget v. Cambridge (Mass.)	605
Ann Arbor & Y. S. R. Co., Nichols v. (Mich.)	871	Bowers v. Smith (Mo.)	754
Arbuckle, Lewis v. (Iowa)	677	Boyd v. Selma (Ala.)	729
Archer v. Salinas City (93 Cal. 43)	145	Bradley, People, ex rel., v. Shaw (183 N. Y. 498)	606
Ar Foon v. Wedger (Mass.)	895	Bridges, People v. (Ill.)	684
Asmore, Georgia, S. & F. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	53	Brierfield Coal & I. Co., Gay v. (Ala.)	564
Atlantic & P. R. Co., Lutz v. (N. M.)	819	Bronson, Davis v. (N. Dak.)	655
Attorney-General, Gas & Electric Light Comra. v. Walworth Light & P. Co. (Mass.)	898	Brown v. Republican Mountain Silver Mines (Colo.)	426
State, ex rel., v. Fidelity & C. Ins. Co. (49 Ohio St. —)	611	State, Olson v. (Minn.)	691
Austin, Dougherty v. (Cal.)	161	Browne v. Boston Water Power Co. (Mass.)	853
B.		Buckley v. Humason (Minn.)	423
Babcock, Bates v. (Cal.)	745	Bucks, Moyer v. (Ind.)	231
Bacot, Ex parte (S. C.)	586	Burnham v. Wedger (Mass.)	395
Bailey, Mt. Mansfield Hotel Co. v. (Vt.)	295	Burton, Ballard v. (Vt.)	664
Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (Mich.)	154	Butler v. Joyce (D. C.)	205
Ballantyne, Jenkins v. (Utah)	689	J.
Ballard v. Burton (Vt.)	664	Cambridge, Bourget v. (Mass.)	605
Bank, First Nat., of Glassboro, Reeve v. (N. J.)	143	Campbell, Walton Plow Co. v. (Neb.)	468
National, of New Castle, Nicholson v. (Ky.)	223	Carter, People, ex rel., v. Rice (N. Y.)	836
Barnes v. Barnes (Cal.)	660	Caswell, Union Stove & Mach. Works v. (Kan.)	85
Barrett v. Rockport Ice Co. (84 Me. 155)	774	Central Trust Co. v. Marietta & N. G. R. Co. (51 Fed. Rep. 15)	90
Bates v. Babcock (Cal.)	745	Chase v. Jemmett (Utah)	805
Bell, Morgan v. (Wash.)	614	Chesapeake & O. R. Co., Daniel v. (W. Va.)	333
Bigelow, Sontag v. (Ill.)	826	Manning v. (W. Va.)	271
Bingel v. Volz (Ill.)	821	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., Church v. (Minn.)	861
Black, State, Ransom, v. (N. J.)	769	Chippa, Vermillion County Comra. v. (Ind.)	228
Blacker, Giddings v. (Mich.)	402	Church v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.)	861
Houghton County Suprs. v. (Mich.)	482	Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen (49 Ohio St. —)	674
McPherson v. (Mich.)	475	Citizen's Gas Light & C. Co., Vincennes v. (Ind.)	495
Blue Ridge Marble Co., Re, (51 Fed. Rep. 15)	90	Clemons v. Supreme Assembly R. S. of G. F. (131 N. Y. 485)	33
Blum v. Schwartz (Tex.)	668	Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. (44 La. Ann. —)	43
Board of Assessors, Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. (La.)	56	Clough, Leonard v. (N. Y.)	805
Board of Improvement v. School Dist. of Little Rock (Ark.)	418
Board of Street Opening & Imp., Re, (183 N. Y. 829)	180

Cole, Hart v. (Mass.)	557	Fitz Henry, Lally v. (Iowa)	681
Coleman v. New Orleans Ins. Co. (49 Ohio St. —)	174	Flack v. Gosnell (Md.)	547
People, Winchester, v. (N. Y.)	183	Flint v. Hutchinson Smoke Burner Co. (Mo.)	243
Colfax, People, ex rel., v. Maxton (189 Ill. 806)	178	Flint & P. M. R. Co., Baker v. (Mich.)	154
Columbus v. Columbus (Wis.)	695	Florida S. R. Co. v. Hirst (Fla.)	631
Commercial F. Ins. Co., German American Ins. Co. v. (Ala.)	201	Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac Water Co. v. (Wis.)	581
Com. v. Allen (Pa.)	148	Fond du Lac Water Co. v. Fond du Lac (Wis.)	581
v. Graham (Mass.)	578	Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co., People, Kunze, v. (Mich.)	752
v. Graves (Mass.)	256	Fox, Sheldon v. (Kan.)	257
v. Roberts (Mass.)	400	Frank v. Fraylor (Ind.)	115
Cooper v. United States Mut. Acc. Asso. (183 N. Y. 834)	188	Fraylor, Frank v. (Ind.)	115
Lindsay v. (Ala.)	813	Freeburg, Glass v. (Minn.)	335
Cotting v. De Sartiges (17 R. I. —)	367	Front Street Cable R. Co., Hawkins v. (Wash.)	808
Craddick, People, ex rel., Shelbyville Water Co. v. (Ill.)	505	Frorer v. People (Ill.)	492
Craig v. State (49 Ohio St. —)	358
State, Hartford, v. (Ind.)	688
Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. (Mass.)	490
Crocker v. Smith (Ala.)	576
Curley, Southard v. (N. Y.)	561
Cutshall, State v. (N. C.)	180

D.

Daly v. Wise (183 N. Y. 306)	286
Daniel v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.)	838
Darling v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. (17 R. I. —)	643
Davis v. Bronson (N. Dak.)	655
Decker, Langenberg v. (Ind.)	108
Delafoile v. State (N. J.)	500
Denny, State, Wiesenthal, v. (Wash.)	214
De Sartiges, Cotting v. (R. I.)	367
Detroit v. Rentz (Mich.)	59
Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., Sanborn v. (Mich.)	119
Detroit City R. Co., Heffron v. (Mich.)	845
Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., Dewey v. (Mich.)	842
Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (Mich.)	842
Dougher, Rothschild v. (Tex.)	719
Dougherty v. Austin (94 Cal. 601)	161
Dunlap v. Steere (92 Cal. 344)	361

E.

Edgerton v. Edgerton (Mont.)	94
Eidam v. Finnegan (Minn.)	507

F.

Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Great Creek Coal Co. (50 Fed. Rep. 481)	603
Fay v. Pacific Improv. Co. (93 Cal. 253)	188
Fidelity & C. Ins. Co., State, Attorney-General, v. (Ohio)	611
Finnegan, Eidam v. (Minn.)	507
First Nat. Bank of Glassboro, Reeve v. (N. J.)	143
Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Fish (Wis.)	453
Fisher v. Oregon, S. L. & U. N. R. Co. (Or.)	519
Fish, Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. (Wis.)	453
16 L. R. A.

Galvin, Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. (Fla.)	837
Gandolfo v. Hartman (49 Fed. Rep. 181)	277
Gas & Electric Light Comrs., Attorney-General, ex rel., v. Walworth Light & P. Co. (Mass.)	398
Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (150 Pa. 50)	554
Gay v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. (Ala.)	564
George, State, Sherman, v. (Or.)	737
Georgia, S. & F. R. Co. v. Asmore (Ga.)	53
Gerald, Loker v. (Mass.)	497
German American Ins. Co. v. Commercial F. Ins. Co. (Ala.)	291
Giddings v. Blacker (Mich.)	402
Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salingier (Ark.)	526
Gillespie v. Lincoln (Neb.)	349
Glass v. Freeburg (Minn.)	335
Glover, Holley v. (S. C.)	776
Gosnell, Flack v. (Md.)	547
Graham, Com. v. (Mass.)	578
Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. Haney School Furniture Co. (Mich.)	721
Gratlot v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.)	189
Graves, Com. v. (Mass.)	256
Great Creek Coal Co., Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Ill.)	603
Great Northern R. Co., Hendrickson v. (Minn.)	261
Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (Tex.)	818
v. Looney (Tex.)	471

G.

Haeussler v. Missouri Iron Co. (Mo.)	220
Haney School Furniture Co., Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. (Mich.)	721
Hart v. Cole (Mass.)	557
Hartford, State, ex rel., v. Craig (Ind.)	688
Hartman, Gandolfo v. (U. S. C. C. Cal.)	277
Hasledahl, State v. (N. Dak.)	150
Hastings, State, ex rel., v. Smith (Neb.)	791
Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. (3 Wash. 592)	808
Hayden, Seattle Board of Trade v. (Wash.)	530
Head v. Hornblower (Mass.)	510

H.

Heffron v. Detroit City R. Co. (Mich.)	345
Henderson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (144 Pa. 461)	299
Hendrickson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.)	261
Henry, Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	318
Hesseltine v. McLaughlin (Wash.)	699
Herr v. Lebanon (Pa.)	106
Hewitt, State, Hitchcock, v. (S. Dak.)	413
Hirst, Florida S. R. Co. v. (Fla.)	631
Hitchcock, State, ex rel. , v. Hewitt (S. Dak.)	413
Hobbs, Ingalls v. (Mass.)	51
Hoeffling v. San Antonio (Tex.)	608
Holley v. Glover (S. C.)	776
Horn v. Oneida County Supra. (N. Y.)	896
Hornblower, Head v. (Mass.)	510
Horsting, Ryder v. (Ind.)	186
Houghton County Supra. v. Blacker (Mich.)	482
Hoyt v. People (Ill.)	289
Hughes v. Torgerson (Ala.)	600
Hull v. State, Rollins (Fla.)	808
Humason, Buckley v. (Minn.)	428
Hutchinson Smoke Burner Co., Flint v. (Mo.)	243

I.

Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Minor (Miss.)	627
Illinois Watch Case Co. v. Pearson (Ill.)	429
Ingalls v. Hobbs (Mass.)	51
Insurance Company, Commercial F., German American Ins. Co. v. (Ala.)	291
Fidelity & C., State, Attorney-General, v. (Ohio St.)	611
German American v. Commercial F. Ins. Co. (Ala.)	291
Liverpool & L. & G. v. Board of Assessors (44 La. Ann. —)	56
New Orleans, Coleman v. (Ohio)	174
International & G. N. R. Co., McCarn v. (Tex.)	39

J.

Jackson, Mann v. (Me.)	707
Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Galvin (Fla.)	337
Jacobs, Mutual Acc. Asso. v. (Ill.)	516
Jemmett, Chase v. (Utah)	805
Jenkins v. Ballantyne (Utah)	689
Joannin v. Ogilvie (Minn.)	376
Jones v. Portland (88 Mich. 598)	487
Jordan, Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. (Miss.)	251
Joyce, Butler v. (D. C.)	205
Judah, Younger v. (Mo.)	558

K.

Kassen, Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. (Ohio St.)	674
Kelly, Allen v. (R. I.)	798
Kelly v. Lynchburg & D. R. Co. (110 N. C. 481)	514
Kunze, People, ex rel. , v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. (Mich.)	752
Kyle, Reece v. (Ohio)	723
16 L. R. A.

L.

Lally v. Fitz Henry (Iowa)	681
v. Sullivan (Iowa)	681
Lally, Re , (Iowa)	681
Langenberg v. Decker (Ind.)	108
Lapsley, Union P. R. Co. v. (U. S. C. C. App. 8th C.)	800
Larson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.)	330
Latah County v. Peterson (Idaho)	81
Lavalle v. Société St. Jean Baptiste de Woonsocket (17 R. I. —)	892
Lebanon, Herr v. (Pa.)	106
Leonard v. Clough (133 N. Y. 292)	305
Levine, Lowenberg v. (Cal.)	159
Lewis v. Arbuckle (Iowa)	677
v. Miller (Iowa)	677
Lincoln, Gillespie v. (Neb.)	349
Lindsay v. Cooper (Ala.)	813
Little Rock Street Grading & P. Dist. No. 46 v. Little Rock School Dist. (Ark.)	418
Little Rock School Dist. Little Rock Street Grading & P. Dist. No. 46 v. (Ark.)	418
Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors (44 La. Ann. —)	56
Loker v. Gerald (Mass.)	497
Looney, Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	471
Louisiana Electric Light Co., Clements v. (La.)	43
Louisville & N. R. Co., Manning v. (Ala.)	55
v. Northington (Tenn.)	268
Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Jordan (Miss.)	251
Lovett v. State (Fla.)	313
Lowenberg v. Levine (93 Cal. 215)	159
Lutz v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. (N. M.)	819
Lynchburg & D. R. Co., Kelly v. (N. C.)	514
Lysons, State, ex rel. , v. Ruff (Wash.)	140

M.

McCabe, Seager v. (Mich.)	247
McCarn v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex.)	39
McElroy, State, Mize, v. (La.)	278
McGrath, Wood v. (Pa.)	715
McKinney v. State (Wyo.)	710
McLaughlin, Hesseltine v. (Wash.)	699
McLaughlin's Estate, Re (Wash.)	699
Macomber, Parker v. (R. I.)	858
McPherson v. Blacker (Mich.)	475
Malden, Stanwood v. (Mass.)	591
Manhattan R. Co., Palmeri v. (N. Y.)	186
Mann v. Jackson (84 Me. 400)	707
Manning v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.)	271
v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ala.)	55
Marietta & N. G. R. Co., Central Trust Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)	90
Mason v. Wedger (Mass.)	395
Maxton, People, Colfax, v. (Ill.)	178
Metropolitan Street R. Co., Larson v. (Mo.)	330
Miller, Lewis v. (Iowa)	677
v. Stoddard (Minn.)	288
Minor, Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. (Miss.)	627
Minot v. Russ (Mass.)	510
Missouri Iron Co., Haeussler v. (Mo.)	220
Missouri Pac. R. Co., Gratiot v. (Mo.)	189
Mize, State, ex rel. , v. McElroy (La.)	278

Monroe County Supra., People, Pond, v. (N. Y.)	886	People's Gas Co. v. Tyner (Ind.)	443
Moore, Rice v. (Kan.)	198	People's Mut. Acc. Ins. Asso., Stever v. (Pa.)	446
v. Rollin (Va.)	625	Peterson, Latah County v. (Idaho)	81
Morgan v. Bell (8 Wash. 554)	614	Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Henderson v. (Pa.)	299
Morning Journal Asso. v. Rutherford (51 Fed. Rep. 518)	808	Phillips, Sayre v. (Pa.)	49
Morrow, Ross v. (Tex.)	542	Spooner v. (Conn.)	461
Mt. Mansfield Hotel Co. v. Bailey (Vt.)	295	Pine v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	847
Moyer v. Bucks (Ind.)	231	Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State (Ohio)	880
Mullen v. Oregon, S. L. & U. N. R. Co. (Or.)	593	Pond, People, ex rel. , v. Monroe County Supra. (N. Y.)	836
Murphy, State v. (R. I.)	550	Sparrow v. (Minn.)	103
Murray, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. (Ark.)	787	Portland, Jones v. (Mich.)	437
Mutual Acc. Asso. v. Jacobs (Ill.)	516	Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	203

N.

National Bank of New Castle, Nicholson v. (Ky.)	223
New Orleans Ins. Co., Coleman v. (Ohio)	174
New York, P. & B. R. Co., Darling v. (R. I.)	648
New York Street Opening & Imp. Board, Re (183 N. Y. 329)	180
Nichols v. Ann Arbor & Y. S. R. Co. (87 Mich. 861)	371
Nicholson v. National Bank of New Castle (Ky.)	223
Northern Cent. R. Co. v. O'Conner (Md.)	449
Northington, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Tenn.)	263
Nussbaum, Voreis v. (Ind.)	45

O.

Oakley, Wronkow v. (N. Y.)	209
O'Conner, Northern Cent. R. Co. v. (Md.)	449
Ogilvie, Joannin v. (Minn.)	376
Olson, State, ex rel. , v. Brown (Minn.)	691
Oneida County Supra., Horn v. (N. Y.)	836
Oregon, S. L. & U. N. R. Co., Fisher v. (Or.)	519
Mullen v. (Or.)	593
Skottowe v. (Or.)	593

P.

Pacific Improv. Co., Fay v. (Cal.)	188
Painter, Woodruff v. (Pa.)	451
Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co. (183 N. Y. 261)	186
Parker v. Macomber (17 R. I. —)	858
Pearson, Illinois Watch Case Co. v. (Ill.)	429
Pennsylvania R. Co., Gates v. (Pa.)	554
People v. Bridges (Ill.)	684
Frorer v. (Ill.)	492
Hoyt v. (Ill.)	289
ex rel. , Bradley, v. Shaw (183 N. Y. 493)	606
Carter, v. Rice (N. Y.)	836
Colfax, v. Maxton (189 Ill. 806)	178
Craddick, Shelbyville Water Co. v. (Ill.)	505
Kunze, v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. (Mich.)	752
Pond, v. Monroe County Supra. (N. Y.)	836
Winchester, v. Coleman (183 N. Y. 279)	188

Q.

Quinlan, Sizer v. (Wis.)	512
--------------------------	-----

R.

Railroad Company, Ann Arbor & Y. S., Nichols v. (Mich.)	871
Atlantic & P. Lutz v. (N. M.)	819
Chesapeake & O., Daniel v. (W. Va.)	883
Chesapeake & O., Manning v. (W. Va.)	271
Chicago, M. & St. P., Church v. (Minn.)	861
Cincinnati, H. & D., v. Kassen (49 Ohio-St. —)	674
Detroit, B. C. & A., Sanborn v. (Mich.)	119
Detroit City, Heffron v. (Mich.)	845
Detroit, G. H. & M., Dewey v. (Mich.)	843
Flint & P. M., Baker v. (Mich.)	154
Florida S., v. Hirst (Fla.)	631
Ft. Wayne & E., People, Kunze, v. (Mich.)	752
Front Street Cable, Hawkins v. (Wash.)	808
Georgia, S. & F., v. Asmore (Ga.)	53
Great Northern, Hendrickson v. (Minn.)	261
Gulf, C. & S. F., v. Henry (Tex.)	818
Gulf, C. & S. F., v. Looney (Tex.)	471
Illinois Cent., v. Minor (Miss.)	627
International & G. N., McCarn v. (Tex.)	39
Jacksonville, T. & K. W., v. Galvin (Fla.)	337
Louisville & N., Manning v. (Ala.)	55
Louisville & N., v. Northington (Tenn.)	263
Louisville, N. O. & T., v. Jordan (Miss.)	251
Lynchburg & D., Kelly v. (N. C.)	514
Manhattan, Palmeri v. (N. Y.)	186
Marietta & N. G., Central Trust Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)	90
Metropolitan, Street, Larson v. (Mo.)	330
Missouri Pac., Gratiot v. (Mo.)	189
New York, P. & B., Darling v. (R. I.)	643
Northern Cent., v. O'Conner (Md.)	449

Railroad Company, Oregon, S. L. & U. N., Fisher v. (Or.)	519
Oregon, S. L. & U. N., Mullen v. (Or.)	593
Oregon, S. L. & U. N., Skottowe v. (Or.)	593
Pennsylvania, Gates v. (Pa.)	554
Philadelphia & R., Henderson v. (Pa.)	299
Pittsburgh, C. & St. L., v. State (Ohio)	880
Richmond & D., v. Scott (Va.)	91
Richmond & D., Waters v. (N. C.)	884
St. Louis & S. F., v. Murray (55 Ark. 248)	787
St. Paul City, Pine v. (Minn.)	847
St. Paul City, Purcell v. (Minn.)	203
St. Paul City, Steeg v. (Minn.)	879
Union P., v. Lapsley (51 Fed. Rep. 174)	800
West End Street, Creamer v. (Mass.)	490
Ransom, State, v. Black (N. J.)	769
Reece v. Kyle (49 Ohio St. —)	723
Reeve v. First Nat. Bank of Glassboro (54 N. J. L. 208)	143
Rentz, Detroit v. (Mich.)	59
Republican Mountain Silver Mines, Brown v. (Colo.)	426
Rice v. Moore (Kan.)	198
People, Carter, v. (N. Y.)	886
Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Scott (Va.)	91
Waters v. (N. C.)	884
Roberts, Com. v. (Mass.)	400
Robinson, Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. (U. S. C. C. App. 5th C.)	545
Rockport Ice Co., Barrett v. (Me.)	774
Rollin, Moore v. (Va.)	625
Rollins, State, ex rel., Hull, v. (Fla.)	308
Ross v. Morrow (Tex.)	542
Rothschild v. Dougher (Tex.)	719
Ruff, State, Lyons v. (Wash.)	140
Russ, Minot v. (Mass.)	510
Rutherford, Morning Journal Asso. v. (U. S. C. C. App. 2d C.)	803
Ryder v. Horsting (Ind.)	186

S.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Murray (55 Ark. 248)	787
St. Paul City R. Co., Pine v. (Minn.)	847
Purcell v. (Minn.)	203
Steeg v. (Minn.)	879
St. Paul Sanitation Co., Willis v. (Minn.)	281
Salinas City, Archer v. (Cal.)	145
Salinger, Gulkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. (Ark.)	526
San Antonio, Hoefling v. (Tex.)	608
Sanborn, v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. (Mich.)	119
Sayre v. Phillips (Pa.)	49
Scanlon v. Wedger (Mass.)	895
Schwartz, Blum v. (Tex.)	668
Scott, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. (Va.)	91
Seager v. McCabe (Mich.)	247
Seattle Board of Trade v. Hayden (Wash.)	580
Selma, Boyd v. (Ala.)	729
Shaw, People, Bradley, v. (N. Y.)	606
16 L. R. A.

Shelbyville Water Co. v. People, Cradick, (Ill.)	505
Shelden v. Fox (Kan.)	357
Sherman, State, ex rel., v. George (Or.)	737
Shideler v. State (Ind.)	225
Sizer v. Quinlan (Wis.)	512
Skottowe v. Oregon, S. L. & U. N. R. Co. (Or.)	593
Smith, Bowers v. (Mo.)	754
Crocker v. (Ala.)	576
State, Hastings, v. (Neb.)	791
Smith's App. (61 Conn. 420)	538
Société St. Jean Baptiste de Woonsocket, Lavelle v. (R. I.)	399
Sontag v. Bigelow (Ill.)	826
Southard v. Curley (N. Y.)	561
Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Robinson (2 U. S. App. 205)	545
Sparrow v. Pond (Minn.)	103
Spooner v. Phillips (Conn.)	461
Stanwood v. Malden (Mass.)	591
State, Craig v. (Ohio)	858
v. Cutshall (110 N. C. 538)	130
DeLafoile v. (N. J.)	500
v. Hasel Dahl (N. Dak.)	150
Lovett v. (Fla.)	813
McKinney v. (Wyo.)	710
v. Murphy (17 R. I. —)	550
Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. (Ohio)	880
Shideler v. (Ind.)	225
ex rel., Attorney-General, v. Fidelity & C. Ins. Co. (49 Ohio St. —)	611
Hartford, v. Craig (Ind.)	688
Hastings, v. Smith (Neb.)	791
Hitchcock, v. Hewitt (S. Dak.)	413
Lysons, v. Ruff (Wash.)	140
Mize, v. McElroy (44 La. Ann. —)	278
Olson, v. Brown (Minn.)	691
Ransom, v. Black (N. J.)	769
Rollins, Hull v. (Fla.)	308
Sherman, v. George (Or.)	737
Wiesenthal, v. Denny (Wash.)	214
Steeg v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	879
Steere, Dunlap v. (Cal.)	861
Sterger v. Van Siden (182 N. Y. 499)	640
Stever v. People's Mut. Acc. Ins. Asso. (150 Pa. 132)	446
Stoddard, Miller v. (Minn.)	288
Street Opening & Imp. Board of New York, Re (183 N. Y. 829)	180
Sullivan, Lally v. (Iowa)	681
Supreme Assembly R. S. of G. F., Clemans v. (N. Y.)	83

T.

Tappan v. Boston Water Power Co. (Mass.)	853
Thornton, Tittman v. (Mo.)	410
Tittman v. Thornton (107 Mo. 500)	410
Torgerson, Hughes v. (Ala.)	600
Trenton, Wilson v. (N. J.)	200
Tufts v. Tufts (Utah)	489
Tyner, People's Gas Co. v. (Ind.)	443

U.

Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lapsley (51 Fed. Rep. 174)	800
---	-----

Union Stove & Mach. Works v. Caswell (Kan.) - - - - -	85	Wedger, Ar Foon v. (Mass.) - - - - -	395
United States Mut. Acc. Asso., Cooper v. (N. Y.) - - - - -	188	Burnham v. (Mass.) - - - - -	395
		Mason v. (Mass.) - - - - -	395
		Scanlon v. (Mass.) - - - - -	395
		West End Street R. Co., Creamer v. (Mass.) - - - - -	490
V.		Wiesenthal, State, ex rel. , v. Denny (Wash.) - - - - -	214
Van Sicle, Sterger v. (N. Y.) - - - - -	640	Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co. (Minn.)	281
Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chipps (Ind.)	238	Wilson v. Trenton (53 N. J. L. 645)	200
Vincennes v. Citizen's Gas Light & C. Co. (Ind.) - - - - -	485	Winchester, People, ex rel. , v. Coleman (183 N. Y. 279) - - - - -	183
Volz, Bingel v. (Ill.) - - - - -	321	Wise, Daly v. (N. Y.) - - - - -	236
Voreis v. Nussbaum (Ind.) - - - - -	45	Wood v. McGrath (150 Pa. 451) - - - - -	715
		Woodard v. Woodard (S. C.) - - - - -	743
		Woodruff v. Painter (150 Pa. 91) - - - - -	451
		Wronkow v. Oakley (133 N. Y. 505) - - - - -	209
		Y.
Walton Plow Co. v. Campbell (Neb.) - - - - -	468	Younger v. Judah (Mo.) - - - - -	553
Walworth Light & P. Co., Attorney- General, Gas & Electric Light Comrs. v. (Mass.) - - - - -	398
Waters v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (110 N. C. 338) - - - - -	334
16 L. R. A.

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.		A
Abbott v. Jackson, 43 Ark. 212.....	529, 532, 534	A	87
Accock v. Halsey, 90 Cal. 215.....	661	A	78
Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees. & W. 324.....	445	A	368
Adams v. Adams, 100 Mass. 305, 1 Am. Rep. 111.....	100	A	142
v. Secor, 6 Kan. 543.....	368	A	685
v. Ohio Falls Car Co. (Ind.), 81 N. E. Rep. 57.....	445	A	78
Adams County v. Quincy, 6 L. R. A. 156, 130 Ill. 593.....	421, 423	A	474
Adler v. Pin, 80 Ala. 351, 354.....	816, 819	A	382
Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Wheeler, 49 N. Y. 616.....	40	A	396
Abern v. Steele, 5 L. R. A. 449, 115 N. Y. 208.....	641	Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 508, 35 Am. Dec. 657..	671
Ab Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552.....	277	v. Weed, 16 Conn. 291.....	641
Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 80 Ala. 600, 20 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 565, note.....	598	B.
v. Carmichael, 9 L. R. A. 388, 90 Ala. 19.....	58	B	751
Albany Street, Re, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 613.....	168	B	580
Albert v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 98 Pa. 316.....	301	B	606
Aldrich v. Bennett, 68 N. H. 415, 56 Am. Rep. 529.....	590	B	791
Aldridge v. Great Western R. Co., 15 C. B. N. S. 582.....	40	B	418
Allard v. Lamirande, 29 Wis. 502.....	727	B	256
Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 237, 40 Am. Rep. 849.....	150	B	664
Allen v. Aldrich, 29 N. H. 63.....	97	B	871, 88 Am.
v. Allen, 60 Mich. 635.....	153	B	514
v. Charlestown, 109 Mass. 248.....	592	B	382
v. Glynn (Colo.), 15 L. R. A. 748.....	780	B	514
v. St. Louis Nat. Bank, 120 U. S. 34, 30 L. ed. 576.....	705	B	183
v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543.....	284, 285	B	103
Amador Canal & Min. Co. v. Mitchell, 59 Cal. 179.....	366	Baldwin v. Hale, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 223, 17 L. ed. 531.....	160
American Exp. Co. v. Second Nat. Bank of Titusville, 69 Pa. 394, 8 Am. Rep. 266.....	40	v. Munn, 2 Wend. 399, 20 Am. Dec. 627.....	623, 624
American Life Assn. v. Hoogher, 8 Mo. App. 173.....	248, 722	Ball v. Palmer, 81 Ill. 370.....	829
Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 25 L. ed. 228.....	297, 298	v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. Rep. 486.....	570
Anderson v. Clark (Mass.), 29 N. E. Rep. 569.....	343	Ballentine v. Poyner, 8 N. C. 110.....	260
v. Dunn, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. ed. 242.....	118	Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 6 L. R. A. 705, 73 Md. 36.....	638
Andrews v. Essex F. & M. Ins. Co., 3 Mason, 5.....	563	Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 429, 24 L. ed. 506.....	548
v. German Nat. Bank, 9 Helsk. 211, 24 Am. Rep. 300.....	512	Baltimore Car Wheel Co. v. Bemis, 29 Fed. Rep. 95.....	246
v. Smith, 19 Blatchf. 100, 5 Fed. Rep. 833.....	569	Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74.....	270
Annapolis & R. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 124.....	301	Baltimore County Comrs. v. Maryland Hospital, 62 Md. 127.....	421, 422
Arbogast v. Hays, 98 Ind. 26.....	119	Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 483.....	401
Arkansas M. R. Co. v. Canman, 52 Ark. 517.....	790	Bank of Chillicothe v. Dodge, 8 Barb. 238.....	623
Armory v. Armory, 18 Int. Rev. Rec. 149.....	183	Columbia v. Okely, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 235, 4 L. ed. 559.....	691
Armstrong v. State, 1 Coldw. 538.....	131	Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co., 98 U. S. 174, 23 L. ed. 672.....	41
Arnold v. Engleman, 1 West. Rep. 482, 108 Ind. 512.....	48	Newbury v. Richards, 25 Vt. 234.....	687
Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 368.....	652	United States v. Daniel, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 32, 9 L. ed. 989.....	621
Arthur v. Nelson, 81 Ky. 67.....	741	v. Donnelly, 33 U. S. 3 Pet. 372, 3 L. ed. 978.....	199
v. Willius, 44 Minn. 409.....	284, 285	v. Halstead, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 63, 6 L. ed. 267.....	478
Artman v. Ferguson, 2 L. R. A. 843, 73 Mich. 146.....	583	v. Huth, 4 B. Mon. 423.....	736
Ashby v. Eastern R. Co., 5 Met. 363, 370, 38 Am. Dec. 426.....	856	Watertown v. Watertown, 25 Wend. 689.....	184
v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 968.....	267	Banks v. Highland St. R. Co., 136 Mass. 485.....	639
Ashford v. Patton, 70 Ala. 479.....	509	v. McClellan, 24 Md. 62.....	68
Askew v. Dupree, 30 Ga. 173.....	701	Barber v. Reese, 60 Miss. 906.....	612
Astley v. Reynolds, 2 Strange, 915.....	378	Barber v. Barber, 63 U. S. 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226.....	90
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Farrow, 6 Colo. 496.....	823	v. Merriam, 11 Allen, 322, 324.....	791
v. Ganta, 98 Kan. 629.....	56	Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 1015.....	69
v. Holt, 29 Kan. 149.....	863	Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294.....	363
v. Johns, 36 Kan. 769.....	791	Bardwell v. Ames, 22 Pick. 333, 354.....	367
v. Lindley, 6 L. R. A. 646, 42 Kan. 714.....	863	v. Mann, 46 Minn. 285.....	338
v. Plunkett, 25 Kan. 188.....	841	Barnes v. Branch, 3 McCord, L. 19.....	786
Atkins v. Brown, 59 Me. 90.....	145	v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co., 51 Me. 110.....	176
Atlanta v. First Presby. Church (Ga.), 12 L. R. A. 352.....	420	Barr v. Oskaloosa, 45 Iowa. 275.....	592
Atty-Gen. v. Amos, 60 Mich. 372.....	481	Barrett v. Black, 56 Me. 493.....	597
v. Boston Wharf Co., 12 Gray, 558.....	856	Barrows v. McDermott, 73 Me. 441.....	774
v. Brown, 1 Wis. 442.....	796	Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 98 Mo. 62, 193.....	193
v. Detroit, 29 Mich. 108.....	68	Bartean v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 506.....	38
v. Joy, 55 Mich. 94.....	63, 77		11
16 L. R. A.

Bartlett v. Feeney, 11 Kan. 593.....	712		82, 29 Am.
Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 28 L. ed. 672.....	500, 567, 604	 681, 538
v. Higgins, 41 Md. 539.....	412	 683
v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co., 52 Mo. 252, 14		 409
Am. Rep. 415, 418.....	196, 198	 781
Bartons Hill Coal Co. v. Reid, 4 Jur. N. S. 767,		 671, 672, 674
8 Macq. H. L. Cas. 278.....	881	 684
Bassett v. Shepardsen, 52 Mich. 8.....	533		apolia, 7 L.
Batty v. Dixbury, 24 Vt. 155.....	556	 512
Bauserman v. Charlotte, 46 Kan. 460.....	190	 683
Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. 368.....	341		30.....	857
Baylies v. Curry, 128 Ill. 237.....	561	 866
Beau v. Pioneer Min. Co., 66 Cal. 451, 54 Am.		 857
Rep. 108.....	145		g. Co., 114
Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321.....	286	 248, 728
v. Lofton, 103 Ind. 408.....	488		874.....	207
Beardmore v. Carrington, 2 Wils. K. B. 244.....	504		sp. 47.....	426
Beatty v. Gilmore, 16 Pa. 458.....	556	 79
Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 168,		 48
45 Am. Rep. 30.....	270, 388		sp. 308.....	825
Beck v. Carter, 68 N. Y. 283, 23 Am. Rep. 175.....	641		Jiv. 321.....	831
Beckman v. Kreamer, 43 Ill. 447, 98 Am. Dec.		 828
146.....	687	 288
Becknell v. Becknell, 7 West. Rep. 323, 110 Ind.		 511
42.....	229	 361
.....	502	 707
.....	150	 618
.....	484		lep. 422.....	5
.....	002	 294
.....	182	 712
.....	44		ed. 330.....	248
.....	124		Road Co.,
.....	196		15.....	670
.....	158		100.....	774
.....	126	 470
.....	751	 501
.....	230	 840
.....	48	 97
.....		 509
.....		 182
.....			N. Y. 511,
.....		 514
.....		 791
.....		 524
.....		 316
.....		 726
.....			Co., 4 New
.....			Rep. 618..	875
.....		 406
.....		 608
.....		 84
.....			6, 11 L. ed.
.....			802, 811, 803,	675
.....			ed. 797.....	814
.....			lyn City R.
.....		 878
.....			aland & B.
.....		 378
.....		 566
.....			heat, 58, 5
.....		 316
.....		 841
.....			4 Wis. 349.	812
.....			A. 583.....	775
.....			50 N. J. L.
.....		 504
.....		 575
.....		 329
.....		 512
.....		 720
.....		 370
.....			p. 309.....	4
.....			n. 330.....	4
.....		 445
.....			m. Rep. 709	853
.....			S. 540, 35 L.
.....		 460
.....			Dec. 303..	751
.....		 378
.....		 358
.....			lep. 418.....	650
.....			18 L. ed. 267
.....		 507, 560
.....		 553
.....			562.....	90
.....			m. Dec. 428	511
.....		 713
.....		 816
.....		 751
.....			N. Y. 539 452,	453
.....		 549
.....		 257, 202...	450
.....		 314
.....		 500
Burien v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438.....	255

Burlington v. Estlow, 43 N. J. L. 13	490	Charlton v. Donnell, 100 Mass. 229	52
Burns v. Hamilton, 35 Ala. 210	517	Chasley v. Jones, 53 J. P. Q. B. Div. 290	52
v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 668	199	Chartiers Twp. v. Phillips, 122 Pa. 801	107
v. Taylor, 23 Ala. 255	816	Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Liddell, 85 Ga.	630
Burros v. Lucas, 5 Esp. 158	202	482
Burr v. Wilcox, 13 Allen, 273	667	Cheaney v. Lafayette, R. & M. R. Co., 68 Ill. 570,	428
v. Wilson, 18 Tex. 367	580	28 Am. Rep. 584	320
Burridge v. Fogg, 8 Cush. 183	367	v. Janssen, 20 Neb. 128	470
Burrill v. Augusta, 1 New Eng. Rep. 697, 78	353	v. Woodruff, 20 Neb. 124	470
Me. 118		Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1	749
Burroughs v. Norwich & W. R. Co., 100 Mass.	40	Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 583	141
25, 1 Am. Rep. 78	256	v. Union Bldg. Assn., 102 Ill. 379	592
Burrus v. Burrus, 55 Miss. 92	606	Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 Mich. 532,	124
Burt v. Boston, 122 Mass. 223, 227	828	v. Montford, 60 Ill. 175	40
Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 344	718	v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 235	189
Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 110, 27 L. ed. 354	657	Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 888	521
Butler v. Butler, 77 N. Y. 472	484	Chicago, B. & O. R. Co. v. Gregory, 53 Ill. 273	524
v. Palmer, 1 Hull, 325	553	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377,	287
v. State, 6 Blackf. 280	751	23 L. ed. 767	126
Byers v. Locke, 93 Cal. 493	575	Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Binninger, 114 Ill. 88	790
Byrd v. McDaniel, 26 Ala. 522		v. Felton, 125 Ill. 458	180
		v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 25	294
		Child v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 8 Sandf. 26	589
		Childs, Ex parte , 12 S. C. 111	411
		Chouteau v. Boughton, 100 Mo. 408	529
		Chrisman v. Pardee, 38 Ark. 81	133-135
		Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 276, 23 L. ed. 550	146
		Cincinnati v. White, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed.	383
		452	490
		Cincinnati Gas Light & C. Co. v. State, 18 Ohio	428
		St. 237	731
		Citizens Gas & Min. Co. v. Elwood, 14 West. Rep.	560
		92, 114 Ind. 332	103
		Citizens Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 55 Iowa, 104	484
		City Council of Montgomery, Ex parte , 64 Ala.	801
		463	540
		Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 838	532
		Clark v. Bryan, 16 Md. 171	657
		v. Clark, 10 N. H. 380, 34 Am. Dec. 165	176
		v. Dean, 3 New Eng. Rep. 338, 143 Mass. 295	562
		v. Gilbert, 28 N. Y. 273, 84 Am. Dec. 189	838
		v. Hershey, 52 Ark. 498	240
		v. Hesekiah, 24 Fed. Rep. 663	568
		v. Marsiglia, 1 Denio, 317	297
		v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co., 6 Cush.	303
		342	639
		v. Providence, 1 L. R. A. 725, 16 R. I. 337	320
		Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurst. & N. 942	52
		Clemence v. Steere, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621	240
		Clement v. Mattison, 3 Rich. L. 93	97
		Cleveland v. Crivison, 93 Ind. 81, 47 Am. Rep.	297
		387
		v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 42 Vt.	374
		449	379
		v. New Jersey S. B. Co., 68 N. Y. 306	563
		Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Bartram, 11 Ohio	240
		St. 457	568
		Cleves v. Willoughby, 7 Hull, 88
		Clift v. Clift, 97 Tenn. 17	374
		Clifton v. Foster, 103 Mass. 238, 4 Am. Rep. 539	240
		Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. Co., 24 Iowa,	165
		455	172
		Cloze v. Phipps, 7 Man. & G. 538	661
		Coale v. Merryman, 35 Md. 382	394
		Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. 480	163
		Cobb v. Lime Rock F. & M. Ins. Co., 58 Me. 329	358
		Cockcroft v. New York & H. R. Co., 69 N. Y. 201	398
		Codman v. Vermont & C. R. Co., 16 Blatchf. 195	645
		Cody v. Murphy, 89 Cal. 522	238
		Coe v. Smith, 4 Ind. 79	670
		Cohen v. New York, 4 L. R. A. 406, 113 N. Y. 532	243
		Colt v. Haven, 30 Conn. 190	523
		Cole v. Eastham, 124 Mass. 310
		v. Fisher, 11 Mass. 137
		v. Swan, 4 G. Greene, 32
		Collins v. Barrow, 1 Mood. & R. 112
		v. Delaporte, 115 Mass. 159
		v. People, 93 Ill. 584, 38 Am. Rep. 105
		v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 30 Minn. 31
		v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 80 Mich.
		380
		v. Warren, 68 Tex. 314
		Colwell v. Peden, 3 Watts, 327
		Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4
		Am. Rep. 582
		Com. v. Alderman, 4 Mass. 477
		v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 65, 66, 103
		v. Battis, 1 Mass. 94
		v. Bradley, 2 Cush. 553
		v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 115 Mass.
		155
		v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. 183
		v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 27 Gratt. 344

C.

Cadman v. Markle, 5 L. R. A. 707, note, 76 Mich.	861
Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (Ky.),	127, 129
13 Ky. L. Rep. 714	180
Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387	551
Caledonian R. Co. v. Walker, L. R. 7 App. Cas.	592
259
Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 320, 24 Am. Rep.	606
608
Callen v. Ellison, 13 Ohio St. 446, 82 Am. Dec. 448	108
Calvert v. Roche, 59 Tex. 484	673
v. State, 8 Tex. App. 539	153
Calvo v. Davies, 73 N. Y. 511	88
Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 697	953
Cambioso v. Maffett, 2 Wash. C. C. 36	130
Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308	829
v. Wentlock, 4 Post. & F. 716	238
Candelaria v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (N. M.)	824
27 Pac. Rep. 497	416
Capel v. Child, 2 Crompt. & J. 558	505
Capital City Gas-Light Co. v. Charter Oak Ins.	484
Co., 51 Iowa, 81	529
Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 304
Carey v. Burrus, 20 W. Va. 571	293
Cargill v. Millers & Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 38	310
Minn. 90	821
v. Power, 1 Mich. 389	597
Carle v. Bangor & P. C. R. Co., 43 Me. 271	802
Carleton v. Franconia I. & S. Co., 99 Mass. 219	536
Carliste v. Brisbane, 4 Cent. Rep. 608, 113 Pa. 544	602
Carlson v. Oregon, S. L. & U. N. R. Co., 21 Or.	536
454	602
Carpenter v. Carpenter, 30 Kan. 744	861
v. Gay, 12 R. I. 306	108
Carpentier v. Oakland, 30 Cal. 440	298
Carr v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 2 Mo. App. 466	460
Carr's Case, 71 Md. 135	616
Carroll v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 1 Duer, 671	812
v. Roestler, 10 Minn. 174	417
Carter v. Durango City Council (Colo.) 27 Pac.	146
Rep. 1057	97
v. Portland, 4 Or. 339	509
Cartwright v. Bate, 1 Allen, 514, 79 Am. Dec. 759	66
v. Wise, 14 Ill. 417	228
Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270	722
Carver v. Wabash (Ind.) 13 L. R. A. 851	97
Cassey v. Cincinnati Typo. Union No. 3, 45 Fed.	145
Rep. 135	502
Casteel v. Casteel, 8 Blackf. 240, 44 Am. Dec. 763	790
Castle v. Belfast Foundry Co., 72 Me. 167	673
v. Berkshire, 11 Gray, 26	58
Caswell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 98 Mass. 194	731
Catlin v. Bennett, 47 Tex. 170	296
v. Hull, 21 Vt. 182	869
v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 44
Catfield v. Sullivan, 65 N. Y. 153	882
Cayser v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317	40
	157
Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Avant, 80 Ga. 195	238
Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 64 Ga. 475
Cesar v. Karuta, 60 N. Y. 229	491
Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp., 104 Mass. 108,	315
115
Chalker v. Ives, 55 Pa. 81	631
Chamberlain v. Fitch, 2 Cow. 243	107
Champlin v. Laytin, 18 Wend. 407, 31 Am. Dec.	867
883
Chapman v. Cook, 10 R. L. 804, 14 Am. Rep. 636	512
v. Edmonds, 8 Allen, 512
Charles v. Rankin (1866) 22 Mo. 573, 66 Am. Dec.	382, 384, 385
643

Com. v. Dacomb, 111 Mass. 403	288	0	408, 38 Am.	388
v. Gardner, 7 L. R. A. 686, 189 Pa. 364	30	0	m. Dec. 488	97
v. Hall, 4 Allen, 308	355	0	Nov. 488	788
v. Homer, 153 Mass. 348	401	0	108 Ind. 213	48, 47
v. Hughes, 138 Mass. 488	387	0	L. Ann. 817.	48
v. Hunt, 4 Cush. 48	380	0		370
v. Jackson, 3 Va. Can. 501	338	0	88 N. Y. 484	38
v. Lane, 113 Mass. 434, 18 Am. Rep. 538	340	0		388
v. Look, 108 Mass. 488	387	0	88 Ind. Co.,	178
v. Lowell Gas Light Co., 13 Allen, 75	306	0	Am. Dec.	08
v. Maclean, 101 Mass. 1, 100 Am. Dec. 80	118	0		381
v. Marchand (Bristol County, 1881) 38 N. E. Rep. 578	387
v. Millman, 13 Serg. & R. 404	180
v. Munson, 127 Mass. 488, 34 Am. Rep. 411	708
v. Pannmore, 1 Serg. & R. 317	718
v. Perry (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 388	488
v. Phillips, 11 Pick. 28	387
v. Richardson, 3 New Eng. Rep. 53, 188 Mass. 71	387
v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 477, 488, 481	386
v. Siffer, 24 Pa. 23, 64 Am. Dec. 880	618
v. Wright, 78 Ky. 22, 42 Am. Rep. 308	714
Condit v. Jersey City, 48 N. J. L. 187	388
Cono v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 81 N. Y. 304, 87 Am. Rep. 491	388
Conger v. Weaver, 30 N. Y. 144	384
Congrove v. Morgan, 18 N. Y. 64, 78 Am. Dec. 486	388
v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 78	388
Connecticut v. Hartford, 48 Conn. 88	423
Connor v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 88 Mo. 308	388
v. Green Pond, W. & B. R. Co., 38 E. C. 427	387
Conrad v. Clauve, 88 Ind. 478, 47 Am. Rep. 388	387
Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works, 88 Mo. 38	380
v. Vulcan Iron Works, 4 Mo. App. 108	388
Consumers Gas Co. v. Kansas City Gas-light & C. Co., 110 Mo. 501	348
Continental Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Cornhauser, 37 Ill. App. 478	312
Cook v. Boston, 3 Allen, 388	378
v. Holmes, 38 Mo. 81, 77 Am. Dec. 348	411
v. Moffat, 48 U. S. 6 How. 308, 12 L. ed. 388	180
v. Walling, 2 L. R. A. 788, 117 Ind. 8	48
Cooper v. Central R. Co., 44 Iowa, 134	138
v. Phibbs, L. R. 3 H. L. 148	388
v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co., 34 W. Va. 37	387, 388
Copeland v. Copeland, 38 Me. 388	318
Coppage v. Alexander, 3 B. Mon. 313	708
Copplin v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 587, 44 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 688	684
Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 37	38
Cory v. Wadsworth (Ala.) 11 So. Rep. 380	378
Cornell v. Lovett, 38 Pa. 100	708
Corrie v. Corrie, 48 Mich. 308	388
Cortis v. Kent Waterworks Co., 7 Burn. & C. 380	701
Congrove v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 37 N. Y. 88, 41 Am. Rep. 388	134
Coster v. Albany, 48 N. Y. 308, 414	388
Cottage Street M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 388, 23 Am. Rep. 388	388
Counts v. Marking, 30 Ark. 17	388
Courter v. Stagg, 37 N. J. Eq. 308	708
Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 178, 38 L. ed. 300	388
Covington Transf. Co. v. Kelly, 88 Ohio St. 37	308
Cowan v. McNeely, 38 N. C. 8	318
Coward v. Clanton, 70 Cal. 88	740
Craddock v. Riddleberger, 3 Dana, 308	108
Crafts v. Crafts, 3 McCord, L. 44	788
Crear v. Crossly, 40 Ill. 178	34
Creed v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 88 Pa. 188, 37 Am. Rep. 388	388
Crisman v. Leonard, 128 Ind. 308	48
Cristman v. Peck, 60 Ill. 180	438
Criswell v. Pittsburgh, St. L. & C. R. Co., 30 W. Va. 788	387, 388, 380
Crompton v. Ulmer, 3 Nott & McC. 428	788
Cruet v. Lake Shore & M. R. R. Co., 14 West. Rep. 181, 68 Mich. 388	384
v. People, 47 Ill. 188	343
Croswell v. Lebroo, 81 Me. 44	488
Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 238	348
Crouse, Ex parte, 4 Whart. 9	684
Crow v. State, 8 Tex. 384	388
Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 488	488
Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 78 N. C. 380	381, 388
Cuddy v. Horn, 48 Mich. 388	308
Cumming v. Montreal Bank, 18 Grant, Ch. 688	88
Cummings v. Martin, 128 Ind. 30	47, 48
Cummingston v. Balchertown, 4 L. R. A. 131, 149 Mass. 328	300
Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 481, 41 Am. Rep. 618	448

			408, 38 Am.	388
			m. Dec. 488	97
			Nov. 488	788
			108 Ind. 213	48, 47
			L. Ann. 817.	48
			88 N. Y. 484	38
				388
			88 Ind. Co.,	178
			Am. Dec.	08
				381
				</

Greene v. Haley, 5 R. I. 260.....	860	Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, 535.....	422, 423
Greenfield v. Dorris, 1 Sneed, 548.....	816	Hastings Bank v. Hibbard, 48 Mich. 457.....	564
Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29 Iowa, 14, 4 Am. Rep. 181.....	812	Hatch v. Fuller, 181 Mass. 574.....	791
Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489, 51 Am. Dec. 567.....	868	Hatten v. Railroad Co., 39 Ohio St. 375, 13 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 53.....	320
Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 197.....	115	Haugh v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 78 Iowa, 66.....	241
Gregory v. State, 94 Ind. 385.....	844	Haupt Lumber Co. v. Westman (Minn.), 52 N. W. Rep. 33.....	396
Gresley v. State, 128 Ind. 72.....	113	Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. 111, 19 Am. Dec. 353.....	623
Griffin v. Hadley, 58 N. C. 82.....	226	Havens v. Home Ins. Co., 9 West. Rep. 635, 111 Ind. 906.....	176
Griffith v. Marsh, 86 Ala. 303.....	514	Hawley v. Hunt, 27 Iowa, 303.....	159, 160
Griffiths v. Marsh, 4 T. R. 464.....	577	Hawley, Re, 1 Cent. Rep. 287, 100 N. Y. 206.....	509
Grimes v. Hobson, 46 Tex. 417.....	194	Hay v. People, 59 Ill. 94.....	163
Grisler v. Powers, 81 N. Y. 57, 35 Am. Rep. 475.....	202	Hay v. Starr F. Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 235, 38 Am. Rep. 607.....	129
Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 198.....	671, 674	Hayes v. Oshkosh, 33 Wis. 814, 14 Am. Rep. 760.....	352
Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800, 819.....	819	Hayes v. Western R. Corp., 3 Cush. 271.....	823, 829
Grundy v. Hadfield, 16 R. I. 579.....	314	Haynes v. St. Louis Second Baptist Church, 12 Mo. App. 536, 539.....	860
Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baird, 75 Tex. 256, 268.....	370	Hays v. Campbell, 17 Ind. 430.....	187
v. Brentford, 79 Tex. 619, 23 Am. St. Rep. 377.....	40, 474	Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476.....	147
v. Campbell, 76 Tex. 174.....	826	Haywood v. Hedrick, 94 Ind. 340.....	229
v. Vaughn (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. Rep. 775.....	684	Hazard v. Caswell, 93 N. Y. 259.....	459
v. Wallen, 65 Tex. 568.....	40	Heard v. Hall, 16 Pick. 457.....	816
Gulline v. Lowell, 4 New Eng. Rep. 236, 144 Mass. 491.....	790	Heath v. Lewis, 3 De G. M. & G. 954.....	709
Gumm v. Hubbard, 97 Mo. 311, 319.....	606	Hecht v. Batcheller, 6 New Eng. Rep. 610, 147 Mass. 335.....	53
Gunnison v. Bancroft, 11 Vt. 490.....	761, 764	Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294, 23 L. ed. 729.....	568-571
Guttridge v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 13 West. Rep. 644, 94 Mo. 468.....	606	Heinlin v. Castro, 22 Cal. 100.....	672
Guy v. Peakes, 13 Ves. Jr. 196.....	843, 844	Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543.....	133-135
H.
Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 47 Mich. 402.....	123, 124	Hendrick v. Isaacs, 6 L. R. A. 559, 117 N. Y. 411.....	591
v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 894, 46 Am. Rep. 607.....	529, 533	Hendricks v. Kelly, 64 Ala. 88.....	816
Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569.....	578	Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 23 Am. Rep. 680.....	249
Hadford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297.....	852	Henkle v. Royal Exchange Co., 1 Ves. Sr. 317.....	563
Hagan v. Lucas, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. ed. 470.....	566, 569	Henlein v. Graham, 32 S. C. 307.....	745
Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 743.....	103	Henrie v. Swasey, 5 Blackf. 335.....	236
Haight v. New York, 24 Fed. Rep. 93.....	353	Henry v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 76 Mo. 298.....	829
Hair v. Moody, 9 Ala. 359.....	575	Herriman v. Stowers, 43 Me. 497.....	53
Hakes v. Hotchkiss, 23 Vt. 236.....	696	Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 445.....	294
Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 514.....	445	Herrndon v. Harrison, 34 Miss. 496, 69 Am. Dec. 699.....	624
Hale v. Smith, 73 N. Y. 430.....	44	Healop v. Gatton, 17 Ill. 526.....	825
Hall v. Arnott, 61 Cal. 324.....	653	Hey v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 44, 23 Am. Rep. 733.....	107
v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 94 L. ed. 547.....	561	Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 438 (Gil. 375).....	512, 562
v. Delaplaine, 5 Wis. 205, 68 Am. Dec. 57.....	624	H. G. Old Wagon Works v. Coombs, 124 Ind. 62.....	498
v. Harrison, 21 Mo. 227, 64 Am. Dec. 226.....	411	Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 456.....	674
v. Memphis & C. R. Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 57.....	189	Hickey v. Hazard, 3 Mo. App. 490.....	774
v. Pike, 100 Mass. 261.....	97	Hickman v. Irvine, 3 Dana, 122.....	261
v. Weir, 1 Allen, 261.....	97	Hickman, Re, 4 Harr. (Del.) 530.....	84
Hallgren v. Campbell, 9 L. R. A. 408, 32 Mich. 256.....	417, 797	Hicks v. Cochran, 4 Edw. Ch. 107, 6 L. ed. 814.....	703
Halloran v. State, 30 Ind. 566.....	226	Higbee v. Rice, 5 Mass. 352, 4 Am. Dec. 63.....	367
Ham v. Boston, 2 New Eng. Rep. 642, 149 Mass. 90.....	417, 797	Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 313, 32 Am. Rep. 160.....	774
v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459.....	353	v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417.....	394
v. State, 4 Tex. App. 659.....	130	Hilbourne v. Suffolk County, 120 Mass. 393, 21 Am. Rep. 632.....	569
Hambrick v. Russell, 86 Ala. 199.....	570	Hill v. Aldrich (Minn.), 50 N. W. Rep. 1020.....	326
Hamilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 30 Iowa, 31.....	841	v. Hibernia Ins. Co. of Ohio, 10 Hun, 26.....	294
v. Third Ave. R. Co., 63 N. Y. 25.....	137	v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 239.....	383
Hammerlough v. Hackett, 30 Kan. 53.....	87	v. Hill, 10 N. Y. Week. Dig. 239.....	564
Hammond v. Lovell, 136 Mass. 185.....	68	v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co., 63 N. Y. 101.....	56
v. Worcester County Comrs., 154 Mass. 509.....	562	v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251, 255.....	606
Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 112.....	189	Hillebert v. Porter, 28 Minn. 496.....	313
v. Yaden, 6 L. R. A. 576, 121 Ind. 365.....	497	Hinzaga v. Cutler & S. Lumber Co., 51 Mich. 272.....	524
Handelum v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 73 Iowa, 709.....	828	Hiram v. Pierce, 45 Me. 387, 71 Am. Dec. 555.....	580
Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1.....	627	Hirschfield v. Dallas, 29 Tex. App. 242.....	611
Hanson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 381.....	192	Hitchcock v. Way, 6 Ad. & El. 943.....	484
Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Fox, 31 Kan. 586.....	843	Hittinger v. Eames, 121 Mass. 539.....	774
Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 299.....	444	Hixson v. St. Louis, H. & K. R. Co., 80 Mo. 885.....	196
v. Tompkins, 2 Wash. 508.....	624	Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653.....	827, 828
Hardin v. Gouveneur, 69 Ill. 140.....	329	Hoar v. Merritt, 63 Mich. 386.....	344
Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642, 648.....	147	Hobart v. Milwaukee R. Co., 27 Wis. 194.....	375
Harlow v. Fisk, 12 Cush. 302, 304, 306.....	356, 357	Hochstadler v. State, 73 Ala. 24.....	293
Harris v. Keys, 48 Ind. 235.....	119	Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142.....	387
Harris v. Howe, 5 L. R. A. 777, 74 Tex. 534, 537, 40, 474.....	115	v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 75 N. Y. 605.....	598
v. Vanderveer, 21 N. J. Eq. 424.....	115	Hogan v. Carberry, 4 Cin. L. Bull. 118.....	797
Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20 Iowa, 161, 39 Am. Dec. 520.....	103	Hogg v. Emerson, 52 U. S. 11 How. 567, 13 L. ed. 824.....	805
Hart v. Windsor, 12 Mees. & W. 68.....	52, 228	Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 16, 25 Am. Dec. 677.....	132
Hart v. Eastern R. Co., 114 Mass. 44.....	474	Holladay Case, 27 Fed. Rep. 830.....	569, 571
Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115.....	176	Hollister v. Shaw, 46 Conn. 243.....	370
Harvard College v. Stearns, 15 Gray, 1.....	562	Holman v. State, 2 West. Rep. 761, 106 Ind. 513.....	113
Harty v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 43 N. Y. 463, 471.....	125	Holmes v. Holmes, 1 Abb. U. S. 525.....	708
16 L. R. A.	2	v. Jennison, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 540, 546, 10 L. ed. 579, 582.....	133, 135
		v. McCary, 51 Ind. 358, 19 Am. Rep. 735.....	751
		v. North Eastern R. Co., L. R. 4 Exch. 254, affirmed L. R. 6 Exch. 123.....	864
		v. People, 10 Ill. 478.....	241

Holmes, Ex parte , 21 Neb. 224	712	International Bank v. Bowen, 80 Ill. 241	816
Holt v. Green, 78 Pa. 193, 15 Am. Rep. 787	423	Irvin v. State, 19 Fla. 373	817
Holyoke Water Power Co. v. Lyman, 38 U. S. 15 Wall. 500, 21 L. ed. 133	687	Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 30 Mich. 418	844
Home Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 104 Ill. 655	618	v. Leyh, 102 Mo. 200, 202	844
Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Welch, 29 Kan. 573	618	Irwin v. Covoda, 24 Pa. 162	849
Honey v. Graham, 39 Tex. 1	790	v. Nixon, 11 Pa. 426, 51 Am. Dec. 559	199
Hood v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 23 Conn. 1	474	Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 60 Mo. 475, 184	195
Hooper v. State, 29 Tex. App. 614	714
Hoover v. Reilly, 2 Abb. U. S. 471	621	J.
Hopkins v. Lee, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 109, 5 L. ed. 49	623	Jackson v. Odell, 13 Daly, 345	298
Hornady v. Shields, 119 Ind. 201	828	v. St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co., 2 West. Rep. 236, 87 Mo. 423	270
Horne v. Carter, 20 Fla. 45	816	v. State, 1 West. Rep. 540, 104 Ind. 516	236
Horner v. Doe, 1 Ind. 130, 48 Am. Dec. 355	103	v. Winne, 7 Wend. 50	704
Hosack v. Rogers, 7 Paige, 103, 4 L. ed. 25	814	Jackson Twp. v. Wagner, 127 Pa. 184	107
Hotchkiss v. Brainerd Quarry Co., 58 Conn. 120	406	Jacksonville v. Lawson, 18 Fla. 321	317
	709	Jacksor	R. Co. v. Neff, 29
	880	Jacobs	87
	16	Jacoba	20 Minn. 125, 18
	657	Jacobus	125
	150	Jaffe v.	125
	694	James v.	125
	157	Jarvis	125
	80	Jay v. I.	125
	694	Jefferso	125
	712	Jefferso	125
	112	Jeffreys	125
	853	Jenkins	125
	229	Jenks v.	125
	810	Jenne	125
	296	Jennings v. Brush Co., 20 Can. L. J. 361	296
	698	v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 98 Pa. 340	301
	509	Jerman v. Benton, 79 Mo. 143	296
	143	Jewett v. New Haven, 28 Conn. 383, 9 Am. Rep. 382	383
	459	Joab v. Sheets, 29 Ind. 323	383
	255	Job v. Tebbetts, 10 Ill. 322	383
	861	Johnson v. Amana Lodge No. 82, 98 Ind. 150	119
	38	Johnson v. Ashland Water Co., 71 Wis. 553	384
	523	v. Baltimore R. Co., 25 W. Va. 571	276
	804	v. Concord R. Corp., 48 N. H. 212, 68 Am. Dec. 199	320
	506	v. Cooper, 56 Miss. 505	256
	847	v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 501, 49 Am. Rep. 151	423
	855	v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 226	485
	187	v. Joubert, 8 L. R. A. 795, 124 Ind. 105	47
	652	v. Lexington, 14 B. Mon. 648	735
	193	v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471	435
	195	v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 68 Md. 107	320
	343	v. Rayner, 8 Gray, 108	357
	189	v. Roberts, 102 Ill. 655	506
	101	v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 28 L. ed. 547	374
	570	Jones v. Boyce, 1 Stark. 493	790
	574	v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 48 Minn. 279	633
	584	v. Com., 75 Pa. 408	380
	297	v. Jones, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 279	709
	688	v. Miller, 17 B. C. 380	785
	621	v. Perry, 10 Yerg. 59, 30 Am. Dec. 80	255
	733	v. Tatham, 20 Pa. 398	421
	40	Jordan v. Jordan, 65 Ala. 306	577
	285	Joseph v. Bidwell, 23 La. Ann. 883	560
	751	Judevine v. Goodrich, 35 Vt. 19	603
	493	Judy v. Louderman, 48 Ohio St. 563	607
	700	Justice v. Nesquehoning Valley R. Co., 67 Pa. 23	603
	301
	438	K.
	466	Kadish v. Young, 108 Ill. 170-185	637
		Kanawha Coal Co. v. Kanawha & O. Coal Co., 7 Blatchf. 415	633
		Kane v. Cortes, 1 Cent. Rep. 245, 100 N. Y. 123	63
		Karr v. Jackson, 28 Mo. 316	412
		Katsenstein v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 84 N. C. 633	516
		Kay v. Walter, 23 Kan. 112	199
		Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 693, 47 Am. Dec. 159	145
		Keckley v. Moore, 2 Strobb. Eq. 21	733
		Keenan v. Perry, 24 Tex. 253	793
		Keene v. Collier, 1 Met. (Ky.) 417	513
		Keese v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 67 Barb. 206	193
		Kehoe v. Allen (Mich.), 53 N. W. Rep. 740	844
		Keim v. Union R. & Transit Co., 7 West. Rep. 144, 90 Mo. 314	193
		Keller v. New York Cent. R. Co., 24 How. Pr. 172	193
		Kellny v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 8 L. R. A. 733, 101 Mo. 67	191
		Kelly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 70 Mo. 604	199
		v. Manhattan R. Co., 8 L. R. A. 74, 112 N. Y. 443	603
I.
Ice v. State, 123 Ind. 500	238
Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 353	303
v. Frankenberg, 54 Ill. 83, 5 Am. Rep. 92	40
Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank of Chicago v. Smith, 21 Blatchf. 275, 15 Fed. Rep. 358	519
Indermaur v. Dames, L. R. 1 C. P. 274, L. R. 2 C. P. 311	275, 558
Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gas Light & C. Co., 56 Ind. 393	432, 490
Indianapolis Cable St. R. Co. v. Citizens St. R. Co., 8 L. R. A. 539, 127 Ind. 389, 390, 433	433, 439
Ingle v. Norrington, 126 Ind. 174	438
Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. 203, 278, 16 Am. Dec. 342	357
International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kernan, 9 L. R. A. 703, 78 Tex. 294	343, 344
16 L. R. A.

[illegible]

McCauley v. Gordon, 84 Ga. 237, 37 Am. Rep. 69	69
McClellan v. State, 82 Ark. 609	609
McClure v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 84 Md. 536, 6 Am. Rep. 845	845
McComb v. Gilkey, 29 Miss. 146	146
McCorkle v. Doby, 1 Strobb. L. 896	896
McCormick v. Washington Twp., 2 Cent. Rep. 584, 113 Pa. 185	185
McCowan v. Whitesides, 81 Ind. 235	235
McCracken v. Hayward, 43 U. S. 2 How. 606, 11 L. ed. 297	606
McGowan v. Williams, 13 Johns. 293	293
McGee's App., 6 Cent. Rep. 621, 114 Pa. 470	470
McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co., 61 Mo. 622	622
	641
	645
	664
	687
	691
	694
	697
	699
	700
	701
	702
	703
	704
	705
	706
	707
	708
	709 710
	711
	712
	713
	714
	715
	716
	717
	718
	719
	720
	721
	722
	723
	724
	725
	726
	727
	728
	729
	730
	731
	732
	733 734
	735
	736 737
	738
	739
	740
	741
	742
	743
	744
	745
	746
	747
	748
	749
	750
	751
	752
	753
	754
	755
	756
	757
	758
	759
	760
	761
	762
	763
	764
	765
	766
	767
	768
	769
	770
	771
	772
	773
	774
	775
	776
	777
	778
	779
	780
	781
	782
	783
	784
	785
	786
	787
	788
	789
	790 791
	792
	793
	794
	795
	796
	797
	798
	799 800
	801
	802
	803
	804
	805
	806
	807
	808
	809
	810
	811
	812
	813
	814
	815
	816
	817
	818
	819
	820
	821
	822
	823
	824
	825
	826
	827
	828
	829
	830
	831
	832
	833
	834
	835
	836
	837
	838
	839
	840
	841
	842
	843
	844
	845
	846
	847
	848
	849
	850
	851 852
	853
	854
	855
	856
	857
	858
	859
	860
	861
	862
	863
	864
	865
	866
	867
	868
	869
	870
	871
	872
	873
	874
	875
	876
	877
	878
	879
	880
	881
	882
	883
	884
	885
	886
	887
	888
	889
	890
	891
	892
	893
	894
	895
	896
	897
	898
	899
	900
	901
	902
	903
	904
	905
	906
	907
	908 909
	910
	911
	912
	913
	914
	915
	916
	917
	918
	919
	920
	921
	922
	923
	924
	925
	926
	927
	928
	929
	930
	931
	932
	933
	934
	935
	936
	937
	938
	939
	940
	941
	942
	943
	944
	945
	946 947
	948
	949
	950
	951
	952
	953
	954
	955
	956
	957
	958
	959
	960
	961 962
	963
	964
	965
	966
	967
	968
	969
	970
	971
	972
	973
	974
	975
	976
	977
	978
	979
	980
	981
	982
	983
	984
	985
	986
	987
	988
	989
	990
	991
	992
	993
	994
	995
	996
	997
	998
	999
	1000

Montgomery v. Vickery, 8 West. Rep. 878, 110 Ind. 811	218
Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 88 Ala. 546	874
Monticello v. Banks, 48 Ark. 870	428
Moody v. Pacific R. Co., 68 Mo. 470	181
v. Ward, 18 Mass. 299	866
v. Campbell Academy Trustees, 9 Yerg. 119	728
v. McKenney, 88 Me. 80	688
v. Martin, 88 Cal. 488	655
v. Rollins, 48 Me. 498	249
Morehead v. Parkersburg Nat. Bank, 5 W. Va. 499	499
1 Mass. 81	598
0	691
Texas Cent. l. 625	459
1 Or. 96, 28	604
Ind. 288	286
30 Minn.	108
81 Mich.	285
342	508
127 U. S.	844
485	485
474	474
445	445
411	411
551	551
728	728
718	718
own, 186	40
1 L. R. A.	187, 188
66	66
88	88
1. 84	496
k. 244	496
641	417
Rep. 890	44
88	88
286	191
ult. L. 865	822
3, 8 Mees.	40
& W. 421	602
Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 212	512
Mutual Nat. Bank v. Rotge, 28 La. Ann. 983, 26 Am. Rep. 128	44
Myhan v. Electric Light & P. Co., 41 La. Ann. 904	40, 42
Myrick v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 107 U. S. 102, 105, 27 L. ed. 320, 320

N.

Nalley v. Hartford Carpet Co., 51 Conn. 824, 50 Am. Rep. 47	596
Nash v. Simpson, 1 New Eng. Rep. 690, 78 Me. 142	700
National Bank of Belknap Falls v. Dorset Marble Co., 2 L. R. A. 428, 61 Vt. 106	667
National Bank of North America v. Kirby, 108 Mass. 497	296
National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168	512
Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 870, 26 L. ed. 587	713
Nebraska City v. Nebraska H. Gas-Light & C. Co., 9 Neb. 389	657
Needles v. Shaffer, 60 Iowa, 65	489
Neel v. Neel, 19 Pa. 323	249
Nelson v. Kelly, 81 Ala. 569	819
Nesbitt v. Hines, 17 Kan. 816	712
Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 89 Am. Dec. 200	84
Nevius v. Dunlap, 38 N. Y. 676	568
New Albany v. Meekin, 56 Am. Dec. 522	734
New Albany & S. R. Co. v. O'Dally, 18 Ind. 853, 12 Ind. 551	374, 375
v. Peterson, 14 Ind. 112	445
Newbold v. Bradstreet, 87 Md. 88	527
New Castle v. Raney, 6 L. R. A. 787, 130 Pa. 548	713
Newell v. Newberry, 3 Leigh, 250, 28 Am. Dec. 261	470
New England Glass Co. v. Lovell, 7 Cush. 819	523
Newhall v. Paige, 10 Gray. 806	453
Newins v. Baird, 19 Hun. 806	509
Newkirk v. Cone, 18 Ill. 449	727
Newlin v. McAfee, 64 Ala. 864	570
Newlin Twp. v. Davis, 77 Pa. 817	556
Newman v. Morris, 58 Minn. 402	582
16 L. R. A.

Niagara County Supra. v. People, 7 Hill, 512	184
Nichols v. Washington, A. & W. R. Co., 68 Va. 102	276
08	401
R. Co., 48 La.	44
390, 68 Mo. 560	40
N. E. Rep. 508	196
r. 518, 12 L. ed. c. 685, 675, 677,	702
J. P. 479	714
no, 101 Pa. 1, 47	133
t, 116 U. S. 652,	759
69	842
nos. 808, 123, 124,	348
129	569
114	701

O.

Oakham v. Hall, 112 Mass. 589	357, 358
Oakland R. Co. v. Fielding, 48 Pa. 820	556
Oates v. Gray, 66 N. C. 448	516
Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182	645
Oberlander v. Spies, 45 N. Y. 175	239
O'Brien v. Home Ben. Society, 117 N. Y. 810	89
Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Tappan, 15 Blatchf. 297	378
O'Connor v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 18 West. Rep. 587, 94 Mo. 150	198
Odell v. Sargent, 3 Kan. 80	712
v. Solomon, 99 N. Y. 635	641
O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co., 69 Pa. 239	636
v. Providence & W. R. Co., 6 R. I. 211	126
Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 290, 6 L. ed. 632	478
Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 39 U. S. 22 Wall. 123, 22 L. ed. 827	40
Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499	353
Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Muhling, 30 Ill. 9, 51 Am. Dec. 836	639
Old Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 79 Pa. 231	820
Old Colony R. Co. v. Wilder, 137 Mass. 536	52
Oliver v. Davy, 34 Minn. 292	290
v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268	58, 59
O'Meara v. New York, 1 Daly. 425	363
O'Neill v. St. Olaf's School, 26 Minn. 329	336
Opelika v. Daniel, 59 Ala. 215	570
Opening of Twenty-Second Street, Re, 102 Pa. 108	183
Ormand v. Barnard, 5 Fla. 528	316
Orr v. Skofield, 56 Me. 483	627
Orton v. Tilden, 8 West. Rep. 905, 110 Ind. 181	228
Osborn v. Hart, 24 Wis. 69, 91, 1 Am. Rep. 181	74
Osborne v. Hamilton, 29 Kan. 1	812
Otis v. Gross, 96 Ill. 613, 36 Am. Rep. 157	518
Oullahan v. Sweeney, 79 Cal. 537, 539	653, 655
Owen v. Phillips, 73 Ind. 284	445
v. Blatter, 26 Ala. 547	818
Owens v. State, 54 Tex. 509	759

P.

Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Jolliffe, 69 U. S. 3 Wall. 458, 17 L. ed. 807	484
Page v. Alameda County Super. Ct., 76 Cal. 373	661
v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648	418, 790, 797
v. Jones, 76 N. Y. 274	89
v. Woods, 108 Mass. 160, 173	774
Palmer v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co., 11 West. Rep. 678, 112 Ind. 250	639
v. Largent, 5 Neb. 223, 25 Am. Rep. 479	469
v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., 38 Minn. 415	123, 124
v. Waddell, 22 Kan. 353	686

Porter v. Stout, 78 Ind. 2.....	187	Benwick v. New York Cent. R. Co., 36 N. Y.	198
v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 441, 442, 449.....	353, 357	122.....	337
Post v. Kendall County Supra., 34 U. S. 260, 24		580
L. ed. 154, 105 U. S. 670, 28 L. ed. 1205	64, 75, 76	580
Powell v. Slinger, 91 Ind. 64.....	443	66
Pratt v. American Bell Teleph. Co., 1 New Eng.		285
Rep. 760, 141 Mass. 226.....	765	ec. 441.....	715
v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 95 U. S. 43, 24 L.		to Chad-
ed. 386.....	40	N. C. 463.....	238
v. Lamson, 2 Allen, 275, 285.....	367	70, 74.....	803
v. Pratt, 38 Conn. 446.....	466	Ga. 320.....	763
Treble v. Portage County Supra., 3 Blm. 358.....	297	450
Presbyterian Church of Albany v. Cooper, 112		439
N. Y. 217.....	659	Rep. 527.....	751
.....	358	113
.....	604	884
.....	373	834
.....	627	401
.....	645	375
.....	759, 765	667
.....	146	798
.....	317	391
.....	322	490
L. ed. 1060.....	183	570
.....	103	713
.....	634	411
.....	723	529
.....	573	65
.....	202	684
64 Mo. 112.....	323	666
.....	606	310
.....	505	41
.....	Mass. 573	451
.....	303, 102 N.	302
.....	238	481
.....	10 Ch.	686
.....	243	637
.....	68 N. C.	185
.....	735	509
Pumpelly v. Phelps, 40 N. Y. 59, 100 Am. Dec.		47, 48
409.....	623	602
Putnam v. Clark, 35 N. J. Eq. 145.....	316	440
Q.
Quarl v. Abbott, 108 Ind. 233.....	235	286
Quigley v. Roberts, 44 Ill. 503.....	509	286
Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co., 60 Me. 340.....	406	48
Quincy v. Jones, (1875) 76 Ill. 240, 29 Am. Rep.		390
243.....	323	56
Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 24.....	344	445
Quint v. Ophir & Min. Co., 4 Nev. 305.....	727	390
R.
Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 210, 24 L. ed. 409..	378	267
Raley v. Williams, 73 Mo. 310.....	316	694
Ramsey v. Case, 18 Q. B. 173.....	415	147
Rand v. Hanson, 154 Mass. 27.....	52	775
v. Hubbell, 115 M.....	121	315
Randall v. Baltimore &.....	473	629
451, 27 L. ed. 1.....	4, 332	411
v. Marble, 69 Me.....	1.....	296
v. Turner, 17 Ohl.....	670	97
Randolph v. Larned, 2.....	484	847, 862
Ransom v. Chicago, 2.....	62	489
Wis. 178, 51 A.....	129, 130	808
Rasster v. Grimmer (L.....)	187	357
Rawley v. Colliau (Mich.) 51 N. W. Rep. 360.....	344	97
Ray v. McCarty, 28 Miss. 404.....	623	382
v. McMurry, 30 Ind. 307, 308, 33 Am. Dec.		760
322.....	49	415
v. Teabout, 65 Iowa, 157.....	681	552
Raynham v. Canton, 3 Pick. 268.....	622	545
Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307.....	653, 658	570, 573
Reading & C. R. Co. v. Latshaw, 93 Pa. 449.....	300	206
Reading Fire Ins. & T. Co's App., 4 Cent. Rep.
673, 113 Pa. 207.....	704
Reed v. Bott, 100 Mo. 62.....	385
v. Pratt, 2 Hill. 64.....	103
v. Reed, 16 N. J. Eq. 245.....	249
v. Reed, 46 Hun, 212.....	609
Reese v. Chilton, 20 Mo. 595.....	97
Reeves v. Wood County Treasurer, 5 Ohio St.
323.....	382
Reg. v. Bradburn, 6 Ont. Pr. 303.....	760
v. Canterbury, 1 El. & El. 545.....	415
v. Gray, 9 Cox, C. C. 417, 1 Leigh & C. 305-
371.....	552
Reins v. People, 30 Ill. 255.....	545
Renfro v. Goetter, 73 Ala. 311, 313.....	570, 573
Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 23 U. S. 9 Wheat.
551, 5 L. ed. 166.....	206
S.
Baine v. State, 14 Tex. App. 144.....	158
St. John v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 224.....	723, 724
St. Louis & L. M. R. Co. v. Larned, 103 Ill. 228..	40

St. Louis Pub. Schools v. St. Louis, 20 Mo. 468.....	421, 428	Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254.....	622
St. Paul v. Merritt, 7 Minn. 258 (Gil. 198).....	58	v. Burnham, 3 Summ. 456.....	749
Salem v. Eastern R. Co., 98 Mass. 441, 448, 95 Am. Dec. 650.....	401	v. Clark, 3 Dowl. P. C. 203.....	202
Salisbury v. Marshall, 4 Car. & P. 65.....	238	v. Gorman, 41 Me. 405.....	223
Sample v. Irwin, 45 Tex. 567.....	720	v. Mace, 44 N. H. 553.....	470
Sampson v. Security Ins. Co., 123 Mass. 49.....	238	v. Marable, 11 Meas. & W. 5.....	62, 280
San Antonio v. Mahaffy, 98 U. S. 815, 24 L. ed. 817.....	591	v. Old Colony & N. R. Co., 10 R. I. 22.....	308
San Francisco v. Mackey, 22 Fed. Rep. 603.....	59	v. Potter, 45 Mich. 359.....	343, 344
San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170.....	147	v. Rice, 55 Ala. 417.....	294
Savings & Loan Soc. v. Austin, 45 Cal. 415.....	781	v. Rines, 2 Summ. 854.....	763
Sawyer v. Hoag, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 610, 620, 31 L. ed. 731, 735.....	574	v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506.....	353
v. Hovey, 3 Allen, 381, 51 Am. Dec. 539.....	569	v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113.....	715, 717
v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 519.....	187	v. Smith, 37 S. C. 185.....	479
v. Warner, 36 Iowa, 338.....	624	v. State, 24 Ind. 101.....	639
Sayers v. Hoskinson, 1 Cent. Rep. 347, 120 Pa. 473.....	249	v. Turner, 48 U. S. 7 How. 515, 12 L. ed. 801, 2 Myers, Fed. Dec. 665, 675, 677, 678, 684.....	133
Scarlett v. Snodgrass, 22 Ind. 263.....	533	Smith, Ex parte, 58 Cal. 703.....	144
Scharer v. Schutz, 33 Ind. 543.....	118	Snyder v. Adams Exp. Co., 63 Mo. 362.....	40
Schiell v. Sloan, 22 S. C. 137.....	766	Snoover v. Blair, 25 N. J. L. 94.....	97
Schiff v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 68 How. Pr. 91.....	40	Snow v. Housatonic R. Co., 3 Allen, 441, 35 Am. Dec. 720.....	623
Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 67 Mich. 400.....	123	Solomon v. Wixon, 27 Conn. 630.....	541
Schnuckle v. Stierman, 69 Ill. 454.....	97	Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71.....	47
Schoenberger v. School Directors, 22 Pa. 34.....	265	Souter v. Codman, 14 R. I. 119.....	300
Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224.....	195	South Carolina R. Co. v. Nix, 68 Ga. 673.....	54
School Trustees v. Kirwin, 25 Ill. 73.....	513	Southgate v. Stanley, 1 Hurlst. & N. 245.....	656
Schoonmaker v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church, 5 How. Pr. 269.....	132	Southern Exp. Co. v. Western N. C. R. Co., 99 U. S. 191, 25 L. ed. 819.....	91
Schultz v. Byers (1891) 12 L. R. A. 559, 58 N. J. L. 442.....	332	Sowers v. Edmunds, 76 Ind. 123.....	236
v. Pacific R. Co., 36 Mo. 13.....	323	Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7.....	360
Schuster v. Dutchess County Ins. Co., 3 Cent. Rep. 133, 102 N. Y. 230.....	176	Spann v. Blocker, 2 Nott & McC. 508.....	786
Schuykill County Directors of Poor v. North Manheim Twp. School Directors, 42 Pa. 21.....	431	Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Met. 95, 107.....	354
Scott v. Scott, 5 Ohio, 594.....	484	Sparks v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co., 52 Ga. 156.....	335
v. Shepherd, 3 W. Bl. 303.....	304	Spater v. Opfer, 2 L. R. A. 345, 78 Mich. 35.....	529
Scranton Borough Case, Brightly, Elect. Cas. 456.....	765	Spencer v. Spencer, 95 N. Y. 368.....	48
Sear v. Morse, 20 Vt. 320.....	561	Spicer v. Hoop, 51 Ind. 365.....	446
Searl v. Lake County School Dist. No. 2, 138 U. S. 553, 33 L. ed. 740.....	506	Spray v. Burk, 123 Ind. 565.....	47
Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251.....	66	Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, L. R. 6 Eq. Cas. 561.....	245
Selleck v. French, 1 Conn. 32, 5 Am. Dec. 186.....	296	Sprowl v. Lawrence, 33 Ala. 674.....	143
..... 671, 673.....	643	Stata v. Ten Eyck, 3 Cal. 111, 9 Am. Dec. 254.....	624
..... 1 Am. Rep. 643.....	643	Stancift v. Norton, 11 Kan. 213.....	199
..... 100 Water-Rep. 320, 147.....	367	Stanton v. Embrey, 98 U. S. 543, 23 L. ed. 963.....	727
..... 369.....	369	Starkweather v. American Bible Soc., 72 Ill. 50.....	325
..... 384.....	384	State v. Atkinson, 9 Humph. 677.....	226
..... 50.....	50	v. Barnett, 33 N. C. 613.....	130
..... 577, 578.....	577, 578	v. Beal, 75 Me. 269.....	337
..... 513.....	513	v. Beard, 34 La. Ann. 273.....	142
..... 54.....	54	v. Blount, 25 Mo. 543.....	337
..... 663.....	663	v. Boone, 30 Ind. 235.....	667
..... 470.....	470	v. Bratton, 15 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 359.....	6-3
Shoenberg v. Voigt, 35 Mich. 310.....	156	v. Brown, 2 N. C. 100, 1 Am. Dec. 549.....	130
Shoultz v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 373.....	113	v. Brown, 16 Conn. 54.....	233
Shove v. Manitowoc, 57 Wis. 7.....	535	v. 7ep. 920, 53 N.	694
Shrieve v. Stokes, 8 R. Mon. 453, 45 Am. Dec. 401.....	384	v. 713.....	713
Siebold, Ex parte, 110 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717.....	743	v. 417.....	417
Silliman v. United States, 101 U. S. 463, 25 L. ed. 967.....	373	v. 317.....	317
Simmons v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. R. Co., 97 Mass. 361.....	593	v. 66.....	66
Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417-435, 35 L. ed. 1062-1070.....	564	v. 141.....	141
Simpson v. Chapman, 45 Tex. 584.....	673	v. 225.....	225
Singer Mfg. Co. v. Domestic S. Mach. Co., 49 Ga. 70, 79.....	246, 723	v. 266.....	266
Sioux City v. Sioux City School Dist., 55 Iowa, 150.....	421, 423	v. 539.....	539
Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 54 U. S. 17 Wall. 659, 21 L. ed. 745.....	197	v. Columbia & A. R. Co., 1 S. C. 50.....	589
Skouten v. Wood, 57 Mo. 380.....	765	v. Colvin, 11 Humph. 589, 54 Am. Dec. 69.....	235
Sloan v. Central Iowa R. Co., 63 Iowa, 723.....	564	v. Cook, 41 Mo. 558.....	763
16 L. R. A.	v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 541.....	557
.....	v. Cunningham (Wis.) 51 N. W. Rep. 1135.....	423
.....	v. Cutshall, 109 N. C. 764.....	184
.....	v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 79, 118 Ind. 323.....	112
.....	v. Denton, 6 Coldw. 530.....	131
.....	v. Doherty, 25 La. Ann. 119, 13 Am. Rep. 131.....	131
.....	v. Doyle, 11 R. I. 574.....	793
.....	v. Earl, 1 Nev. 394.....	553
.....	v. Elizabeth, 40 N. J. L. 274.....	734
.....	v. Epps, 4 Sneed. 552.....	236
.....	v. Falconer, 44 Ala. 698.....	141
.....	v. Fidelity & C. Co., 77 Iowa, 548.....	613
.....	v. Fidelity & C. Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 533, 539.....	613, 614
.....	v. Field, 17 Mo. 529, 59 Am. Dec. 275.....	167
.....	v. Fire Creek C. & C. Co., 5 L. R. A. 359, 33 W. Va. 133.....	493
.....	v. Fitzgerald, 75 Mo. 571.....	153
.....	v. Foley, 30 Minn. 360.....	309
.....	v. Fort, 24 S. C. 516.....	589
.....	v. Franklin Falls Co., 49 N. H. 240.....	697
.....	v. Frazier, 98 Mo. 420.....	764
.....	v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. (Del.) 9.....	105
.....	v. Gilbert, 24 Mo. 330.....	552
.....	v. Goodwill, 6 L. R. A. 621, 33 W. Va. 179.....	423

White v. Connelly, 105 N. C. 70.....	514	Winona v. Winona County School Dist. No. 63, 40 Minn. 13.....	287
v. Henry, 24 Me. 531.....	560	Wintermute v. Clarke, 5 Sandf. 247.....	379
v. Heylman, 34 Pa. 143.....	379	Wiswall v. Sampson, 55 U. S. 14 How. 62, 66, 14 L. ed. 822, 828.....	567, 568
v. Tommey, 3 H. L. Cas. 49.....	315, 316	Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287.....	84
v. Williams, 48 Barb. 222.....	568	Witherhead v. Allen, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 628.....	185
Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 434.....	246, 722	Witt v. Follett, 2 Wend. 457.....	160
Whitelock v. Baker, 13 Ves. Jr. 514.....	439	Witthaus v. Braun, 44 Md. 308.....	459
Whitting v. Bank of United States, 36 U. S. 13 Pet. 6, 10 L. ed. 83.....	570	Wolf, Ex parte , 14 Neb. 24.....	490
Whitmire v. Wright, 22 S. C. 451, 68 Am. Rep. 725.....	785	Wommack v. Whitmore, 58 Mo. 448.....	221
Whittner v. Frye, 10 Mo. 349.....	470	Wonsou v. Wonsou, 14 Allen. 71.....	357
Whittaker v. Bradley, 7 Dowl. & R. 649.....	627	Wood v. Fowler, 28 Kan. 682, 40 Am. Rep. 380.....	774, 775
v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 49 Hun. 400.....	823	v. Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co., 123 U. S. 421, 32 L. ed. 472.....	604
Widger v. Browning, 2 Car. & P. 523.....	202	v. Macon & B. R. Co., 68 Ga. 589.....	162
Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. 65.....	645	v. Price, 46 Ill. 439.....	621
Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 834, 47 Am. Rep. 434.....	352	v. Seely, 32 N. Y. 105.....	816
v. People, 30 Ill. 186.....	732, 738	Woodbury v. Beverly, 153 Mass. 245, 247, 248.....	592
Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 455, 13 Am. Rep. 390.....	197	Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cow. 711, 13 Am. Dec. 568.....	619
Wilkes v. Wood, 19 How. St. Tr. 1154.....	504	Woodman v. Pitman, 4 New Eng. Rep. 669, 79 Me. 456, 460.....	774, 775
Wilkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 101 Mo. 98.....	193	Woodward v. Sarsons, L. R. 10 C. P. 751.....	761
v. State, 18 West. Rep. 354, 118 Ind. 514-519 554.....	115	Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 198.....	420, 423
Willamette Falls T. & Mill Co. v. Riley, 1 Or. 183.....	484	Worham v. Gurley, 75 Ala. 356.....	816
Willard v. Newbury, 22 Vt. 458.....	556	Wren v. Nemaha County Comrs., 24 Kan. 301.....	260
Williams v. Bagot, 3 Barn. & C. 755.....	416	Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298.....	112, 796
v. Benedict, 49 U. S. 8 How. 107, 12 L. ed. 1007.....	568, 569, 570	v. Oakley, 5 Met. 406.....	434
v. Evans, 6 L. R. A. 218, 87 Ala. 725.....	574	Wylie v. Cox, 55 U. S. 15 How. 415, 14 L. ed. 753 727.....	727
v. Ferrand, 88 Mich. 478.....	459	Wyman v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 34 Minn. 210.....	330
v. Fitzhugh, 37 N. Y. 444.....	652
v. Gillies, 75 N. Y. 201.....	749
v. State, 12 Ohio St. 622.....	380
v. Western U. Tele. Co., 96 N. Y. 163.....	467
Williamson v. Harris, 57 Ala. 40.....	781
v. Ross, 38 Ala. 509.....	816
v. Williamson, 3 Smedes & M. 715, 747.....	265
Willis v. People, 2 Ill. 899.....	241
Wilson v. Hatton, L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 386.....	52, 238
v. Holt, 38 Ala. 539.....	817
v. Miller, 16 Iowa, 111.....	681
v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 26 Minn. 278.....	205, 790
Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co., 107 Mass. 108, 9 Am. Rep. 11, 125 Mass. 180.....	157, 680
Windt v. German Ref. Church, 4 Sandf. Oh. 471, 7 L. ed. 1175.....	128
Wingate v. Haywood, 40 N. H. 437.....	108

Y.

Yellow River Imp. Co. v. Wood County (Wis.) 51 N. W. Rep. 1004, 1005.....	588
Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 689.....	860
Yonley v. Levander, 38 U. S. 21 Wall. 276, 23 L. ed. 536.....	568
Young v. Gregorie, 3 Call. 445.....	627

Z.

Zane v. Zane, 5 Kan. 184.....	199
Zeller v. Chapman, 54 Mo. 502.....	780
Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 67 Cal. 298.....	368
Zinn v. Dzialynski, 14 Fla. 43.....	317

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED; CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

31 Hen. VIII. chap. 1. Partition.....	778
32 Hen. VIII. chap. 9. Maintenance.....	726
chap. 62. Partition.....	778
37 Hen. VIII. chap. 9. Interest.....	296
5 Eliz. chap. 14. Forgery.....	552
4 Anne, chap. 16. Division of rents among co- tenants.....	549
28 Geo. II. Marriage.....	708
4 Geo. IV., chap. 76. Marriage.....	708
1872. Election law.....	758, 771
1875, July 19. Ballot law.....	759

United States.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 3. Right of representation.....	856
§ 10. Obligation of contracts.....	160
2, § 1. Presidential electors.....	477
4, § 2, cl. 2. Extradition.....	122
Amend. 5. Due process of law.....	680
12. Slavery.....	848
14. Equal protection of laws.....	277
Equal rights.....	481, 561, 718, 848
1b. Elective franchise.....	481, 848

Ordinances.

1793. Northwest territory.....	405
--------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1823, March 3. Forgery.....	558
1837, March 3. Suits against receivers.....	570

Revised Statutes.

§ 5242. Preference by insolvent bank.....	686
16 L. R. A.....

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 22, p. 12. Treaty with China.....	278
--	-----

Alabama.

Constitution.

Art. 14, § 6. Issuance of corporate bonds.....	574
--	-----

Statutes.

1832-33, p. 414, § 27. Charter of Selma; taxes....	731
--	-----

Code.

§ 2, subd. 2. "Personal property" defined.....	731
2613. Adverse possession.....	818
2624. Adverse possession.....	818
3013. Mechanic's lien.....	902
3023. Lien not lost by error in owner's name.....	602
3031. Effect of owner's death.....	602
3043. Enforcement of lien within six months after owner's death.....	602
3421. Locus of suit.....	575
3544. Creditors' bills.....	574

Arkansas.

Constitution, 1874.

Art. 9, § 7. Property of feme covert.....	529
16, § 6. Exemption from taxation.....	420
19, § 27. Assessments for local improve- ments.....	423

Statutes.

1878, April 23. Powers of married women	529
--	-----

Mansfield's Digest.

§ 625. Assessments for local improvements....	420
4639. Partnership by married woman.....	529

California.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 11.	General laws	164
§ 22.	Provisions mandatory	165
4, § 25.	Prohibiting local legislation	166
§ 32.	Security of corporate dues by liability of stockholder	286
36.	Stockholder's liability	286
11, § 4.	Establishment of county governments	173
§ 5.	Appointment of county officers	168
	Delegation of legislative power	168
6.	Classification of cities	172
9.	Increase of officer's compensation	168

Statutes.

1863, p. 299.	Establishment of county governments	163
1865, p. 178.	Salaries of county clerks	163
p. 195.	Salaries	165
1867, p. 207, § 211.	County government Act; inadequacy of salaries	163

Civil Code.

§ 8.	Retroactive effect	654
6.	Effect on pending actions	654
94.	Cruelty as cause for divorce	652
1859.	Liability of innkeeper	189
2008.	Redemption from mortgage	652

Political Code.

§ 1118.	Preparation of new great register	172
4046.	Compensation of county officers	173

Code Civil Procedure.

§ 8.	Retroactive effect	654
345.	Action to redeem mortgage	651
351.	Absence from state; effect on Statute of Limitations	652
361.	Limitation of action arising in foreign state	651
362.	Effect on pending actions	654
412.	Order for publication	363
413.	Effect of service by publication	366
416.	Effect of service by publication	366
453.	Pleading Statute of Limitations	651
473.	Setting aside default after publication	364
1136.	Priority of liens	261

Colorado.Code.

§ 166.	Nonsuit	423
--------	---------------	-----

Connecticut.Statutes.

1875, p. 371.	Revision of probate laws	540
1885, chap. 110, § 141.	Administrator	540
1890, p. 155.	Ballot Law	760

General Statutes.

§ 549.	Administration	540
--------	----------------------	-----

Florida.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 8.	Prohibition of second jeopardy ...	317
--------------	------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1867, June 7.	Damages for negligence	633
chap. 8681, § 54.	Redemption from tax sale	308
§ 57.	Tax deed	308
1891, June 10, § 4010.	General Revenue Law	309
chap. 4011.	Certifying lands upon which taxes remain unpaid	309

Georgia.Code.

§ 2063.	Carriers; exclusion of passengers	54
---------	---	----

Idaho.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 14.	Private roads	84
---------------	---------------------	----

Revised Statutes.

§ 963.	Private roads	84
16 L. R. A.

Illinois.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 2.	Due process of law	426
§ 9.	Right of accused to meet witnesses	261
3.	Legislative power	497
	Appointing power	743

Statutes.

1839.	Title by adverse possession	323
1849, Feb. 12.	Legislative journals as evidence	64
1867, p. 103.	Exception to disallowance of continuance	241
1861, § 98.	Private roads	84
1867, p. 157.	Amendment of Practice Act	242
1872, March 23.	Changing corporate name	429
April 18.	Concerning corporations	430
1885.	Election Law	742
1885, p. 73.	Continuances in criminal cases	241
1897, May 31.	Protection of fishes	634
June 14.	Changing corporate name	429
June 16.	Conspiracy	241
1899, June 2.	Protection of fishes	634
June 6.	Changing corporate name	430
1891, May 23.	Payment of wages	493
	Conspiracy	241

Revised Statutes, 1833.

P. 439, § 11.	Admission to avoid continuance ..	242
---------------	-----------------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes, 1891.

Chap. 24, § 4.	Printed ordinance as evidence of its passage	120
§ 2.	Organization of corporation	431
§ 429 a.	Continuance in criminal cases	241
56, § 6.	Illegal fishing	635
120, § 16.	Taxation of gas pipes	505
§ 170.	Delinquent taxes	506
§ 191.	Amendment of assessment	506

Starr & Curtis Statutes.

Vol. 1, p. 610.	Organization of corporation	431
p. 624.	Changing corporate name	430
2, p. 2034.	Taxation of gas pipes	505
p. 2036.	Taxation of engines	506
2078, § 172.	Delinquent taxes	506
2082, § 185.	Charging personal taxes on real estate	507
2087, § 193.	Amendment of assessment	506
2112, § 257.	Liability of real estate for personal taxes	507

Indiana.Constitution.

Art. 3, § 1.	Departments of government	112
4, § 15.	Power of Legislature to imprison	114
6, § 6.	Residence of officers	639

Statutes.

1879, March 25.	Married women's contracts	533
1883, March 3.	Municipal light contracts	459
1891, March 6.	Tax Act	110

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 390.	Personal judgment after published notice	236
3043.	Incorporation of cities	639
5117.	Estoppel of married woman	44
5119.	Married woman as surety	46
5732.	County commissioners	639

Iowa.Code.

§ 2241.	Natural guardians of children	633
2242.	Surviving parent the child's guardian	633
§§ 2303, 2309.	Adoption	633

Kansas.General Statutes, 1889.

Par. 1655.	Control of county expenditures	260
1710.	Publication of delinquent tax list ..	260

Civil Code.

§ 18.	Five year Statute of Limitations	199
372.	Copies of deeds as evidence	87
419.	Filing transcript of judgment to acquire lien	87

Kentucky.Constitution.

Art. 6, § 10. Power to appoint officers..... 741

General Statutes.

Chap. 22, § 21. Promissory notes as bills of exchange..... 224

Louisiana.Statutes.

1877. Elections..... 280

1882, No. 101. Elections..... 280

1884, No. 71. Amending Code, art. 2315, damages for death..... 45

1890, No. 106. Revenue Law..... 58

Massachusetts.Colonial Ordinance.

641-47. Title to flats under tide water..... 355

Great ponds..... 774

Statutes.

1886, chap. 314, § 13. Regulation of electric wires in street..... 309

§§ 2. Water closets..... 401

1886, chap. 140. Damages for negligent killing..... 491

1887. Employer's Liability Act..... 339

chap. 332. Electric wires in streets..... 309

435. Habitual criminals..... 256

1889, chap. 450. Water closets..... 401

General Statutes.

Chap. 107, p. 531. Divorce..... 100

553. Equity jurisdiction..... 100

Public Statutes.

Chap. 68, § 13. Defective highways..... 606

108, § 65. Fireworks..... 397

139, § 80. Support of family..... 580

145, § 6. Validity of marriage..... 580

§ 10. Marriage in foreign state..... 880

146, § 5. Divorce..... 500

§§ 2, 10. Divorce against nonresident..... 500

§ 41. Foreign divorce..... 500

162, § 10. Matters open on appeal..... 62

172, § 9. Effect of disclaimer..... 358

Michigan.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 1. Legislative power..... 408

2. Senators..... 408

3. Number of representatives in Legislature..... 433

4. Census..... 408

19. Record of vote on legislative bill..... 76

20. Form and scope of statute..... 478

33. Supervisors, powers of..... 434

43. Bills of attainder, etc..... 78

6, § 3. Power of Supreme Court..... 404

14, § 11. Uniformity of taxation..... 80

Resolutions.

1801, No. 12. Publication of Journals..... 74

Statutes.

1865, No. 104. Apportionment Act..... 434

No. 148. Incorporation of train railway companies..... 873

1861. Apportionment Act..... 434

No. 14. Railway in streets..... 873

1865. Apportionment Act..... 434

1867, No. 188. Steam motive power..... 874

1871. Apportionment Act..... 434

1873. Apportionment Act..... 434

1861, No. 256. Apportionment Act..... 406, 434

1866. Apportionment Act..... 405

1869. Liquor tax law..... 74

1861, No. 60. Presidential electors..... 477

109. Legislative apportionment act..... 433

163. Usury law..... 68

175. Apportionment Act..... 408

190. Election Law..... 481

300. Revision of general tax laws..... 62

Howell's Statutes.

§ 147. Notice of election..... 481

185. Return of votes for electors..... 481

Chap. 94. Railway Incorporation Act..... 873

16 L. R. A.

§ 3875. Locomotive signals..... 123

5733. Dower..... 248

6296. Separate estate of married woman..... 533

6297. Actions by and against married women..... 633

Minnesota.Constitution.

Art. 6, § 7. Jurisdiction over persons under guardianship..... 698

§ 8. Limitation on power of justice..... 693

10, § 3. Stockholder's liability..... 263

Statutes.

1889, chap. 30. Preferences by insolvent..... 287

General Statutes, 1878.

Chap. 35, § 44. Commitment to reform school..... 694

40, § 21. Recording Acts..... 290

66, § 315. Levy on growing crops..... 106

Penal Code.

§ 343. Railroad signals..... 265

Mississippi.Statutes.

1882, March 3. Consolidating railroads..... 239

March 9. Railroad charter..... 263

1884, March 15. Consolidating railroads..... 263

Missouri.Statutes.

1889, May 18. Election law..... 765

p. 106. Ballot law..... 758

Revised Statutes, 1889.

§§ 4721-23. Recount of ballots..... 757

4756-94. Australian Ballot system..... 757

§ 4844. Foreign records..... 413

Montana.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 6. Right to judicial relief..... 103

§, § 11. Jurisdiction of district courts..... 103

§ 23. One form of action..... 103

20, § 2. Change from territory to state; effect..... 103

Statutes.

1889, p. 140. Ballot law..... 759

Compiled Statutes.

Div. 5, § 1000. Jurisdiction to grant divorce.. 96

§ 1004. Alimony..... 98

§ 1006. Alteration in allowance of alimony..... 96

§ 1439. Status of married women..... 103

Code Civil Procedure.

§ 80. Appearance by attorney..... 108

491. Authorization of attorney..... 108

Nebraska.Constitution.

Art. 3, § 16. Compensation of officers..... 795

5, § 10. Appointing power..... 794

§ 11. Temporary appointments..... 794

§ 12. Removal of officers..... 794

Statutes.

1887, March 30. Municipal Incorporation Act..... 793

1891, April 9. Omaha charter..... 791

Compiled Statutes, 1889.

Chap. 12, § 145. Omaha charter..... 791

New Jersey.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 1. Right to life, liberty, and property..... 770

2. Right to vote..... 770

Statutes.

1874, p. 331. Government of Trenton; procurement of highways..... 201

1890. Election law..... 769

Revision Supplement.
P. 602. General Tax Act	206
815. Detection of crime	501

New Mexico.Compiled Statutes.

§§ 2306-10. Damages for negligently causing death	823
---	-----

New York.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 1. Taxation of colored persons	848
§ 4. Apportionment of senators	845
§ 5. Apportionment of members of assembly	845

Session Laws.

1841, May 25. Extension of time for redemption	811
1847, chap. 133. Removal of buried bodies	182
chap. 133, § 10. Rural Cemetery Associations	182
1849, chap. 258. Joint-stock companies	184
1233, chap. 53. Joint-stock companies	184
1854, chap. 245. Joint-stock companies	184
1860, chap. 90. Power of married women to form partnership	211
1864, chap. 289. Joint-stock companies	184
1863, chap. 273. Associations to erect soldiers' monuments	182
1868, chap. 843. Road through cemetery	182
1878, chap. 203. Pipe-line companies	182
chap. 300. Married woman's power of attorney	210
§ 49. Removal of buried bodies	182
1879. Apportionment Act	944
1880, chap. 566. Removal of buried bodies	182
1887, chap. 320. Parks in New York city	181
1890. Ballot law	759
1891, chap. 296. Election law	765
1892, chap. 379. Apportionment Act	844

Revised Statutes.

Vol. 1, pt. 1, chap. 13, tit. 4, § 1. Taxation of moneyed corporations	153
4, p. 2456 (8th ed.). Power of husband over wife's dower rights	210
p. 2487. Acknowledgment of married woman's deed	211

Code Civil Procedure.

§ 1258. Appeal; suspension of lien	214
§§ 1922, 1923. Suit against member of joint-stock company	185

Wait's Annotated Code.

Tit. 11, chap. 3, § 91. Statute of Limitations	652
--	-----

Penal Code.

§ 811. Body stealing	182
----------------------------	-----

North Carolina.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 13. Guaranty of jury trial	131
§ 17. Due process of law	181

Code.

§ 988. Bigamy	130
---------------------	-----

North Dakota.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 97. Form of prosecution	153
---	-----

Statutes.

1890, chap. 71, § 3. Information in lieu of indictment	152
--	-----

Compiled Statutes.

§ 5031. Definition of trial	152
7241. Form of indictment	153
7401. Course of action when juror becomes sick	151
7413. Sickness of juror during consultation	152

Code of Criminal Procedure.

§ 213. Form of indictment	153
---------------------------------	-----

16 L. R. A.

Ohio.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 5. Trial by jury	200
§ 10. Rights of one charged with crime	260
2, § 1. Legislative power	360
12, § 2. Uniformity of taxes	361
§ 5. Rule for taxation	381

Statutes.

1894, Feb. 10. Against inciting to legal quarrels	723
---	-----

Laws.

Vol. 63, p. 184. Inspection of gas meters	382
66, p. 351. Requiring payment of fee by railway companies	381

Revised Statutes.

§ 251. Report of business of railroad	381
282. Retaliatory insurance legislation	612
3641, § 2. Incorporation law	612
7316. Procedure upon plea of guilty of murder	358

Oregon.Constitution.

Art. 2. Appointing power of judges	740
4, § 30. Prohibition upon legislator to hold other office	743
5, § 1. Appointing power	740

Session Laws.

1891, p. 633. Meusdorffer Act	740
-------------------------------------	-----

Hill's Code.

§ 705. Opinion evidence	523
-------------------------------	-----

Pennsylvania.Public Laws.

1784. Regulating peddling	50
1860, p. 1051. Borough charter	716
1851. General Borough Law	31
1868. Tax law	66
1870, p. 522. Borough charter	716
1885, June 30. Machinery on highway	150

Rhode Island.Public Statutes.

Chap. 243, § 1. Forgery	553
-------------------------------	-----

South Carolina.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 14. Property rights	590
§ 23. Condemnation of property	590

Statutes.

1701. Partition	773
1886, Dec. 23, § 15. Mining corporations	539

General Statutes.

§ 1550. Notice of intention to take land for way	588
1551. Procedure to condemn right of way	589

South Dakota.Constitution.

Art. 14, § 3. Maintenance of educational institutions	415
§ 4. Trustees	415
16, § 3. Impeachment	417
§ 4. Removal of trustees	417

Statutes.

1890, chap. 6. Educational institutions	415
---	-----

Compiled Laws.

§ 3588. Rescission of contracts	653
---------------------------------------	-----

Texas.Constitution.

Art. 8, § 1. Amount of occupation tax	613
§ 2. Occupation taxes	619

Statutes.		General Statutes.
1870, Aug. 13. Charter of San Antonio.....	609	§ 518. General election statute.....	218
Revised Civil Statutes.		519. Adoption of amendment.....	219
Art. 622. Electric wires in streets.....	540	Subd. 88, § 520. Amendment of city charter..	215
Sayle's Statutes.		§§ 1381-1396. Marriage.....	705
Art. 2201. Limitation against minors.....	544	§ 1399 et seq. Powers of married women.....	536
Utah.		West Virginia.
Compiled Laws, 1876.		Code, 1868.
P. 375. Divorce.....	484	Chap. 63. Marriage.....	709
Compiled Laws, 1888.		Code, 1891.
P. 2802. Divorce.....	484	Chap. 103, § 5. Damages for negligent killing..	363
§ 3150. Limitation of actions.....	484	Wisconsin.
Code Civil Procedure.		Statutes.
§ 201. Limitation of actions.....	484	1868, chap. 130, § 25. Increase in assessor's valuation.....	584
Virginia.		1871, chap. 106, § 1. Increase in assessor's valuation.....	585
Code.		1874, chap. 87. Columbus charter.....	595
§ 2475. Subcontractor's lien.....	626	1876, chap. 236. Town cemeteries.....	605
2476. Perfecting contractor's lien.....	626	Revised Statutes.
2477. Perfecting lien of subcontractor.....	626	Chap. 86. General corporation law.....	582
2479. Notifying owner of claim.....	627	§ 1034. Taxes.....	583
Washington.		1085. Land for purposes of taxation.....	584
Constitution.		1088. Exemptions from taxation.....	583
Art. 11, § 10. Amendments of city charters...	215	1081. Correction of assessment roll.....	585
Statutes.		1438. Cemeteries.....	598
1881, Nov. 21. Powers of married women.....	531	1439. Town cemeteries.....	595
Code.		2880. Action for tort to wife.....	610
§ 7. Parties.....	511	Wyoming.
47. Venue of actions affecting real estate...	518	Constitution.
Chap. 183. Powers of married woman.....	531	Art. 1, § 9. Right to jury trial.....	712
§ 2412. Descent of community property.....	513	6, § 1. Equal rights.....	712
2708. Qualification of one elected auditor...	141	17, § 1. Militia.....	713
3063. When vacancy in office occurs.....	141	Session Laws.
3302. Statute of Descent.....	613	1890, chap. 35. Exemption from jury duty....	713
16 L. R. A.,		chap. 73. Application for new trial.....	711
		Revised Statutes.
		§ 3348. Application for new trial.....	711

LAWYERS' REPORTS,

ANNOTATED.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Mary CLEMANS, Resp't.,

SUPREME ASSEMBLY ROYAL SOCIETY OF GOOD FELLOWS, Appl't.

(.....N. Y.)

1. A false warranty by an applicant for life insurance that he has not been rejected by any other company avoids a contract of which it becomes a part, although he believed it to be true while the agent of the insurer knew it to be false, having received and forwarded the former application and been notified of its rejection, if the agent did not fraudulently conceal the fact from the applicant.

2. The New York court of appeals cannot draw the inference of fraud in the

NOTE.—Effect of knowledge by insurer's agent of falsity of statements in application.

In general.

The views taken of such knowledge are not entirely harmonious, that of the courts of some of the Eastern states being in general less liberal toward the insured.

The knowledge of the insurer's agent of the falsity of the representations made by the insured in his application is immaterial. Voss v. Eagle L. & H. Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 42.

In McCoy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 82, the court says: "In an action at law in this Commonwealth on such a policy, to recover the amount of the insurance, the application is considered as a part of the contract, and if in fact the representations in it are in a material respect untrue, the action cannot be maintained; and oral testimony cannot be received to show either that the company when it issued the policy knew that the representations were untrue, or that the untrue representations were inserted in the application by the agent employed by the company to solicit the insurance without the knowledge of the applicant who had orally stated the truth to the agent,"—citing numerous Massachusetts cases.

In an action on a policy parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the provision by which the insurer seeks to avoid it was introduced by the agent of the insurer by mistake and contrary to the intention of the parties, the insured having accepted it without objection. Holmes v. Charlestown Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Met. 211, 43 Am. Dec. 428.

The mistake of the applicant in stating the condition of his title is not cured by the fact that the agent of the insurer drew up the application from statements made by the insured. Lowell v. Middlesex Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 127.

The court said: "It behooves the assured to see for himself, or get a skillful and trustworthy agent to act for him, and not to sign any paper which is not in fact substantially true, when his important rights, indeed all the benefits of the contract, are dependent upon it."

Where a policy is voidable by the insurer by reason of a false representation in the application inserted by the insurer's agent without the knowledge of the insured, the insured cannot escape payment of a premium note while the policy is still recognized as valid by the insurer, unless he offered to surrender the policy within a reasonable time after discovering its voidability. Plympton v. Dunn, 148 Mass. 523. In this case a year and a half was held not a reasonable time.

Parol evidence of knowledge on the part of the agent of the insurer of the falsity of a warranty by the insured is inadmissible to raise an estoppel against the insurer to set up the breach of warranty. Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 40 N. J. L. 503, 20 Am. Rep. 271.

An agent of the insurer whose authority is limited to receiving and transmitting applications, who prepares an application for the assured, is for that purpose the agent of the insured who must bear the responsibility for errors made by him in the application. Wilson v. Conway F. Ins. Co. 4 R. L. 141.

Where the agent of the insurer, whose authority was limited to receiving and forwarding applications, receiving, countersigning and delivering policies and collecting premiums, fraudulently and falsely recorded the answers of an applicant, without the latter's knowledge, the policy issued thereon is not binding on the company. Ryan v. World Mut. L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 166, 19 Am. Rep. 490.

If the agent of the insurer and the insured collusively insert false statements in the application, the knowledge of the agent of such falsity in no way estops the insurer to take advantage of it. United States Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Minch, 53 N. Y. 144.

Knowledge by the agent of the insurer of the falsity of a warranty entered into by the insured will not relieve the latter from the consequences of the breach. Jennings v. Chenango County Mut. Ins. Co. 2 Denio, 75; Chase v. Hamilton Ins. Co. 20 N. Y. 52; Galbraith v. Arlington Mut. L. Ins. Co. 12 Bush, 20; State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Arthur, 30 Pa. 315; Barteau v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 593.

The mere fact that the agent of the insured knew the actual facts does not affect the insurer's right to assert the breach of warranty if the facts are not correctly stated by the insured in his application. Kenyon v. Knights Templars & M. Mut. Aid Assn. 122 N. Y. 247.

An insurance agent's knowledge of the falsity of warranties in an application which he helps to prepare will not prevent them from avoiding the policy. Sullivan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 8, R. 88.

first instance for the purpose of supporting a judgment which does not proceed upon that ground, even though there is evidence which would permit such inference, if there is also evidence negating its existence.

(March 15, 1902.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Dutchess County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a certificate of life insurance. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. S. M. Lindsley, for appellant:

The application to defendant warrants that every statement made therein and to the medical examiner is strictly true.

The terms of the application clearly bring it within the accepted definition of warranty as applied to insurance contracts.

Alexander, Life Ins. 51; Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 157, 86 Am. Dec. 862; May, Ins. § 156; 5 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2051; Barreau v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 595; Foot v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 571; Cushman v. United States L. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 407.

Durnin warranted that he had never been rejected on an application for life insurance. That was false.

This constituted a breach of warranty, which avoided the contract and bars recovery.

Where the application states material facts falsely to the knowledge of the insured, the mere fact that the agent who prepared it knew by personal observation the truth, does not prevent the insurer from setting up the false representations to defeat the insurance. Pottsville Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Fromm, 100 Pa. 847.

In Brown v. Cattaraugus County Mut. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 885, Strong, J., who wrote the opinion, maintained that parol evidence was inadmissible to create an estoppel by showing that the agent of the insurer was responsible for the false statements in the application and the consequent breach of warranty, but the judgment of the court was put on other grounds.

In Plumb v. Cattaraugus County Mut. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 892, 72 Am. Dec. 52, the court at the same term by a majority of one (Johnson, Ch. J., Denio and Strong, JJ., dissenting), held such evidence was admissible and that the insurer was estopped to set up the breach of warranty for which the agent was responsible. Followed in Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 550, and in the later cases after some hesitation.

In Waterbury v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co., 6 Dak. 468, it is said to be too well settled to be now questioned that if at the time of issuing the policy the company or its agents know the falsity of a representation by the applicant the company is estopped from asserting such falsity in order to escape liability.

The insurer is estopped to deny the correctness of representations in the application which his agent with full knowledge of the facts has induced the insured to make. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Davies, 87 Ky. 541.

An insurance company is estopped from taking advantage of the falsity of an answer in an application for insurance, where, at the time of the issue of the policy, it personally or through its agent has knowledge of the facts which the question answered is intended to elicit. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. v. Brodie, 4 L. R. A. 458, 52 Ark. 11; Dunbar v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492; Menk v. Home Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 50; Continental Ins. Co. v. Pearce, 30 Kan. 396, 7 Am. St. Rep. 557; Pickels v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551; Western Assur. Co. v. Rector, 85 Ky. 294.

Knowledge by the insurer's agent of the falsity of a material statement by the applicant estops the insurer to set up such falsity to avoid payment of the policy. Miller v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 216, 7 Am. Rep. 122.

Where a policy-writing agent, with knowledge of the facts subsequently relied on to defeat a recovery, prepares an application satisfactory to himself, and acts on his own knowledge in taking the risk, the insured can recover in the absence of collusion or fraud. Richards v. Washington F. & 16 L. R. A.

M. Ins. Co. 60 Mich. 490; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Hick, 23 Ill. App. 381.

If the agent of the insurer relies upon his own knowledge in filling up the application without consulting the applicant a mistake of the agent will not avoid the policy. Parker v. Amazon Ins. Co. 24 Wis. 393; Mechler v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 38 Wis. 605.

Where the insurer's agent assumed the entire preparation of the application which the applicant signed without knowing its contents, the company cannot set up the breach of warranty arising from the incorrectness of answers for which the agent was responsible. Temminck v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 72 Mich. 388; Dunbar v. Phoenix Ins. Co. Id. 492.

If the agent of the insurer with knowledge of the facts incorrectly states them in the application the insurer is estopped to deny their correctness. American Ins. Co. v. Luttrell, 89 Ill. 314; New England F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Schettler, 38 Ill. 166; Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Wright, 22 Ill. 462; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Ives, 56 Ill. 402; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. McKee, 94 Ill. 494; Eggleson v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 65 Iowa, 308; Sullivan v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 34 Kan. 170; Hartford Ins. Co. v. Haas, 3 L. R. A. 64, 37 Ky. 531; Williamson v. New Orleans Ins. Assn. 84 Ala. 106; Crescent Ins. Co. v. Camp, 71 Tex. 506; Western Assur. Co. v. Stoddard, 38 Ala. 606.

The insured is not affected by an overestimate of the value of the property by the agent of the insurer who drew the application in which he took no fraudulent part. Cumberland Valley Mut. Prot. Co. v. Scheil, 29 Pa. 31.

Where the agent, seeing the property, inserts a value in the application not given by the insured, who signs the application without reading it and without knowing the valuation inserted therein, and was induced to do so by an act on the part of the company, the company is estopped from denying the correctness of such valuation. Wheaton v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 415.

Where the insured premises were thoroughly examined by the insurer's agent the insurer cannot plead fraudulent concealment. Michael v. Nashville Mut. Ins. Co. 10 La. Ann. 787.

In Cotten v. Fidelity & C. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 506, it was held that a general warranty against bodily infirmity in an application did not extend to near-sightedness when the applicant wore spectacles which the agent of the insurer saw.

Where insurance has been had upon an application representing the insured as free from bodily infirmity, which is contested because of deafness, the insured may show that the insurer's agent knew of such deafness before and while soliciting such insurance from conversations with him. Follett v. United States Mut. Acc. Assn. 12 L. R. A. 315, 107 N. C. 240.

Where a physician acting as agent for the company, in examining an applicant for life insurance, Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 4 Cent. Rep. 529, 108 N. Y. 341, 57 Am. Rep. 729.

Plaintiff cannot escape the effect of the warranty, upon the claim that Durnin did not know the Prudential Company had rejected him.

He is presumed to have read his application and to know its contents.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934.

He warranted that no company had rejected him, and whether he knew that the statement in his warranty was untrue was clearly immaterial.

Bliss, Life Ins. 2d ed. § 38; Duckett v. Williams, 2 Crompt. & M. 348, 4 Tyr. 240; Brisbane v. Parsons, 33 N. Y. 332; First Nat. Bank assumes to write out the answers to the questions upon his own knowledge of the facts, rather than from the answers given by the applicant, the answers as given by him are conclusive on the company. Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 76 Mich. 428.

Where the soliciting agent, having personal knowledge of the situation and ownership of the property, fills up the application, statements therein as to title and the distance of the property from other buildings are statements of the company, not of the insured. Thomas v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 2 West. Rep. 527, 20 Mo. App. 150.

The knowledge of a soliciting agent who wrote out an application for insurance, of facts concerning the title, which he fails to disclose to the company, is constructive notice to the company, which cannot avoid liability on the ground of misrepresentation, although the policy provides that the application is a warranty, and that any false representation therein shall render the policy void. Reynolds v. Iowa & N. Ins. Co. 80 Iowa, 563.

The knowledge of an agent, before the issuance of an insurance policy, of the truth as to the ownership of the insured property and litigation concerning it, will prevent a defense on the ground of misrepresentations as to those matters in the application. Western Assur. Co. v. Stoddard, 86 Ala. 606; German Ins. Co. v. Churchill, 26 Ill. App. 206; American C. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 29 Ill. App. 602.

Where payment of a policy is resisted because of a breach of a warranty that the building did not stand on leased ground, parol evidence is admissible to show that the agent of the insurer knew that the premises were leased, and if such knowledge is established the insurer is estopped to set up the breach of warranty. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Weill, 28 Gratt. 389, 28 Am. Rep. 364; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Hick, 125 Ill. 361.

If the agent of the insurer knew at the time of issuing the policy that the building stood on leased ground, but did not so state in the policy, the insurer cannot escape liability under a clause voiding the policy if such fact is not stated therein. Brothers v. California Ins. Co. 8 N. Y. Supp. 86; Van Schoick v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 434.

Where an agent, having power to effect insurance without consulting the home office, was fully apprised of the ignorance of the person insured, who was an illiterate German woman unable to read or write the English language, and knew all about the nature and extent of her title, a policy issued by him on her property will not be void because she is not the absolute and unconditioned owner, although it contained a stipulation that it should be void in that event. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Haas, 2 L. R. A. 64, 37 Ky. 531.

Where an agent sent his clerk to solicit a risk and take an application, and the clerk knew that there was other insurance on the property, but the 16 L. R. A.

of Ballston Spa v. North America Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 45; Fitch v. American P. L. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 557, 17 Am. Rep. 372; Foot v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 571; Cushman v. United States L. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 409; Baker v. Home L. Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 649; Powers v. North Eastern Mut. L. Assn. 50 Vt. 630; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Yung, 12 West. Rep. 715, 113 Ind. 159; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co. 112 U. S. 250, 28 L. ed. 708; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 7 L. R. A. 217, 75 Tex. 338, 16 Am. St. Rep. 898.

Knowledge of the agent of the company of the falsity of the warranty would not relieve the insured or his representatives from the consequences of a breach.

Barreau v. Phœnia Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y.

agent, ignorant of the other insurance, issued a policy thereon, and collected the premium, it was held that the company was bound by the knowledge of the agent's clerk, who, for the purpose of that policy, must be regarded as the company's soliciting agent. Laws 1890, chap. 211, § 1; Bennett v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 600.

Where the insurer is seeking to escape liability because other insurance in excess of that named in the policy has been taken, it may be shown by parol that the amount taken was really assented to but that a different amount was expressed by the mistake of the insurer's agent, and the insurer is estopped to insist upon the forfeiture due to the blunder of his agent. Greene v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 11 R. I. 434.

The knowledge of the agent of the misrepresentations upon which the insurance was procured must be pleaded in reply if it is intended to rely thereon to defeat the defense based on such misrepresentations. Texas Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Davidge, 51 Tex. 244.

Knowledge of agent acquired in other capacity.

In Supreme Council of A. L. of H. v. Green, 71 Md. 263, a member of a benefit society falsely represented that the beneficiary named by him was his niece. It was held that the society was not estopped to avail itself of the false representation by hearsay information of the officer of the society who witnessed the application, but was not charged with the duty of ascertaining the qualifications of beneficiaries, that the beneficiary was not the applicant's niece but of which he had no personal knowledge.

Knowledge by the insurer's medical examiner, obtained while not acting for the insurer, that the physical condition of the applicant is different than the latter warrants in his application and policy will not estop the insurer to take advantage of the breach of warranty. Foot v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 571.

Where an agent, in transacting business not connected with his agency, acquires knowledge which might affect a policy subsequently issued by him as agent, evidence of such knowledge cannot be given against the company, where it was acquired so long before the issuance of the policy as not to justify an inference that he had it in mind and acted upon it in issuing the policy. Stennett v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 68 Iowa, 674.

Agent's perversion of information by the insured.

In Maine an application drawn by the insurer's agent is by statute made conclusive upon the insurer but not upon the insured, although signed by the latter. Caston v. Monmouth Mut. F. Ins. Co. 64 Me. 170; Emery v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. 63 Me. 322.

Where the insurer's agent in writing out the ap-

595. See also Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 863; Jennings v. Chango County Mut. Ins. Co. 2 Denio, 75; Foot v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 571; McCollum v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 55 Hun, 103; Sullivan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. S. R. 38; Cooke, Life Ins. p. 37; Kenyon v. Knights Templars & M. Mut. Aid Asso. 123 N. Y. 257.

If Jacobs caused false answers to be given, he was guilty of fraudulently and collusively procuring the false warranty and the defendant is not bound.

Ellenberger v. Protective Mut. F. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 464; Smith v. Cash Mut. F. Ins. Co. 24 Pa. 820; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 984; Ryan v. World Mut. L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 168, 19 Am. Rep. 490; Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 159; Alexander, Life Ins. 54; United States Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Minch, 53 N. Y. 144; Cooke, Life Ins. p. 40.

Durnin's statement that he had never been rejected by any life insurance company, etc., was material.

Edington v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 564, 1 Cent. Rep. 524, 100 N. Y. 536; Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 218; London Assurance v. Mansel, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 863.

Where a specific question is asked, and the applicant makes an untruthful answer, the policy is avoided, whether the answers are warranties or representations, because the parties may by their contract make material a fact that would otherwise be immaterial.

Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 212; see also § 218; plication fraudulently falsified the applicant's answers without the latter's knowledge, and forged the medical certificate, the insurer cannot escape liability to the insured after having had the benefits of the contract. McArthur v. Home L. Asso. 73 Iowa, 336.

Where the agent of the insurer suppressed the genuine application made by the insured and substituted a spurious one upon which the policy was issued, the insurer is nevertheless liable on the policy. Massachusetts L. Ins. Co. v. Eshelman, 30 Ohio St. 647.

Where the untrue statement in the application originated with the agent of the insurer and was unknown to the insured when he signed the application, the insurer is estopped to set up such false statement to defeat the policy. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 223, 20 L. ed. 617; Lueders v. Hartford L. & A. Ins. Co. 12 Fed. Rep. 436; Eames v. Home Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 621, 24 L. ed. 298; New Jersey Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Baker, 94 U. S. 610, 24 L. ed. 268; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304, 33 L. ed. 341.

Where the application which the insured signed contained an express limitation of the power of the agent to bind the company by anything not expressed therein, the insured is to be presumed to be aware of the limitation, and if he signs the application into which the agent has inserted different statements than the insured made, the latter is bound by the application. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 984.

If the insurer's agent after being informed fully as to the facts incorrectly states them in the application, the insurer is estopped to take advantage of the error to avoid liability on the policy. North American F. Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146, 7 Am. Rep. 698; Planters Ins. Co. v. Myers, 55 Miss. 479, 30 Am. Rep. 521; Combs v. Hannibal, S. & I. Co. 48 Mo. 143, 97 Am. Dec. 393; Campbell v. Merchants & F. Mut. Ins. Co. 37 N. H. 35, 72 Am. Dec. 324; Clark v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 40 N. H. 393, 77 Am. Dec. 721; Patten v. Merchants & F. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 40 N. H. 375; Hartford Protection Ins. Co. v. Harmer, 2 Ohio St. 453; Farmers Ins. Co. v. Williams, 39 Ohio St. 584; Ellenberger v. Protective Mut. F. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 464; Swan v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 98 Pa. 37; May v. Buckeye Mut. Ins. Co. 25 Wis. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 76; Aetna L. S. F. & T. Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246, 4 Am. Rep. 438; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Planters Ins. Co. v. Borrelli, 1 Dast. 352, 25 Am. Rep. 780; Ring v. Windsor County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 Vt. 568; Schwarzbach v. Ohio Valley Prot. Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 633; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 50 Pa. 331; Miner v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 27 Wis. 693, 9 Am. Rep. 479; American L. Ins. Co. v. Mahone, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 152, 22 L. ed. 598; Bennett v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, 8 Cent. Rep. 692, 106 N. Y. 243; Woodruff v. Imperial F. Ins. Co. 38 N. Y. 140; Pitt- 16 L. R. A.

ney v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6; O'Brien v. Home Ben. Soc. 117 N. Y. 810, affirming 51 Hun, 495; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Elliott (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 668.

And this notwithstanding a stipulation that the solicitor shall be the agent of the applicant and not of the insurer. Miner v. Phoenix Ins. Co., Clark v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. and Hartford Protection Ins. Co. v. Harmer, supra; Beal v. Park F. Ins. Co. 16 Wis. 241, 32 Am. Dec. 719; Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Bruner, 23 Pa. 50; Hough v. City F. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 531; May v. Buckeye Mut. Ins. Co. and Columbia Ins. Co. v. Cooper, supra; Planters Mut. Ins. Co. v. Deford, 33 Md. 382; Contra, Kabok v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 21 N. Y. S. R. 203; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Abbott v. Shawmut Mut. F. Ins. Co. 3 Allen, 213.

If the statements in the application relied upon as breaches of warranty are inserted by the agent of the insurer, without collusion or fraud on the part of the insured, the insurer is estopped to set up their error or falsity. Baker v. Home L. Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 648; Miller v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 10 Cent. Rep. 38, 107 N. Y. 202; Mowry v. Rosendale, 74 N. Y. 360; Bentley v. Owego Mut. Ben. Asso. 5 N. Y. Supp. 223.

An insurance company cannot repudiate the fraud of its agent in inserting untrue answers in the application, and thus escape the obligation of its contract, merely because the assured accepted in good faith the act of the agent, without examination. Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. 5 L. R. A. 646, 128 Pa. 553; Rogers v. Phenix Ins. Co. 121 Ind. 570; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Golden, 121 Ind. 524.

The insurer cannot take advantage of a breach of warranty arising out of the mistake of his agent acting within his authority and of which the insured was innocent. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cusick, 109 Pa. 157; Menk v. Home M. Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 50.

An error or fraud on the part of an insurance agent who makes out an application, in inserting erroneous or untruthful statements, is chargeable to the insurer and will not defeat the policy. Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. Dak. 167; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stark, 120 Ind. 444; Rockford Ins. Co. v. Seyferth, 29 Ill. App. 513; Roberts v. State Ins. Co. 25 Mo. App. 92; State Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 14 Colo. 499, 20 Am. St. Rep. 231; Crouse v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 79 Mich. 249.

Although it is provided in a policy of insurance that the statements in an application are warranties, and if any of them are false the policy shall be void, it is not forfeited if the company's own agent makes all the false statements contained in the application, and there was no fraud or attempt to deceive on the part of the assured. State Ins. Co. v. Gray, 44 Kan. 731; McComb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. (Iowa) June 2, 1891.

Phenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 80 L. ed. 644; Bartau v. Phenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 595, citing Bunyan, Life Ins. p. 81; Higbie v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 58 N. Y. 603; Chase v. Hamilton Ins. Co. 20 N. Y. 52.

Mr. C. Morschauer, for respondent:

Defendant's agent, having full knowledge of all the facts, and he being the one who misled Durnin, the defendant cannot now take advantage of it.

O'Brien v. Home Ben. Society, 117 N. Y. 810; Miller v. Phenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 10 Cent. Rep. 88, 107 N. Y. 292.

Per Curiam:

The uncontradicted evidence in this case clearly showed that the assured, just prior to June 20, 1887, applied for insurance, by means of a written application signed by him, to the Prudential Life Insurance Company of America, and on that date his application was rejected by that company. The learned court found that the assured made no false statements in his application for insurance to the company defendant. In such last-mentioned application he stated, in answer to questions asked therein, that he had applied to another insurance company for insurance, but had not been rejected. That this answer was false cannot be disputed, upon the uncontradicted evidence. The application, and the answers thereto, were part of the contract of insurance, and were made so by the certificate. The answer was a war-

A misrepresentation of a material fact inserted by a soliciting agent, without the knowledge and contrary to the instructions of the applicant, in an application not read to or by him, although it contained a printed clause of which he did not know and to which his attention was not called, limiting the agent's powers,—does not invalidate the policy. Tabbs v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 646.

An insurance company is estopped by answers falsely or improperly written by its agent or solicitor to questions contained in the application, without the knowledge of the applicant, where he made true answers to such questions, even though the application was signed by the applicant without knowing its contents. State Ins. Co. v. Gray, 44 Kan. 731.

False statements in the written application, which was wholly prepared and signed by the insurer's agent, to whom the insured made oral application stating the facts truly, are not available as a defense to the policy issued on such application. Baker v. Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. 14 West. Rep. 438, 70 Mich. 199.

A warranty by an insured that his answers to the medical examiner will be true is not a warranty that such answers will be written down correctly by the medical examiner. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Hazelwood, 8 L. R. A. 217, 75 Tex. 388.

An applicant having correctly stated the date of his birth to the insurer's agent is not prejudiced by the agent's mistake in writing it in the application. McCall v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 9 W. Va. 297, 27 Am. Rep. 558; Simmons v. West Virginia Ins. Co. 8 W. Va. 474.

Where the insurer's medical examiner filled in blanks in the application differently than he was informed by the insured after the latter had signed it, the insurer is not relieved from liability on account of the breach of warranty so arising. Grattan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617.

Where the applicant for life insurance certifies that the answers written by the insurer's medical examiner are correct, but which he afterwards alleges were recorded differently by the examiner than they were given to him, such certificate is conclusive unless it appears that the answers were not written when the certificate was signed, or at least were not known to the insured when he made such signature. Grattan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 274, 44 Am. Rep. 372.

Where an assured correctly states to the soliciting agent all the circumstances under which property is owned or held by him, any error or neglect on the part either of the agent or company in stating the title or interest of the assured will not avoid the policy. Burson v. Philadelphia F. Asso. 120 Pa. 267, 20 Am. St. Rep. 919; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 92 Ill. 64, 34 Am. Rep. 106; Crescent Ins. Co. v. Camp, 71 Tex. 508.

16 L. R. A.

An insurance company is estopped to deny representations as to the title to the insured property, made in the application, which were written therein by its agent after a full disclosure to him of the true state of the title. Tarbell v. Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co. 63 Vt. 53.

An insurance company whose agent himself prepared an application with knowledge of the fact that the insured had only a title bond for his land, which was not paid for, cannot defeat an action on the policy on the ground that the application improperly states that the insured was the sole and undisputed owner of the property, and that it was unincumbered, where this was signed by the insured after making a full statement of the facts, in accordance with the agent's theory of his title. Key v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 77 Iowa, 174.

Where an agent applying to plaintiff, owner of a billiard hall and tables, unfamiliar with the English language, for insurance on the hall, was referred to a tenant, who signed the application, and the policy, conditioned that the interest of a third party in the hall or contents must be stated, did not state tenant's interest in the furniture in the hall, of which fact the agent had knowledge, plaintiff can recover to the extent of his interest, upon a loss by fire. Diebold v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 83 Fed. Rep. 807.

An agent of a mutual insurance company, authorized to issue a policy of insurance and consummate the contract, and who is informed by the applicant that a part of the property is on the right of way of a railroad company, and with his own hand fills in the blanks in the application for a policy, and, with knowledge of the condition of the property, writes "Yes" as an answer to the question: "Do you own the land in fee simple?"—thereby waives for the company the stipulation in the policy that it shall be void if any misrepresentation be made as to title or condition of the property. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 41 Kan. 161.

Where the insurer's agent although informed of any incumbrance by the applicant omits to mention it in the application which he prepares and which the applicant signs at his request, the insurer cannot take advantage of the breach of warranty so arising. Renier v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 89; Crouse v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 79 Mich. 249; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Elliott (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 668.

Where insurer's agent falsely fills up blanks.

Where the agent of the insurer obtains the applicant's signature to a blank application and fills it up falsely without the knowledge of the insured, the insurer cannot defend because of such falsity. Brown v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 8 West. Rep. 775, 85 Mich. 306.

An answer to an application for insurance, as to ranty, and upon this evidence there was a breach thereof. Root v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 571; Cushman v. United States Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 404. It is not important that the party making the warranty really believed in its entire truth. If it be false, it avoids the contract. Nor does the mere knowledge of the agent of the company, at the time when it is made, that the warranty is false, prevent the defendant from setting up the breach as a defense to the action on the policy. Ibid.; Barreau v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 595. The finding of the learned trial judge that the application of the assured to the Prudential Life Insurance Company was withdrawn was not supported by any evidence, as we think, while the finding that the facts were within the personal knowledge of the agent Jacobs, who procured this insurance, furnishes no answer to this charge of breach of warranty. Mere knowledge of the falsity is not, as we have seen, enough to prevent the defense from being set up. There is, as we think, sufficient evidence in this case to permit a jury to find that the agent of the defendant fraudulently concealed from the assured the fact that he had been rejected by another company to which he had applied, through this same agent; and that such agent, while himself aware of the fact of such rejection, procured the assured to make application to this defendant through him, as agent of the company, and to innocently state that he had not been rejected by any other company, when the agent knew such statement was false. If such were the case, we think the defendant would not be entitled to set up the breach of a warranty which had been thus procured. The case, in such aspect, would much resemble that of Plumb v. Cattaraugus County Mut. Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 392, 73 Am. Dec. 52. There is evidence on the part of the defendant which contradicts this theory, for the agent swears the assured was rejected June 20, and that within two weeks the applicant's age, filled in by the agent, who is told that the applicant is ignorant in the matter, is binding on the insurer. Keystone Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Jones, 72 Md. 363.

Where an agent, after a life insurance application had been signed, leaving blank the question as to the weekly wages of the applicant, without collusion with or knowledge of the applicant, fills in the blank with an untrue statement as to the applicant's weekly income, the company is not thereby relieved from liability under a warranty that the facts stated are true. Sawyer v. Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 30.

Where an insurance agent, acting within the general scope of his business, has examined an application upon questions contained in the blank application, and received true answers thereto, but omits certain answers, and the applicant signs the application under the agent's direction, the policy is not rendered null and void by such omissions although it contains a provision that any false representation or omission in the material facts from the application shall render it void. Kansas Prot. Union v. Gardner, 41 Kan. 397.

Where the agent of the insurer inserts in blanks in the application after the applicant has signed it untrue answers the insurer is estopped to set up such false representations to defeat the insurance. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 7 West. Rep. 407, 100 Ind. 273.

So, too, where the agent unknown to the applicant wrote down the latter's answers incorrectly. Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 68 Iowa 787, 56 Am. Rep. 870.

When falsity is due to misconstruction of facts by agent.

The insurer is estopped to deny the answers in an application framed by his agent without collusion or fraud by the applicant, or to give such answers a different interpretation than that adopted by the agent. Bushaw v. Woman's Mut. Ins. & A. Co. 28 N. Y. S. R. 524.

The applicant is not responsible if the answers given are misconstrued or recorded incorrectly by the agent of the insurer. Kansas Prot. Union v. Gardner, 41 Kan. 397; Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Garner, 77 Ala. 210.

Where the applicant states all the facts and the agent puts his own construction on them the insurer is estopped to question the correctness of that construction. Langdon v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 272; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Thoenes, 26 Ill. App. 496.

16 L. R. A.

The insured may show by parol that he disclosed the facts truly to the agent of the insurer and that the false statements in the application on account of which it is sought to avoid the policy were due to the misconstruction of the facts by the agent. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581.

The agent of the insurer having upon a statement of facts by the applicant suggested the answer to the interrogatory as formally made in the application without asking for the more full or particular statement, the insurer cannot object that the answer is not such as might or should have been made. Higgins v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 74 N. Y. 6.

A former rejection of the insured on his application to a legion of honor is not a breach of a warranty that he had never applied for insurance in any other company, when the agent told him that a legion of honor was not an insurance company. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Hazlewood, 7 L. R. A. 217, 75 Tex. 388.

Where the agent writes in the application that the applicant has no other insurance, although the applicant told him that he had certificates of membership in co-operative companies, which the agent said were not considered insurance by him, the company is bound by the agent's interpretation, and estopped from asserting the contrary. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 133 U. S. 304, 33 L. ed. 341.

Where a policy contains a notice on its back that no agent has power to bind the company by receiving any representations or information not contained in the application, an expression of opinion of an agent, that insurance in an aid and accident association is not called for by any question as to other insurance, cannot justify a false answer that the applicant has no other insurance. McCollum v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 55 Hun, 108.

A false conclusion by the agent of the insurer as to the true state of the title of the applicant after being truly informed of all the facts cannot be taken advantage of by the insurer. Key v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 77 Iowa, 174.

Knowledge of the assured of a misrepresentation in the application, inserted by the soliciting agent with the assurance that it will make no difference, will not avoid the policy, there being no fraudulent purpose on the part of the assured. Reynolds v. Iowa & N. Ins. Co. 80 Iowa, 563; Wright v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Ky.) 12 Ky. L. Rep. 360.

J. G. G.

thereof he so informed the assured, and returned him the premium. What the trial court states in one of the findings in this case we think amounts to merely a statement of knowledge of the agent as to the falsity of the warranty when it was made. This is not a defense. There is no finding of fraud, and there is evidence in the case which, if believed, shows there was none. We cannot draw the inference of fraud in the first instance for the purpose of supporting a judgment, even where there is evidence which would permit the inference, because there is also evidence which, if believed, negatives its existence, and the judgment does not proceed upon the ground of fraud. There is no evidence that the answers to the application were truly made and erroneously taken down by the agent of the company, and hence it does not come within the O'Brien and other kindred cases. O'Brien v. Home Ben. Society, 117 N. Y. 310.

We must reverse this judgment, and grant a new trial; costs to abide the event. All concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

J. D. McCARN, Appt.,

v.

INTERNATIONAL & GREAT NORTHERN R. CO.

(.....Tex.....)

An initial carrier may protect itself by contract against liability for loss not occurring on its own line whether the shipment be wholly within one state or be interstate.

(April 15, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Bexar County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to cattle which had been delivered to defendant for transportation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Dwyer, for appellant:

The railroad company had authority and power to contract beyond its own line.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 151, pp. 116, 117, and authorities cited.

After a through contract is entered into, as the one referred to in above assignments, the succeeding or connecting carriers then become the agents of the receiving carrier.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 273, and authorities cited.

The railroad company, having contracted to transport the cattle beyond its own line to the place of destination, as in this case it did, it could not exempt itself from liability caused by negligence of connecting carriers by a clause to that effect in the same contract, for the reason that by so doing the carrier limits its liability for negligence, and any such provision is inconsistent and against public policy and void.

Lawson, Carriers, § 235; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. pp. 289, 290; 2 Redfield, Railways, p. 144; 2 Beach, Railways, § 920, and authorities cited; Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Bloch, 86 Tenn. 392, 6 Am. St. Rep. 347; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Allison, 59 Tex. 193; 3 Tex. Ct. App. Civ. Cas. §§ 8, 84; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Pontius, 19 Ohio St. 221; Ortt v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 36 Minn. 396; Jennings v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 59 Hun, 227;

Condit v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 54 N. Y. 500; Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Merriman, 52 Ill. 123; Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co. 93 U. S. 174, 23 L. ed. 872.

Messrs. Barnard & Green, for appellee:

Although a common carrier has the power to unconditionally bind itself to transport and deliver freight at any point far beyond its own road, yet it does not owe to the public any duty to transport or deliver any freight beyond its own road, and when shippers desire it to do so, it can do it upon any contract containing such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations as the shipper and carrier may agree to, and such contract is valid and binding upon the parties to it.

The contract in this case contained the following clause: "The understanding of both parties hereto being that the party of the first part shall not be held or deemed liable for anything beyond the line of the International & Great Northern Railroad Company, excepting to protect the through rate of freight named herein."

Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Williams, 77 Tex. 121; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baird, 75 Tex. 256; Harris v. Howe, 5 L. R. A. 777, 74 Tex. 534; Morse v. Brainard, 41 Vt. 550; Stewart v. Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. 47 Iowa, 229, 29 Am. Rep. 476; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Farmers & M. Bank, 20 Wis. 122; Irwin v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 653; Lawson, Carriers, § 236, and cases there cited; Shelton v. Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. 59 N. Y. 258; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Frankenberg, 54 Ill. 88, 5 Am. Rep. 92; Erie R. Co. v. Wilcox, 84 Ill. 239, 25 Am. Rep. 451.

Stayton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by appellant to recover damages for injury alleged to have been caused to sixty head of cattle while in transit from San Antonio, Tex., to Chicago, in the state of Illinois. The cause was tried without a jury, and the court found that "the contract for shipment was a through contract from San Antonio, Texas, to Chicago, Illinois," but that the contract, among others, contained the following stipulation: "Twelfth. And it is further stipulated and agreed between the parties hereto that, in cause the livestock mentioned herein is to be transported over the road or roads of any other railroad company the said party of the first part [appellee] shall be released from liability of every kind after said livestock shall have left its road; and the party of the second part hereby so expressly stipulates and agrees; the understanding of both parties hereto being that the party of the first part shall not be held or deemed liable for anything beyond the line of the International & Great Northern Railroad Company, excepting to protect the through rate of freight named herein." The court further found that no injury occurred to appellant's cattle while on appellee's line of railway, but that the cattle were injured while on a connecting line, to which they had been delivered by appellee, and on these findings rendered a judgment against the plaintiff. There is no statement of facts, and under the findings it must be conceded that appellee received the cattle under an agreement that they should be transported from San Antonio to Chicago; and the inference is that to do this it was necessary they should pass over road or roads other than that of appellee. That in such a case a carrier may by contract protect itself against liability for loss not occurring on its own line, whether the shipment be wholly within this state or be interstate, we had deemed a settled question in this court. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baird, 75 Tex. 256; Fr. Worth & D. O. R. Co. v. Williams, 77 Tex. 121; Hunter v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 76 Tex. 195; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Adams, 78 Tex. 372; Harris v. Howe, 74 Tex. 537, 5 L. R. A. 777.

NOTE.—The authorities on the question involved in the above case are too fully presented in the opinion to need any further attention in a note.

16 L. R. A.

This is the rule we understand to be recognized by nearly all of the English and American courts. Myrick v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 107 U. S. 102, 27 L. ed. 325; Pratt v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 95 U. S. 43, 24 L. ed. 386; Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 123, 22 L. ed. 827; Tardos v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 85 La. Ann. 15; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Meyer, 78 Ala. 597; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Brumley, 5 Lea, 401; Mulligan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 86 Iowa, 186; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Farmers & M. Bank, 20 Wis. 124; Pendergast v. Adams Exp. Co. 101 Mass. 120; Berg v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 80 Kan. 582; St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. v. Larned, 103 Ill. 293; Field v. Chicago & R. I. R. Co. 71 Ill. 462; American Exp. Co. v. Second Nat. Bank of Titusville, 69 Pa. 394, 8 Am. Rep. 268; Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Wheeler, 49 N. Y. 616; Snider v. Adams Exp. Co. 63 Mo. 882; Taylor v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 82 Ark. 399, 29 Am. Rep. 1; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Avant, 80 Ga. 195; Schiff v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 52 How. Pr. 91; Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Bloch, 86 Tenn. 424; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Frankenberg, 54 Ill. 88, 5 Am. Rep. 92; Burroughs v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 100 Mass. 26, 1 Am. Rep. 78; United States Exp. Co. v. Rush, 24 Ind. 408; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Montfort, 60 Ill. 175; Erie R. Co. v. Wilcox, 84 Ill. 239, 25 Am. Rep. 451; Aldridge v. Great Western R. Co. 15 C. B. N. S. 582.

Authorities upon this point might be multiplied. Even the case of Muschamp v. Lancaster & P. J. R. Co., 8 Mees. & W. 421, does not assert a different rule. In England and in some of the states of the Union the mere receipt of goods to be carried to a destination beyond the line of the carrier who first receives them is held to evidence a contract to transport to such destination, while in others such receipt is not held to evidence a contract to convey beyond that carrier's line; but in the jurisdiction in which these diverse rulings are made there is a general concurrence of opinion in the proposition that the carrier may by special contract exempt itself from liability for an injury to freight resulting after it has gone into the hands of another carrier to be transported to destination. The ground of concurrence is contract, which in some jurisdictions it is held is necessary to relieve from liability for the act of a connecting carrier over whose line the freight must or does pass to its destination, while in the others it is held that, in the absence of special contract, no such liability rests on the receiving carrier for injuries accruing after he has safely passed the freight to a connecting carrier.

There are, however, a few cases in which it has been held that a carrier, under such a contract as that involved in this case, is liable for an injury to freight after it has passed into the hands of a connecting carrier uninjured; and among those are found some decisions by the court of appeals of this state, with which we regret to differ. In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vaughn (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. Rep. 775, the liability of a carrier was asserted, although the shipping contract was substantially the same as that involved in this case; and two cases are invoked as authority for the ruling in that case. One of these is the case of Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Allison, (decided by this court,) 59 Tex. 198. In that case the plaintiff shipped from Galveston, Tex., to Chicago, Ill., five cars of melons, in cars adapted to their preservation and safe carriage, under an agreement that the melons should be transported in those cars, without change, to Chicago. The evidence tended to show that a connecting carrier, to whom the cars were delivered, placed the melons in other cars less adapted to their safe transportation, and that from this injury resulted. The shipping contract provided that the railway company should not be liable for injury resulting from some causes enumerated, and that the company should not "be liable for any damage, loss, or injury occurring not on its own railroad." In disposing of the case it was said that the averments of the petition were to the effect that there was an agreement that the melons should be carried to their destination in the cars in which they were first placed. There is a general expression in the opinion that a carrier undertaking to carry freight to a destination beyond his own line cannot contract that his responsibility shall terminate at the end of his own line; but to ascertain what a court actually does decide, the facts on which the opinion is based must be considered, and no one paragraph in an opinion ought to be considered alone in arriving at the intention of the court. What this court did decide and intend to hold is so clearly expressed in the opinion in the case that we can but feel that, had the whole opinion been read, it ought not to have been understood to lay down any such rule as that it is cited to sustain. It is said that "the exemption from liability is, however, available only when the carrier forwards the goods consigned to him in the manner and by the route with reference to which the contract is made. If he deviates from his route, or forwards the goods by a different conveyance from those contemplated by his agreement, he becomes an insurer of the goods, and cannot avail himself of any exception made in his behalf in the contract." Fatman v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 2 Disney, 248; Robinson v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. 45 Iowa, 470. "The contract to forward the melons in this case through from Galveston to Chicago on the cars on which they were loaded was an entirety. By changing the cars after they left appellant's road the risk of their safe transportation was assumed by its agents, the connecting line, when the change occurred, for the company, and it became liable, notwithstanding the stipulation against damage beyond its own terminus. A case in point is that of Stewart v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Co., 47 Iowa, 229, 29 Am. Rep. 476. These goods were delivered to a transportation company at Worcester, Massachusetts, to be taken to Muscatine, Iowa, through without transfer, in cars owned and controlled by the company, and the contract contained a clause of exemption against liability for loss by fire. When the goods reached Chicago they were transferred to a warehouse, and consumed by fire the same day. It was held that the company was liable for the loss notwithstanding the exemption. The contract in this case, so far as the limitation of liability is concerned, was, in effect, that the defendant company was not to be liable for any damage or loss occurring beyond their own route, provided the freight should not be changed from the cars in which it was shipped." Instead of being a decision in favor of the rule for which it was cited, the direct holding in the opinion, as well as all the implications, are so strongly to the contrary that the views of this court in that case ought not to be misunderstood.

The other case cited in support of the adverse rule is Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co., 98 U. S. 174, 23 L. ed. 872, but it seems to us the opinion asserts no such rule as it was cited to maintain. That case was simply this: The Southern Express Company and Adams Express Company were engaged in the express business between New Orleans, La., and Louisville, Ky.; the former transporting a package of money from New Orleans, to Humboldt, Tenn., where it was delivered to the latter for transportation to plaintiff at Louisville. There was a contract between the express companies by which they divided the compensation for such carriage in proportion to the distance a package might be transported by them respectively. Between Humboldt and Louisville both companies employed the same messenger, who was exclusively subject to the orders of the Southern Express Company when south of the northern boundary of the state of Tennessee, and to the orders of the Adams Express Company when north of that boundary. The shipping contract contained a clause exempting the carrier with which it was made from liability for loss "occasioned by the dangers of railroad transportation, or ocean or river navigation, or by fire or storm," and it provided that this should inure to the benefit of any person or company to whom the property might be delivered for transportation. When the package was delivered at Humboldt to the Adams Express Company's messenger, who was the messenger of both companies, he took charge of it, and placed it in an iron safe, and deposited the safe in an apartment of the car set apart for the use of the express company, for transportation to Louisville. While the train to which the car containing the packages was attached was passing over a trestle, and, while the package was in the exclusive charge of the messenger, the trestle over which the car was passing gave way, and the car was thrown from the track, caught fire from the locomotive, and, with the money in the safe, these were together burned. The action was brought against the Adams Express Company, and, there being some evidence that the accident was caused by a defective trestle, the circuit court in effect instructed the jury that the exceptions from liability found in the shipping contract exempted the express company from liability, even though the accident may have occurred through the negligence of the railway company to transport the express company's messenger and packages in his possession and custody. From this statement it will be seen that no such question was presented in that case as arises in this. The claim was that the shipping contract exempted the express company from liability for a loss occurring through the negligence of the railway company it had employed to transport its messenger and the packages in his exclusive possession. The court, in effect, held that the railway company was the servant of the express company, for whose negligence the latter was responsible, and that for this reason, among others, the exemption from liability could not be allowed. The express company had no means whereby to transport such packages as it might contract to transmit, other than such as it might hire from railway or other companies or persons engaged in the business of transportation; and, if such companies or persons were not to be deemed the servants of the express company, that liability from which the common carrier cannot escape by contract could not be fixed on either in such cases. That the express company was a common carrier in that instance was not denied, and it was declared so to be by the court; but its claim was that it was relieved from liability by the contract. This the court denied, on the ground before stated, and then proceeded to show how the case would stand as to the carrier, under the facts of the case, as follows: "Express companies make their own bargains with the companies they employ, while they keep the property in their own charge, usually attended by a messenger. It was so in the present case.

see, and to the orders of the Adams Express Company when north of that boundary. The shipping contract contained a clause exempting the carrier with which it was made from liability for loss "occasioned by the dangers of railroad transportation, or ocean or river navigation, or by fire or storm," and it provided that this should inure to the benefit of any person or company to whom the property might be delivered for transportation. When the package was delivered at Humboldt to the Adams Express Company's messenger, who was the messenger of both companies, he took charge of it, and placed it in an iron safe, and deposited the safe in an apartment of the car set apart for the use of the express company, for transportation to Louisville. While the train to which the car containing the packages was attached was passing over a trestle, and, while the package was in the exclusive charge of the messenger, the trestle over which the car was passing gave way, and the car was thrown from the track, caught fire from the locomotive, and, with the money in the safe, these were together burned. The action was brought against the Adams Express Company, and, there being some evidence that the accident was caused by a defective trestle, the circuit court in effect instructed the jury that the exceptions from liability found in the shipping contract exempted the express company from liability, even though the accident may have occurred through the negligence of the railway company to transport the express company's messenger and packages in his possession and custody. From this statement it will be seen that no such question was presented in that case as arises in this. The claim was that the shipping contract exempted the express company from liability for a loss occurring through the negligence of the railway company it had employed to transport its messenger and the packages in his exclusive possession. The court, in effect, held that the railway company was the servant of the express company, for whose negligence the latter was responsible, and that for this reason, among others, the exemption from liability could not be allowed. The express company had no means whereby to transport such packages as it might contract to transmit, other than such as it might hire from railway or other companies or persons engaged in the business of transportation; and, if such companies or persons were not to be deemed the servants of the express company, that liability from which the common carrier cannot escape by contract could not be fixed on either in such cases. That the express company was a common carrier in that instance was not denied, and it was declared so to be by the court; but its claim was that it was relieved from liability by the contract. This the court denied, on the ground before stated, and then proceeded to show how the case would stand as to the carrier, under the facts of the case, as follows: "Express companies make their own bargains with the companies they employ, while they keep the property in their own charge, usually attended by a messenger. It was so in the present case.

The defendants had an arrangement with the railroad company, under which the packages of money, inclosed in an iron safe, were put into an apartment of a car set apart for the use of the express company. Yet the safe containing the packages continued in the custody of the messenger. Therefore, as between the defendants and the railroad company, it may be doubted whether the relation was that of a common carrier to his consignor, because the company had not the package in charge. The department in the car was the defendant's for the time being; and if the defendant retained the custody of the packages carried, instead of trusting them to the company, the latter did not insure the carriage. Miles v. Cattle, 6 Bing. 743; Tower v. Utica & S. R. Co. 7 Hill, 47, 48 Am. Dec. 36; Redf. Railroads, § 74. . . . Had the packages been delivered to the charge of the railroad company, without any stipulation for exemption from the ordinary liability of carriers, it would have been an insurer both to the express company and to the plaintiff. But, as they were not so delivered, the right of the plaintiff to the extremest constant vigilance during all stages of the carriage is lost if the defendants are not answerable for the negligence of the railroad company, notwithstanding the exception in their bills of lading." The same court, in the subsequent case of Myrick v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 107 U. S. 106, 27 L. ed. 826, said: "A railroad company is a carrier of goods for the public, and, as such, is bound to convey safely whatever goods are intrusted to it for transportation, within the course of its business, to the end of its route, and there deposit them in a suitable place for their owners or consignees. If the road of the company connects with other roads, and goods are received for transportation beyond the termination of its own line, there is superadded to its duty as a common carrier that of a forwarder by the connecting line; that is, to deliver safely the goods to such line, — the next carrier on the route. This forwarding duty arises from the obligation implied in taking the goods for the point beyond its own line. The common law imposes no greater duty than this. If more is expected from the company receiving the shipment, there must be a special agreement for it. . . . The general doctrine, then, as to transportation by connecting lines, approved by this court, and also by a majority of the state courts, amounts to this: That each road confining itself to its common-law liability, is only bound, in the absence of a special contract, to safely carry over its own route, and safely to deliver to the next connecting carrier, but that any one of the companies may agree that over the whole route its liability shall extend. In the absence of a special agreement to that effect, such liability will not attach, and the agreement will not be inferred from doubtful expressions or loose language, but only from clear and satisfactory evidence."

Can an obligation, based alone on contract, arise in the face of an express agreement that it shall not exist? That is the question involved in this and like cases, and to it, in 16 L. R. A.

our opinion, there can be but one answer. No court will assert that a common carrier is under obligation to carry, or to contract to carry, beyond its own line; but the decision to which we have referred, and any others that may be in harmony with it, in effect hold that the reception of freight destined, and known to be destined, to a point beyond the carrier's line who receives it when the rate for through transit is fixed by that carrier, constitutes a contract by which that carrier assumes the duties and obligations of a common carrier for through transit, and thereby becomes liable for the negligence of every connecting carrier in the route, notwithstanding the initial carrier, in the paper which evidences the only contract, expressly contracts that it shall not be so bound. Such a construction of such a contract, it seems to us, violates every recognized canon of construction applicable to such a matter, and denies effect to the clearly expressed intention of the parties when the law interposes no obstacle to the enforcement of such intention based on grounds of public policy or other reason. It seems to us a mistake to assume that the initial carrier, throughout an entire route formed by two or more independent but connecting lines, becomes a common carrier when neither the rules of law nor the contract of the parties creates that relation, and upon this false assumption to base the proposition that it cannot exempt itself from liability for the negligence of a connecting carrier because the latter is the agent or servant of the former. If the relation be conceded, the proposition based on it would be a sequence, but, that failing, the conclusion drawn from it falls. Under the weight of American authority the contract in this case does not operate as a restriction on or exemption from liability; for to give that liability, it, but for the contract, must have existed, while the contract was, in effect, an express agreement that no such liability existed, or was intended or understood to exist. Under English and some American decisions the contract would operate as a restriction on the initial carrier's common-law liability, for in such a case, under that line of decisions, the liability would exist in the absence of the contract; but these decisions recognize the right of such a carrier to limit his liability to his own line; for in such cases there is always a liability resting on some one of the connecting carriers for injury resulting from the negligence of itself or servants, and in some jurisdictions the full common-law liability will rest on some connecting carrier at all times. The latter would be true where freight was carried over two or more connecting lines all wholly within this state, for no one of them could restrict its own common-law liability for contract, but the liability of connecting carriers for injury to freight while in the possession of one of them is not the common-law liability. It is unnecessary, in this case, to inquire what state of facts between connecting carriers would be sufficient to cast upon each the liability of a common carrier for the negligence of another; for no facts are found in the record making such an inquiry necessary.

There was no error in the proceedings, and the judgment will be affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

Denis CLEMENTS et al.

v.

LOUISIANA ELECTRIC LIGHT CO., Appt.

(.....La.....)

- *1. The violation of a duty specified by law is negligence; therefore, when a city ordinance under which an electric lighting company is operated requires it to have the "splices" on its wires perfectly insulated, the failure to do so is negligence.
2. A person whose occupation brings him in proximity to the company's wires has a right to believe that the wires have been insulated and the ordinance complied with. He is required to look for patent defects in the insulation only. If, not aware of a latent defect, he comes in contact with the wire, and is injured without fault on his part, the company is responsible.
3. When the action of both parties must have concurred to produce the injury, it devolves upon the plaintiff to show that he was not himself guilty of negligence.
4. This proof need not be direct, but may be inferred from the circumstances of the case.
5. Where an electric wire is stretched over a roof, and a party goes on the roof to repair it, and the wire is of that height above the roof that the chances are that he will come in contact with it by going under it, or stepping over it, it is not negligence to pursue either mode of crossing, if he exercises all necessary and prudent care to protect himself, in proportion to the danger.
6. When a person is employed in the presence of a known danger, to constitute contributory negligence it must be shown that the plaintiff voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself to the danger.

(May 2, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for the death of their son which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Farrar, Jonas & Kruttschnitt for appellant.

Messrs. J. R. Beckwith and J. B. Fisher for appellee.

McEnery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Joseph Clements was killed on the 4th day of *Head notes by McENERY, J.

October, 1890, by an electric current from the wires of the defendant company, while engaged in repairing the gallery roof at the corner of Gravier and Camp streets, in the city of New Orleans. The plaintiffs, the father and mother of the deceased, sue the defendant company for damages for the death of their son. There was judgment for the plaintiffs for $5,000, and the defendant appealed.

Joseph Clements was a tinsmith by occupation. He had been employed to go on the roof of the gallery to repair the same by a contractor. He was accompanied by another young man, Alfred Anderson. In half an hour after they went on the roof Clements was killed by coming in contact with defendant's wires. Two of defendant's wires run up and down Camp street, over the roof of this gallery. They were 2 feet 4 inches above it. They were some 17 inches distant from each other, and the inside wire was about 4 feet from the Camp street edge of the gallery. The wires were fastened to a support or "horse" on the gallery, and the inside wire, to prevent its contact with other wires, was secured to the "horse" by a piece of telephone wire. Between the "horse" and the Gravier street side of the gallery there was, on the inside wire, a joint covered with insulating tape. To all appearances it was in good condition, but had been worn by the exposure to the weather, and had evidently lost some of its insulating properties. The defects, however, were not visible, but were exhibited during a storm, as shown by the testimony of S. W. Bennett. From his testimony, it is shown that the insulating tape had been defective for a considerable time. He occupied a room fronting on the roof, and forbade his employés from going on it, on account of the want of proper and safe insulation over the wires. Clements and his companion were engaged in cleaning the roof, the first in sweeping and the other in carrying off the dirt. The fatal injury to young Clements was rapid in its results; so quick in execution that no witness, not even the witness who was on the roof with him, was able to state with precision his position when he received the shock from the wire. But we think, from all the attendant circumstances, that he was either stepping over the wire or going under it. It is probable that he came in contact with both wires, making a short circuit, increasing the energy of the electric force. The unprotected or uninsulated places which were not visible on the splice in the wire came in contact with his body under the right shoulder blade. The wires were so close to the roof that, to pass from where Clements was first seen sweeping, to the gutter, he must either have stepped over or crawled under. From the distance of the wire above the roof, to step over would in all probability have brought Clements' body in contact with one or both wires. He was only of medium height, and to step two feet four inches would require not only exertion, but some skill, to keep clear of touching the wires. It is in evidence that about the time the accident occurred there was considerable leakage on defendant's line of wires, and this is urged as evidence of neglect on the part of defendant, because it showed defective insulation. But the general defect along the defendant's line cannot be evidence of want of due diligence and care. It must be shown that the accident was occasioned by some defect at the point where the injury was inflicted. Nivette v. New Orleans & L. S. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 1153.

NOTE.—The great rapidity with which electric wires are multiplying in all parts of the country and in almost constant proximity to people, whether in doors or out of doors, gives much importance to the above decision.

16 L. R. A.

The rule that violation of a legal duty is negligence seems manifestly just when applied to the case of such dangerous agencies as electricity, even if there should be any question about it in more trivial matters.

We are aware of the difficulty which confronts the defendant company in keeping its many wires, passing over a large territory, to great distances, in a condition of perfect insulation. Parts of the line will necessarily become uncovered, and all that can be expected is that the company will inspect its lines, and repair defects as early as practicable. The particular defect in insulation in this case which is complained of was one of long standing, and, by a careful inspection of its lines, it would have been brought to its notice. By city ordinance 806, council series, the legal duty of the defendant is specified. Section 8 of the ordinance provides "that all splices or joints, wherever the same may occur, shall be thoroughly soldered, after such joint or splice is made, and, in addition thereto, shall be well and thoroughly wrapped with kerite tape or other insulating material, so as to produce perfect insulation at such joint or splice." This ordinance was a contract with each and every inhabitant of the city. The defendant's standard of duty was fixed by it, and it is the same under all circumstances, and its omission is neglect. The first requirements of the plaintiffs was to show the existence of this duty which they alleged had not been performed, and, having shown this, they must show a failure to perform the duty, and thus establish negligence on the part of the defendant. It is an affirmative fact, the presumption being, until the contrary appears, that every person will perform the duty enjoined by law or imposed by contract. Cooley, Torts, 659, 661. In many cases evidence of the injury done makes out a prima facie case; for instance, where a bailee returns in an injured condition an article which has been loaned to him, or where a passenger on a railway train is injured without fault on his part. The city ordinance does not specify at what particular localities splices shall be perfectly insulated. On all parts of the line of defendant company where they occur the duty is specified. The wire of defendant was spliced, and was not insulated, as required by the ordinance. It passed over a roof, to which people in adjoining rooms had access, and where, in the course of time, mechanics must go to make repairs, or laborers to sweep off or clean the roof. It was the duty of the company, independent of any statutory regulation, to see that its lines were safe for those who by their occupations were brought in close proximity to them. In this respect, and in this particular case, we are of the opinion that the defendant's negligence caused the death of Clements.

But notwithstanding this fault of defendant, if the evidence shows that the plaintiff himself was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, he cannot recover. The question is whether the act of the party injured had a natural tendency to expose him directly to the danger which resulted in the injury complained of. If the plaintiff could, by the exercise of reasonable care, at or just before the happening of the injury to him, have avoided the same, he cannot recover damages for the injury. When the action of both parties must have concurred to produce the injury, it devolves upon the plaintiff to show that he was not himself guilty of negligence. He must show affirmatively that he was in the exercise of due and reasonable care when the injury happened. Deikman v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 40 La. Ann. 787; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; Beers v. Housatonic R. Co. 19 Conn. 566; Hale v. Smith, 78 N. Y. 480; Murphy v. Deane, 101 Mass. 455, 3 Am. Rep. 390. This proof need not be direct, but may be inferred from the circumstances of the case. Mayo v. Boston & M. R. Co. 104 Mass. 187; Myhan v. Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1178.

The deceased, Clements, was lawfully on the gallery roof. He was engaged in a service that necessarily required him to run the risk of coming in contact with defendant's wires, either by stepping over them or going under them. It is probable that the latter mode was the most convenient, and there is no evidence that in so doing he incurred any greater risk. The wires were visible, and to all appearances were safe. The great force that was being carried over the wire gave no evidence of its existence. There was no means for a man of ordinary education to distinguish whether the wire was dead or alive. It had all the appearance of having been properly insulated. From this fact there was an invitation or inducement held out to Clements to risk the consequence of contact. He had a right to believe they were safe, and that the company had complied with its duties specified by law. He was required to look for patent and not latent defects. Had he known of the defective insulation, and put himself in contact with the wire, he would have assumed the risk. The defect was hidden, and the insulation wrapping was defective. It is certain, had it been properly wrapped, Clements would not have been killed. His death is conclusive proof of the defect of the insulation and the negligence of defendant. He exercised reasonable care in going under the wire in the performance of his duty, as he had a right to believe, from external appearances, that the wire was safe. His action was such as not to tend to expose himself directly to the danger which resulted in the injury. In fact, there was no apparent danger.

But it is urged that Clements was cautioned to keep away from the wires by his employer, Brady, and his failure to do so was gross carelessness on his part. The evidence on this point is as follows: "Question. Did you call Clements' attention to the wires? Answer. No, sir; I cautioned him to be careful of the wires. Every man who goes over a roof must keep away from the wires. Q. It is the business of a man who goes over a roof to keep away from them? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did he understand that business? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you caution him that morning to keep away from the wires? A. Yes, sir." Clements' attention was not directed to any particular danger from the wires. No apparent defect was pointed out to him. The admonition to him was only of a danger which he knew to exist, according to the statement of Brady, before he advised him to be cautious of going near the wires, or to keep away from them. There was only that instinctive dread of danger which overtakes one when he approaches a railroad track. The track in itself is not dangerous, and is only made so by the passage of a train of cars over it. They announce their approach, and hence a person, before he attempts to cross the track, must exercise great caution, stop and listen, and look up and down the track. Having done this, if a train approaches silently, without the accustomed signal, and injures him, he would be entitled to recover damages for the injury. Curley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 40 La. Ann. 817; Brown v. Texas & P. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 850. The electric wires gave no signal of danger. Listening would not have revealed any danger. It is hidden and silent. But they are disarmed of danger if properly insulated. By looking, one can see if there are evidences of insulation. If there are evidences of it, and no defects are visible after careful inspection, one whose employment brings him in close proximity to the wire, and which he has to pass, either over or under it, is not guilty of contributory negligence by coming in contact with it, unless he does it unnecessarily, and without proper precautions for his safety. It cannot be said that when Clements went on to the roof to repair it he went into the presence of known danger, and assumed the hazards of the employment. The employment was not dangerous. The wires, if properly insulated, as above stated, would have been harmless. It was only a remote danger which he had to risk, and this depending upon the fact whether or not the defendant company had done its duty as specified by law. The external appearances, the only indications of performed duty to which Clements' attention could be fixed, were guaranties that the defendant company had done its duty. These appearances assured him that, in the performance of his work in sweeping the roof, it was not dangerous for him to risk going over or under the wire. Bomar v. Louisiana N. & S. R. Co. 43 La. Ann. 988. Even in the presence of a known danger, to constitute contributory negligence it must be shown that the plaintiff voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself to it, unless it is of that character that the plaintiff must assume the risk from the very nature of the danger to which he is exposed. From the appearances of the wire, its wrapping with insulated tape, and the known duty of the defendant to protect the insulation at this particular splice or joint, Clements had no reason to anticipate danger, except from the fault of the defendant company. This fault was the cause of his death, and his act in passing under or over the wire was too remote to give it the character of contributory negligence.

This suit was brought under the provisions of Act 71, of 1884, amending article 2315, Civil Code. The plaintiff, therefore, can only claim such damages as the deceased, Clements, could have done had he survived the injury. These would have been for mental and physical suffering and actual pecuniary loss. The deceased was almost instantly killed, and no damage can be awarded for suffering.

The next inquiry is, What have the plaintiffs suffered pecuniarily by the death of their son in the loss to them of his contributions to their support? The evidence does not show that the plaintiffs were dependent for their support upon his earnings, which were not very large, varying from $1.50 to $2.50 per day. The parents, although their domestic relations were pleasant, lived apart, each with a child. The deceased's father says that when he wanted anything he asked him for it, and he, if he had it, willingly gave it. From the facts as to the amount contributed by the deceased to the support of his parents, we conclude that the verdict of the jury awarding $5,000 damages is excessive. Two thousand dollars, we think, would be a most liberal award.

The judgment appealed from is amended, so as to fix the amount of the damages for plaintiffs at $2,000, and in other respects it is affirmed; appellees to pay costs of appeal.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Lottie A. VOREIS et al., Appts.,

v.

Lambert NUSSBAUM et al.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A note given by a married woman as surety for her husband is void even in the hands of a bona fide holder unless she has estopped herself to deny its validity under Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5119, providing that a married woman shall not enter into any contract of suretyship whether as indorser or in any other manner and that such contract as to her shall be void.

2. Merely executing as principal a note

NOTE.—Rights of bona fide purchaser of note declared void by statute.

The doctrine of the above case may be regarded as well established and is supported by the following decisions in addition to those cited in the opinion:

16 L. R. A.

A statute which declares gaming contracts "void" makes a negotiable note given in such a transaction void even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Tennyson v. Foote, 4 Ill. App. 594; Chapin v. Dake, 57 Ill. 295, 11 Am. Rep. 15.

This is true although the statute does not make containing an acknowledgment of receipt of consideration will not estop a married woman from showing that she gave the note as surety and therefore against the prohibition of a statute.

(McDride, J., dissents.)

(April 27, 1892.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marshall County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage which was given to secure a note executed by defendant Lottie A. Voreis, she claiming to have executed it as surety for a debt of her husband. Reversed as to her.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McLaren & Martindale for appellants.

Messrs. Packard & Drummond for appellees.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants contend that the court erred in its conclusions of law upon the special finding of facts. A synopsis of so much of the finding as is necessary to present the question of law involved is as follows: On the 19th day of November, 1888, the defendant Lottie A. Voreis, who was at the time a married woman, executed her promissory note of that date, payable one year after date to the order of William Bucklew, at a bank in Plymouth, and at the same time she, with her husband, George W. Voreis, executed a mortgage upon her separate property to secure the payment of the note; that George W. Voreis, her husband, received the consideration for which the note was executed, and used the same in payment of his own individual debts and for his own use, but afterwards gave his wife $10 of the money; that no part of the consideration was used for the betterment of her separate property or business; that afterwards, but before its maturity, the note was duly assigned to one Leonard Flagg, who, before its maturity, for a valuable consideration and in the regular course of business, assigned it to the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs as well as the assignors, at the time of the execution of the note and of its assignment, had knowledge that the defendant Lottie Voreis was a married woman; that neither the payee of the note, the assignor, Flagg, nor the plaintiffs made any inquiry of the defendant Lottie A. Voreis, or her codefendant, George W. Voreis, as to who received the consideration for the note, or who would receive the benefit therefrom; but that neither the assignor, Flagg, nor the plaintiffs had any actual knowledge or notice whatever that the consideration for the note was not received and used by said defendant Lottie for her own special use and benefit, and had no actual knowledge or notice that said note and mortgage were executed by the wife as surety for her husband; that one of the plaintiffs, and the one who purchased the note from Flagg, and the defendant lived at the time of such purchase in Marmount, a small village in Marshall county, and were well and intimately acquainted. The court, as a proposition of law from the foregoing facts, concluded that the plaintiffs were entitled to a recovery against the defendant Lottie for the full amount of the note, and against both the defendants for a foreclosure of the mortgage, and judgment was rendered accordingly.

Since September 19, 1881, there has been in force in this state the following statute (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5119): "A married woman shall not enter into any contract of suretyship, whether as indorser, guarantor, or in any other manner, and such contract as to her shall be void." The fact that the husband did, and the wife did not, receive the consideration for which the note was executed, conclusively establishes the proposition that she was a surety, and not the principal in the note, notwithstanding the form of the contract. Vogel v. Leichner, 102 Ind. 55; Cupp v. Campbell, 103 Ind. 213, 1 West. Rep. 255; Nixon v. Whitely, 120 Ind. 360; Crisman v. Leonard, 126 Ind. 202. The question to be decided is, Does the statute above cited invalidate a note made payable in bank, executed by a married woman as surety, in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, acquired in the regular course of business? It seems to be the settled any express provision as to bona fide holders. Snoddy v. American Nat. Bank, 7 L. R. A. 705, 88 Tenn. 573.

So where a statute makes a contract given for a gambling or wager consideration "absolutely void and of no effect" a bona fide purchaser of a negotiable note given therefor cannot recover upon it. Traders Bank of Chicago v. Alsop, 64 Iowa, 97.

So under a code provision that gaming contracts are void and all evidences of debt on such a consideration are "void in the hands of any person." Cunningham v. Augusta Nat. Bank, 71 Ga. 400.

Likewise a statute making usurious contracts "void" is fatal to the right of a bona fide purchaser of a note tainted with usury. Chadbourn v. Watts, 10 Mass. 127, 6 Am. Dec. 100; Bridge v. Hubbard, 15 Mass. 98; Lowe v. Waller, 2 Dougl. 736; Bowyer v. Bampton, 2 Strange, 1155.

The same rule applies to a statute providing that the plaintiff in an action on a usurious contract shall "forfeit" three times the interest. Kendall v. Robertson, 12 Cush. 155.

16 L. R. A.

But a statute providing that all payments or compensation for a sale of intoxicating liquors in violation of law shall be held in violation of law, does not have the same effect as if it declared the contract void and does not defeat the right of a bona fide purchaser of a negotiable note given for such payment. Cazet v. Field, 9 Gray, 339.

A statute declaring that notes of less than a certain amount shall be void unless wholly in writing makes them void even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Bayley v. Taber, 5 Mass. 236, 4 Am. Dec. 57.

A statute making null and void a contract between attorney and client whether in writing or otherwise if the attorney fails to attend to the suit in person or by competent attorney until judgment is rendered, and which prohibits under a penalty of forfeiting double the amount a transfer by the attorney of any note given therefor, makes a promissory note given in such case void even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Weed v. Bond, 21 Ga. 195.

B. A. R. 1

doctrine of the courts and text-writers that a note executed in violation of a statute is void, even in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value. In Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 178, it is said: "But where the statute making the consideration illegal declares a contract founded on such a consideration to be absolutely void, the language of the statute must be given its proper effect, and so the courts have held that the commercial paper founded on such considerations is void, even in the hands of bona fide holders." In Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615, it is said: "Whenever the statutes declare notes void, they are and must be so in the hands of every holder; but where they are adjudged by the court to be so, for failure of or the illegality of the consideration, they are void only in the hands of the original parties, or those who are chargeable with, or have had notice of, the consideration." In 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, the law is laid down in these words: "Sec. 517. All contracts which violate the provisions of the statute law, either expressly or by implication, are void. And this is true although the prohibition of the statute be not expressed, but must be implied from its nature and objects. Where a statute expressly declares the contract which forms the consideration of the note or bill to be void, the note or bill is illegal and void, even in the hands of a bona fide holder for value. So, where the Legislature has prohibited a transaction, a bill or note given for it is void." See also Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71; Spray v. Burk, 128 Ind. 565. The statute says that "a married woman shall not enter into any contract of suretyship," and follows this prohibition with the express declaration that any "such contract as to her shall be void." Stronger language could not have been chosen in which to express the legislative intent to prohibit the making of such contracts, and to declare that the consequence of a violation of the statute should be to declare the instrument void. The presumption is that the word "void" was understandingly used by the law-makers, and this presumption is strengthened by the fact that the term correctly expresses the status of contracts executed in violation of statute, as established by the overwhelming weight of authority. The statute was enacted to shield and protect married women from contracts from which neither they nor their estates could be benefited, and such contracts were therefore to be void as to them. We have therefore held that they alone can invoke the benefit afforded by the prohibition. Plaut v. Storey (Ind.) (this term); Johnson v. Jouchert, 124 Ind. 105, 8 L. R. A. 795. We see no reason why, when they have elected to claim the benefit of the Act, the words of the statute shall not be given the same force and effect that would have obtained if the words "as to her" had been omitted. While the statute makes the contract of suretyship void as to a married woman, she alone can claim the benefit of the statute, and being, under our statute, bound by an estoppel in pais like any other person, it follows logically that she may in some cases be estopped by her conduct or representations from claiming the benefit of the statute. This is not an affirmation or ratification of a void contract, but an estoppel against the exercise of a personal right. The cases in which a married woman has been estopped from claiming the protection of the statute are cases where some statement, affidavit or representation has been made by the party to be estopped, which have been in good faith relied upon by the other contracting party, so that to permit her to show the truth would be to assist in the perpetration of a fraud. The cases of Ward v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 108 Ind. 801, 6 West. Rep. 596; Rogers v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 111 Ind. 848, 9 West. Rep. 828; Lane v. Schlemmer, 114 Ind. 296, 12 West. Rep. 922,—are of this character. In Cupp v. Campbell, supra, and Lane v. Schlemmer it was held that a married woman is not estopped by the mere form of the contract which she has no power to make. In this case there was no statement or representation of any kind to indicate that the appellant was the principal in the note and received the consideration, except the form of the contract. This, we are satisfied, was not sufficient to constitute an estoppel to prevent her from showing who received the consideration and who did not. To hold otherwise would be to nullify the statute, and look to the form rather than to the substance of the transaction. This was well expressed by McBride, J., in the late case of Cummings v. Martin, 128 Ind. 20, in these words: "It cannot be doubted that one of the principal reasons for the enactment of the statute forbidding married women to enter into any contracts of suretyship, and making such contracts void as to them, was to prevent them from squandering or encumbering their property as sureties for impoverished husbands. The courts have rightfully shown a disposition to scan closely contracts where there was reason to suspect that the transaction, while in form a contract, with the wife as principal, was in fact an attempted evasion of the statute, the consideration moving solely to the husband. Where this has been found to be true, it has uniformly been held that the contract is within the inhibition of the statute, and is void as to the wife."

Judgment reversed, with instructions to restate the conclusion of law in accordance with this opinion, and to render judgment for the appellant, Lottie A. Voreis.

McBride, J., dissenting:

The note in this case was payable at a bank in this state. It was therefore upon its face commercial paper, governed by the law-merchant. It was transferred before due to one who took it in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and paid full value for it. The only fact shown by the record which is relied upon to invalidate it in the hands of the indorsee is that he knew the maker was a married woman, and that, although upon its face it purported to be what the indorsee in good faith supposed it was, her individual contract, it was in fact a contract of suretyship. The court expressly finds that the indorsee had knowledge of this latter fact. The rule by which the innocent indorsee of commercial paper is protected against alleged illegality in its consideration is stated by eminent authority as follows: "The bona fide holder for value, who has received the paper in the usual course of business, is unaffected by the fact that it originated in an illegal consideration, without any distinction between cases of illegality founded in moral crime or turpitude, which are termed 'malum in se,' and those founded in positive statutory prohibition, which are termed 'mala prohibita.' The law extends this peculiar protection to negotiable instruments, because it would severely embarrass mercantile transactions to expose the trader to the consequences of having the bill or note passed to him impeached for some court defect. There is, however, an exception to this rule,—that when a statute expressly or by necessary implication declares the instrument absolutely void it gathers no vitality by its circulation in respect to the parties executing it. . . . There are a very few cases in which the statute renders such instruments absolutely void, and the most important if not the only instances now to be met with are the statutes against usury and gaming." Dan. Neg. Inst. § 197. While the letter of the statute (sec. 5119, Rev. Stat. 1881) is that contracts of suretyship by a married woman "as to her shall be void," the spirit of the statute, as repeatedly interpreted by this court, makes them voidable, and not void. Indeed, in the case of Bennett v. Mattingly, 110 Ind. 197, 7 West. Rep. 912, the court expressly decided that such contracts were not void, but voidable. See also the case of Plaut v. Storey, (decided at this term, but not yet officially reported), deciding the same thing. The statute does not purport to declare them absolutely void, but only void as to her. The option is with her to repudiate them. If she declines to interpose the defense, no one else can do so. The defense is purely personal. The logic of Johnson v. Jouchert, 124 Ind. 105, also is that such contracts are voidable, and not void. See also the many cases there cited. Not even privies in estate can avoid such contracts without her co-operation. The voidable, rather than void, character of such contracts is easily demonstrable, and is logically and unerringly certain if there is any consistency whatever in the many recent decisions of this court relating to that subject. The last clause of section 5117, Rev. Stat. 1881, provides that a married woman shall be bound by an estoppel in pais like any other person. It has been many times decided that a married woman contracting as surety may be estopped to defend upon that ground. Ward v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 108 Ind. 801, 6 West. Rep. 596; Rogers v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 111 Ind. 343, 9 West. Rep. 828; Lane v. Schlemmer, 114 Ind. 296, 12 West. Rep. 922; Bouvey v. McNeal, 126 Ind. 541; Cummings v. Martin, 128 Ind. 20. This could not be true if the contract was absolutely void. A transaction which is void cannot be purged of its infirmity by means of an estoppel. Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 800, 99 Am. Dec. 365; Cook v. Walling, 117 Ind. 9, 2 L. R. A. 769. Cook v. Walling, supra, furnishes a most forcible illustration of this doctrine. Mary C. Walling was the wife of Creed C. Walling. The husband absented himself for more than seven years. The wife, supposing him dead, married one Hughes.

16 L. R. A.

She bought land, taking the title in the name of Mary C. Hughes. She, with her reputed husband, Hughes, in the year 1875, mortgaged the land to one Kate C. Cook, for a debt due to her. At that time, and for a year thereafter, she lived and cohabited with Hughes, and claimed him as her husband, and was reputed to be his lawful wife. In 1876, Creed C. Walling returned. His wife abandoned and was divorced from Hughes, and resumed her relations as wife of Walling. It was held that the mortgage was absolutely void, because the lawful husband, Walling, had not joined in it, and that, being void, she was not estopped and could not be estopped to defend against. While the mortgage in that case was executed before the enactment of section 5117, supra, the same doctrine is reiterated in Johnson v. Jouchert, supra, relating to a transaction occurring in 1884, since that section became a law. I therefore feel amply justified by the authority of this court in insisting that such contracts are not absolutely void; that they are void only in a qualified sense; and that the word "voidable," instead of "void," would have much more accurately expressed the legislative meaning. To now hold otherwise would require the express overruling of Bennett v. Mattingly, supra, and Plaut v. Storey, supra, and the tacit overruling of many other well-considered cases. If this is true, it follows that bona fide holders of such notes are entitled to protection under the rule above quoted from Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, which is abundantly supported by authority. The cases seeming to assert a different doctrine are either cases where the contract is absolutely void, (in which case no estoppel can avail,) or they are cases decided in jurisdictions where, as in this state prior to 1881, a married woman cannot be estopped by matter in pais. This court has repeatedly decided that, as the law now is in this state, the ability of married women to contract is the rule and disability is the exception. Miller v. Shields, 124 Ind. 166, 8 L. R. A. 406; Arnold v. Engleman, 103 Ind. 512, 1 West. Rep. 482; Ross v. Frather, 103 Ind. 191, 1 West. Rep. 267; Vogel v. Leichner, 102 Ind. 55.

It has been decided that, when a married woman executes her individual note, it is prima facie her individual contract. She is presumed to have received the consideration, and, if she asserts, notwithstanding the form of her contract, that it is a contract of suretyship, the burden is on her to establish that fact. Miller v. Shields, 124 Ind. 166-174 et seq., 8 L. R. A. 406. When a married woman executes her negotiable note alone, it will be presumed to be for her individual debt, and not a contract of suretyship, for several good reasons: (1) A person is presumed to do what is within his right and power, rather than what is beyond them. Lawson, Presump. Ev. Rule 68, p. 276; Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 375, 74 Am. Dec. 68. (2) The law forbids her to make any contract of suretyship, and the presumption is that any act was done of right, and not of wrong. Lawson, Presump. Ev. Rule 16, p. 81. (3) In commercial transactions the presumption is that the usual course of business was followed by the parties thereto. Id. Rule 15, p. 67. (4) Negotiable paper is presumed to have been regularly negotiated, and to be or to have been regularly held. Id. Rule 18, subrule 3, p. 77; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1024. (5) The expression of consideration (which is found in express terms on the face of this note) of itself raises a presumption of consideration moving from the payee to the maker. Randolph, Com. Paper, § 178, and authorities cited; also section 562 et seq., and authorities cited. (6) Every one is presumed to know the law. This applies to married women, in common with all other persons. They are therefore presumed to know that a promissory note, payable to order or bearer, at a bank in this state, is negotiable as an inland bill of exchange. They are presumed to know that one of the distinguishing and most valuable characteristics of such a note is the facility with which it may be transferred, and the protection afforded an innocent indorsee for value before maturity against equities existing between the maker and the payee. When a married woman executes her promissory note, payable at a bank in this state, she is chargeable with knowledge of all the legal incidents of such a contract. When her note thus executed is offered for negotiation in the ordinary course of business, she is bound to know that it carries with it all of the foregoing presumptions. When a married woman thus executes and puts in circulation her note, which she must know carries with it to an innocent indorsee for value such presumptions, she has done an act which partakes of the character of an estoppel in pais, and which should estop her to say to such innocent indorsee that it is not what it purports to be, and what she has deliberately authorized him to believe it was. When an act is done or a statement made by a person which cannot be contradicted or contravened without fraud on his part and injury to others, whose conduct has been influenced by the act or omission, the character of an estoppel attaches to it. State v. Pepper, 31 Ind. 76; Ray v. McMurtry, 20 Ind. 307, 308, 83 Am. Dec. 322, and many other authorities. However, a proposition so fundamental and elementary in the law of estoppel in pais needs no citation of authority to support it. With all deference to my colleagues, in my opinion the conclusion reached by the majority of the court mistakes the law, cannot be sustained by valid reasoning, and will simply serve as a barricade, behind which dishonesty may entrench itself. I cannot concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Borough of SAYRE, Appl.,

v.

Harry PHILLIPS.

(.....Pa.....)

A borough ordinance which discriminates against nonresidents by prohibiting all persons from peddling or selling goods from house to house without a license, which is fixed at so high a figure that it amounts to prohibition, but which excepts residents of the borough from its provisions, is void.

(April 12, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Bradford County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the prescribed penalty for NOTE.—Discrimination by municipality between its own residents and other residents of the same state.

The above decision does not seem to be based alone on the objection that the ordinance discriminating against nonresidents might interfere with interstate commerce or with the rights of citizens of other states, but to hold also that a municipal corporation cannot by ordinance discriminate between its own residents and other residents of the same state.

This doctrine seems to be uniformly held also by other courts which have rendered decisions on the subject.

Thus in Nashville v. Althorp, 5 Coldw. 554, an ordinance discriminating between dealers within the city and the same classes of persons outside of the city in respect to a license for sales by sample was held to be void.

The same principle was applied in Charleston v. State, 2 Speer, L. 719, in respect to a municipal tax on the slave of a nonresident employed within the city where the tax attempted was greater than that on slaves of residents.

Again, in Ex parte Frank, 59 Cal. 806, an ordinance requiring a greater license for the sale of goods not then within the city or in transit toward it than for the sale of goods within the city was held void for illegal discrimination against nonresidents.

In Graffy v. Rushville, 5 West. Rep. 868, 107 Ind. 502, an ordinance requiring a license for hawking and peddling except in a case of a resident peddler or of goods grown or manufactured within the county was held void, not only as an interference with interstate commerce, but as a denial of the right of citizens of the state under the Indiana Constitution to equal privileges and immunities.

So in Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679, it was held that a city could not require a license even without a money payment as a condition of the running of a omnibus in the city by an inhabitant of another town. This decision however, seems to be based on the lack of power of the city over an employment which was not territorial rather than upon any objection as to discrimination against nonresidents. The court said that the by-law was an unnecessary restriction on the business of those carrying passengers for hire and was not binding on the inhabitants of other towns.

In Hayden v. Noyes, 5 Conn. 391, a by-law of a town prohibiting all persons except inhabitants of the town from taking shell-fish from that part of a navigable river within the limits of the town was held void, but the decision in this case is based on the fact that fishing in the river was a matter of common right and that the town had no right to take it away.

See also the decisions of the lower courts of Pennsylvania cited above in brief of counsel for appellee.

B. A. B.

an alleged violation of an ordinance forbidding peddling without a license. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. B. Niles, Deloss Rockwell, J. C. Horton and H. F. Maynard for appellant.

Messrs. D' A. Overton, John C. Ing-ham and Rodney A. Mercur, for appellee: Defendant was not a hawker or peddler.

Com. v. Gardner, 7 L. R. A. 666, 183 Pa. 289; Com. v. Farnum, 114 Mass. 270; Com. v. Ober, 12 Cush. 495; Com. v. Smith, 6 Bush, 803; Com. v. Jones, 7 Bush, 502; Ex parte Seibenhauer, 14 Nev. 865; Rez v. McKnight, 10 Barn. & C. 784; Kansas v. Collins (Kan.) 11 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 414; Com. v. Edison, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 882; Com. v. Eichenburg, 140 Pa. 158; Fisher v. Patterson, 18 Pa. 389.

There is no statute authorizing the passage of an ordinance prohibiting the sale by a hawker or peddler of certain articles, or discriminating in favor of certain individuals.

Sharon v. Golden, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 857.

An ordinance discriminating in the imposition of a license tax between resident and non-resident merchants is invalid.

Conshohocken v. Fennel, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 65; Easton v. Easton Beef Co. Id. 68.

A clause in an ordinance excepting all citizens of the borough from the operation of such ordinance will make it void because of discrimination.

Sansford v. Brode, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 221.

An Act providing that persons residing out of the county shall pay a greater license fee than those residing therein is void under the Constitution of the United States.

Groh v. Com. 6 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 180; Com. v. Standard Oil Co. 101 Pa. 146.

A borough ordinance may regulate but not restrain trade.

1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 828; Northern Liberties Comrs. v. Northern Liberties Gas Co. 12 Pa. 821; Kneidler v. Norristown, 100 Pa. 878, 45 Am. Rep. 884; Millerstown v. Bell, 123 Pa. 165.

Whether an ordinance be reasonable and consistent with the law or not is a question for the court, and not the jury.

1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 327; Com. v. Worcester, 8 Pick. 462; Vandine, Petitioner, 6 Pick. 187; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121; Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679; Boston v. Shaw, 1 Met. 180; Hudson v. Thorne, 7 Paige, 261, 4 L. ed. 148; Dunham v. Rochester, 5 Cow. 462; Buffalo v. Webster, 10 Wend. 100; Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591; Paxson v. Sweet, 13 N. J. L. 196; Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606; Northern Liberties Comrs. v. Northern Liberties Gas Co. and Kneidler v. Norristown, supra; Pittsburgh's App. 6 Cent. Rep. 225, 115 Pa. 4; Millerstown v. Bell, supra; Lévingston v. Wolf, 186 Pa. 519.

The following cases are conspicuous ones, examples of ordinances declared void, because they were unjust, unequal and unfair:

Ex parte Frank, supra; Conshohocken v. Fennel, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 65; Easton v. Easton Beef Co. 5 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 68.

Congress is the only power that has authority to regulate interstate commerce, and any ordinances passed by municipal authorities restricting that right are invalid.

16 L. R. A.

Robbins v. Shelby County Tax. Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 811; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 868; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 687; Leisy v. Hardin, 185 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 618; Ex parte Stockton, 83 Fed. Rep. 95; Ex parte Kimmel, 41 Fed. Rep. 775; Re White, 43 Fed. Rep. 918; Ex parte Spain, 47 Fed. Rep. 208; Re Nichols, 48 Phila. Leg. Int. 474.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The business of peddling has been treated as a proper subject for police regulation and control in this state since 1784. The Legislature has forbidden it to all unlicensed persons, and has prescribed the conditions on which licenses may be obtained from the courts. The necessity for such legislation is a question for the law-makers. The validity of any particular statute relating to the subject is a question for the courts. The Act of 1784, and the supplementary Acts, relating to the business of peddling, have been held to be valid, as an exercise of the police power, in many cases, among the more recent of which are Warren v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 9 Cent. Rep. 807; Sharon v. Hawthorne, 123 Pa. 106; Com. v. Gardner, 183 Pa. 284, 7 L. R. A. 666; Titusville v. Brennen, 148 Pa. 642, 14 L. R. A. 100. By the organization of a city or borough within its borders the state imparts to its creature, the municipality, the powers necessary to the performance of its functions, and to the protection of its citizens in their persons and property. The police power is one of these. Ordinances of cities and boroughs, passed in the legitimate exercise of this power, are therefore valid. An ordinance prohibiting the business of peddling within the municipal limits without a license from the proper municipal officer would seem to be as clearly justified by the police power as a statute prohibiting the same business throughout the commonwealth. But it is very clear that a police regulation must be directed against the business or practice that is harmful, not against one or some of the persons who may be engaged in it. The laws of the state are so framed. They are directed against the business of peddling. The ordinances of cities and boroughs must, in order to be supported as an exercise of the police power residing in the municipality, be directed in like manner as the business. If a statute or a municipal ordinance is in reality directed only against certain persons who are engaged in a given business or against certain commodities, in such manner as to discriminate between the persons who are engaged in the same trade or pursuit, in aid of some at the expense of others, such statute or ordinance is not a police, but a trade, regulation; and it has no right to shelter itself behind the police power of the state or the municipality. A law that should prohibit all persons peddling goods manufactured or produced in other states, and permit the same persons to peddle goods of the same character manufactured or produced in this state, would be a trade regulation, discriminating between the productions of this and sister states, and would be incapable of enforcement, because in violation of the Constitution of the United States. So a law that should forbid the courts to grant a peddler's license to any person resident in another state, but should authorize the granting of licenses to citizens of this state, would be bad for the same reason. When the state creates a city or borough, it cannot confer upon the municipality powers that the state does not possess. It cannot give its creature immunity from the settled limitations that bind its own action. The municipality remains a part of the state after its creation as truly as the town or village was a part of the state before it acquired a corporate character. Only in matters of local government is its situation changed. It can have no better right to adopt discriminating trade regulations than the state has.

We come now to consider the ordinance on which this case depends. It professes to prohibit all persons from engaging in the business of peddling or selling goods from house to house, by sample or otherwise, without a borough license; and it fixes the price of a license at a figure that makes, as it was evidently intended to make, the ordinance amount to prohibition. So long, however, as it bears upon all persons impartially it may fairly claim to be a police regulation intended to destroy a business that was regarded as injurious, but at the end of the prohibiting section of the ordinance a proviso may be found which exempts all residents of the borough of Sayre from its operation. The proviso converts the police regulation into a trade regulation. The ordinance, taken as a whole, does not prohibit an injurious business, but injurious competition. That the resident dealer and peddler may enjoy a larger trade, the nonresident peddler is shut out. If the borough authorities may lawfully regulate the business of peddling for the benefit of residents, we see no reason why they may not lay their hands in like manner on every department of trade and of professional labor, and protect the village lawyer and doctor as well as the village grocer and peddler.

We are reminded by the appellant that this ordinance is like that which came into notice in Warren v. Geer, supra; and it is urged that the question now under consideration ought, therefore, to be regarded as ruled by that case. That case was well decided on the only issue presented by it. The plaintiff set out in the declaration the ordinance of the borough, and charged that the defendant had violated it by canvassing from house to house within the borough. The defendant demurred, thus admitting the acts charged and denying the power of the borough to require one engaged in canvassing to take a license. The court below held that the defendant was entitled as of common right to pursue his business, and that the borough was without the power to forbid it. The question came to this court in the form that it had been disposed of in the court below, as a question of power in the borough to require a license from peddlers and canvassers, and we held that the power existed under the Act of incorporation, and under the General Borough Law of 1851. Our Brother Green, who delivered the opinion of this court, stated the point in controversy thus: "The only question, therefore, is whether the borough of Warren possesses by either express grant or necessary implication the right to enact the ordinance" forbidding the exercise of defendant's employment without a license. We adhere to the doctrine of that case. The present question is whether, under the pretense of police control, trade may be regulated in the interest of resident dealers by making the same business a lawful one to all who live on one side of a municipal line, and an unlawful one to all who live on the other side.

We are very clear in our convictions that this cannot be done, and for this reason the judgment is affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Sarah P. INGALLS et al., Appts.,
v.

Warren D. HOBBS.

(.....Mass.....)

1. Bugs infesting a summer-house at a watering place which is hired already furnished for the season may render it so unfit for habitation that the tenant may be relieved from the agreement.
2. In a lease of a completely furnished dwelling-house for a summer season at a summer watering place there is an implied agreement that the house is fit for habitation without greater preparation than the tenant might reasonably be expected to make.

(May 9, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover rent alleged to be due and unpaid. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George E. Smith, for appellants:

A careful examination of Smith v. Marrable, 11 Mees. & W. 5; Sutton v. Temple, 13 Mees. & W. 52; and Hart v. Windsor, Id. 68, will convince one that the same judges who decided in favor of an implied condition were, upon re-examination immediately after, very doubtful of the wisdom of that decision. They repudiated the authorities on which originally it was decided.

In Foster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. 242, 57 Am-
Dec. 48, the defendant asked for an instruc-

NOTE.—On the question of an implied agreement that a furnished house leased for a short time is fit for occupation the authorities are sufficiently presented in the report of the case. But see, as 16 L. R. A.

showing the narrow limits of the rule followed above, the case of Franklin v. Brown, 6 L. R. A. 770, 118 N. Y. 110.

tion to the jury: "That there was an implied warranty, in the letting of a house for a private residence, that it is reasonably fit for occupation." And Metcalf, J., in the opinion says: "The court refused to instruct the jury that there is any such implied covenant in such a case. And it is well settled by authority that there is not."

The same principle was applied to the lease of a dwelling-house, in Stevens v. Pierce, 151 Mass. 207.

Messrs. Choate & Dana, for appellee:

In England the doctrine is now well established, that there is such an implied agreement or warranty.

Smith v. Marrable, 11 Mees. & W. 5; Wilson v. Hatton, L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 336; Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 507; Bird v. Greville, 1 Cababe & E. 317; MacLean v. Currie, Id. 361; Chester v. Powell, 52 L. T. 722; Charley v. Jones, 58 J. P. Q. B. Div. 280. See also Dutton v. Gerriah, 9 Cush. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 45; Edwards v. McLean, 122 N. Y. 802.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover $500 for the use and occupation of a furnished dwelling-house at Swampscott during the summer of 1890. It was submitted to the superior court on what is entitled an "agreed statement of evidence," by which it appears that the defendant hired the premises of the plaintiffs for the season, as a furnished house, provided with beds, mattresses, matting, curtains, chairs, tables, kitchen utensils, and other articles which were apparently in good condition, and that when the defendant took possession it was found to be more or less infested with bugs, so that the defendant contended that it was unfit for habitation, and for that reason gave it up, and declined to occupy it. The agreed statement concludes as follows: "If, under the above circumstances, said house was not fit for occupation as a furnished house, and, being let as such, there was an implied agreement or warranty that the said house and furniture therein should be fit for use and occupation, judgment is to be for the defendant, with costs. If, however, under said circumstances, said house was fit for occupation as a furnished house, or there was no such implied agreement or warranty, judgment is to be for the plaintiffs in the sum of $500, with interest from the date of the writ, and costs." Judgment was ordered for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed to this court.

The agreement of record shows that the facts were to be treated by the superior court as evidence from which inferences of fact might be drawn. The only "matter of law apparent on the record" which can be considered on an appeal in a case of this kind is the question whether the judgment is warranted by the evidence. Pub. Stat. chap. 152, § 10; Rand v. Hanson, 154 Mass. 87; Mayhew v. Durfee, 138 Mass. 584; Old Colony R. Co. v. Wilder, 137 Mass. 536; Hecht v. Batcheller, 147 Mass. 335, 6 New Eng. Rep. 610; Fitzsimmons v. Carroll, 128 Mass. 401; Charlton v. Donnell, 100 Mass. 229.

The facts agreed warrant a finding that the house was unfit for habitation when it was hired, and we are therefore brought directly to the question whether there was an implied agreement on the part of the plaintiff that it was in a proper condition for immediate use as a dwelling-house. It is well settled, both in this commonwealth and in England, that one who lets an unfurnished building to be occupied as a dwelling-house does not impliedly agree that it is fit for habitation. Dutton v. Gerriah, 9 Cush. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 45; Poster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. 242, 47 Am. Dec. 43; Stevens v. Pierce, 151 Mass. 207; Sutton v. Temple, 12 Mees. & W. 52; Hart v. Windsor, Id. 68.

In the absence of fraud or a covenant, the purchaser of real estate, or the hirer of it for a term, however short, takes it as it is, and determines for himself whether it will serve the purpose for which he wants it. He may, and often does, contemplate making extensive repairs upon it to adapt it to his wants. But there are good reasons why a different rule should apply to one who hires a furnished room, or a furnished house, for a few days, or a few weeks or months. Its fitness for immediate use of a particular kind, as indicated by its appointments, is a far more important element entering into the contract than when there is a mere lease of real estate. One who lets for a short term a house provided with all furnishings and appointments for immediate residence may be supposed to contract in reference to a well-understood purpose of the hirer to use it as a habitation. An important part of what the hirer pays for is the opportunity to enjoy it without delay, and without the expense of preparing it for use. It is very difficult, and often impossible, for one to determine on inspection whether the house and its appointments are fit for the use for which they are immediately wanted, and the doctrine caveat emptor, which is ordinarily applicable to a lessee of real estate, would often work injustice if applied to cases of this kind. It would be unreasonable to hold, under such circumstances, that the landlord does not impliedly agree that what he is letting is a house suitable for occupation in its condition at the time. This distinction between furnished and unfurnished houses in reference to the construction of contracts for letting them, when there are no express agreements about their condition, has long been recognized in England, where it is held that there is an implied contract that a furnished house let for a short time is in proper condition for immediate occupation as a dwelling. Smith v. Marrable, 11 Mees. & W. 5; Wilson v. Hatton, L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 336; Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 507; Sutton v. Temple and Hart v. Windsor, supra; Bird v. Greville, 1 Cababe & E. 317; Charley v. Jones, 58 J. P. Q. B. Div. 280. In Dutton v. Gerriah, 9 Cush. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 45, Chief Justice Shaw recognizes the doctrine as applicable to furnished houses; and in Edwards v. McLean, 122 N. Y. 802; Smith v. Marrable, and Wilson v. Hutton, cited above, are referred to with approval, although held in inapplicable to the question then before the court. See Oleaves v. Willoughby, 7 Hill, 83; Franklin v. Brown, 118 N. Y. 110, 6 L. R. A. 770. We are of opinion that in the lease of a completely furnished dwelling-house for a single season at a summer watering place there is an implied agreement that the house is fit for habitation, without greater preparation than one hiring it for a short time might reasonably be expected to make in appropriating it to the use for which it was designed.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGIA SOUTHERN & FLORIDA R.
CO., Piff. in Err.,

v.

Anthony ASMORE.

(.....Ga.....)

A passenger on a railway train, who refuses to accede to a wrongful demand for fare, is entitled to be carried on acceding to the demand, though the train

*Head note by BLECKLEY, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Right of passenger to pay fare after train begins to stop for purpose of ejecting him.

After the ejection of a passenger for factious refusal to pay fare, he has not the right to pay and continue his passage on that trip. Pease v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 11 Daly, 360; People v. Jillson, 3 Park. Crim. Cas. 284.

This is true although the stop is within the limits of the ordinary stopping place of the train. Pease v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. supra.

The same rule applies even before the ejection if the train has stopped for the express purpose of ejecting the passenger. Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Skillman, 39 Ohio St. 445; Hibbard v. New York & R. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455; O'Brien v. Boston & W. R. Co. 15 Gray, 20, 77 Am. Dec. 347; Hoffbauer v. Delhi & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 343, 35 Am. Rep. 273.

But where the train has stopped at a regular stopping place an offer to pay fare before a passenger is ejected must be accepted. O'Brien v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 30 N. Y. 233.

Yet even if the place where a train is stopped is a regular station at which tickets are sold, if the particular train on which a passenger is traveling would not have stopped there except for the purpose of expelling him he is not entitled to prevent his expulsion and to continue his passage on that train by tender of fare after the train is stopped. Pickens v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 104 N. C. 312; O'Brien v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. supra; Nelson v. Long Island R. Co. 7 Hun, 140.

A passenger who has refused to pay fare may change his mind and pay while the train is stopped at a station although the conductor has commenced to put him off, if he has not compelled the conductor to stop the train for that purpose or to resort to extreme measures, as for instance by force to pull him from his seat. Gould v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 155.

A valid ticket which a passenger had kept back and not shown until after he was ejected at a station for refusal to pay fare and insisting on his right to ride on a worthless ticket, will not entitle him to re-enter the train. State v. Campbell, 33 N. J. L. 309.

A passenger is not entitled to readmission to a train from which he has been ejected for nonpayment of fare by reason of a ticket which he purchases at the place where he is ejected, at least without paying fare for the distance already ridden. Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 33, 29 Am. Rep. 453.

The rules above laid down are not without some 16 L. R. A.

may have been stopped with a view to his expulsion; but if the demand upon him is rightful he cannot avoid expulsion by tendering the fare while the train is being stopped, or after the stoppage.* Where the failure of the passenger to have a ticket is due to the non-attendance of the agent at the ticket office, or to other fault or default of the company, the passenger is entitled to be carried at the ticket rate of fare; but where his failure is attributable to any other cause he has no right to be carried without paying the higher lawful rate exacted by the rules of the company.

(February 15, 1892.)

limitations as clearly shown in the main case. Thus it is said that to bring a case within the rule that a person is not entitled to pay when being put off the train after refusal to pay fare there must be a willful or at least a positive refusal to pay proper fare. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bond, 62 Tex. 442, 50 Am. Rep. 532.

So the rule that a passenger who has refused to pay his fare cannot pay after ejection or after the train is stopped to eject him and thus claim the right to continue on that train, it is said in Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Lea, 180, 73 Am. Rep. 663, ought to be limited to willful violation of his duty to pay.

A conductor is bound to receive fare from a third person if offered before the ejection of a passenger who has no ticket or money, whom he is about to eject for nonpayment of fare. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Garrett, 3 Lea, 433, 41 Am. Rep. 640.

A New York case lays down the same rule, at least where the train is stopped at a station. Guy v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 30 Hun, 399.

Where a conductor hastily pulls the bell and takes steps to eject a passenger who honestly disputes the correctness of the amount demanded, without giving the passenger reasonable time to consider, he must accept a tender of fare offered thereafter. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bond, 62 Tex. 442, 50 Am. Rep. 532.

The same rule applies where the passenger is obliged to borrow money to pay the extra fare. He is entitled to a reasonable time for that purpose. Curly v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 11 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 85.

In California it is decided that a tender by a passenger of the remainder of his fare is in time although the train has stopped for the purpose of ejecting him, where the money which he had already paid to the conductor had not been returned to him. Bland v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 55 Cal. 570, 36 Am. Rep. 50.

In South Carolina R. Co. v. Nix, 68 Ga. 572, it is held that a conductor is not bound to receive fare after a train is in motion, from a passenger who has been ejected for nonpayment of fare, but it is said that he ought to do so if tendered while the train is not in motion or before the passenger is actually ejected. This last statement it will be seen is not in accord with most of the decisions cited above.

For note on payment of back fare for distance already traveled as a condition of being carried further, see Manning v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ala.), reported next after the main case. B. A. R.

ERROR to the Superior Court for Houston County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for his alleged wrongful ejection from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gustin, Guerry & Hall and R. N. Holtzclaw for plaintiff in error.
Mr. A. S. Giles for defendant in error.

Blackley, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The testimony was in some conflict. It raised the question of fact whether the failure of the passenger to have a ticket was due to the fault or default of the company, or to the omission of proper diligence by the plaintiff to supply himself with a ticket. Another question of fact on which the testimony differed was whether the passenger offered to pay at the conductor's rate before or not until after the train was stopped or being stopped for his expulsion. That he made the offer before he left the car, there is no dispute. The court charged the jury that, if he started to leave the train, and before doing so honestly changed his mind, and in good faith determined to remain and pay the amount charged, he had a right to do so; and, if he tendered that amount before he left the car, the conductor was bound to receive it, and ejection after such tender would be illegal and wrongful. Was this instruction correct? Tested by the letter of the decision in South Carolina R. Co. v. Nix, 68 Ga. 572, it was correct. Permission was granted in the argument here to review that case in respect to this question, and we have reviewed it. Our conclusion is that it is not sustainable, either on principle or by sound authority, and we feel constrained to overrule it in so far as it lays down in universal and unqualified terms the proposition, or its equivalent, that a passenger, by making a tender at any time before his ejection, may acquire the right to remain on board and be carried. Whenever a passenger refuses to accede to a just and lawful demand made upon him by the conductor for the payment of his fare, after being allowed reasonable time and opportunity to comply, he renounces his right to the position and the privileges of a passenger, and subjects himself to expulsion from the train. If he changes his mind, and tenders the fare before anything is done towards bringing the train to a stop in order to eject him, his refusal will be retracted in time, and his right to remain and be carried will stand unaffected. If he haggles and hesitates until he becomes a proper subject for ejection, and until steps have been taken to that end, he is too late. Any rule which would allow one passenger to play fast and loose with the conductor would allow all the passengers to do so, and a train might thus be kept halting and alternating between running at ordinary speed and stopping throughout the whole of its journey; and to this embarrassment not only one train, but every train run for the carriage of passengers, would be exposed. See the observations of Denio, J., in Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 589. The Code, § 2082, declares that "carriers of passengers may refuse to admit, or may eject from their conveyances, all persons refusing to comply with reasonable regulations, or guilty of improper conduct." It is certainly improper conduct for a passenger to delay the payment of his fare beyond the time when he ought to pay it, and a regulation that he shall pay on demand of the conductor is reasonable, and so necessary for the orderly conduct and transaction of business that it may fairly be presumed to be a regulation which all railway companies carrying passengers adopt and expect to enforce. This method of dealing with passengers who travel by railroad is so universal as to be a matter of general public observation and experience, and we apprehend that it would be a very rare instance in which a passenger would be surprised to find it in use. In the present case the passenger, when called upon, did not object to paying promptly what he admitted to be due. In fact, he put into the hands of the conductor money more than sufficient for the payment of his fare at the higher rate. Touching what immediately followed, the testimony is conflicting; but it is clear that a discussion arose as to whether payment should be made at the ticket rate or at the train rate, in consequence of which none of the money was retained, but all of it was returned. The plaintiff contended for the ticket rate, upon the ground that he tried to get a ticket, and that the agent was not at his place. The conductor insisted upon the higher rate, which was the usual and legal one exacted of passengers who had not procured tickets. According to sound legal principle, the right of the plaintiff to remain upon the train and be carried on payment or tender of the ticket rate should depend alone upon the fact whether the non-attendance of the ticket agent at the office, or any other fault or default of the company, was the true reason why the plaintiff was not supplied with a ticket. If his failure to have it was due to his own neglect, or to any cause not chargeable to the company, its agents or employees, the tender of the ticket rate had no relevancy whatever to the right of the plaintiff to be carried, or to shun ejection from the cars. He might as well have tendered nothing as not enough. On the other hand, it was the company's omission or fault that prevented the plaintiff from having a ticket, the conductor had no right to demand the payment of fare at a higher than the ticket rate; no right to reject that rate when tendered; and after its tender he could not lawfully expel the passenger for not complying with his unlawful demand of payment at a higher rate. This test of the respective rights of the passenger and the carrier goes to the foundation and rests upon the actual state of facts, and not upon mere belief or good faith either of the passenger or of the conductor. It requires them to know their respective rights, and to act accordingly. A passenger always knows why he fails to obtain a ticket. A conductor represents the company, and, if the company has failed in any of its duties to afford passengers opportunity to obtain tickets, he should be so informed. If the company will not allow him to take the word of the passenger, it must adopt some other means of informing him; as, for instance, requiring him to ascertain at each station, before leaving it, whether the ticket office has been properly kept open, and attended for the sale of tickets or not. What the company, by any of its proper agents or employes, knows on that subject, the conductor, as representing the company on the train, may be presumed to know, and this presumption, as a general rule, should be treated as conclusive. The respective legal rights of the parties being as we have just announced, can those rights be changed by either without the consent of the other? It is clear to us that they cannot. Either may waive his own rights, but neither can compel any waiver by the other. If the passenger has the necessary state of facts to back him, nothing which the conductor can do will justify his expulsion. So, if the conductor, on the other hand, has at his back the necessary state of facts, he may enforce the rule of expulsion over any tender whatever which the passenger may make after steps have been rightfully taken to stop the train in consequence of the refusal to pay. Of course, this applies only to instances occurring between stations, and where the sole reason for stopping the train is to effect expulsion. We desire to restrict our ruling to what is necessary for a decision of the case before us. The sum of the matter is that a passenger cannot force a railroad company to reject him as a patron, and then force it, by making a tender which he ought to have made before, to cancel the rejection, and perform service the same as if there had been no failure to agree originally.

Judgment reversed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

James MANNING, Appt.,

v.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. CO.

(.....Ala.....)

Refusal to pay fare for the distance already ridden without a valid ticket will justify the ejection of a passenger although on notice that he must pay such fare or be put off at the next station he has procured at that station a ticket for the remainder of his trip.

(April 23, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's train. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bowman & Harsh for appellant.
Messrs. Hewitt, Walker & Porter for appellee.

Stone, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff purchased an excursion ticket to and from New Orleans from defendant's ticket agent at Birmingham. He obtained it at reduced rates, but on certain conditions as to its use, which were printed on the ticket, and subscribed by him. Plaintiff testified that he had read the conditions. Among them are the following: "In consideration of the reduced rate at which this ticket is sold, I, the undersigned, agree with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company as follows: That on the date of my departure, returning, I will identify myself as the original purchaser of this ticket, by writing my name on the back of this contract, and by other means, if required, in the presence of the ticket agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at the point to which this ticket was sold, who will witness the signature, date and stamp the contract; and that this ticket and coupons shall be good returning only for a continuous passage from such date, and in no case later than the date canceled in the margin of this contract." Plaintiff conformed to all the requirements of this NOTE.—Payment of back fare for distance already ridden as condition of being carried further.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bryan, 90 Ill. 129, it is held, in conflict with the main case, that a passenger expelled from a train at a station for refusal to pay the amount of fare demanded may get on again and continue his journey on the same train on payment of the lawful fare from that point without paying fare for the distance previously ridden.

This distinction is based on his right to again become a passenger for a distinct trip, and it is held that he can do so on that train as well as any other.

But the majority of the cases agree with the main case above reported.

A passenger who has been expelled at a station for refusing to pay fare cannot continue his passage by paying fare from that point only, but must pay for the whole distance. Swan v. Manchester & L. R. R. 122 Mass. 116, 42 Am. Rep. 432; Pennington v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 62 Md. 95.

The purchaser of a ticket from the station at which a passenger is ejected for nonpayment of fare does not entitle him to ride on the same train without payment for the distance already ridden even if he could claim the right to be admitted to that train on any terms. Stone v. Chicago & N.W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458.
16 L. R. A.

So on the same principle a tender of fare from a station where a passenger secures a seat, although he has already ridden for some distance, will not be sufficient without paying fare for the whole distance. Davis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 68 Mo. 317, 14 Am. Rep. 457.

But where a passenger has a ticket not limited to any particular time or to the day on which it was purchased, and after it is punched stops over at a station and takes another train, if the conductor of the latter refuses to accept the ticket and threatens to eject him at the next station, he is entitled on procuring a ticket there to proceed upon it without paying fare again for the distance already ridden on that train as he has previously paid for the whole ride. Ward v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 30 N. Y. S. R. 604.

For note on the right of a passenger to pay fare after the train begins to stop for the purpose of ejecting him, see Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Asmore next preceding the main case. B. A. R.

contract until he reached Mobile on his return trip. At that place he stopped off one day. At the end of that time he boarded another train of the railroad at midnight, and took a berth in a sleeping car. He proceeded unmolested on his homeward trip until he passed Montgomery, and was nearing Calera, less than forty miles from Birmingham. At that stage of his journey the conductor in charge of the train discovered he was traveling on a forfeited ticket, but possibly did not learn he had so traveled before he reached Montgomery. As a condition of his proceeding further the conductor exacted of him that he should pay fare from Montgomery to Birmingham, or, failing, that he would be put off the train at the next station, which would be Calera. Reaching Calera plaintiff procured from the ticket agent at that place a ticket to Birmingham, and upon that ticket sought to continue his journey on the same train. This the conductor refused to allow him to do, stating that under the road's regulations he could not permit him to proceed unless he would also pay the back fare from Montgomery. This he failed to do, and was ejected from the train. The present action is brought to recover damages for such ejection.

A regulation by which railroads, when passengers are found on their trains who have no tickets, or who have only forfeited tickets, require of such passengers fare, not only for that part of the route to be traveled, but also for the part already passed over, is certainly a reasonable one. If persons who are attempting to ride without paying fare can have the past forgiven, and need pay only from the place and time of their detection, would not this be the offer of a premium for an attempted undue advantage of the railroad? The regulation needs no argument to uphold its reasonableness. The authorities are uniform, and very abundant, that the conductor was authorized to demand fare, not only for the portion of the road yet to be traveled, but equally for that part of the road plaintiff had been carried, after his ticket had become functus by virtue of his stop over. And the conductor was fully justified in ejecting Manning from the train on his refusal to pay the fare as demanded. 8 Wood, Railway Law, § 861, p. 1488; Wheeler, Carr. 174; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 580a; Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 68 N. Y. 101; State v. Campbell, 82 N. J. L. 309; Swan v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 183 Mass. 116; Davis v. Kansas City, St. J. & O. B. R. Co. 58 Mo. 817, 14 Am. Rep. 457; Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; Hall v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 57; Pennington v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 62 Md. 95; Pickens v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 104 N. C. 812; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ganta, 88 Kan. 629; Johnson v. Concord R. Corp. 46 N. H. 218; Ross v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 106 N. C. 168. Plaintiff (appellant here) relies on Ward v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 30 N. Y. S. R. 604, as an authority in his favor. The ticket in that case was an ordinary one, and had no clause or stipulation requiring or looking to continuous passage. The decision is rested on the absence of that provision. It refers to and approves many of the decisions we have referred to above, pronounced on contracts requiring continuous passage. Properly interpreted, that case is an authority against appellant. In Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carmichael, 90 Ala. 19, 9 L. R. A. 388, we took occasion to comment on the great importance, the public necessity, of wisely observing regulations in the running of trains on railroads. We need not repeat what we there said. We hold that in the charge given to the jury the circuit court strictly followed the law.

Affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

LIVERPOOL & LONDON & GLOBE INS. CO.

v.

BOARD OF ASSESSORS, Appt.

(.....La.....)

*1. Foreign companies, being required, in order to carry on business in this state, to have an authorized agent upon whom process may be served, do not, in appointing a board of directors to act as their agent, localize their business any more than those companies which manage their affairs through agencies not organized into boards, the duties of each agency being about the same.

2. A nonresident creditor of a state cannot be said to be, in virtue of a debt which a resident owes him, a holder of property within its

*Head notes by BREUX, J.

NOTE.—For an apparent modification of the doctrine that a debt due to a nonresident creditor cannot be taxed at the domicile of the debtor, see note to Detroit v. Rentz (Mich.), which is reported next following the above case.

16 L. R. A.

limits. The credit is not within the state's jurisdiction, and of no value to the debtor, and is not property within the state, but property of the creditor, taxable at his place of residence.

3. Tangible movable property may be taxed where situate, under a special statute which provides for its taxation.

(May 2, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to procure the cancellation of a certain tax assessment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Carleton Hunt, City Atty., for appellant:

It is true that the doctrine of the international jurists, in relation to the situs of movables, forms part of the ius gentium, but this statement is, beyond all doubt, to be accepted, subject to the limitation that there is no positive law to the contrary of the country where the property involved happens in point of fact to be. For if there is, the law of the owner's domicil must necessarily yield to the law of the place where the property is actually situated.

Burroughs, Taxation, §§ 40-42; Albany v. Powell, 55 N. C. 51; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 161; State v. St. Louis County, 47 Mo. 594; People v. Home Ins. Co. 29 Cal. 588; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 40 Mo. 580; Wilcox v. Ellis, 14 Kan. 602; Tazewell County Suprs. v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 198; Douglas v. New York, 2 Duer, 110; People v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390; Oliver v. Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 588; Atty-Gen. v. Bay State Mtn. Co. 99 Mass. 148.

All the laws of the state of Louisiana relative to assessment and the taxation of property under the present Constitution, will be searched in vain for the expression of any legislative purpose to assess or to tax income.

See Forman v. Houston, 85 La. Ann. 825; Parker v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 42 La. Ann. 429.

The contention of the plaintiff, that the assessment involved, of $40,000, on money loaned on interest, credits, etc., and of $10,000, money in possession, is not liable to taxation in the state of Louisiana, but can be taxed at the domicil of the company only, Liverpool, England, is unmaintainable.

Every state, in view of the law, is equal to every other state, and every state possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory.

Story, Conf. Laws, par. 18.

The right of the State of Louisiana to direct her own course of policy regarding taxation is not to be questioned, nor does it suffice to defeat that policy, to criticise it as being narrow or illiberal.

Burroughs, Taxation, §§ 40-42.

The theory that personal property attends the person, and is where the owner lives, is a mere fiction, whose restricted application rests on the comity of nations, and the fiction itself is inapplicable in this case of Revenue Statutes.

Albany v. Powell, 55 N. C. 51; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 161; Smith v. Burley, 9 N. H. 428; State v. St. Louis County, 47 Mo. 594; People v. Home Ins. Co. 29 Cal. 588; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 40 Mo. 580; Wilcox v. Ellis, 14 Kan. 602; Tazewell County Suprs. v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 198; People v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390; Oliver v. Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 588; Atty-Gen. v. Bay State Mtn. Co. 99 Mass. 144; Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 573, 19 L. ed. 1081.

While the money in possession and credits of the Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Company, involved in the present case, as subject to taxation, are personal property, and in part intangible and incorporeal, it was perfectly competent for Act 106 of the Acts of 1890 of the state of Louisiana to separate them from the person of their owner for the purposes of taxation, and give them a situs of their own.

Tappan v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 499, 22 L. ed. 198.

Messrs. E. A. O'Sullivan, City Atty., and Henry Renshaw, Asst. City Atty., in support of petition for rehearing:

Said debts are embraced within the exercise 16 L. R. A.

of jurisdiction and power by the state over non-residents, and petitioners cite garnishment process under writs of attachment and execution as an illustration of the exercise of jurisdiction as to credits due nonresidents.

C. P. 246; Miller v. United States, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 297, 20 L. ed. 142; Brown v. Kennedy, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 599, 21 L. ed. 195.

The legal fiction expressed by the maxim, mobilia personam sequuntur must yield to express law, where the credits sought to be taxed arise from business carried on within the state, by the plaintiff through its local agent.

The statute referred to is a lawful exercise of the legitimate power of the state.

See Albany v. Powell, 55 N. C. 51; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 161; State v. St. Louis County, 47 Mo. 600; People v. Home Ins. Co. 29 Cal. 588; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 40 Mo. 580; Wilcox v. Ellis, 14 Kan. 602; Tazewell County Suprs. v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 198; Oliver v. Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 588; Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 573, 19 L. ed. 1081; Tappan v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 499, 22 L. ed. 198.

In the case of State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 819, 21 L. ed. 186, the United States Supreme Court held: "Unless restrained by provisions of the Federal Constitution, the power of the state as to the mode, form and extent of taxation is unlimited, where the subjects to which it applies are within her jurisdiction."

The Legislature having expressed its will through the statute, there is no difficulty in carrying out the enactment.

Miller v. United States, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 296, 20 L. ed. 141; Brown v. Kennedy, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 599, 21 L. ed. 195.

Messrs. E. W. Huntington and Horace L. Dufour, for appellee:

The situs of a debt as property is at the domicil of the creditor.

Burroughs, Taxn. 186; Cooley, Taxn. chap. 1, pp. 14, 15; State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 819, 21 L. ed. 186. See also Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 496, 25 L. ed. 561; Meyer v. Pleasant, 41 La. Ann. 646; Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 1015.

A corporation retains the domicil of its birth, and, like natural persons, it is at that domicil "that its obligations for, and its liability to, taxation for debts or other incorporeal rights, which it owns, must be tested and settled."

Central Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 71, 26 L. ed. 700; Yuba County v. Pioneer Gold Mtn. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 183.

The assessment is one on income, which is not permissible under our state Constitution.

Burroughs, Taxn. p. 159, § 82.

Annual premiums received by an insurance company constitute a part of its income.

Burroughs, Taxn. p. 160; Parker v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 42 La. Ann. 429; Dubugue v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co. 29 Iowa, 9.

An income tax does not come within the meaning of the word "property" as used and designated in the Constitution.

Glasgow v. Rouse, 48 Mo. 479.

The absence of any express reference to income and of all appropriate provisions for defining and ascertaining the income to be taxed negatives the legislative intention to levy such tax.

Forman v. Houston, 35 La. Ann. 825. See also Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 43 Fed. Rep. 90.

Breaux, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Company for the cancellation of an assessment against the company for the taxes of 1891, which reads as follows: "Money loaned on interest, all credits and all bills receivable from money loaned or advanced or for goods sold, $40,000;" "money in possession, on deposit or in hand, $10,000." It is admitted by the plaintiff company that it has the above amount of cash and open accounts in this city. The validity of the assessment is denied; also the legality of the tax claimed. The grounds of defense are that the premiums of insurance companies are its income, and that no law authorizes the imposition of any income tax, or makes any provision for its assessment and collection; that the cash, open accounts, credits, premiums, or gross receipts due by insurers in this state, or collected from insurers in other states, are not taxable in this state, as they are not retained at the office of the company, but are forwarded to the main office, at its domicile in Great Britain where they can be taxed. The evidence discloses that plaintiff is a foreign insurance company, carrying on business in this city through the agency of a secretary and a local board of directors; that the functions of this board and of said officer are the collection of premiums and the payment of losses. The answer of the defendants pleaded the general issue. The district court decreed that the assessment of 1891 (on money loaned on interest, all credits and all bills receivable for money loaned or advanced or for goods sold) of $40,000 is null and void, and that the assessment of 1891 against plaintiff on money in possession, on deposit or in hand, to the amount of $10,000, shall remain undisturbed, and in full force and effect. The appellee in the answer to the appeal prays that the judgment be amended by striking out and annulling the assessment against the company for the year 1891 for $10,000 on money in possession, on deposit and in hand, and that the judgment of the district court, as thus amended, be affirmed. The assessment was levied under Act 106 of Acts of 1890, section 7 of which provides that in assessing mercantile firms the purpose of the Act is that such value shall be placed upon the stock in trade or cash, whether forwarded or not, money at interest, open accounts, credits, as will represent in their aggregate a fair average on the capital, both cash and credit, employed in the business of the party or parties. It is also provided in this section of the Act that nonresidents carrying on business in this state through agents shall pay a similar tax to that exacted of residents; and this section further provides that, all bills receivable, obligations, or credits arising from business done in this state is assessable at the business domicile of the non-resident owner, his agent or representative.

Business residence. The defendant urges upon our consideration that the Liverpool & London & Globe have here a business residence, an independent center of business, represented by a local board of directors, made up of well-known residents of the city; that they direct the affairs of the company, and are paid for so doing. The testimony shows that the local board and the secretary conduct the affairs of the plaintiff company in New Orleans under the direction of the head office; that the members of the board are paid $10 for each meeting they attend. Foreign companies are required to have, in order to carry on business in this state, one or more known places of business, and an authorized agent or agents in the state upon whom process may be served. Instead of carrying on business through a personal agency, the Liverpool & London & Globe has a board of directors and secretary appointed by itself. The business carried on by this board does not have the effect of localizing the company itself to a greater extent than if the business were conducted by an agency not organized into a board. The premiums of foreign companies are all collected through local agencies, and the losses are adjusted by these agencies. Whether represented by a board of their selection or by agents, they remain foreign companies, and, in so far as relates to residence, the same rule applies. The companies are the owners of the assets. Payments of losses made here in cash, or by drafts sent by the home companies, do not change their status, in so far as relates to business residence.

Debts to foreign companies not taxable. With reference to the first heading of the assessment the evidence shows that plaintiff has no money loaned on interest, nor bills receivable for money loaned, nor credits for goods sold. The issues are limited to all credits assessed for premiums due. A debt to a nonresident of a state is not liable to be taxed by a state in which he does not reside. His credits are not within the state's jurisdiction. They are of no value to the debtor. All the value there is in them belongs to the creditors, and is taxable at his domicile. Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 21; State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 300-310, 21 L. ed. 179-186; Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268; De Vignier v. New Orleans, 4 Woods, 206; Dow v. Sudbury, 5 Met. 78; Herriman v. Stowers, 48 Me. 497; People v. Chenango County Suprs. 11 N. Y. 563; St. Paul v. Merritt, 7 Minn. 258 (Gil. 198); Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152; Phelps v. Thurston, 47 Conn. 477. All corporations are taxable on property within the state. Debts are not property when the creditor is not a resident of the state. We conclude, says Burroughs, (Taxation, p. 59,) "that the situs of personal property for the purpose of taxation depends in a great measure upon the nature of the property." As to debts, a number of trustworthy decisions hold that "corporations, it is also conceded, may be taxed, like natural persons, on their property and business; but debts owing to foreign creditors, either corporations or individuals, are not the subject of taxation. The creditor cannot be taxed because he is not within the jurisdiction; and the debts cannot be taxed in the debtor's hands through any fiction of the law, which is to treat them as being for this purpose the property of debtors. They are not property of the debtors in any sense; they are the obligations of the debtor, and only possess value in the hands of the creditor. With them they are property, but to call them property in the hands of the debtors is simply a misuse of terms." Com. v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 27 Gratt. 344; Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268; Macon v. Jones, 67 Ga. 489; San Francisco v. Mackey, 22 Fed. Rep. 602; Goldart v. People, 106 Ill. 25; Kirkland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 496, 25 L. ed. 561.

"The mere right of a foreign creditor to receive from his debtor within the state the payment of his demands cannot be subjected to taxation within the state." Cooley, Taxn. p. 15. The proposition of counsel for defendants that the Statute No. 106 of 1890, under which the taxes here claimed are levied, authorizes the taxation of credits held by nonresidents, is true. The statute must be applied, in so far as relates to tangible movables belonging to nonresidents, and as to them the general rule recognized by the comity of states, mobilia personam sequuntur, must yield. The Supreme Court of the United States says upon that subject: "It is undoubtedly true that the actual situs of personal property which has a visible and tangible existence, and not the domicile of the owner, will in many cases determine the state in which it may be taxed. The same thing is true of public securities consisting of state and municipal bonds and circulating notes of banks. These, by general usage, have acquired the character of and are treated as property in the place where they are found, though removed from the domicile of the owner." State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. ed. 179. We are dealing exclusively with the question of credits as assessed, and we hold, as decided in Meyer v. Pleasant, 41 La. Ann. 645; and Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 1015, "that debts have their situs at the domicile of the debtor," because debts are property, and have a value which is inseparable from the creditor, and because the state had no greater power or jurisdiction to tax debts due to nonresident creditors than it has to tax any other personal property of such nonresident which is not situated in the state. The want of jurisdiction and power would render it useless to maintain the general rule applying to tangible movables.

Situs of the capital for taxation purposes. With reference to the second heading of the assessment, "Money in possession," the evidence shows that plaintiff is correctly assessed. It is property within the state and subject to taxation. It is visible and tangible, and expressly made taxable by statute, and is taxable where situated. The authorities we have referred to as maintaining that debts cannot be assessed against nonresidents have established the rule that nonresidents owning tangible movable property within the state may be taxed.

Judgment affirmed, at appellants' costs.
Rehearing refused.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

COMMON COUNCIL of the City OF DETROIT, Relator,
v.

Theodore RENTZ et al., Board of Assessors of the City of Detroit.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The bound volumes of the legislative journals containing matter not contained in the journal as published from day to day, certified by the clerk, will be presumed to have been properly amended in such respect by authority of the Legislature in determining whether a statute was duly passed.

2. Discrepancies between a copy of a bill as printed in a supplement to the legislative journal and the bound volume of the journal containing the bill assigned will not invalidate the statute where it affirma-

NOTE.—Power to tax mortgages.

In Dundee Mortg. T. Invest. Co. v. Multnomah County School Dist. No. 1, 19 Fed. Rep. 369, it was decided that the contract between mortgagor and mortgagee was not impaired by a statute passed after the mortgage was given requiring the mortgagee to be assessed for the amount of the mortgage and a corresponding amount deducted from the assessment of the mortgagor. As in the main case it was held that such tax on the mortgagee was the exercise of the governmental power and as between him and the state a loan not relating to his contract with the mortgagor although the latter was in effect relieved from taxation pro tanto. So in the state court of Oregon it was held that a statute taxing mortgagees does not impair the obligation of a contract as to a prior mortgage. Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 70.

And an agreement by the mortgagor to pay taxes is not binding on the state so as to prevent it from taxing the mortgagee. People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461.

But in Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, ("State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds") 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. ed. 179, the Supreme Court of the United States held that a tax on bonds held by a nonresident although secured by mortgage on real property within the state, impaired the obligation of the contract at least where the statute authorizing the tax was passed after the bonds were issued, and it seems both from this case and Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 326, 21 L. ed. 189, note, that it is the same where the contract was made after the passage of the statute.

Credits, although secured by mortgage, are not "property" within the California Constitution, which requires all property to be taxed in proportively appears from the journals that the Legislature finally dealt with and passed some other bill than that contained in such supplement.

3. A vote of the House to print a bill in the journal as a supplement makes the bill when so printed a part of the journal.
4. A provision that in case the mortgagee fails to pay his share of the tax it shall be paid by the mortgagor and the amount applied in reduction of the mortgage debt, contained in an Act providing for the separate taxation of the different interests in mortgaged real estate, is not void as requiring one man to pay the debt of another.
5. A mortgagor's right to ask for the correction of the assessment of his interest under a statute providing for the separate assessment of the different interests in mortgaged real estate is sufficiently preserved by a clause providing for a correction of the assessment on sufficient cause shown by any person whose property is assessed.
6. Permitting a sale of the fee upon nonpayment of taxes upon the mortgagee's interest in land without any provision for distinguishing the assessment under which the sale is made, although it may result in loss to the mortgagor because of the mortgagee's default, is not unlawful where the mortgagor may prevent a sale by paying the tax and the sale is limited to a parcel sufficient to pay the tax.
7. The obligation of a prior mortgage contract is not impaired by a statute providing for the assessment to the mortgagee of taxes which had previously been paid by the mortgagor and permitting the mortgagor, in case he pays such taxes, to deduct the amount from accrued interest on the indebtedness, and if it exceeds the interest due, then from the principal, even though the effect of the latter would be to extinguish a part of the interest-bearing debt.

8. A mortgage upon realty is sufficiently an interest in real estate to make it taxable in the state where the land is situated although owned by a nonresident.
9. Taxation of mortgages as real estate does not create illegal double taxation although held by savings banks and representing deposits, upon which the depositors are taxed.
10. Failure to provide a method for apportioning the tax upon a mortgage covering lands lying in different taxing districts, will not invalidate an Act providing for the separate taxation of the different interests in mortgaged real estate; the mortgage will be taxable in each district in proportion to the amount of land lying therein.
11. An agreement by a mortgagor to pay all assessments on all interests in the land will not be abridged or abrogated by subsequent statute providing for the separate taxation of the different interests in mortgaged real estate.
12. An agreement by a mortgagor to pay all taxes upon the land in addition to full legal interest upon the mortgage is not usurious.

(Grant and Long, JJ., dissent from propositions 1, 4, 7 and 10. Morse, Ch. J., dissents from proposition 5.)

(March 14, 1892.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants as the board of assessors of the city of Detroit to make assessments according to the provisions of Act No. 200 of Public Acts of 1891, relating to the taxation of property, which respondents had re-tion to its value. People v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. 51 Cal. 254, 21 Am. Rep. 704.

This case seems to overrule earlier California cases, including People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 381, which decided that the Legislature could not exempt solvent debts secured by mortgage. One of the judges puts his decision also on the ground that the taxation of a mortgage upon land which is also taxed is double taxation and void for that reason. This question of double taxation was also extensively discussed in Savings & Loan Soc. v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415, in which, however, the court was too much divided to decide it.

Double taxation.

Notwithstanding the position taken by some judges in the California case last cited, the general doctrine seems to be explicitly or tacitly established nearly everywhere that a mortgagee may be taxed on his mortgage although the land is also taxed for its full value to the mortgagor. People v. Worthington, 21 Ill. 171, 74 Am. Dec. 86; Lamar v. Palmer, 18 Fla. 147.

Where taxable.

The decisions are not harmonious on the question of the place where mortgages may be taxed. Some hold that a mortgage in land is a mere chattel interest taxable only in the county where the mortgagee resides although recorded where the land lies. Gallatin County v. Beattie, 3 Mont. 178; Latrobe v. Baltimore, 19 Md. 12.

Also that a tax on "money at interest secured by mortgage or otherwise" is a tax on the debt and should be made where the mortgagee resides. 16 L. R. A.

People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461; People v. Eastman, 26 Cal. 601; People v. Park, 23 Cal. 138.

But in State v. Runyon, 41 N. J. L. 93, it is said that the Legislature may select as the situs of taxation of mortgages either the political division where the owner resides or that in which the mortgaged premises are situated. It does not appear, however, that the rights of nonresidents were in question in this case.

So under the Massachusetts statutes the interest of a mortgage is assessed as real estate where the land lies. Firemen's F. Ins. Co. v. Com. 137 Mass. 80.

So in Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 70, it is said that a real-estate mortgage is local, as the land is, in the state where the land lies.

To the contrary is Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra.

The New Jersey statute, by which a mortgagee is not assessable for the mortgage where he resides in case the premises lie in another township or county, does not relieve him from tax thereon at his residence if the lands lie in a city or place where by special law the land is taxed without regard to incumbrances. State v. Massaker, 25 N. J. L. 531.

Nonresident owners.

A mortgagor cannot be taxed on a mortgage due to a nonresident of the state because the mortgage is not property within the state. Davenport v. Mississippi & M. R. R. Co. 12 Iowa, 539.

A nonresident mortgagee is not taxable on his mortgage where the land lies unless the mortgage is there in the hands of an agent. Goldgart v. People, 106 Ill. 26.

used to do because of the alleged unconstitutionality of the Act. Writ granted.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Charles W. Casgrain and Charles S. McDonald, for relator:

Since Taggart v. Sanilac County Supra., 71 Mich. 16, the competency of the Legislature to assess and tax real-estate mortgages and other securities representing values will not be questioned in this state.

It is competent for the Legislature to direct that mortgages, for the purpose of assessment and taxation, be treated as an interest in real estate pledged.

It is customary to classify property for taxation as real and personal, and to assess the two classes on somewhat different principles. The classification is commonly made on common-law distinctions, but this is not necessarily the case, and it will frequently be found that enumerations of property in statutes as real or personal for the purpose of taxation differs considerably from what it would be for other purposes in the same state.

2 Cooley, Taxn. 866, 867, and cases there cited; Johnson v. Roberts, 102 Ill. 655; Steers v. Walling, 7 R. L. 817.

The law must be held operative on mortgages executed before it went into effect, equally with mortgages given subsequently.

This is not an attempt to impair the obligations of contracts, and it therefore in no wise violates the constitutional prohibition on that point.

McCoppin v. McCartney, 60 Cal. 867; State v. Runyon, 41 N. J. L. 98.

The law applies to real-estate mortgages held by persons not residents of this state.

Persons and property not within the territorial limits of a state cannot be taxed. In such a case the state affords no protection, and there is nothing for which taxation can be equivalent.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 55.

But it is not necessary that both person and property should be within the jurisdiction in order to be taxed; it is sufficient if either is.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 55.

Under some circumstances personal property has for some purposes a different situs from that of the owner, and such is the case in regard to taxation.

Irvin v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 93 Ill. 105; State v. Falkinburge, 15 N. J. L. 820.

The Legislature may select, as the situs of the taxation of mortgages, either the political division where the owner resides, or that in which the mortgaged premises are situate.

State v. Runyon, 41 N. J. L. 105; Tappan v. Merchants Nat. Bank of Chicago, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. ed. 189.

The right is frequently exercised in taxing notes, bonds, and mortgages in the hands of an agent in the state where investments are made, while the domicile of the owner may be elsewhere.

People v. Comrs. of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 224; Poppleton v. Yamhill County, 18 Or. 877; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152; People v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576; Tazewell County Supra. v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197; Redmond v. Rutherford, 87 N. C. 123.

The value of real-estate mortgages owned by savings banks and insurance companies, should not be deducted from the value of the capital stock of such bank or insurance company in determining the value of the shares of stock for assessment and taxation to their owners.

Lenawee County Sav. Bank v. Adrian, 9 West. Rep. 697, 66 Mich. 277.

Mr. A. A. Ellis, Atty-Gen., for the state:

The court cannot go beyond the legislative

But mortgage securities in the hands of a non-resident agent cannot be assessed to a resident owner as "personal estate within the state." People v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576; People v. Gardner, 51 Barb. 363.

So notes and mortgages securing them on real estate in another state where they are left with an agent for collection, and which have never been in the state where the owner resides, cannot be taxed there. Fisher v. Bush County Comrs. 19 Kan. 414.

The same rule is applied even to notes given for purchase price of lands although not secured by mortgage. Wilcox v. Ellis, 14 Kan. 588, 19 Am. Rep. 107; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152.

A state Legislature has power to tax residents on money invested in bonds secured by deed of trust, of lands in another state and held by a trustee in in that state. Kirkland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn. 426, 19 Am. Rep. 544.

This decision was not based on any distinction between debts with real estate security and other debts, but declared the general power to tax residents on loans in other states.

So the amount due on a contract for a sale of land which is in the hands of an agent for a non-resident may be taxed to the agent. People v. Ordensburgh, 48 N. Y. 300; Redmond v. Rutherford, 87 N. C. 123.

But contracts for the sale of lands in the hands of an agent for a resident of another county in the same state are not taxable to the agent as personal estate in his possession or under his control, where the statute provides that every person shall be as-essed where he resides for all personal estate owned by him including that which is in his possession or under his control as agent. Lord v. Arnold, 18 Barb. 104.
16 L. R. A.

Abandoning altogether the theory that a mortgage on real estate is purely personal property, it is held in Mumford v. Sewell, 11 Or. 70, as in the main case, that a state may tax real-estate mortgages where the land lies without regard to the domicile of the owner or the situs of the debt or note secured thereby.

The fact that the owner is a foreign corporation does not affect the right of a state to tax mortgages where the land lies although held by nonresidents. Dundee Mortg. T. Invest. Co. v. Multnomah County School Dist. No. 1, 19 Fed. Rep. 350.

It would seem that the above cases could be reconciled with Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra, if at all, only by distinguishing between a tax on mortgages and one on bonds secured by mortgage. But the opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the latter case is based in part on the doctrine that a mortgage is a mere chose in action having no locality independent of the owner's residence and that this had been the law in Pennsylvania.

The correctness of this doctrine would not seem to be in itself a Federal question, and it might perhaps be decided by the same court that a tax on a mortgage owned by a nonresident, although under a statute passed subsequent to the mortgage, did not violate the Federal constitution where the state law had not previously treated the mortgage as mere personality.
B. A. R.

journals in determining whether or not this is a valid Act.

Auditor General v. Menominee County Suprs. (Mich.) Dec. 30, 1891.

In England and in some of the states in this country the courts hold that the Act could only be tried by itself, its enrollment in chancery in England, and in the states of this country, by its filing in the office of the secretary of state.

Rex v. Arundel, Hob. 110; Colledge of Physicians & Cooper or Hubert, 8 Keb. 587; State v. Young, 82 N. J. L. 42; Pacific R. Co. v. Governor, 28 Mo. 353; Fouke v. Fleming, 18 Md. 412; Duncombe v. Prindle, 12 Iowa, 1; People v. Purdy, 2 Hill, 31; Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 18.

Where the journals are to be regarded they cannot be rebutted by parol proof.

State v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 368; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 545; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269; People v. Mahaney, 18 Mich. 492; Atty-Gen. v. Rice, 7 West. Rep. 642, 64 Mich. 385; People v. McElroy, 2 L. R. A. 609, 73 Mich. 446; People v. Zilwaukee Twp. Board, 10 Mich. 274; Green v. Graves, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 351; Sackrider v. Saginaw County Suprs. 79 Mich. 59.

Neither the original bill as introduced, nor the amendments attached to it, nor parol evidence can be received in order to show that an Act of the Legislature, properly enrolled, authenticated, and deposited with the secretary of state, did not legally become a law.

Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253, 39 Am. Dec. 93; State v. Swift, 10 Nev. 176, 21 Am. Rep. 721.

Section 17 of the Tax Law of 1891 is substantially a verbatim statement of the Tax Law of California, and it is presumed that in adopting the provisions of the statute the Legislature was aware of the judicial construction they had received in that state, and that the intent was in accordance with such construction.

Stadler v. Moore, 9 Mich. 264; Drennan v. People, 10 Mich. 169; Harrison v. Sager, 27 Mich. 476; Greiner v. Klein, 28 Mich. 12; Campau v. Gillette, 1 Mich. 416, 53 Am. Dec. 73; Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32; Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

In California, as well as in this state, a mortgagee has no interest in the real estate until forfeiture and foreclosure.

McGurran v. Garrity, 68 Cal. 566.

The purpose and object of a state constitution are not to make specific grants of legislative power, but to limit that power where it would otherwise be general or unlimited.

Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 257.

Without any limitation of the legislative power in our Constitution, that power would have been, at least, as absolute and unlimited, within the borders of the state, as that of the parliament of England, subject only to the Constitution of the United States.

See 1 Kent, Com. 448; Sill v. Corning, 15 N. Y. 303; Scott v. Smart, 1 Mich. 306; Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244.

A statute cannot be declared void on the ground that it violates sound political principles when it does not come in conflict with constitutional provisions.

People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Green v. 16 L. R. A.

Graves, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 351; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320; Atty-Gen. v. Preston, 56 Mich. 177; People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244; Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Inkster v. Carver, 16 Mich. 484.

The Constitution seeks to avoid double taxation, and the old law as it existed, taxing the land at its full value, and at the same time taxing the mortgage at its full cash value, was double taxation.

Taggart v. Sanilac County Suprs. 71 Mich. 26.

It is competent for the Legislature to assess and tax securities representing values.

Ibid.

The statutes of the state of Michigan have always declared what should be considered as real estate, and what should be considered as personal property.

Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265; Firemen's F. Ins. Co. v. Com. 187 Mass. 81.

It is competent for the Legislature to determine what shall be real estate, and what shall be personal property for the purposes of taxation.

Ibid.; Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 67; Dundee Mortg. T. Invest. Co. v. Multnomah County School Dist. No. 1, 19 Fed. Rep. 369; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 618.

The state has also power to provide methods for collecting its revenue, and so long as they are general and impartial the courts will not be disposed to limit the exercise of the power merely because they seem harsh, unreasonable, and arbitrary.

Robertson v. Land Comr. 44 Mich. 279; Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Cowles v. Brittain, 9 N. C. 204; State v. Allen, 2 McCord, L. 55; McGregor v. Montgomery, 4 Pa. 237; Henry v. Horstick, 9 Watts, 412.

The Legislature has the power to authorize and require the taxation of mortgages on real property irrespective of the residence of the owner of the debt thereby secured, and such an act in no way impairs the obligation of the contract between the parties thereto.

Dundee Mortg. T. Invest. Co. v. Multnomah County School Dist. No. 1 and Mumford v. Sewall, supra.

If the mortgage contained a stipulation that the mortgagor should pay all the taxes assessed on the real estate, such contract will remain unaffected.

Hammond v. Lovell, 186 Mass. 185; Codman v. Johnson, 104 Mass. 491; Walker v. Whittemore, 112 Mass. 187.

Nonresidence of the mortgagees is immaterial.

Dundee Mortg. T. Invest. Co. v. Multnomah County School Dist. No. 1, 19 Fed. Rep. 369; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 618; Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 67; Duer v. Small, 4 Blatchf. C. C. 263; Com. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 129 Pa. 457.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding brings before us for examination Act 300 of the Laws of 1891, being a revision of the general tax laws of the state. It is claimed—first, that this purported statute, as it appears upon the statute-book, was not duly enacted; and second, that the law as promulgated is in parts unconstitutional.

1. It has been repeatedly held that the court may look beyond the engrossed bill to the legislative journals with a view to ascertaining whether the Legislature enacted the statute. This has long been a recognized power of the court, frequently invoked. People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 492; Atty-Gen. v. Joy, 55 Mich. 94; People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408. In many of the states the court has denied that this power rests with the judiciary, and have held that the engrossed bill, duly authenticated, is final, and cannot be impeached. This court, while adhering to the view that the journals are open to inspection, has frequently, and particularly in the later cases, held that every intendment is in favor of the due enactment of the statutes which have received the executive sanction, and that to overcome this legal presumption the journal must show conclusively that the statute which received the signature of the governor was not duly passed. People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408; People v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 450, 2 L. R. A. 609, and cases cited.

The history of the present statute, so far as it is important to be noted, is as follows: On June 29th, after the bill had been amended, it was voted "that the bill be laid on the table, and ordered printed as a supplement in to-day's journal." The bill had the file number 840, and was a substitute for House Bill No. 178. A supplement to the house journal was printed as of the date June 29th, with the heading: "File No. 340. House of Representatives. Substitute for Senate Bill No. 178. (Introduced by Mr. Doremus.) Ordered printed for use of the committee on judiciary. Lansing, June 29, 1891,"—followed by the title. The bill contained 116 sections. On June 30, Mr. Doremus moved that house substitute for Senate Bill No. 178 (file No. 340) be taken from the table and placed on its immediate passage, which motion prevailed. The question being on the passage of the bill, the bill was read a third time, and pending the vote on the passage thereof, on motion of Mr. Doremus, the bill was laid on the table. On July 1st Mr. Doremus moved that house substitute Bill No. 178 (file No. 340) be taken from the table and put on its immediate passage, which motion prevailed. Numerous amendments were then made to the bill, and after such amendments the bill duly passed the House, which was the final action taken by the House on the bill. If it be the fact that the bill as printed was the bill with which the House was dealing on July 1, it is entirely clear that the bill as it passed the House is not the bill engrossed and signed by the governor, as it appears that the bill as printed contains numerous entire sections which were not eliminated by amendment, but which do not appear in the law as signed, while the engrossed bill contains numerous provisions which are not contained in the printed bill as it would stand amended by incorporating the amendments made on July 1.

16 L. R. A.

It is claimed, however, that the journal itself furnishes on its face evidence that after the bill in question was printed in the journal the House dealt, not with the printed bill, but with some other instrument, and that it is fairly to be inferred from what appears on the face of the journal that there were errors in the printing of the bill which the House discovered and which led to the abandonment of the printed copy appearing in the journal. These evidences are as follows: (1) It appears that the House took up the bill by its title and reference as printed in the journal, and before taking action on it laid it on the table, and that, when the bill was again taken up, it was referred to, not as a substitute for Senate Bill 178, but as a substitute for House Bill 178, which it really was. (2) The amendments offered from time to time do not correspond with the bill as printed. As, for instance, one amendment offered was by inserting in line 1, of section 38, after the word "time," the words "or upon any mortgage or other obligation taxed as an interest in lands owned by such persons as provided by this Act." Not only does it appear by section 38 as printed that the word "time" does not appear in line 1, but it further appears that there is no provision in section 38 to which the proposed amendment is in any way germane. Without tracing all the instances through, it appears beyond cavil that the amendments could not have been offered with reference to the printed copy. (3) The bill as printed had its sections numbered consecutively, and was not after being printed considered at all in committee of the whole; and yet we find on July 1, the following in the journal: "Mr. Doremus stated that certain sections in the bill had been stricken out and some added in the committee of the whole, which, with the above amendments, would not leave the sections in consecutive order; and thereupon Mr. Doremus further moved to amend the bill by directing the engrossing and enrolling committee to renumber the sections of the bill so that they should be numbered as near as may be by consecutive numbers, which motion prevailed, and the sections of the bill were thereupon accordingly renumbered." This action of the House makes it entirely clear, not only that the House was not dealing with the bill as printed in the journal, but also that they were not dealing with an exact copy of the same. It appears, however, that this last-quoted section does not appear in the house journal as it was printed from day to day; and it is suggested, therefore, that this must be disregarded. But it does appear in the bound volume published by authority and certified by the clerk of the House. The daily journal, as printed, is subject to amendment. Are we at liberty to infer that this emendation is a forgery? It seems to me that the case of People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408, furnishes a decisive answer to this question. In that case the journal as printed from day to day, and as printed in the bound volume, showed the following: "Mr. Wesselius moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill, which motion prevailed. The question being on the passage of the bill, on motion of Mr. Weaselius, the bill was ordered returned to the House." At the close of the senate journal, and preceding the certificate of the secretary, which bore date July 8, 1891, is a page headed: "Errata in the Record of Bills. . . . On page 811, lines ten and eleven, the vote reconsidered was not the passage of the bill, but the vote by which the Senate concurred in the house amendments to the bill on page 797." The court says: "It does not affirmatively appear at what time the secretary made this correction of the record, but it is to be presumed, from the place where the errata is found, that he made it on or before the date of his certificate, July 8, 1891, as the certificate follows the correction. The Legislature adjourned sine die upon that date; and, as every intendment is to be taken in favor of the correctness of legislative action, it must also be presumed that the correction was made before the adjournment of the Senate. If it was done, as we must presume that it was, before the final adjournment of the Legislature, we must also presume that it was authorized by the Senate, and that the true journal entry of the proceedings is as corrected by the 'errata.'" So in the case of the law under consideration. The house adjourned July 8, 1891. The certificate of the clerk bears date July 8, 1891, and as the correction to the daily journal as originally printed appears before his certificate, and indeed as of a prior date, we must presume that it was made before the final adjournment of the Legislature, and we must also presume that it was authorized by the House.

In McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424, the court in speaking of such records said: "This journal must be held conclusive evidence of the facts which appear upon its face, because it must be presumed that the members as a body inspected it and made all necessary corrections before they allowed it to assume the character of a journal of their proceedings. As well might evidence be received to contradict a statute to show that it contains certain provisions inserted through mistake as to contradict an entry made upon the journal. The house keeping the journal is the only tribunal by which it can be corrected, and, until corrected by such authority, it must be considered conclusive as to the facts which it contains." In the case of Turley v. Logan County, 17 Ill. 151, it was held that the journals must show that the constitutional requirements have been observed; but in that case the journals having been produced; and it appearing from the minutes of the clerk that the same Legislature had corrected their journals at a subsequent session so as to conform to the constitutional requirements, this was held to be sufficient, and the law was sustained. In Post v. Kendall County Suprs., 105 U. S. 670, 26 L. ed. 1205, it was said: "By virtue of the Statute of Illinois of February 12, 1849, the copies of the original daily journals kept by the clerks of the two Houses made by persons contracted with or employed for the purpose, as authorized and directed by that Act, (though not sworn public officers,) in well-bound books furnished by the secretary of state, pursuant to the duty thereby imposed upon him, and afterwards deposited and kept in his office, are official records in his custody, copies of which certified by him are admissible, upon settled rules of evidence, as well as by the decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois in Miller v. Goodwin, 70 Ill. 659; and neither the competency nor the effect of such copies is impaired by the loss and destruction of the daily journals or minutes." In Atty-Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 885, 7 West. Rep. 642, Mr. Justice Morse uses the following language: "Are these journals kept by the clerk of each House, and read and corrected each day by each body, and duly certified by the proper officers to be correct, to stand as conclusive evidence of their proceedings, or are they liable to be disputed and overthrown by parol testimony, either of individual officers and members, or of strangers who may be interested in nullifying legislative action? It would seem that there could be but one answer. The legislative record must prevail. Any other rule would necessarily lead to dangerous and alarming results."

Without passing upon the effect of a mere omission of parts of the journal as printed from day to day from the bound journal, I think it is entirely clear that as such journal is always subject to amendment by the House itself, both on the authority of People v. Burch, and the other cases above cited, and on principle, we are bound by an amendment appearing in the bound volume.

Some of my brethren are of the opinion that the supplement referred to cannot be treated as a part of the journal; that, as there is no requirement that bills shall be printed in the journal, the order entered on June 29 for the printing of the bill in question should have been construed as having been made for the convenience of the members, and not with the intent that the bill when printed should become a part of the journal. While not assenting to this view, I think it is clear that, if it be treated as a part of the journal, yet, for the reason stated, it is not possible to say that the bill with which the House was dealing was the one printed in the supplements.

Attention has been directed to an unbound portion of the journal, with paging corresponding to that in the bound volume, and it is suggested that this demonstrates that the statement purporting to have been made by Mr. Doremus was inserted after the Legislature adjourned. But as well might it be said that the printer's proof-sheet, before correction, is more authentic than the corrected publication. No such view can be adopted, unless we reverse the usual doctrine in such cases, and start out with the presumption that the clerk of the House has falsified instead of correctly certifying the record. This I am not prepared to do.

2. It is claimed that so much of the statute as provides for the taxation of the mortgage interest in lands, and points out the method of collection, is unconstitutional for various reasons. The provisions of the law, so far as necessary to be noted, are: "Section 2. Any real-estate mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation, by which a debt is secured, when land within this state is pledged, shall for the purpose of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the land so pledged." Section 17 provides "that the value of the property affected by such mortgage, . . . less the value of the security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof." Section 15 provides that in making the assessment roll the value of the interest in such real estate represented by a mortgage, deed of trust, or other obligation shall be set opposite the name of the owner, and the value of the interest of the owner of the fee, less the value of the mortgage or other interest, shall be set down opposite the name of the owner or occupant, and that the taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, and may be paid by either party to such security. If paid by the mortgagor or holder of the real property, such portion as was assessed to the mortgagee shall be considered and treated as payment of any interest that may be due, or if there is no interest due, then as payment of so much of the principal. If paid by the mortgagee or holder of the security, such portion as was assessed to the mortgagor or owner of the fee shall become a lien upon the land, and be added to all other obligations. It is further provided that neither the mortgagee nor the mortgagor shall be at liberty to pay so much of the tax as is assessed against the other until the warrant has been in the hands of the collector thirty days,—thus affording the party assessed the opportunity to himself pay the tax in the first instance.

(1) The first criticism passed upon these provisions is that the law requires the mortgagor to pay the mortgagee's tax; but it should not be overlooked that the statute contemplates an assessment of the entire interest in the land, both that of the mortgagor and mortgagee, by separate assessments, it is true, but still an assessment of the entire interest. It cannot be doubted that it is entirely competent for the Legislature to cause this entire value to be assessed to the mortgagor. This has been the law of Michigan for many years. This Act, then, is in relief of the mortgagor, and it cannot be held to be invalid because it relieves him only on condition that the owner of the mortgage interest shall within a stated time pay the tax.

(2) It is said that the mortgagor would have no right under the law to appear before the board of review to ask for a correction of the assessments of the mortgage interest. But I do not so read the statute. Section 20 provides that "at the request of any person whose property is assessed, . . . and on sufficient cause shown, the board shall correct its assessment as to such property." The owner of the fee can under this provision be heard as to the amount of both the mortgage interest and his own; for the assessment of the mortgage interest is to be deducted from his own, and, if the mortgage interest be too small, his own assessment is too large. If the mortgage interest is assessed at too high a figure, his assessment will be too low, and he would have the right to have it increased.

(3) It is next suggested that where the interest of the mortgagee is assessed and remains unpaid, a sale is made of a fee simple, and the deed conveys an absolute title; and while it is conceded that it may be competent for the Legislature to provide for the sale of the fee under the assessment of the mortgagee's interest, yet it is claimed the law is defective in not pointing out how the two interests sold are to be distinguished, if the mortgagor and mortgagee fail to pay their respective taxes. It is said, if the fee simple is sold, the mortgagor will lose his land, although he may have paid his own tax. I have already pointed out that the mortgagor will, as under former statutes, be bound to pay the entire tax, on the value of the property, subject only to the relief afforded him, if the tax assessed against the mortgage interest shall be paid by such mortgagee, and, while I quite agree with respondent's counsel that the Legislature intended a fee to be sold, I think that the provision of section 62 "that no greater interest [portion] of any parcel shall be sold than is sufficient to pay the tax for which the same is sold" is sufficient protection to both mortgagor and mortgagee. The land is by the provisions of this law, as under the former statute, made subject to the entire tax assessed on its full value. The mortgagor or mortgagee can either prevent a sale by payment of the tax.

(4) It is next claimed that the provision that the mortgagor may pay the tax assessed against the mortgage interest in case of the mortgagee's default, and deduct the same from the amount owing on the mortgage, impairs the obligation of contracts. But in my judgment this view is not tenable. The contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee remains the same. The mortgagee may and should pay the tax, and if he fails to do so the state appropriates so much of the fund which the mortgage represents—so much of the mortgagee's estate in the land—as is necessary to pay the tax. It is true the state interposes between the mortgagee and the mortgagor, and excuses the latter from making a payment to the former which, by the terms of his contract, he would otherwise be bound to make; but this is not because of any interference with contract relations, or by virtue of any abrogation of the contract rights of the mortgagee. It is because the state has attached or seized so much of the mortgage debt before it has reached the mortgagee. The cases are numerous in which a law providing that agents of a corporation might withhold from the party entitled to the same so much of declared dividends as shall be necessary to satisfy taxes imposed by the state has been upheld. Cooley, Taxn. 299, and cases cited. These cases are entirely analogous. The case of Robertson v. Land Comr., 44 Mich. 274, does not conflict with these views. What was held in that case, in effect, was that authorizing the one party to the contract to refuse performance until evidence should be produced of the payment of the tax was in the nature of a penalty, and not a means of collecting the tax directly. But the court says: "It must no doubt be admitted that the state may provide modes for collecting its revenues that will seem harsh, unreasonable, and arbitrary. Some such are to be found in the laws of Congress, as well as in the legislation of the states. The judiciary would not venture to indicate limits to the power of the sovereign in this regard, so long as its laws were general and impartial."

(5) It is further suggested that as, in certain cases, a portion of the principal debt secured by the mortgage is appropriated, it interferes with the contract obligation of the mortgagor to pay interest upon this sum, and to that extent, at least, is an impairment of the contract. But it is equally true that if the money was paid by the mortgagee in hand, or was seized by the tax collector, he could not thereafter receive interest on the fund. This would be no hardship. If he refuses to pay the tax, the state appropriates so much of the fund within its control to that purpose. It no more interferes with his contract relation with the mortgagor than would the seizure of personal property in the hands of a bailee by a taxing officer interfere with the contract existing between the bailor and the bailee. In such cases, doubtless, the bailee would be relieved from his agreement to return the property, just as under this law the mortgagor is relieved from the payment of so much of his debt as is thus appropriated by the state.

(6) It is strenuously insisted that the provision which makes the mortgagor liable for the tax assessed against the mortgagee is unconstitutional; and it is said that it is not within the constitutional power of the Legislature to compel one man to pay another man's debt,—a proposition safe enough in itself, but not conclusive as to the right to provide that the mortgagor or occupant of lands shall be liable for the tax on such lands. It is not necessary to go to the length to which the majority of the court went in Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251, in order to sustain this provision. The relation of the owner of the fee to the property is such that the right to assess the whole property to him is undoubted, and to my mind it would be an unsound doctrine, resting upon shadow rather than substance, which would deny the power of the Legislature to relieve him conditionally on the pretense that by so doing his constitutional rights are being infringed.

(7) It is, again, urged that the law is unconstitutional, in so far as it attempts to tax mortgages owned by nonresidents, for the reason that the mortgage is personal property and a mere security for a debt, and is of that character of personal property which must be held to attach to the person, and to have no other situs for any purpose; and the case of State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 83 U. S. 15 Wall. 800, 21 L. ed. 179, is cited in support of this contention. It is further said in support of that position that in Michigan a mortgage is a mere incident to the debt, and conveys no title to the land. Caruthers v. Humphrey, 13 Mich. 270; Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 18 Mich. 880; Wagar v. Stone, 86 Mich. 364. And it is urged that as this is so the taxation of such mortgage interest amounts to a taxation of the debt, and brings the case within the Case of State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds. But, while it is true that the mortgage is a mere security for the debt, yet it conveys a qualified property in the land. While it is not an estate which entitles the mortgagee to possession before foreclosure, it is nevertheless an estate or interest in lands which is protected by our registration laws as fully as any other title or interest. It is held that the mortgage interest so far partakes of the character of real property as to require administration in the state of its location, and that neither a foreign administrator nor his assignee can maintain an action to foreclose a mortgage in the state where the mortgaged property is situate. Outter v. Davenport, 1 Pick. 81, 11 Am. Dec. 149; Dial v. Gary, 14 S. C. 578, 37 Am. Rep. 737; and the opinion of Cooley, J., in Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 568. It has also been held that the Legislature may select as the situs of the taxation of mortgages either the political division where the owner resides, or that in which the mortgaged premises are situated. State v. Runyon, 41 N. J. L. 105; Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 70. See also Firemen's F. Ins. Co. v. Com. 187 Mass. 81; Providence Sav. Inst. v. Boston, 101 Mass. 575. The Case of State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds is apparently in conflict with these cases. The doctrine of that case was announced by a bare majority of the court, and ought not to be treated as binding authority, except as to the precise questions before the court. The law which the court had under consideration provided "that the president, treasurer, or cashier of every company, except bank or savings institutions, incorporated under the laws of this Commonwealth, doing business in this state, which pays interest to its bondholders or other creditors, shall before the payment of the same retain from said bondholders or creditors a tax of five per centum of the interest upon every dollar paid as aforesaid." In the opinion of the majority of the court Mr. Justice Field states the question before the court as follows: "The question presented in this case for our determination is whether the eleventh section of the Act of Pennsylvania of May, 1868, so far as it applies to the interest on the bonds of the railroad company made and payable out of the state, issued to and held by nonresidents of the state, citizens of other states, is a valid and constitutional exercise of the taxing power of the state, or whether it is an interference, under the name of a tax, with the obligation of a contract between the nonresident bondholders and the corporation." It will be seen that the court was not dealing with a statute which in terms imposed a tax upon a mortgage interest in lands. This statute was a clear attempt to tax credits distinctively as such, and applied alike to mortgages secured by bonds, and to those which were not so secured. In that respect it is distinguishable from the statute of Michigan, as our statute, in all its provisions relating to the subject, imposes a tax upon an interest in real estate as such. It seems to me that the case is not given any added force as authority here by the fact that the particular bonds in question were secured by mortgage, for the attempt was not to tax the mortgage interest in lands, but to impose a tax upon the bond itself which the court held to have a situs at the domicile of its owner. So in Latrobe v. Baltimore, 19 Md. 20, it was held that the situs of the mortgage was the domicile of the owner, and that such owner could not be taxed where the property covered by it was located. But in the opinion it is said: "We are not aware that the action of the assembly regulating the imposition and collection of taxes has effected any modification of the rules of law, which otherwise must govern the determination of this question." So it will be seen that the question of the power of the Legislature to fix the situs for the purpose of taxation has been determined, and that, even though held by nonresidents, they may be given a situs in the place where the mortgage property is situated. This the Act in question purports to do, and it should be sustained.

(8) The question is presented whether the mortgages held by savings banks and insurance companies are to be treated as real estate, and deducted from the amount of capital stock, or whether the tax on mortgages is over and above the tax on capital. The law provides for the assessment as personal property of "all shares in banks organized in this state under any law of this state or of the United States at their cash value, after deducting the value of the real estate taxed to the banks." As to insurance companies, it is provided "that in computing taxable property of insurance companies organized under the laws of this state the value of the real property on which a company pays taxes shall be deducted from its net assets above liabilities, as ascertained at the last report." I think the intent is clear to treat mortgages as real estate, and that the interest in real estate so taxed to banks and insurance companies may be deducted from the shares of stock as assessed. See Firemen's F. Ins. Co. v. Com., 187 Mass. 80. It is said that the amount of mortgages held by savings banks in many cases greatly exceeds the capital stock. So, if the amount for which such mortgage is assessed is deducted, there will be no tax on their shares, and this state of things is urged as a reason why the Legislature could not have intended to tax mortgages held by these institutions. But, on the other hand, it must have been known to the Legislature that the exemption of the mortgages held by such corporations from the burdens imposed upon like securities in the hands of individuals would give to such bank a practical monopoly of the business of loaning money on mortgages in this state. This is a result so manifestly unjust as that it would not be inferred unless such a construction of the statute is made necessary by its plain provisions. This, I think, is not the case here. It is also contended that if the statute be construed so as to admit of taxation of mortgages of saving banks as real property the result is double taxation in many cases, inasmuch as the mortgages represent deposits, and the depositors are required to pay a tax. I do not think this amounts to double taxation, in any objectionable sense. If the banks hold property subject to taxation in excess of their actual capital, the case is no harder for them than it is in the case of any individual taxed for the value of property owned by him, though he may at the time be indebted to the amount of nearly or quite its full value. In Cooley on Taxation, (page 160,) it is said: "Now whether there is injustice in the taxation in every instance in which it can be shown that an individual who has been directly taxed his due proportion is also compelled indirectly to contribute, is a question we have no occasion to discuss. It is sufficient for our purposes to show that the decisions are nearly if not quite unanimous in holding that taxation is not invalid because of any such unequal results. It cannot be too distinctively borne in mind that any possible system of tax legislation must inevitably produce unequal and unjust results in individual instances; and, if inequality in result must defeat the general law, then taxation becomes impossible, and governments must fall back on arbitrary exactions." It is not within the power of this court, as I understand it, to declare that the Legislature, in enacting a statute, has exceeded its constitutional authority, except in a case where it clearly appears, by a comparison of the terms of the statute with the Constitution itself, that some provision of the fundamental law has been violated. I do not assert that the court may not construe the Constitution as well as the statute, or that we may not hold that what is by clear implication inhibited is beyond legislative power; but in my opinion this fixes the extreme limit of judicial control over the legislative department. The pernicious notion that courts may scrutinize legislation with a view to ascertaining how far it accords with some uncertain, shadowy spirit of our institutions, when such spirit is not expressed in our Constitution, cannot be too early or too definitely or too absolutely denied. Robinson v. The Red Jacket, 1 Mich. 171; Green v. Graves, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 351; People v. Mahaney, 18 Mich. 481; Atty-Gen. v. Preston, 56 Mich. 177, opinion of Cooley, J., in State Tax Cases, 54 Mich. 446.

It is suggested that, where lands covered by mortgage lie in two or more taxing districts, it will be impossible to properly apportion the tax. I do not consider that there will in many cases be such difficulty. The mortgage being treated as an interest in lands, the proportion which is properly taxable in each district will be that proportion which the land lying in such district bears to the whole; and, when the taxing officer can inform himself as to these values, there is no reason why he cannot properly make the assessment. There may be instances where this will not be possible, but it is a difficulty which will not often occur. There must be, are, and always will be, difficulties in the way of taxing all the property that ought to bear the burdens of taxation; but this cannot obstruct taxation altogether, or even taxation upon any species of property. And this defect, where it exists, is not beyond remedy by subsequent legislation; and the difficulties under the present law will be found insurmountable only in a few extreme cases. In my opinion, such a defect ought not to invalidate the whole scheme involved in the provisions relating to taxing mortgages. Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 29 Mich. 108; Robison v. Minor, 68 Mich. 549, 18 West. Rep. 471.

(9) The question has been suggested as to whether the statute is to be so construed as to relieve mortgagors from the obligation of paying the tax in cases where there were agreements on their part to do so, in force at the time when the law took effect; and also as to whether it is competent for the mortgagor to engage to pay the taxes which may be assessed against the mortgagee's interest in the lands, in addition to paying the full legal rate of interest allowed by statute. The first question would of necessity depend upon the terms of the contract, but it is clear, both on reason and authority, that if the engagement of the mortgagor is sufficiently broad to cover any assessment which may be made on all interest in the land mortgaged, his undertaking is in no way interfered with or abridged by the present statute. Hammond v. Lovell, 136 Mass. 185. Nor is there any obstacle, either in Act 200 or in the Usury Law, (Act No. 156,) to an agreement by the mortgagor to pay all taxes which may in the future be assessed against all interest in real property owned by such mortgagor, including the interest granted to the mortgagee. Such an agreement does not amount to a reservation of interest, but is in the nature of an agreement to preserve the estate which constitutes the security, and is no more unlawful than an agreement to keep the property insured with a similar purpose. See Banks v. McClellan, 24 Md. 62. That it was not the purpose of the Legislature to limit the power of parties to contract as they may choose in this regard is made clear by the fact that a clause of the tax law, as originally drafted, prohibiting such contracts, was struck out by amendment before its final passage.

I think the mandamus should issue as prayed, commanding the board of assessors (1) to assess the value of any land contract to the owner of such security as real estate; (2) to assess as real estate, to the owner thereof, the value of any real-estate mortgage executed either before or after the law of 1891 took effect, and whether held by residents or nonresidents of this state; (3) to assess to savings banks or insurance companies, as real estate, the value of any real-estate mortgages owned by such banks or insurance companies, and to deduct the value of all real-estate mortgages owned by any savings banks or insurance companies from the value of the capital stock of such banks as determined for assessment purposes.

16 L. R. A.

Morse, Ch. J., and McGrath, J., concurred with Montgomery, J.

Morse, Ch. J.:

There is no better settled rule of law in this state than that, in the investigation of a question whether a law has been properly and constitutionally passed by the Legislature, every presumption and intendment are strongly in favor of its due enactment; and if the journals are resorted to, the law can only fail where it conclusively appears from such journals that constitutional methods were lacking in its passage.

In the law before us, we have: First. The law published in the Public Acts which are made presumptive proof that the laws therein contained were duly enacted, and which are received as such without further evidence of their authenticity than they bear upon their face. Second. We find in the office of the secretary of state, where it is provided it shall be kept, the duly enrolled and engrossed manuscript Act, signed by the speaker of the House, the president of the Senate, and the governor. This engrossed Act agrees entirely with the published law. Here we have, again, another strong presumption in support of the proper passage of the Act, which we thus find enrolled and certified by the proper officers. Third. We now go to the journals of both Houses, published by authority of law and certified to be correct by the proper officers, and the only journals that the Constitution or laws prescribe shall be kept and preserved as journals of the Legislature, and find nothing in such official journals militating against the proper and constitutional passage of the Act in question. These journals are also presumed to be correct, and it is doubtful if they could be overthrown by parol proof. Fourth. This bill was read section by section, at length, just before its passage. It is to be presumed that the Legislature knew what was being voted upon. Fifth. It was reported to the House as correctly enrolled and engrossed, and the presumption is that it was. Sixth. Fortunately, although not required by law to be preserved, the original bill itself, as passed, with its emendations, amendments, and riders is found in the office of the secretary of state, and upon examination is found to be identically the same as the published law. This bill could not be resorted to in order, by its discrepancies, if any there were, to defeat the law, yet it establishes the fact that there is no difference between the law as published and the Act as passed. I refer to it simply to show how easily, by reasoning from false premises and using all presumptions against the validity of the Act, it is apparently conclusively shown that a falsehood is the truth. For instance, in this case, assuming that the so-called "supplement" presented to us upon the last argument is a part of the journal, and further assuming that the bill was correctly printed therein as of the condition it was in when the motion to print the supplement was carried, and then, again, assuming that this bill as printed in such supplement was the bill thereafter acted upon, amended, and passed by the two Houses, it is made to conclusively appear that the law as published is not the Act passed by the Legislature, but a radically different one; having, as shown by the opinion of Mr. Justice McGrath, thirteen sections not found in the supplement, nor put there by subsequent amendment, and the supplement having eight sections not found in the law, nor eliminated from said supplement by amendment. Yet the bill in the secretary's office, the one handled and preserved by the clerk of the House, and to which all amendments were attached in its progress, is the identical law as published; and the only suspicion resting upon it is that one clause erased therein has written upon its margin the words, "Richardson says this is stricken." When this writing was done does not appear, but the presumption must be that it was done before the passage of the Act. The trouble with the argument against the constitutionality of the passage of this Act is that it abounds in presumptions against the regularity of the proceedings, when the law holds that all presumptions must be strongly the other way. Without these false presumptions, there is no standing for an argument against the validity of the passage of this law.

1. This supplement has no place in the journals except by false presumptions. It was not made a part of the journals by those authorized to publish and certify to their correctness. It must be presumed that the journals were corrected and approved, as certified by the clerk of the House and secretary of the Senate, before the Legislature adjourned, and the certificates attached to the same on the last day of the session, as shown by such certificates People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408. This supplement is not the only one ordered published by the House. There were two others, to wit: Senate Substitute Bill No. 64, (file No. 464,) the General Election Law. "On motion of Mr. Diekema the bill was ordered printed as a supplement to to-day's journal." House Jour. 2143. And House Bill No. 583, (File No. 269,) charter of the City of Detroit. "The bill was then ordered printed as a supplement to the Journal, referred to the committee of the whole, and placed on the general order." House Jour. 2081. Neither of these supplements is found in the published volumes of the house journals. This effectively disposes of the claim that the supplement of July 29 was left out of the published journals for fraudulent purposes, and also establishes the fact that, under legislative practice, these supplements are not considered as parts of the journal, but that they are the mere printing of bills for the convenience of the members, and can be no more used to stultify or contradict the journals than can any other printed copy of a bill laid upon the desks of members and used by them for reference during the session. The natural as well as the legal presumption is that these supplements were printed, as other bills are printed, for the convenience and use of the members, and that it was not the intention of the Legislature to make them a part of the journals. This natural and legal presumption accords with the fact as to legislative practice, as shown above; and any presumption to the contrary is not only a forced and illegal one, but contrary to the truth, as shown by the custom of the Legislature since the Constitution of 1850. No such thing as a supplement to the journal has ever yet found its way into the legislative journals, and probably never will, unless inserted by this court. To enforce the argument against the law, this legal and natural presumption is disregarded, and the custom of the Legislature ignored, in order to declare this supplement a part of the journal; and the clerk of the House is also presumed to have disregarded his duty, and committed a fraud or grave mistake, in leaving it out of the corrected and printed journals. Other presumptions are also necessary, to wit, that the supplement presented to us is the supplement ordered printed June 29, with the further presumption that it was laid upon the desks of the members of the House the next morning, and with still another presumption, that it was correctly printed. Every step taken in the argument must necessarily be based upon presumptions which are unlawful under our previous holdings. There is no law providing that the secretary of state shall file or keep copies of the daily journals, as they are published from day to day, in his office, and none are kept there. The law provides only for printed and bound volumes to be preserved. How. Stat. § 15. The supplement presented to us was found in the files of legislative journals kept by one Frank A. Potter, chief clerk in the office of the secretary of state. It also appears that no files of the legislative journals have heretofore been kept in said office for all these years, and that there are no files there at the present time, except such as are the personal property of clerks in the office. It is also shown by a resolution of the Legislature that copies of the daily journal were mailed and distributed to the people entitled to them, outside of the Legislature, directly from the state printer, and that such copies were never before either House of the Legislature. This supplement found in Potter's file had no place even in that file with the journal of the 29th, but was found at the end of the legislative daily journals with other supplements and miscellaneous documents. If this supplement can be used here, then any other purported supplement, or any paper purporting on its face to be a portion or a part of the printed daily journals of the Legislature, can be brought into court at any time to dispute and impeach the authenticity of the official journals published and bound by the state printer by authority of the Legislature, and certified to be correct by the clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate. It will not be necessary, under the reasoning of the argument in favor of this supplement, to inquire where the paper came from. It will be conclusively presumed that it is an exact copy of those that it will also be presumed were laid upon the desks of the members of the Legislature; and whether picked up in the street, or found in the files preserved by some one, by whom it was received in the mails, it will, by presumptions never before indulged in in favor of any document, and without proof, because no proof can be received, stand in the courts as the journal of the Legislature for the day or days it purports to cover, and, if it conflicts with the published journals the latter must fall. It is to be hoped that no such dangerous precedent as this will ever be established by this court. As for myself, from the beginning, I have regarded this supplement—as the Legislature evidently regarded it—as no part of the journals; and a patient and laborious investigation of the journals in connection with it, and treating it as a part of such journals, has, as conclusively shown by the opinions of my Brothers McGrath and Montgomery, proven that the Legislature, in their action upon the bill before them, paid no attention to it, and utterly disregarded it. To now make it a part of the journal, and to impeach and destroy legislative action by virtue of it, would be a usurpation by this court of power which belongs to the Legislature, under our Constitution, and would be a declaration of law which, in this case, would evidently lead to a false determination, and a denial of the truth as to the action of the Legislature in the passage of the law before us. This case is not at all like the case of Rode v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 598. In that case the bill under consideration was found printed in the body of the journal as it came from the Senate. "The bill as amended was ordered printed at length in the journal." "The bill is as follows." (Then follows the bill in full.) See House Jour. 1889, p. 1792. Every subsequent alteration of the bill as printed appears upon the journals, and it was never read again in the House, and it was finally passed by a concurrence in the report of the conference committee of the two Houses. No presumptions were indulged in in that case, because everything appeared plainly and conclusively in the official journals, and there was no possible escape from the fact that the bill, as signed by the governor, never passed either House of the Legislature.

As to the law itself, I think it valid, as shown by the opinion of Mr. Justice Montgomery, in which I concur. The writ must issue as prayed.

McGrath, J.:

I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice Montgomery as to the constitutionality of the Act in question. Respecting the enactment of the law, I do not regard it as important whether the supplement referred to is or is not to be treated as a part of the house journal. If regarded as a part of the journal, in the absence of anything upon the face of the journal pointing away from that print of the bill, the presumption would be that it was the print acted upon; but if it affirmatively appears from the journal that the action of the House was not aimed at that print, but was directed to some other print, the supplement print has no more weight than any other print ordered by the House, whether printed in the journal or elsewhere, for the convenience of the House. The bill was originally ordered printed for the use of the committee. House Jour. 1947. The committee reported a substitute on June 19th, which was also printed for the use of the House. Id. 2050. This print was known as "Substituted for House Bill No. 178, (File No. 840.)" On June 29th after it was again reported, it was ordered printed in a supplement to the journal. Hence, we have three distinct prints of the pending bill, two of which were presumably in the usual form of printed bills, with numbered lines and wide spaces between the lines, and the other printed in double columns on daily journal size paper, without numbering of lines, and with ordinary spacing. On June 30, Mr. Doremus moved that the bill be laid on the table, and ordered printed as a supplement in to-day's journal. Prior to this time the several prints of the bill had been considered in committee, reported with amendments, and had been considered in committee of the whole. In the supplement the print was entitled, "Substitute for Senate Bill No. 178." On June 30, Mr. Doremus moved that house substitute for Senate Bill No. 178, entitled, etc., be taken from the table, and on motion by same party said bill was again laid upon the table. It is significant that in this instance Mr. Doremus, who had charge of this legislation, referred to this print as "house substitute for Senate Bill No. 178," and that in no other instance is there any evidence upon the journal that this print was again before the House. It is significant, too, that at this time this bill was read a third time, and that subsequently, on July 1, the bill then taken up and passed was also read "a third time."

On July 1, on motion of Mr. Doremus, House Substitute Bill No. 178, (file No. 840,) was taken from the table and put upon its passage. A large number of amendments were offered by Messrs. Doremus, Dafeo, Connor, and Richardson: (1) To strike out of line 9 of section 11 the words "to hire." Line 9 of section 11 of the supplement print is as follows: "Procuring any such property to be manufactured upon contract shall be." (2) By adding to section 11, line 33, after the word "assessment," the words, etc. Line 33 of section 11 reads thus: "Any shed shall not be deemed in transit, but shall be assessed to the." (3) To insert in line 13 of section 15, after the word "properly," the words, etc. Line 13 of section 15 reads as follows: "The quantity of land comprised in any town, city, or village." (4) To insert in line 1 of section 33, after the word "time," the words, etc., and to insert in line 10 of section 33, after the word "necessary," the words, etc. There is no such word as "time" in the first ten lines of section 33, and no such word as "necessary" in the tenth line. (5) To strike out of line 40 of section 34 the word "assessment," and insert, etc. Line 40 of section 34 reads: "Collected as hereinafter provided, and shall give his receipt therefor. The." (6) To strike out of line

5 of section 88 the word "a;" but line 5 of section 88 contains no such word. (7) To strike out of lines 8 and 9 of section 88 certain words; but the words do not occur in lines 8 and 9, and do occur in lines 9 and 10. (8) To insert in line 18, § 40, after the word "lien," certain words; but the word "lien" does not occur in line 18, but does occur in line 20. (9) To insert in line 7 of section 48, after the words "and the;" but no such words are contained in line 7. (10) To insert in line 10, after the words "state and;" but line 10 has no such words. (11) To strike out all of section 48 between the words "each year" in line 15; but line 15 contains no such words. (12) To insert in line 17 of section 55, after the words "sold for the," etc.; but line 17 of section 55 contains no such words. (13) To strike out of line 21 of section 60 the words "auditor general," and insert, etc.; but the words "auditor general" do not occur in line 21 of section 60. (14) To strike out of section 71, commencing with the word "shall," in line 5, etc.; but the part stricken out commenced in line 6. (15) To strike out lines 9 to 23, inclusive, of section 71; but the part actually stricken out includes 14 other lines which appear in the supplement. The journal strikes out fifteen lines, whereas thirty-nine lines, as they appear in the supplement, were actually stricken out.

It does not appear that the bill was considered in committee or in committee of the whole after it was ordered printed in the supplement. The California mortgage tax system, and the county system for the collection of delinquent taxes, refer to provisions which at the time were already incorporated in the bill, as indicated by the resolutions themselves. House Jour. 2167, 2168. The supplement print, however, contains sections 43, 44, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69, which do not appear in the law as published, and sections 20, 21, 51, 63, 67, 74, 75, 76a, 78, 79, 81a, 81b, and 82, contained in the law do not appear in the supplemental print; and nowhere does the journal after the print was ordered in the supplement to the journal on June 29th refer to any amendment striking out either of the sections 43 to 69 above named or to the incorporation of sections 20 to 82 inclusive above named either by number or matter; nor does the journal after the supplemental print was ordered contain any intimation that the bill was referred to or reported by any committee or that it was considered in committee of the whole. The journal does show, however, that at the same morning session at which the amendments referred to were adopted the bill was read the third time as amended, and passed, (House Jour. 2203;) that it went to the Senate, and was there passed with amendments, and the amendments were afterwards concurred in by the House, (Id. 2242, 2243;) and that afterwards the committee on engrossment and enrollment reported as correctly enrolled, signed, and presented to the governor, House Bill No. 178, (file No. 840) being an Act, etc. (House Jour. 2284.) The journal nowhere intimates that this print of the bill was before the House for amendment or adoption nor does it show that a single amendment was directed to or aimed at it but the journal conclusively shows that some one of the other prints was before the House; and, this fact appearing, it must be presumed, I submit, that it was such other print that was finally read the third time, put upon its passage and passed. It cannot be presumed that four different members of the House, each offering amendments, had before them this supplemental print, when every amendment that was offered refers to some other print of the bill. The supplement print contained no numbered lines. The numbered lines appeared only in the other prints of the bill, which existed before the print was ordered in the supplement to the journal. If either of the four members offering amendments had before him a copy of the bill which was being considered by the House, in which the lines were numbered, he must have had a copy previously made. If the clerk had a copy in which the lines were numbered, he too must have had a copy of some other print. If the members had a copy in which the lines were numbered, they too must have had a copy of some previous print. It must be recollected that each of the other prints, having numbered lines and wide spaces between the lines, were, when printed, distributed to the members, and each member of the House had before him a file of the bills which had been ordered printed by the House. It will not do to say that this supplement print received certain amendments which appear upon the journal; for none of the sixteen amendments above referred to are directed to or aimed at the said print, and none of the other amendments offered necessarily refer to said printed copy. There is not a figure, line, or sentence in the journal of July 1 that necessarily refers to the print contained in the journal supplement. On the other hand the sixteen motions to amend, enumerated above, refer to some other print which was then before the House, in the hands of the members offering amendments, before the clerk, and understood by the members of the House generally. The House had the undoubted right to disregard this print in the supplement. So far as we know it may have been incorrectly printed. Some other copy than that intended may have been printed. The House had a clear right to discard this print for any reason, and to take up either of the other prints. They had been presented, referred to the committee, reported with amendments, and considered in committee of the whole. No house rule or parliamentary precedent can be invoked to defeat legislation. Every amendment offered can be found in the Act as passed in its proper place, with the proper context. Sixteen of the amendments offered cannot be associated with the supplemental print without doing violence to the express language of the journal. If the validity of the Act passed is to be tested by this print, then the law is defective, not simply because it does not contain the clause relating to agreements for the payment of the tax by mortgagors, but for the additional reason that sections 43, 44, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69 of the supplemental print are not contained in the law, and sections 20, 21, 51, 63, 67, 74, 75, 76a, 78, 79, 81a, 81b, and 82 are contained in the law, and are not contained in the supplement. If a portion of section 17 was surreptitiously stricken out, then why have not the sections above named, from 43 to 69, inclusive, been surreptitiously eliminated, and why have not the other sections, 20 to 82, inclusive, been surreptitiously interpolated? It must be clear to every one who examines the matter carefully that the House had before it some copy of the bill, other than the bill printed in the supplement,—some copy that had been amended by the substitution of the sections appearing in the law, which do not appear in the supplement print, and by striking out, if ever in, the sections which appear in the supplement print and do not appear in the law,—some copy in which section 17 had been amended. Thus is explained every word in the Act, and every word in the journal which records the action of the House. It being clear that some copy of the bill other than the supplement print was before the House when the amendments were offered, the natural presumption is that the House kept that copy in sight, and that this is the same copy that was read a third time and passed. The committee on engrossment and enrollment report the bill "as correctly engrossed and enrolled, and presented to the governor," and the governor approves the bill so engrossed and enrolled. The passage of the Act intervened between amendments and enrollment. The same theory, and the only theory that explains the journal entries when the bill was before the House for amendment, accounts for the bill as passed and enrolled. Any other theory renders senseless and nugatory sixteen amendments which appear upon the face of the journal, emasculates both supplemental print and Act, and makes a dupe of the governor, dolts of the members of the Legislature, and knaves of the members of the committee on engrossment and enrollment, and the clerk of the House.

Grant, J., dissenting:

This is an application for the writ of mandamus to compel the respondents, who are the assessors of the city of Detroit, whose duty it is to assess at its true cash value all the real and personal property in the city, and to make out the assessment rolls, to comply with the provisions of Act No. 200 of the Public Acts of 1891, which require them—first, to assess the value of any land contract to the owner of such security as real estate; second, to assess as real estate, to the owner thereof, the value of any real estate mortgage executed before the tax law of 1891 went into effect; third, to assess to any savings bank or insurance company as real estate, the value of any real-estate mortgage owned by such bank or insurance company, executed since said tax law took effect; fourth, to assess the value of any real-estate mortgage executed since said tax law took effect to the owner thereof, as real-estate; fifth, to assess the value of any real estate mortgage executed since said tax law took effect, and owned by a nonresident of this state, to such nonresident owner, as real estate; sixth, to deduct the value of any real-estate mortgage owned by any savings bank or insurance company from the value of the capital stock of such bank or insurance company, as determined for assessment purposes by the statute in such case made and provided. The respondents answered, alleging various reasons against the constitutionality of the Act.

The first question for determination is whether the Act approved by the governor and deposited with the secretary of state is the Act which passed the Legislature. Courts will not go behind the legislative journal for any evidence touching the validity of an Act of the Legislature. We must be able to determine from an inspection of the journal that the Act as signed did not pass, in order to declare it void. The history of this Act, as found in the journal, is as follows:

Early in the session a joint special committee of the Senate and House was appointed, to which were referred the recommendations of the retiring and incoming governors on taxation, with instructions to prepare and report a general tax bill. Three general tax bills were introduced,—two in the House and one in the Senate,—and referred to this committee. The house bills were numbered 178 and 984, and the senate bill, 325. April 17 this committee reported a substitute for House Bill No. 178, which was concurred in, ordered printed, and referred to the committee on judiciary. House Jour. 1246. June 19, the judiciary committee reported to the House Bill No. 178, (file No. 340,) entitled "A Bill to Provide for the Assessment of Property, and the Levy of Taxes thereon, and for the Collection of Taxes heretofore and hereafter Levied, and to Repeal Act No. 195 of the Session Laws of 1889, and all Other Acts or Parts of Acts in Any Wise Contravening Any of the Provisions of the Same;" reported a substitute therefor; recommended the substitute be concurred in and passed. This report was accepted, the committee discharged, and the substitute ordered printed, and made the special order for the next Tuesday. House Jour. 2050. June 23, which was the following Tuesday, appears another report from this same committee, and in precisely the same language, upon the same bill, which report was accepted and the committee discharged. The bill was then made the special order for June 24. Id. 2066. June 24 appears another report from the same committee upon the same bill, and in precisely the same language. Again the report was accepted and the committee discharged. A vote was taken, and the House did not concur in the substitute. The original bill was then referred to the committee of the whole, and placed on the general order. Id. 2082, 2083. The bill was considered in committee of the whole June 27, which reported that they had had under consideration "substitute for House Bill No. 178, (file No. 340,) entitled 'A Bill,' etc., (giving the same title as above;) that they had not gone through therewith, and asked leave to sit again, which was granted. Id. 2156. The same bill was further considered in committee of the whole on the same day, and the committee asked leave to sit again. Id. 2157. The same bill was again considered in committee of the whole June 29, but its consideration was not completed, and leave was granted to sit again. Id. 2168. The like proceedings were repeated the same day upon this same bill. Id. 2164. At the evening session of the same day the bill was further considered in committee of the whole, when the same was reported back to the House with sundry amendments thereto, in which the House was asked to concur, and its passage recommended. The House concurred in the amendments, and the bill was placed on the order of third reading. Subsequently the vote by which they concurred in the amendments was reconsidered, and a motion was made to concur in all the amendments, except the amendments made to section 17 and section 12, which motion prevailed. A motion was then made to concur in the amendments made to section 17, which motion prevailed. A motion was also made to concur in the amendments made to section 12, which motion did not prevail. The motion by which the House concurred in the amendments to section 17 was then reconsidered, and pending the motion to concur in these amendments the following motion was made: "That the bill be laid on the table, and ordered printed as a supplement in to-day's journal." This motion prevailed. Two resolutions were then passed by the House,—one declaring that it was desirable to incorporate into the tax laws of this state the California mortgage tax system, as provided in House Bill No. 178, (file No. 840;) the other declaring that it was desirable to incorporate the county system for the collection of delinquent taxes, as provided for in the same bill. House Jour. 2164-2168. The bill was printed in the journal as directed, under the heading: "Supplement to House Journal. File No. 840. House of Representatives. Substitute for Senate Bill No. 178. (Introduced by Mr. Doremus.) Ordered printed for the use of the committee on judiciary. Lansing, June 29, 1891." It is conceded that the expression, "Substitute for Senate Bill 178," should read: "Substitute for House Bill No. 178." This was a clerical error, and corrects itself, since no tax bill by that number was pending in the Senate. A statement of this clerical error is made in the index to the journal. The bound volumes of the journal are now produced, and this bill, which the House ordered printed in that day's journal, is omitted therefrom.

July 1st it appears from the journal that, "on motion of Mr. Doremus, House Substitute Bill No. 178, (file No. 840,) entitled," etc., "was taken from the table and put upon its immediate passage." Several amendments were then made to the bill by the House, which appear in the bound volumes of the journal on pages 2199 to 2201, and on pages 1481 and 1482 of the journal as issued daily. I do not consider it necessary to state them here. The bill was then passed and sent to the Senate and on the same day the Senate returned the bill to the House, reporting that it had passed the bill with some amendments. These amendments were concurred in by the House, appear upon the journal, and are in the Act as signed by the governor. July 1, while the bill was being considered by the House, and just before its passage, the journal contains the following: "Mr. Doremus moved to further amend the bill as follows: (1) By striking out sections, 109, 110, 111, 112, and 116; (2) by inserting in line 8 of section 114, after the word 'such,' the word 'blank,' and after the words 'forms of' the words 'delinquent tax record, certificates, deeds, and other necessary papers;'" (3) by inserting in line 5 of section 115, after the word 'accrued,' the words 'or may hereafter accrue,'—which motion prevailed. The question recurring to a passage of the bill, pending the taking of the vote thereon, Mr. Doremus moved that there be a call of the House, which motion prevailed." After the roll of the House was called the pending bill was laid on the table. Shortly after this, on the same day, by unanimous consent, the bill was taken from the table and placed upon its immediate passage. Here, again, a clerical error was committed, by referring to the bill as "house substitute for Senate Bill No. 178;" but it was also referred to as file No. 840, and the title given identical with the one just before laid upon the table. There is no doubt that the bill then passed was the same as that which had just before been laid upon the table, nor does any one contend that it is not. It also affirmatively appears that the bill taken from the table was the identical bill which had been laid upon the table, ordered printed, and printed in the journal. The record last above stated is taken from the daily journal of the House, as it was issued and published at the time, and sent to the various state, county, and township officials as containing the records and proceedings of the House. See page 1482 of the Daily Journal. The bound volume, No. 8, of the journal, is now produced, with the certificate of the clerk of the House of Representatives attached thereto, certifying that it is a correct journal of the proceedings of the House of Representatives for 1891. There now appears at page 2201 of this bound journal, after the three amendments above given, and between the words "which motion prevailed" and "the question recurring to the passage of the bill," the following: "Mr. Doremus stated that certain sections of the bill had been stricken out and some added in the committee of the whole, which, with the above amendments, would not leave the sections in consecutive order; and thereupon Mr. Doremus further moved to amend the bill by directing the engrossing and enrolling committee to renumber the sections of the bill so that they should be numbered, as near as may be, by consecutive numbers, which motion prevailed, and the sections of the bill were thereupon accordingly renumbered." It is apparent that the numbering of the sections might have been done by the committee on engrossment and enrollment without any instruction from the House, and without in any manner affecting the validity of the bill.

It must first be determined whether the bill ordered printed, and actually printed in the journal as a supplement, constitutes a part of the journal. If it does, then the clerk of the House had no authority to leave it out of the bound volume. He possesses no power under the Constitution, or under any legislative action, to add to or take from the journal which the House has made and published. He can only make corrections under the authority and direction of the House. After the Legislature has adjourned, the sole authority possessed by him is to see that the journals, as made, corrected, and approved from day to day, are correctly published and bound, and given to the people of the state for preservation in a lasting form, as the correct and exact proceedings of that body. He may possibly have the right to correct grammatical or clerical errors which appear upon the face of the journal. To hold that he may do more would be not only absurd, but it would be monstrous. If clothed with that power, he might change and control legislation at his will. His certificate, made after the Legislature has adjourned, possesses no such sanctity. Courts will go behind the Acts of the Legislature, published by authority, to the written Act, as signed by the governor and found in the office of the secretary of state, to ascertain what the law is. For the same reason, they will go behind the bound volumes of the journal, to the record made and approved by the Legislature, to ascertain what that journal is. The language of this court in Rode v. Phelps, infra, speaking through my Brother Morse, at page 609, 80 Mich., applies with equal force to the facts of this case, viz.: "If the rule prevailed here which is adopted in some of the states of the Union, that the courts have no power to go behind the authentication of a law by the presiding officers of the Legislature and the approval of the governor to ascertain whether or not it was legally passed, under the requirements of the Constitution, we should always be in danger of having laws upon our statute-books which, although the courts would be obliged to hold them valid under such a rule, were never passed by the Legislature, and were really created by the carelessness or corruption of some member, clerk, or employé of that body, or perhaps by the interpolation of a member of what is sometimes facetiously called the 'Third House,' but which is nothing more nor less than an organized and generally unscrupulous lobby." Courts will take judicial notice of the methods of procedure in the Legislature. No written journal is kept by the House or Senate. The journal, as published and placed upon the desks of the members every morning, is the only record kept of its proceedings. By resolution of the House, the record of its proceedings, called the "Journal," was sent daily to the various township, county, and state officials, including the secretary of state and the members of this court. For what purpose, other than to be received and acted upon as the official record of its proceedings, and the original record thereof?

16 J. R. A.

Rule 8 of the House rules is as follows: "Upon the announcement by the clerk that a quorum of the House is present, the journal of the preceding day shall be read, unless otherwise ordered by the House, and any mistake therein corrected." It is provided by Rule 11 that "after correcting the journal of the preceding day the order of business shall be as follows," etc. In practice, under these rules, the record of each day's proceedings, as it appears in this journal, which is in the hands of every member, stands approved, unless a correction is suggested and made, which will then appear in the journal the next day. Section 15 of Howell's Statutes provides for printing and binding, in volumes of convenient size, "the official journal of the Senate and House of Representatives." The Legislature of 1891 provided, by concurrent resolution No. 12, "that secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives be and are hereby directed to compile and prepare for publication, make indexes, and superintend the publication of the journals," etc. What constitutes this "official journal" mentioned in the statute, and "the journal" mentioned in this resolution? Has there been no official journal before this time? Can there be none until one is compiled, indexed, and bound into volumes, which do not and cannot appear for months afterwards? Is there no official journal in existence, of which courts will take judicial cognizance? If a question arises as to the passage of a law enacted early in the session, and given immediate effect, to what "official journal" will the courts resort to determine it while the Legislature is in session? Ample opportunity is now offered to test such questions in the courts before the adjournment of the Legislature.

The Constitution also requires each House to keep and publish a journal of its proceedings. The decision in People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408, went no further than to hold that the clerk, under a resolution directly authorizing him, might make corrections before the Legislature adjourned. In the present case the clerk omitted this part of the journal from the copy he certified, not by any direction of the house nor to correct any error, but upon his own motion, and apparently because he did not consider it a part of the journal. The Liquor Tax Law of 1889 was printed in the journal of the House under precisely the same language as was used in the present case, except the words "as a supplement." The term "in the journal" means what it says, and has but one meaning. To print "in the journal, as a supplement," has the same legal significance as to print "in the journal." In Rode v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 598, the bill which was printed in the journal was considered by this court as the bill then pending before the House, and from an examination of the journal, taking that as the pending bill, it appeared that the bill passed by the Legislature was not the one signed by the governor. It is true that in that case the bill "as amended" was ordered printed, but I do not regard those words as possessing any significance. By "the bill," when laid on the table and ordered printed, is meant, not the bill as it was introduced but the bill then in possession of the House, under consideration, and as amended. Any other construction would be doing violence to the plain meaning of language. The object of printing it was to place it, as it then stood, before each member of the House, for his personal examination and guidance, by reason, undoubtedly, of the short time remaining for the consideration of so important a measure. This supplement is brought into court by the secretary of state, in whose office it is found, and to whom it was sent when published, and who has preserved it there ever since, as a part of the legislative journal, issued by authority. Its identity cannot be, and is not, denied. Upon reason, common sense, and grounds of public policy, this supplement must be taken and considered a part of the journal.

But it is insisted that the words, "ordered printed for the use of the committee on judiciary," appearing on the supplement, show that it was not published for the use of the House. The fallacy of this claim is apparent when it is considered that the committee on the judiciary had before this reported the bill to the House, had been discharged from its further consideration, and that it was at no time thereafter referred to them. Those familiar with legislation will know that these words were on the original bill before it was reported by the committee to the House.

It is also urged that this daily journal may be produced from a supervisor, or from any person to whom it was sent, and who has taken the pains to preserve it, and be received to contradict the bound volumes. This position might be tenable if the bound volume was the original record. But it is not. No one original is made or kept. Each number issued is an original. This journal, issued daily to its members and to the people of the state, purports to be made and published by authority, is in fact made and published by authority, and bears upon its face its own authentication. It and the bound volumes are both published by authority, are open to the examination of the courts, and it is of no consequence whether they are found in public or private libraries, in public or private offices, in the possession of members of this court or of private individuals. When produced, each authenticates itself. The Legislature has provided that both shall be sent to the members of this court. When so sent and received, by which are they to be governed? We are not pointed to, nor can I find, any statute which makes this bound volume conclusive evidence of the proceedings of the Legislature. It follows in the present case that this journal, as issued daily, preserved by the secretary of state, and produced to this court, is one of the original, official journals of the House, and to it we must look to determine what action the House took, and what it did not take, upon the Act in question.

The following cases are cited in support of the position taken by relator, viz.: McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424; Turley v. Logan Co. 17 Ill. 151; Post v. Kendall County Supra. 105 U. S. 670, 26 L. ed. 1205; Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 7 West. Rep. 642. An examination of these cases shows that the question now under consideration was not either directly or indirectly involved. In McCulloch v. State evidence was offered to show that two members who were shown by the record as having voted for the bill were not present and did not vote for it, and that another member, who was recorded as having voted for it, in fact voted against it. It was with reference to this state of facts that the language in that opinion was used. No dispute arose as to what was in fact the journal. It is there said: "The House keeping the journal is the only tribunal by which it can be corrected, and, until corrected, by such authority, it must be considered conclusive as to the facts it contains." Applying this language to the present case, and where is found any correction of the journal by the only tribunal which can correct it? In Turley v. Logan County a correction was made at a subsequent session by the Legislature itself, and in the decision is this language: "We cannot doubt the power of the same Legislature, at the same or a subsequent session, to correct its own journal by amendments which show the true facts as they actually occurred, when they are satisfied that by negligence or design the truth has been omitted or suppressed." (The italics are my own.) So far as this language is applicable to the present case, it is clear that the Legislature alone can make the correction, and that it must appear on the journal as made by its authority. In Post v. Kendall County Supra. the law was held void because the journals did not show it to have been enacted in conformity with the requirements of the Constitution; and Mr. Justice Gray, in delivering the opinion, says: "If the journals, being produced or proved, fail to show that an Act has been passed in the mode prescribed by the Constitution, the presumption of its validity, arising from the signatures of the presiding officers and of the executive, is overthrown, and the Act is void." Under the statute of Illinois, "the copies of the original daily journals kept by the clerks of the two Houses, made by persons contracted with or employed for the purpose, as authorized and directed by that Act, in well-bound books furnished by the secretary of state, pursuant to the duty thereby imposed upon him, and afterwards deposited and kept in his office, are official records in his custody, copies of which, certified by him, are admissible upon settled rules of evidence. . . . And neither the competency nor the effect of such copies is impaired by the loss or destruction of the daily journals or minutes." It is further said: "The copies of the journals, certified by the secretary of state and the printed journals, published in obedience to law, are both competent evidence of the proceedings in the Legislature." If in that case the daily "journals" or "minutes" had been "produced" or "proved," and they had differed from the bound books, by which would the court have been guided? See same case, reported in 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. ed. 154. In Atty-Gen. v. Rice, Mr. Justice Morse, speaking for the court, referred to these "journals kept by the clerks of each House, and read and corrected each day by each body, and duly certified by the proper officers to be correct. If the bound volumes differ from these journals "kept, read, and corrected each day," which should govern? The offer in that case was to contradict the journal, which showed that a certain bill was introduced, by showing that it was a skeleton bill, with a head but no body. I cite also, in this connection, Miller v. Goodwin, 70 Ill. 659. In that case the statute of Illinois required the secretary of state to record in a bound volume prepared and kept in his office for that purpose the daily proceedings of the Legislature. The proper officers of the respective Houses kept the minutes of their proceedings upon blanks furnished to them. These were daily sent to the secretary of state, recorded in this book, which was called the "Journal Record," and, after they were so transcribed, he sent them to the public printer, and they were never returned. Objection was made that the journal record was not the original record, and parol proof was offered of the proceedings of the Legislature to contradict this record. This was held incompetent. In that case this record was made by law the official record. In the present case, as already stated, the journal published daily is the official record. The court in that case said: "Public information of the proceedings is required to be furnished by publication; and, if this record is not designed to be a permanent depository of the evidence of the proceedings required to be copied into it, then we must presume that the law requires the making and preservation of a public record with no end in view."
16 L. R. A.

The next question for determination is whether the statement and motion appearing in the bound volume, and above given in full, are a part of the official journal of the House. As already stated, they do not appear in the journal of July 1st, as it was published at that time. The Legislature continued in session July 2 and 3, and neither in the journals of those days, as they were then published, nor as they appear in the bound volume, is there found any correction of the journal of July 1, nor any reference whatever to any such statement or any such motion as a correction. The Legislature adjourned without making any such record. That it was inserted after the adjournment is beyond dispute. Its effect is to contradict the official record, which had then been made and published to the people of the state. No record of it having been made anywhere in the journal prior to the adjournment, the legal presumption follows that no such action was taken. That courts, on the ground of public policy alone, should not recognize them as a part of the journal, is, in my judgment, too clear to require argument. If the clerk may add to the record, as left in his hands to compile, he may also take from it; and thus he, either alone or in combination with others, may defeat the will of the people. Suppose he, either intentionally or inadvertently, should leave out of the bound volume the record of the vote by which a bill had passed the House by a yea and nay vote, as required by the Constitution, § 19, art. 4. Can it be possible that courts are not clothed, not only with the right, but the duty, to examine the original journals, and thus enforce the people's will?

The conclusion that no such proceedings took place can safely rest upon the records as above given. But they are not the only evidence within our reach. Whatever of credit is to be given to these bound volumes is not derived from the fact that they are bound, but from the certificate of the clerk, attached thereto, that it is a correct journal of the proceedings, and the fact that they are published by the Legislature as its official journal. That is what gives it its official character contemplated in the statute and resolution above referred to, and determines its prima facie authenticity and correctness. Courts, in their search for the truth as to what the proceedings actually were, will examine an unbound as well as a bound copy. The compilation and publication of the official journal required a repaging, different from that of the journal as issued daily. The record of the proceedings now under discussion is found on page 1432 of the original journal issued at the time, and on page 2201 of the bound volume. Since the argument a printed copy has been handed to me by counsel for respondent, as prepared by the clerk of the House, for printing and binding into volumes, with pages the same as those in the bound volume, and with the clerk's certificate attached thereto, in which, on the same page, viz., 2201, is found a record of these proceedings; and it corresponds exactly with the record of the journal as issued daily at page 1432. It thus appears that this journal covering, as bound, 2296 pages, was prepared by the clerk, certified to by him, placed in the hands of the printer, repaged and printed, without the disputed proceedings appearing in it, and without any reference whatever thereto. Now, then, is it possible to reach any other conclusion than that this statement and motion were inserted after the Legislature had adjourned, by some one without authority? Of the right of this court to examine this copy, there is no doubt. When the case of Auditor General v. Menominee County Suprs. (Mich.) 51 N. W. Rep. 483, was heard, October 29 and 30, 1891, this court was referred to the unbound numbers of the senate journal, certified to by the secretary of the Senate, for the official record of the Senate on the Act then in question, and they were accepted without objection as an official record of the proceedings of that body. If, when bound, that record should be found to differ from the record then before the court, by which should it be governed, in the absence of any evidence upon the journal of a correction by the Senate? It is established beyond controversy that the bill, as printed in the journal July 29th, was the identical bill then under consideration, the one to which amendments were made by the House, and which, as amended, should have been engrossed and enrolled, and signed by the governor. There is no claim that any amendments were made by the House after the bill was printed in the journal which do not appear upon the journal. Putting the bill and these amendments together, it is impossible to make up the bill which was afterwards signed by the governor and printed in the Public Acts. There was no other substitute for House Bill No. 178, except this one, and no other which was known as "File No. 840." The first nineteen sections of the Act, as printed, are identical in subject-matter with the first nineteen sections of the printed bill in the journal, and are also identical in language, except in so far as they are in a few instances modified by the amendment shown to have been passed by the House, and a few provisions which the journal nowhere shows to have been stricken from the bill then pending. Sections 84 to 108 of the Act, inclusive, are also identical, both in subject-matter and in language, with sections 85 to 108, inclusive, of the bill, while sections 109, 110, 111, 118, and 116 of the bill as printed, and which the journal shows were stricken out, do not appear in the Act as signed. Another conclusive evidence that the bill printed in the journal was the identical bill under consideration, and to which amendments were made, is the fact that the bill as printed contained 116 sections, 5 of which, as already shown, were stricken out, while the bill signed by the governor contains 111 sections, just the 5 sections less.

It is said by counsel for relator, in his brief: "Every affirmative amendment proposed [referring to the amendments found in the journal] is found in the Act as now enrolled." This is undoubtedly true, and these amendments can all be traced to their proper place in the bill printed in the journal. The lines as printed in the journal were not numbered. It is well known that the lines of the sections of bills printed for use in the Legislature are numbered. All the amendments made to the bill by the House, except four, were made by Mr. Doremus, who evidently had charge of the bill. Of these four, three were proposed by Mr. Richardson, and one by Mr. Conner. In proposing these amendments, reference was made to the sections and lines by number, except in case of the amendment proposed by Mr. Conner. Evidently, those proposing these amendments had before them a printed copy of the bill, with the sections and lines numbered. This was evidently for convenience in directing the attention of the members, as well as the clerk, to the place where the amendments were to be made. But it cannot be argued from this that the House had before it a bill different from that which they had laid upon the table two days before, and ordered printed. Nor is there, in my judgment, any foundation in fact for even a supposition to that effect. When a bill by order of the House is printed in its journal, as the bill then pending, is shown by the same journal never to have been referred to any committee, but to have received certain amendments, which appear in full upon the journal, and then, as thus amended, to have passed both branches of the Legislature, such bill, as thus amended, is the one that has become enacted into law, as having received the solemn sanction of the Legislature. If the bill when engrossed and enrolled and signed by the governor contains other provisions, it is null and void, and must be set aside. This I believe to be the rule founded upon authority and reason. See authorities above cited; also Ryan v. Lynch, 68 Ill. 160, and authorities there cited. Tested by it, the tax law of July cannot be sustained. It differs from the Act which passed the Legislature, as appears by the house journal, in several essential particulars. I deem it necessary to mention but one. It was the intention of the Legislature to incorporate into this law the California system of taxing mortgages. For this purpose the law declares that mortgages shall be considered real estate; that the value of the mortgage shall be deducted from the value of the land, and each assessed accordingly. Section 17 of the bill and section 17 of the Act cover this subject. Section 17 of the bill printed in the journal contains this clause: "Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor obligates himself to pay any tax assessed on the interest of the holder of any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, to the extent of such obligation, be null and void." This provision does not appear in the bill signed by the governor, nor in the Act as published in the Public Acts. The house journal does not show even an attempt to strike it out. The only record to be found anywhere in regard to it is on the printed copy of the bill, with riders attached, found in the office of the secretary of state, and which is claimed to be the bill as passed and from which the engrossed copy was made; and there, opposite this clause is found the following pencil memorandum: "Richardson says this was struck out." But I do not consider this as competent evidence. It is to the journal that we must look. By the absence of this provision from the law, it is shorn of all force and effect, so far as taxing mortgages is concerned; for it is now conceded by counsel for the relator that under the Act as it is the mortgagor and the mortgagee may make a valid contract, by which the mortgagor must pay the taxes. Common experience tells us that every mortgagee would insist upon such a contract, and that, therefore, no relief is afforded in this respect to the mortgagor by the Act as it now appears. This was an important and radical provision. We cannot assume that the Legislature intended to leave it out. The journal records that they did not, and it must prevail. It is of no avail to say that certain sections of the bill printed in the journal are not contained in the law, nor that the law contained certain sections which do not appear in the printed bill. This may seem strange, as was said in Atty-Gen. v. Joy, infra; but this furnishes no basis for courts to infer that amendments were made which its journal does not show. The journal must control. In Atty-Gen. v. Joy, 55 Mich. 94, the bill under consideration required the vote of two thirds of the members to secure its passage. The journal showed one vote short of this number, but the bill was declared carried by the requisite majority, and the parties interested acted upon that assumption. It was urged that there was evidently a mistake in the journal, but the court said, speaking through Chief Justice Cooley: "There was a considerable vote in opposition to the Act in question, and, if the vote in its favor was insufficient, it seems strange that attention was not challenged to the fact immediately; . . . and it seems incredible that, if a mistake was made in declaring a bill passed which had not received the necessary vote, the mistake should not have been discovered as early as the day following. . . . But we cannot now determine judicially that there was any such mistake. The legislative journals furnish no proof of it, and it remains merely a plausible conjecture."

The Act in question should be held void and the writ of mandamus denied. It would follow that the pre-existing tax laws are in force, and that the assessment and collection of taxes must proceed under them.

I concur in the conclusion reached by my Brother Long, that the law is unconstitutional.

Long, J., dissenting:

I fully concur in the view expressed by my Brother Grant, in which it is held that the Act signed by the governor is not the Act which passed the Legislature, and is therefore void. Aside from that, conceding that the Act signed is the one which passed the Legislature, as held by the majority of the court, there are many provisions which in my opinion should be held unconstitutional.

The whole scheme of the Act for taxing mortgages is that the owner's interest and the mortgagee's interest shall be taxed separately. Section 17 provides that "if the mortgagee shall neglect or refuse to pay the tax assessed to him as the holder of any such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation, the treasurer shall proceed to collect the same from the mortgagor or holder of said real estate in the same manner as provided by law for collecting other taxes; and any delinquent tax accruing by reason of the failure to collect the tax assessed upon any such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation may be returned against the land in the same manner as other delinquent taxes." The Act applies as well to existing mortgages as those hereafter given, and to mortgages held by nonresidents as well as to those held by residents. The scheme for taxation is as follows: The assessing officer, in the first column of his roll, is to set down a description of the land. In the second column, and opposite to the description, he gives the name of the owner or occupant, if known, and, if not known, the words "Owner unknown." He is then to assess the owner or occupant, known or unknown, the true cash value of the land, less the value of the mortgage or other interest therein. He shall also set down the name of the owner of the mortgage or other such interest, and opposite thereto the value of such interest; and the taxes to be apportioned and carried out upon the roll in accordance with such assessment. At first blush, this would seem to be just and equitable. But let us look at the means of collection. It often happens that taxes are not paid. The mortgagee may be a nonresident and fail to pay the tax, or the mortgagor may be a nonresident and fail to pay upon his interest. If the tax is not paid, and there can be found no personal property of the owner of the land from which the tax can be collected by distress, the whole tax upon the land and upon the mortgage interest is made a lien upon the land, for which it can be sold; and thus the land of the owner is sold to pay a debt of the mortgagee. It is also provided that, if the owner of the fee has personal property, not only his portion of the tax may be collected from him, but the taxes upon the mortgage interest may also be collected from him by distress and sale of his personal property. The tax upon the mortgage interest is not against the mortgagor, but against the mortgagee, and yet the personal property of the mortgagor may be seized and sold for such tax. It is true that the law provides that the mortgagor, upon payment of the mortgagee's tax after thirty days from the time the roll goes into the hands of the collecting officer, or upon the payment by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the mortgagor, may have the same treated as a payment upon the interest that may be due on the mortgage, and, if no interest is due, then as a payment upon the principal. It is also provided that, if the mortgagor's tax is paid by the mortgagee, "it shall become a lien upon the land, and be added to his other obligation, and be subject to the same terms and conditions as such mortgage," etc. It will be seen from this that whatever the contract may be, as stipulated in the mortgage, between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, and though not a dollar is due upon the principal or interest of the mortgage, and not a dollar to become due for five years thereafter, yet the collecting officer is authorized and empowered under the Act to seize for the debt of the mortgagee the last piece of personal property the mortgagor has; for there are no exceptions from seizure and sale from taxes under this Act. Under certain circumstances, it is distressful enough for a man to be compelled to surrender the last article of personal property he possesses to pay his own tax; but to say that this distress may be visited upon him to pay the debt of another is not only monstrous, but clearly beyond the constitutional power of the Legislature. The Constitution, by article 4, § 48, provides: "The Legislature shall pass no bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts." Under the circumstances above stated the mortgagor would be compelled to pay upon his mortgage the amount of the mortgagee's tax, five years before any amount was due thereon. This compulsion of payment precipitates the maturity of the obligation, and changes the contract between the parties, in violation of the above provision of the Constitution.

In Lyon v. Guthard, 53 Mich. 281, it appears that a tax was assessed against Cornwell, Price & Co., a corporation doing business in Detroit, and after the assessment and levy of the tax the corporation made a common-law assignment for the benefit of the creditors to Mr. Lyon, who accepted the trust and entered at once upon his duties. On the day of the assignment, and after it was made, efforts were made by the defendant, as receiver of taxes, to collect the same. On December 22, he entered the store of plaintiff, and threatened to take possession and sell the assigned property to pay the tax, which amounted to $677.78. The plaintiff, to prevent this, paid the tax under protest, and on the following day brought suit in assumpsit to recover this amount. The city charter of Detroit provided that the city taxes should be a lien upon the property assessed until paid. This court held that that provision did not apply to personal property. The defendant claimed that it was his duty to enforce the collection of this tax against the plaintiff's property under the assignment; that his act in so doing was official, and had the color of right; therefore he was not personally liable. It was said by this court: "Several cases decided by this court have been referred to as supporting this position, but they are not applicable to the facts in the present case. This was not the case of a person whose property had been illegally seized, and against whom the collector's warrant ran, but an attempt to take the property of one person to pay another person's taxes. This cannot be done, under our Constitution or laws. It would be the grossest injustice, and finds no support in the decisions of this court."

But, again if the mortgagee does not pay the tax, and it is not collected of the mortgagor by distress, it becomes a lien upon the land of the mortgagor, and, thus the property of the mortgagor is taken to pay the mortgagee's taxes. Under this law the assessment or listing and valuing of property is made in April or May, but no taxes are levied until after the October meeting of the board of supervisors, and they become a lien upon real and personal estate only on and from the 1st day of December. Mortgages are often accompanied by a note to which the mortgage is collateral. The note may be negotiable paper, which passes from hand to hand by delivery or indorsement, and in equity carries with it the mortgage security, without actual assignment. It may have been purchased in reliance solely upon the responsibility of the maker or indorsers. A purchaser of such paper, in good faith and for value, before maturity and before the tax becomes a lien upon the mortgage, has a right to enforce it against the maker for the full extent called for by the promise upon its face; and it is not subject to offset for taxes assessed against the payee and paid by the maker. The mortgagor cannot, by payment of the tax assessed against the mortgagee, offset it against the bona fide assignee, who under the law was not liable to pay the tax. The mortgagor paying the tax of the mortgagee, under such circumstances, would have no means of enforcing repayment by an offset against the mortgage. Mr. Justice Campbell, in Taggart v. Sanilac County Suprs., 71 Mich. 31, says: "A mortgage, under our legislation, conveys no legal or equitable estate in land. It is no more and no less than a collateral security upon land, and which has no value in itself, but depends entirely upon some outside obligations, from which it is inseparable. If it is given to secure a debt, it belongs to the owner of that debt, and passes with it to any lawful holder, with out assignment. If the debt is negotiable, it passes to any one to whom the paper belongs. If it is given to secure several debts or several installments, it belongs ratably to as many persons as there are owners of these. It may be given by way of indemnity, and in that case it may never have any money value. It may be given for a debt amply secured by other mortgages on other property, or it may be on property already so heavily incumbered as to make it no security at all. So the mortgagee may be a mere trustee, with no interest himself in it." There are many other circumstances which might be stated, where it would be impossible to separate these interests and enforce the payment of the tax out of the goods of the mortgagor without violating the obligations of the contracts.

The obligation of a contract is the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 157, 4 L. ed. 539. In Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 84, 5 L. ed. 563, it was said: "The objection to a law on the ground of its impairing the obligation of a contract can never depend upon the extent of the change which the law effects in it. A deviation from its terms by postponing or accelerating the period of performance which it prescribes, imposes conditions not expressed in the contract, or, dispensing with those which, however minute or apparently immaterial in their effect upon the contract of the parties, impairs its obligation." "One of the tests," says the court in Planters' Bank of Mississippi v. Sharp, 47 U. S. 6 How. 327, 12 L. ed. 458, "that the contract has been impaired, is that its value has by legislation been diminished. It is not, by the Constitution, to be impaired at all. There is no question of degree or cause, but of encroaching in any respect upon its obligation, dispensing with any part of its force." In Bourgette v. Williams, 73 Mich. 214, it was said: "The obligation of a contract is said to consist in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends upon the law in existence when it was made. These laws are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and form a part of them, as the measure of the obligation to perform them by one party and the right acquired by the other; and, if any subsequent law affects to diminish the duty or to impair the right, it necessarily bears upon the obligation of the contract in favor of one party to the injury of the other." At the time these prior mortgages were made, the law then in force did not permit the mortgagor's property to be seized to pay the tax of the mortgagee. It is now sought by the present law to authorize such seizure. To my mind, no plainer case could be stated where an attempt is made by the Legislature by subsequent enactment to impair the obligation of existing contracts, and these unconstitutional provisions are so interwoven in the law that no part of it can be carried out.

This position is sought to be answered by the proposition that, inasmuch as it would be competent for the Legislature to cause the entire value of the land to be assessed to the mortgagee, therefore it does not impair the obligation of the contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee to compel the mortgagor to pay that part of the tax assessed to the mortgagee. The illustrations of the workings of the law before given are sufficient answers to this proposition. Under the present law the mortgage interest is not assessed to the mortgagor at all. It is assessed to the mortgagee, and then the tax may be collected by distress of the property of the mortgagor; and in the last illustration used the assignee of the mortgagee, if he procures it before the tax becomes a lien, and for value, takes it freed of any obligation to pay to the mortgagor after payment by him of the tax. Again, let it be supposed that one class of mortgagees pay their taxes, and thus relieve the mortgagor of the burden. Another class of mortgagees fail to pay, and the mortgagors are compelled by distress to make the payments. We have the anomaly of the Legislature compelling in one instance the payment of a part of the tax upon the land by the mortgagee, and in another case, where the mortgagee does not pay, compelling the mortgagor to make the payment, which, we have seen, he may not always be in a position to collect back. This destroys the uniformity of taxation which is provided by the Constitution in article 14, § 11.

It is also said that the imposition of this burden upon the mortgagor does not impair the obligation of contracts, for, if the mortgagee does not pay, the state simply appropriates so much of the fund which the mortgage represents as is necessary to pay the tax before it reaches the mortgagee. In other words, it is proposed to permit the state to take the money of one man to pay the debt of another, or to appropriate a fund not yet due and compel its payment before due; that is, compel the mortgagor to make payment upon his mortgage long before anything is due thereon, so that the state may get its revenues,—the very thing which the Constitution prohibits. The assumption that this may be done is based upon the idea, as before stated, that the Legislature might in the first instance have compelled the assessment upon the land of the whole tax. The idea upon which the Act was brought into existence was that this was unjust, and a burden upon the land-owner, from which he ought to be relieved, and therefore the part which the mortgagee bears should be assessed against the holder of the mortgage. This undoubtedly could have been done, if the Legislature had confined the provisions of the Act to mortgages thereafter made; but it is beyond the power of the Legislature to change existing contracts between the parties to the extent pointed out. Many mortgages contain a provision that the mortgagor shall pay all the taxes assessed on the land. By the Act the Legislature attempts, in violation of such contracts, to divide the tax, and compel the payment of a part of it by the mortgagee, which by section 85 of the Act may be compelled by seizure of his personal property. That section provides:

"If any person shall neglect or refuse to pay any tax assessed to him, or upon any mortgage or other obligation taxed as an interest in lands owned by such person, as provided by this Act, the township treasurer shall collect the same by seizing the personal property of such person, to an amount sufficient to pay such tax, fees, and charges for subsequent sale, whenever the same may be found in the county, from which seizure no property shall be exempt." The law under which the mortgage was given did not prohibit the entering into contracts by which the mortgagor was compelled to pay the tax assessed upon the whole land. The contract in the mortgage is that the mortgagor shall pay the tax. The Legislature now provides that the amount of the mortgage shall be deducted from the value of the land, and that the mortgagees shall pay the tax on that part, and compels the payment by distress of his personal property. A bare statement of this proposition shows a violation of the Constitution, as it clearly violates the obligation of the contract.

The whole scheme of taxation of mortgages, and the collection of the taxes thereon, by the methods pointed out by this Act, are so defective that for this reason the whole Act should fail. Let us take a few examples of the practical workings of the scheme. The mortgage interest is to be assessed in the taxing district where the land is situated. In case the mortgage covers lands in more than one taxing district, which is frequently the case, the law provides as to future mortgages, when this is shown to be the case, that they shall not be entitled to record unless there be appended a statement showing the proportionate amount to be assessed as an interest on each parcel in the different assessing districts. There is no sufficient provision in regard to existing mortgages for ascertaining these facts. The only provision relating to them is that "it shall be the duty of the holder of any such mortgage . . . to file with the supervisor or assessing officer of the township or assessing district in which the land or real property affected thereby is situate, before the 10th day of April of each year a written statement, under oath, of all his estate situate in such township or assessing district, liable to assessment and taxation under the provisions of this Act; otherwise, a written statement of the mortgagee's interest of any such real estate may be filed with the supervisor by the mortgagor or owner of the fee." In other words, as to existing mortgages the only means the assessing officer has in ascertaining the value of the mortgage interest in each parcel, when situate in separate assessing districts, are these statements of the mortgagor or mortgagee. If they are both nonresidents, as the case often happens to be, and the mortgage is upon real property in different assessing districts, there is no way pointed out, except as above stated, to ascertain the facts; and, if the parties are not accessible then no means is given to ascertain the facts. Let us suppose the case of a mortgage given by a resident of Detroit, or by an owner residing out of the state, upon lands in Oscoda and Roscommon counties, in the lower peninsula, and Chippewa county, in the upper peninsula. The supervisors in Oscoda and Roscommon counties enter the land for assessment upon their respective rolls, and then find it incumbered by a mortgage covering lands in the other two counties, and they attempt to apportion the mortgage upon the several parcels of land in all the counties according to their respective values. How can it be done? The land is assessed, "Owner unknown." The mortgagee is a nonresident. Neither can be reached. Must a supervisor ascertain the facts and apportion? And, if the facts cannot be found, how shall he apportion? This is one of the many problems which the law, in its crude state, presents.

Again, in the matter of review under this statute. If the mortgagee does not appear before the board of review, he will be barred from contesting the amount of his tax in any court, as he will have an opportunity to appear before that body, and such an appearance or opportunity for an appearance would be regarded as his day in court upon the question of the amount of his assessment. Mortgagees must therefore be on the watch in every assessing district where their mortgages may be assessed,—and a mortgage may be assessed in every assessing district where any of the land lies covered by it,—or suffer the consequences of an over assessment or overvaluation by each assessing officer on the one mortgage. Take the case of the savings banks and insurance companies situate in Detroit, all of which are organized under the laws of this state. They own nearly $14,000,000 of real-estate mortgages held by them as security to depositors in banks and policyholders in insurance companies. Many of these mortgages cover more than one piece of land, and presumably lands which are situated in two or more taxing districts are covered by the same mortgage. These mortgages are upon lands in different parts of the state. The assessing officers not having the values at hand by which they can apportion the mortgage according to the value of each parcel of land, each assessing officer may assess the mortgage in each district according to his own view as to the proportion which it bears to the whole land. Must the bank or insurance company, in order to prevent an overvaluation in each district, appear before the board of review, or in default thereof be held to the amount assessed against the mortgage in each district? The law does not define how these matters may be arranged. Many other defects could be pointed out, and the imperfections of the law shown. These defects may not prove insurmountable barriers to a valid assessment, but I have cited them to show the difficulties of carrying the law into effect.

Upon the questions which have not been discussed by my Brother Grant or myself, I concur fully in the views of my Brother Montgomery. I am of the opinion, however, that the writ of mandamus should be denied.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

LATAH COUNTY, Respt.,

v.

E. G. PETERSON, Appt.

(.....Idaho.....)

Condemnation of land for a private road to be laid out upon the application of a particular individual and paid for and kept in repair by him is for a public purpose where the road is in fact for public use by all who desire to use it.

(June 6, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Latah County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding instituted to NOTE.—Constitutionality of condemnation proceedings to establish a private road.

The decisions on this subject are in much apparent conflict which is to some extent real. Many cases have decided that the establishment of a private way by condemnation proceedings is unconstitutional although just compensation is provided where the road is for individual or private use alone, as such a taking of land is not for a public use. Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 59 Am. Dec. 290; Osborn v. Hart, 24 Wis. 82, 1 Am. Rep. 161; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140; Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287; Logan v. Stogdale, 8 L. R. A. 58, 123 Ind. 372; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 311; Crear v. Crossly, 40 Ill. 175; Johnson v. Clayton County, 61 Iowa, 86; Stewart v. Hartman, 46 Ind. 331; Clack v. White, 2 Swan, 540; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 588, 16 L. R. A.

This doctrine can hardly be said to be in any dispute, but the courts do in fact divide on the question as to what use is for individual or private use alone.

Other decisions hold that a road although denominated a private road which when established becomes a way over which all who had occasion may lawfully pass is public and that the Legislature may provide for the condemnation of land therefor. Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241, 91 Am. Dec. 577; Denham v. Bristol County Comrs. 108 Mass. 205; Pocopson Road, 16 Pa. 15; Re Private Road in Redstone Twp. 112 Pa. 183; Hickman's Case, 4 Harr. (Del.) 580; Brewer v. Bowman, 9 Ga. 37; Robinson v. Swope, 12 Bush, 21.

In Delaware a private road is held to be a part of the system of public roads and open to the public condemn land for a right of way in which defendant was awarded $100 damages for land taken from him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Freund & Loughary, for appellant:

Section 983 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho is unconstitutional for the reason that it attempts to authorize the taking of private property for a private use or benefit.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. *530; Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 154.

The taking of private property for a private road is not conferred by the right of eminent domain, hence when the Legislature undertakes to authorize such appropriation of private property, it is an attempted delegation of power not possessed by the Legislature nor the people in legislative capacity, and is unconstitutional.

See Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. p. 530;

Smith, Const. Stat. 2d ed. p. 477; 7 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 6114; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287; Dickey v. Tennyson, 27 Mo. 873; Logan v. Stogdale, 8 L. R. A. 58, 123 Ind. 872; Com. v. Cambridge, 7 Mass. 158; Neubitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 89 Am. Dec. 290; Orear v. Crossley, 40 Ill. 175; Stewart v. Hartman, 46 Ind. 331; Blackman v. Halves, 72 Ind. 515; Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 455, 18 Am. Rep. 399; Re Eureka Basin W. & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 48; Osborn v. Hart, 24 Wis. 89, 1 Am. Rep. 161; Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540; Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511; Baker v. Braman, 6 Hill, 47, 40 Am. Dec. 387; Sadler v. Langham, 84 Ala. 311.

When the public is only incidentally benefited, the right of eminent domain does not obtain.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. *530, 531; 7 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 6113; Re Eureka Basin W. & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 42; although made on a private petition. Hickman's Case, supra.

In New Hampshire all ways laid out by the selectmen are held to be public although they are made for the particular accommodation and at the expense of individuals and it is also held that the town is under obligation to repair them so far as the public accommodation requires. Metcalfe v. Bingham, 3 N. H. 459; Proctor v. Andover, 42 N. H. 343.

In Massachusetts a "private way for the use of one or more of the inhabitants" of a town, which the statute authorizes to be laid out by selectmen, is a public road. Denham v. Bristol County Comrs. 108 Mass. 306.

In Vermont a pent road is also a public highway. Whittingham v. Bowen, 23 Vt. 317.

In Ohio a township road is for the public use and consequently land may be condemned therefor. Ferris v. Bramble, 5 Ohio St. 100; Shaver v. Starrett, 5 Ohio St. 495.

In New Jersey it is said that a private road is public in its character and use, and that every citizen has a right to travel over it. Allen v. Stevens, 29 N. J. L. 504; Ferrine v. Farr, 22 N. J. L. 355.

In Alabama, although a statute authorizing the condemnation in such a case had been enforced in Long v. Commissioners' Ct., 18 Ala. 482, without raising the constitutional question, it was held in a later case that as there was nothing in the statute that authorized public travel on such a road, the taking by condemnation was unconstitutional. Sadler v. Langham, 84 Ala. 311.

But in Steele v. County Comrs., 83 Ala. 304, it was held that, under the new Alabama Constitution of 1861, providing that "the right of way may be secured by law to persons and corporations" over the land of other persons and corporations, a statute authorizing condemnation for a private road was constitutional.

In Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287, as in many of the other cases, in which the road is held to be private, it is said that the statute contains no provision that the road shall be public or that they may be kept open if the individual at whose instance they are established seeks to close them.

In Dickey v. Tennyson, 27 Mo. 873, a private act to establish a "neighborhood road" was held unconstitutional on the ground that it was not for a public use where the petitioner was required to pay all expenses including the fees of the commissioners. The court, however, distinguished this from cases under the general statute to enable persons 16 L. R. A.

to secure a right of way which contemplated only a recognition to the right independent of statute to a way of necessity.

A private road to a tract of enclosed land on which the owner does not reside is merely for a private use and condemnation therefor is not constitutional. Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 534.

In Pells v. Boswell, 8 Ont. Rep. 680, 9 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 353, the court decides that the opening of a street merely in the interest of two individuals who objected to pay what the owner demands for the coveted strip of land may be enjoined.

In Com. v. Sawin, 2 Pick. 547, it is decided that a highway cannot be laid out in consideration of the bond of an individual to pay part of the expense, if the common convenience is not sufficient to warrant it, wholly at the expense of the town, as this would not be taking the land solely for public use.

Outlet for communication with public.

In Iowa the right to condemn land for a private road, although laid out to reach the residence of a citizen, is denied even where condemnation for a public road would be proper. The decision is based in part on the fact that the public is not bound to work the road and that there is nothing to prevent the petitioner from closing it up, thus showing that the road is private. Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540.

On the other hand, it is held that a citizen cannot defeat a proceeding to lay out a public road to reach his residence on the ground that it is only a private road, as a road to reach the residence of a citizen and prevent his isolation is for a public use. Johnson v. Clayton County, 61 Iowa, 89.

In Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 455, 18 Am. Rep. 399, it is held that a private road is not public so as to justify a condemnation of land therefor on the ground that it is a branch of the highway and part of the system and that the power has long been exercised and undisputed and that the public is interested in securing to every citizen a way to and from his land where the private road cannot be used by the public, but that a public road should be laid out instead if any road is necessary.

The fact that a freeholder is shut off from a highway and his land and residence entirely surrounded by that of other persons, does not prevent a statute authorizing the condemnation of a private road across the land of another person from being unconstitutional. Logan v. Stogdale, 8 L. R. A. 58, 123 Ind. 872.

But the doctrine of the above cases is in conflict with that announced in other cases following.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 206; Com. v. Cambridge, 7 Mass. 166.

It is not the policy of the governmental power of this state to extend the right of eminent domain to answer the whim or personal and pecuniary motive and interest of every individual or of individuals for personal gain or even personal convenience.

Coster v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54; 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. p. 488; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, p. 382.

Messrs. Forney & Tillinghast and Mitchell & West, for respondent:

Although the Legislature has miscalled these roads "private roads" so as to classify them, still they are not private roads but are for the public use.

Sherman v. Buick, 83 Cal. 243, 91 Am. Dec. 577; Monterey County v. Cushing, 83 Cal. 507.

Section 983 was adopted directly from the California Code, and under its provisions a very large number of this class of roads have been opened and are now used. In accordance with the familiar rule that in adopting the laws of any state we also adopt the decisions upon these laws, these decisions in California must be binding upon us.

See also Bell v. Prouty, 48 Vt. 279; Whittingham v. Bowen, 23 Vt. 317; Brock v. Barnett, 57 Vt. 172; Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts, 63, 86 Am. Dec. 141.

Morgan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On or before the 15th day of July, 1890, a petition in due form was presented to the board of county commissioners of Latah county, praying for the establishment of a private or by road over the lands belonging to the defendant, E. G. Peterson, described in plaintiff's complaint. On said 15th day of July the board of county commissioners appointed three viewers, and directed that said viewers should meet on the 5th day of September, 1890, and view and survey and mark out said road, and estimate the damages accruing to nonconsent-

Thus, in Kentucky a passway to enable a citizen to attend courts, elections, churches or mills, or to reach an established highway, is regarded as for a public purpose. Robinson v. Swope, 12 Bush, 21.

So in Brewer v. Bowman, 9 Ga. 37, it is said that the public have an interest in permitting the owner of land to have an outlet to a public road so that he can get out to elections, and to perform jury duty, road duty, militia or patrol duty, give evidence in court and carry produce of his land to market. In this case, however, the statute authorizing condemnation of land for a private road was held unconstitutional because no provision was made for compensation.

The same doctrine seems to be implied in the decisions below cited from North Carolina, Michigan, and Pennsylvania.

Necessity of road.

In Pennsylvania the constitutionality of statutes authorizing the condemnation of land for a private road does not seem to have been directly contested and passed upon but the decisions limit the right to a road which is strictly necessary. Pocopson Road, 16 Pa. 15; Re Private Road in Redstone Twp. 112 Pa. 188.

In People v. Richards, 38 Mich. 214, it is held that mere convenience will not justify condemnation for a private road, but that it can be had only where there is no other way of access to the lands of the applicant, and that the accommodation of lot-owners to get access to a village plat is insufficient.

So in Rundel v. Blakelee, 47 Mich. 575, it is held that there must be an express finding that the road is necessary.

So in Colville v. Judy, 73 Mo. 651, it is held that the fact that the way sought is a "way of necessity," is a jurisdictional fact which must be set out in the petition.

In North Carolina condemnation of land for a private road which is "necessary, reasonable, and just" is also permitted, but it seems that the question of the constitutionality has not been explicitly considered. Warlick v. Lowman, 108 N. C. 122.

Thus in Burgwyn v. Lockhart, 60 N. C. 269, and Mayo v. Thigpen, 107 N. C. 68, it is held that a way is not necessary, reasonable, and just if there is another convenient outlet to a public road; and in Lea v. Johnston, 81 N. C. 15, it is held that a public road to which access may be had defeats the right although it is not so convenient as a proposed private road.

But it is decided in Caroon v. Doxey, 48 N. C. 23, 16 L. R. A.

that a private road cannot be obtained by condemnation to reach unimproved land which is used only as a range for cattle as the statute requires the owner to be "settled" upon the land for which an outlet is claimed.

So in Kentucky one who resides upon a tract of land which is situated upon a public highway cannot condemn a passageway over the lands of another merely for the benefit of a tract of land which is entirely surrounded by the land of other persons. Robinson v. Swope, 12 Bush, 21; Shake v. Frasier, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 825. See also Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 538.

In Missouri a private road if it is a way of necessity may be condemned over another's land. Barr v. Flynn, 8 West. Rep. 777, 20 Mo. App. 383.

So in Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 513, 49 Am. Dec. 94, it is said that a right of way by necessity being merely an easement, a statute authorizing the establishment of such a right over the land of another is not unconstitutional. The decision proceeds on the theory that such right of way exists independently of the statute and that the act only provides a convenient mode of locating the way.

But in Stewart v. Hartman, 40 Ind. 331, and Clack v. White, 2 Swan, 540, the doctrine that a right of way by necessity exists whenever land is entirely enclosed by that of others, and therefore that a statute authorizing the condemnation for a private road in such a case is constitutional as a mere recognition of a prior right, is denied and it is expressly held that no such way of necessity exists over a stranger's land, but that it depends upon an implied grant.

The fact that only an easement is taken for a private road does not prevent the taking from being unconstitutional as it amounts practically to taking the land. Crear v. Crossly, 40 Ill. 173.

A general review of all the authorities leads to the conclusion that condemnation of land for a so-called private road the expense of which the petitioner is required to pay in whole or in part, ought not to be held unconstitutional if the road is in fact open for the use of the public. This doctrine has evidently gained ground during the time in which the question has been in dispute, and in several states express constitutional provisions have been made in favor of the right to condemn lands for private roads, as in Alabama, art. 1, § 24; Colorado, art. 2, § 14; Illinois, art. 4, § 80; Michigan, art. 18, § 14; Missouri, art. 2, § 20; New York, art. 1, § 7, and perhaps in some other states. B. & B.

ing land-owners. The said viewers met as directed; surveyed and marked out the road; platted and mapped the same; made their report to said board, which thereupon ordered the road overseer to tender to defendant, who was a nonconsenting land-owner, the sum of money awarded to him, which sum the defendant refused to accept. Thereupon this suit was commenced. The cause was tried before the Hon. W. G. Piper, Judge, and a jury. The jury assessed the damages accruing to defendant at $100. Judgment of condemnation was thereupon entered. Defendant appealed from said judgment to this court. The principal contention of the appellant is that the act of the territorial Legislature, to wit, section 938, Rev. Stat. Idaho, is unconstitutional, for the reason that it attempts to take private property for private use. It is a general rule that the right of eminent domain does not imply a right in the sovereign power to take the property of one citizen, and transfer it to another, even for a full compensation, where the public interest will be in no way promoted by such transfer. This doctrine, in the absence of any constitutional provision, is established by a long line of decisions not necessary here to enumerate. Among other decisions, the appellant cites Osborn v. Hart, 24 Wis. 89, 1 Am. Rep. 161. The statute of Wisconsin authorized the laying out of private roads upon the application of any freeholder, such applicant to pay all damages and costs. To this was added by the same statute the further provision that "such private road, when so laid out, shall be for the use of the applicant, his heirs or assigns, . . . nor shall the owner of the land through which such roads shall be laid out be permitted to use the same as a road, unless he shall have signified his intention of so doing, . . . before the damages were ascertained." The court held in above case that, inasmuch as the public could not use such road, and had no interest in it, and the owner of the land could not use it, the law could not be sustained. It will be noticed that our Statute (sec. 938 et seq.) contains no such exclusive provisions, but a private road, when opened, can be used for any purpose to which it is adapted by the general public and by any individual thereof. In the same case the court says: "In some of the states it has been held that these roads, although termed 'private,' yet were in fact public, roads, so far as the right to use them was concerned, and upon this ground the power of the Legislature to authorize them to be laid out has been sustained." Osborn v. Hart, 24 Wis. 91, 1 Am. Rep. 161; Perrine v. Farr, 23 N. J. L. 356; Re Hickman, 4 Harr. (Del.) 580. In case of Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 818, 18 Am. Rep. 287, also cited by appellant, the court holds that private property cannot be taken for exclusively private use, whether compensation be made or not; but the court also holds that the Legislature may provide for the establishment of private roads, or "byways," as they are termed in our statute, by providing that they shall be public instead of private roads, and that they may be used by the public. It will be noticed that the decree of the court, in the case at bar, directs that the said highway shall be opened for the use and benefit of the said P. N. Lunstrum, the applicant, and the general public, so that the decree itself provides that it shall be a public as well as a private road.

In Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 89 Am. Dec. 290, and Orear v. Crossley, 40 Ill. 175, the court holds that section 98 of the Act of 1861 (Ill. Stat. p. 268) is unconstitutional, for the reason that it transfers the use of the land condemned to the person for whose use the road was established, his heirs and assigns, forever. The owner is deprived of its use, and the other acquires its use perpetually. For all practical purposes, this amounts to a transfer of the land. It will be seen that this statute is very different from section 938, Idaho Rev. Stat. The owner of the soil and the general public has as much interest in and the right to the use of such private road, as fully and completely, as the person upon whose application it is opened; and the effect would be that, if the use of the land for such purpose should cease, it would revert to the owner of the soil. In the two last named cases Mr. Justice Lawrence, one of the most eminent jurists of his time, dissents from the opinion of the court, and giving his reasons, in Orear v. Crossley, he says: "If the government, after making a grant, owns all the surrounding lands, the grantee takes a right of way over the surrounding land to the public highway as an incident to his grant; and if the government retains the title to a tract of land, having sold the land surrounding it on every side, a right of way to a public road is reserved by implication. This right of way continues in both cases, both in favor of and against subsequent grantees, for it is a right created by operation of law, and from necessity, to enable owners to enjoy their lands. I consider our statute in regard to private roads as simply based on this common-law right, and regulating its exercise. The right existed before the Act was passed, by the established rules of the common law in regard to the construction of grants." These reasons apply with equal force to our own statute, and in our opinion would be sufficient reason for upholding it, were there no other authority. There is abundant authority, however, for sustaining the statute in the decisions of the courts. Where the road, though laid out upon the application and paid for and kept in repair by a particular individual, who is especially accommodated thereby, is, in fact, a public road, and for the use of all who may desire to use it, then it is regarded as accomplishing a public purpose for which land may be condemned. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 167; Shaver v. Starrett, 4 Ohio St. 494; Ferris v. Bramble, 5 Ohio St. 109; Denham v. Bristol County Comrs. 108 Mass. 202; Sherman v. Buick, 83 Cal. 241, 91 Am. Dec. 577, and cases there cited; Monterey County v. Cushing, 83 Cal. 507; Brook v. Barnet, 57 Vt. 172.

The Constitution (art. 1, § 14) substantially recognizes the right of the Legislature to provide for laying out private roads or byways, as follows: "The necessary use of lands for reservoirs or storage basins, for the purposes of irrigation, or for rights of way for the construction of canals, ditches, flumes, or pipes, . . . or any other use necessary to the complete development of the material resources of the state, . . . is hereby declared to be a public use." This provision is certainly sufficient to authorize the Legislature to provide for the establishment of byways, or pentways, as they are sometimes called, or private roads, which are for the use of anyone who may desire to use them. The necessity for such private roads is apparent when it is stated that it would be impossible to improve very many valuable tracts of land in this state which are not reached by public highways, unless this power existed. Such roads are therefore necessary to the complete development of the material resources of the state. We are therefore of the opinion that section 933, Idaho Rev. Stat., is constitutional.

The appellant complains that the decree of the court authorizes the condemnation of a strip of land only 30 feet wide instead of 50 feet, which is required for the width of highways. It would seem that the person whose land is condemned cannot be heard to complain that the court did not take 50 feet of land instead of 30 feet. It is hardly consistent with his position, since he appears here complaining that any was taken

The appellant also makes the point that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. We think this point cannot be sustained. The ultimate facts only are necessary to be alleged, and these are sufficiently set forth. The respondent in this case complains that the court below rendered a judgment in form against P. N. Lunstrum for the amount of the damages and one half the costs, while it is undoubtedly true that no judgment can be rendered against one not a party to the suit. As neither the respondent, the county of Latah, nor Lunstrum, nor Peterson has taken any appeal from this part of the judgment, it is not before this court. The condemnation is made substantially upon condition that said Lunstrum shall pay the defendant, Peterson, the damages and one half the costs, (into court,) and, upon such payment or tender, the decree can be enforced.

Judgment affirmed.

Sullivan, Ch. J., and Huston, J., concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

UNION STOVE & MACHINE WORKS,
Pff. in Err.,

v.

J. D. CASWELL, et al.

(.....Kan.....)

Where property is sold and the pur-

Head note by VALENTINE, J.

chaser agrees to pay the consideration therefor, or a portion thereof, to a creditor of the vendor, the purchaser, as between himself and the vendor, becomes the principal debtor, and the vendor only a surety; and if the creditor afterwards, and because of this arrangement, accepts the purchaser as a debtor, he must accept him in the same manner, and as his principal debtor, with the vendor only as a surety; and if the creditor then, by a valid

NOTE.—Release of mortgagor as surety by mortgagee's dealing with vendee who has assumed the mortgage.

The above case in denying that a mortgagee can hold both the mortgagor and a grantee of the latter as principal debtor is in plain conflict with the courts of Iowa and Connecticut and also with dicta at least of the courts of Michigan and Missouri.

In Iowa the decisions are explicit to the effect that until a mortgagee in some way recognize the mortgagor as surety only, he may treat both mortgagor and his vendee, who has assumed the debts, as principals. Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 87; Mattie v. Mann, 17 Iowa, 134; James v. Day, 37 Iowa, 164.

In Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354, the court says that a mortgagee may treat both the mortgagor and vendee of the latter, who assumes the debt as principal debtors for the purpose of a personal decree against them; but in this case a personal decree was sought only against the vendee.

In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mayer, 8 Mo. App. 18, the court says that as to the mortgagee both the mortgagor and his vendee who assumes the debt may be principal debtors or otherwise. The actual point decided is that the consent of the mortgagee that grantees of the mortgagor, who are insolvent, may remove machinery from the premises, reducing its value so as to leave the security insufficient, does not release the grantor.

In Connecticut the assumption of a mortgage debt by a vendee of the mortgagor makes him a principal and the vendee a mere surety only as between themselves and not as to the mortgagee, or his assignee, although such assignee deals with the vendee as a principal debtor by taking an assignment of the mortgage for the latter's accommodation in order to give him further time for payment but without making any binding contract for extension. Boardman v. Larrabee, 51 Conn. 39.

The relation between mortgagor and mortgagee is not changed by assumption of the mortgage debt by a vendee of the mortgagor and a new mortgage of the lots purchased by him to secure it. Waters v. Hubbard, 44 Conn. 240.

On the other hand, the courts in New York and Maryland, and a circuit court of the United States, hold that a mortgagor is entitled to be treated as a surety and released as such when the mortgagee has treated the mortgagor's vendee, who has assumed the mortgage, as the principal debtor by making a new contract with him. Thus they hold that the extension of time to the vendee of a mortgagor who has assumed the mortgage debt without the mortgagor's consent releases the latter. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hanford, 27 Fed. Rep. 533; Fish v. Hayward, 23 Hun, 456; Calvo v. Davies, 73 N. Y. 211; Paine v. Jones, 73 N. Y. 274; Murray v. Marshall, 94 N. Y. 611; Spencer v. Spencer, 95 N. Y. 353; George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 706.

But on the contrary in Iowa, in accordance with the doctrine there adopted, such an extension of time to the vendee of a mortgagor without the latter's consent will not release him. Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 87.

So in Iowa the release of a part of the mortgaged property which has been bought by one who assumes the debt will not discharge the mortgagor although he does not consent to the release. James v. Day, 37 Iowa, 164.

B. A. R.

agreement with the purchaser, and without the consent of the vendor, extends the time for the payment of the debt, he will release and discharge the vendor.

(May 7, 1882.)

ERROR to the District Court for Reno County to review a judgment refusing to subject the lands of defendant Caswell to the lien of a judgment in favor of the defendant, Union Stove & Machine Works, in an action by Smedley Darlington, to foreclose a mortgage upon Caswell's land in which the corporation was made defendant, and set up a claim for independent relief under its alleged judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. F. McGrow, for plaintiff in error: The evidence does not state that the Fisher chattel mortgage was for the Caswell debt. The demurrer should have been sustained.

See 1 Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. pp. 217-222, and notes; Story, Prom. Notes, 6th ed. §§ 105, 404, 408, 438; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Burrows, 40 Kan. 861.

There must not only be an agreement of a second party to pay a debt of the first party to a third party, but there must be an agreement of all parties upon a sufficient consideration to accept the first party as paymaster exclusively, and also to release the second party.

See Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. pp. 217-222; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Burrows, supra.

There might be knowledge of and acceptance of the several promises of Eastland and Fisher, and without an agreement to release Caswell, there would be no satisfaction of the judgment as to Caswell until fully paid by either of the obligors.

Plano Mfg. Co. v. Burrows, supra.

Messrs. Charles H. Apt and Bowman & Bucher, for defendants in error:

Payment cannot be proved under a general denial.

St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Grove, 39 Kan. 781.

Where payment is alleged, proof thereof is admissible and the burden of proving the same is on the party pleading it.

Gutermann v. Schroeder, 40 Kan. 507.

When the creditor accepts the new debtor, such new debtor becomes the principal and the former debtor the surety.

Center v. McQuesten, 24 Kan. 480; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Burrows, 40 Kan. 861.

This extension given the principal for value without the consent of the security released the surety.

Rose v. Williams, 5 Kan. 488; Hubbard v. Ogden, 22 Kan. 868.

The pursuing of Fisher on his chattel mortgage and procuring full indemnity for the claim of the Union Stove & Machine Works is conclusive evidence of the release of Caswell.

Walker v. Crosby, 88 Minn. 84.

Valentine J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was originally an ordinary action upon a promissory note and a real-estate mortgage, brought in the district court of Harvey county by Smedley Darlington, the payee and mortgagee, against John D. Caswell and Sarah

J. Caswell, husband and wife, the payors and mortgagors, to recover the sum of $866.50 and interest. The plaintiff also made the Union Stove & Machine Works, a corporation of Leavenworth, Kan., a party defendant. As the plaintiff's claim seems to have been admitted by all the parties, and no claim of error is assigned as against him, it will not be necessary to again mention his name. The Union Stove & Machine Works answered, setting forth, among other things, a cause of action against John D. Caswell for $907.82, and to enforce an alleged lien upon the real estate in question, subject, however, to the plaintiff's lien, which cause of action so set forth by the Union Stove & Machine Works was founded upon an alleged judgment rendered in its favor and against Caswell on December 8, 1886, in the district court of Pratt county, for the sum of $963.99, and a transcript thereof filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of Harvey county on December 20, 1886, upon which judgment a payment was admitted to have been made of $214. Among other allegations contained in this answer are the following: "That there was paid on said judgment the sum of $214 on the 8th day of June, 1887, that there is still due and unpaid on said judgment the sum of $807.82 after allowing all credits on the same." The defendants, the Caswells, replied to this answer, admitting the judgment, but alleging that it had been paid and satisfied in the following manner, to wit: "Said John D. Caswell and Sarah J. Caswell further allege that since the rendition of said judgment, and on December 12, 1886, one William Fisher, being then and there indebted to said Caswell in a sum greater than the amount of said judgment, assumed the payment of the same, and the said Union Stove & Machine Works took and accepted the said William Fisher therefor in full payment and satisfaction of said judgment, taking from the said William Fisher a note for the same, secured by both real and chattel mortgage, and that said Union Stove & Machine Works has since foreclosed said mortgage by an action of replevin in the district court of Pratt county, Kansas. That by reason of the premises aforesaid said judgment has been fully satisfied, and said Caswells released and relieved from the payment of the same." The defendants, the Caswells, with leave of court, filed the following amendment to their reply, to wit: "That said indebtedness of said William Fisher to said J. D. Caswell arose in this manner: That on or about November 27, 1886, said J. D. Caswell sold and conveyed his stock of merchandise and business house and lot in Saratoga, Pratt county, Kansas, to one William Eastland, who, as a part consideration therefor, assumed and promised to pay a note of the said J. D. Caswell to the Union Stove & Machine Works, which note was secured by a mortgage upon the business house and lot aforesaid, and also by a chattel mortgage upon the heating stoves of the stock of merchandise aforesaid; that afterwards, and on or about December 12, 1886, said William Eastland sold and conveyed said stock of merchandise to said William Fisher, and said business house and lot to Bertha Fisher, the wife of said William Fisher, subject, however, to the incumbrances placed on the same by the said J. D. Caswell to the Union Stove and Machine Works as aforesaid; and as a part of the consideration for the sale and transfer of said business house and lot and the stock of merchandise the said William Fisher assumed the obligation of the said William Eastland as aforesaid, and promised and agreed to pay the indebtedness of the said J. D. Caswell to said Union Stove & Machine Works as aforesaid." The Union Stove & Machine Works replied to the Caswells' reply by filing a general denial. Afterwards the case was taken on a change of venue to the district court of Reno county, where it was tried upon the foregoing pleadings, and, as between the Union Stove & Machine Works and the Caswells, before the court and a jury, and the jury rendered a general verdict in favor of the Caswells and against the Union Stove & Machine Works, and also made certain special findings of fact, which verdict and findings, omitting formal parts, read as follows: Verdict: "We, the jury duly empaneled and sworn in the above-entitled case, do upon our oaths find for the defendant J. D. Caswell." Special findings: "(1) Did the Union Stove & Machine Works ever agree to release the defendant Caswell from the payment of said judgment, and take one Fisher for the payment of the same? Answer. Yes, they did, through their agent, McGrew. (2) If you find that the Union Stove & Machine Works accepted Fisher as paymaster of the judgment in question, and released defendant Caswell from the payment of the same, state what witness or witnesses testified to that fact. A. Note and mortgage. (3) Was it not expressly agreed between the Union Stove & Machine Works Company and Fisher, at the time Fisher gave the chattel mortgage to the Union Stove & Machine Works Company, that it was given as additional security for the Caswell judgment, and that Caswell was not to be released from the payment of said judgment? A. It was not. (4) If you answer the above question in the negative, then state fully what the agreement between Fisher and the Union Stove & Machine Works was at the time said mortgage was given. A. Note, mortgage, and extension of time." The court rendered judgment in accordance with the general verdict, and the Union Stove & Machine Works, as plaintiff in error, brings the case to this court, making the Caswells the defendants in error.

The first alleged error is the ruling of the court permitting the Caswells to introduce evidence tending to prove payment and satisfaction of the aforesaid judgment. There was certainly no error in this, for although the Caswells admitted the judgment and did not specifically deny that anything was due thereon, yet they substantially alleged that the whole of it had been paid and was satisfied; and this, under the facts of the case, was better than a denial.

The next alleged error is that the court permitted certain papers supposed to constitute copies of certain deeds, mortgages, etc., to be introduced in evidence. There does not appear to be any error in this. The originals of the papers were not within the custody or the control of the Caswells, and the copies introduced in evidence seem to have been properly certified copies, and they were introduced in evidence under section 872 of the Civil Code. Hammerlough v. Hackett, 80 Kan. 58.

The next alleged error is the overruling of the demurrer of the Union Stove & Machine Works to the evidence of the defendants Caswell. The substantial question presented by the demurrer to the evidence was whether the evidence of the Caswells proved their alleged defense that the aforesaid judgment had been paid and satisfied. It is not necessary for us to consider this question, for, after the overruling of the demurrer, much additional evidence was introduced, and the Union Stove & Machine Works again by a motion for a new trial raised the broader question whether, upon the whole of the evidence introduced on the trial, the Caswells' defense was proved or not. We shall consider only this broader question raised by the motion for the new trial. Taking all the evidence together, and it proves substantially, among others, the following facts: John D. Caswell was a retail dealer in hardware, stoves, tinware, etc., at Saratoga, in Pratt county; but he owed the Union Stove & Machine Works a large amount of debt, for which his real estate and some of his personal property were mortgaged, and for which debt the aforesaid judgment was rendered in that county. The judgment was also for the sale of the mortgaged real estate. Caswell sold this property and business to William Eastland, and Eastland assumed and agreed to pay Caswell's debt to the Union Stove & Machine Works. Afterwards Eastland sold the property and business to William Fisher, and Fisher assumed and agreed to pay the aforesaid debt. After the Union Stove & Machine Works procured an execution to be issued upon said judgment, and R.F. McGrew, an attorney and agent of the Union Stove & Machine Works, with Mr. A. Magruder, the undersheriff of the county, who was holding the execution, went to the place of business of Fisher to levy upon the property, but finally Fisher gave his negotiable promissory note, dated December 17, 1886, to the Union Stove & Machine Works for $975, due in ten days, and also executed a chattel mortgage to the Union Stove & Machine Works upon his entire stock of hardware, stoves, etc., to secure the payment of the note, and no levy was made, and the execution, by order of McGrew, was returned to the court. This mortgage included the property which had already been mortgaged by Caswell to the Union Stove & Machine Works, and much other property. In all these transactions the Union Stove & Machine Works was represented by McGrew. Three days after the execution of this note and mortgage, to wit, on December 20, 1886, the Union Stove & Machine Works, by their agent, McGrew, filed a transcript of the judgment in the office of the clerk of the district court of Harvey county in accordance with the provisions of section 419 of the Civil Code, for the purpose that the judgment should become a lien upon all Caswell's real estate in Harvey county, and so that the Union Stove & Machine Works could enforce the judgment against Caswell's real estate in that county. This note and mortgage were given, according to the testimony of McGrew and Fisher, as additional security for the debt owing by Caswell to the Union Stove & Machine Works, and evidenced by the judgment. Afterwards the Union Stove & Machine Works replevied the mortgaged property from Fisher. Fisher gave a redelivery bond, and retained the property, and carried on his business for some time, but afterwards judgment was rendered against him in the replevin action for a return of the property or its value, to wit, $975, and costs, and he delivered the property to the Union Stove & Machine Works. Fisher testified that the replevied property was worth about $1,500, and his evidence upon this subject was not contradicted by the testimony of any other witness. There is nothing in the case further than the above showing that the judgment of the Union Stove & Machine Works against Caswell has ever been fully paid or satisfied, and nothing further than the above showing that the Union Stove & Machine Works ever released or agreed to release Caswell, or ever took or agreed to take Fisher as their debtor in the place of Caswell; but the evidence, so far as it goes, shows affirmatively that the note and mortgage taken by the Union Stove & Machine Works from Fisher were taken as additional security for the debt owing by Caswell to the Union Stove & Machine Works, and that the Union Stove & Machine Works did not intend to release either the judgment or Caswell.

Under the evidence introduced in this case it is claimed by the Union Stove & Machine Works that the foregoing judgment in its favor and against the Caswells has never been paid or satisfied or released, but is still in full force and effect; while, on the other side, it is claimed—first, that under the facts of this case such judgment has been fully satisfied by payment, but that, if it has not been satisfied in that manner, then, second, that it has been satisfied by a release and discharge in the following manner, to wit, that by the transactions had between Caswell, Eastland, and Fisher, and as between themselves, Fisher became the principal debtor and Caswell became only a surety, and that by the recognition on the part of the Union Stove & Machine Works of Fisher's liability to it for Caswell's debt, the Union Stove & Machine Works made Fisher its principal debtor, and converted Caswell into only a surety, and that by accepting the foregoing note and chattel mortgage from Fisher to itself it extended the time for the payment of the debt from Caswell to itself; and thereby, under the rules of law with respect to principal debtors and sureties, Caswell, who was then only a surety, was released from the payment of the debt, and thereby the judgment was also released, discharged, and satisfied, so far as it affected Caswell or his property. Within these antagonistic claims on the part of these contending parties are involved many questions of law with respect to which the authorities are diverse and conflicting, while with respect to others of the questions involved in the case the authorities are harmonious. Some of the questions involved in this case have already been settled and determined by this court, while others have not. In all cases where two persons have made a contract for the benefit of a third, or where an owner of property has sold it upon an agreement that the purchaser should pay the consideration therefor, or a part thereof, to a creditor of the vendor, some of the questions have been settled by this court. Piano Mfg. Co. v. Burrows, 40 Kan. 361 et seq., and cases there cited; Mumper v. Kelley, 48 Kan. 262. Also some of the questions with respect to the rights of sureties where the creditor and principal debtor have extended the time for the payment of the debt have also been settled by this court. Ross v. Williams, 5 Kan. 483; Hubbard v. Oden, 22 Kan. 363. But there are still many other questions remaining to be settled. All, or very nearly all, the authorities agree that where a vendor of property and the purchaser agree that the consideration therefor, or a part thereof, shall be paid to the creditor of the vendor, the purchaser, as between these two parties, will become the principal debtor, and the vendor be transformed into a mere surety. But no transaction or agreement of this kind or of any other kind had between the vendor and the purchaser alone can affect or abridge any of the rights of the debtor. He may stand upon his absolute legal rights if he chooses to do so, looking only to the vendor as his creditor. With his consent, however, his rights may be greatly affected. With his consent the original debt may be extinguished absolutely, and the purchaser alone become liable to him, or the three parties together may modify their rights in any manner, and to any extent as they may agree. With the creditor's consent the vendor, who was the original debtor, may undoubtedly be made only a surety, and the purchaser be made the principal debtor, but of course it takes his consent either expressly or impliedly. One of the questions then arising is as follows: Can the creditor recognize the purchaser's liability to him at all without at the same time recognizing it as it really and in fact exists at the time as between the vendor and the purchaser? We would think not, and we would think the weight of authority sustains this view. George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 706; Calvo v. Davies, 78 N. Y. 211; Paine v. Jones, 76 N. Y. 274; Murray v. Marshall, 94 N. Y. 611; Spencer v. Spencer, 95 N. Y. 353; Fish v. Hayward, 28 Hun. 456; Metz v. Todd, 36 Mich. 473; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hanford, 27 Fed. Rep. 588. There are cases which hold that in such a case both the vendor and purchaser may be treated by the creditor as principals, and neither merely as a surety. Boardman v. Larrabee, 51 Conn. 39; Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 87; James v. Day, 37 Iowa, 164. In that class of cases which holds that the purchaser becomes the principal debtor and the vendor merely a surety it is held that, if the creditor enters into a valid contract with the purchaser for the extension of the time for the payment of the debt without the vendor's consent, the vendor, who is merely a surety, is released and discharged; while in that class of cases which holds that both the purchaser and the vendor are principals it is held that an extension of the time for the payment of the debt by the creditor as to either the vendor or the purchaser will not release or discharge the other. We shall follow the former class of cases, as we are inclined to think that both the weight of authority and of reason is that way. Mr. Jones, in his work on Mortgages, 4th ed. § 742, expresses the doctrine, as it relates to mortgage debts, as follows: "A purchaser having assumed the payment of an existing mortgage, and thereby become the principal debtor, and the mortgagor a surety of the debt merely, an extension of the time of payment of the mortgage by an agreement between the holder of it and the purchaser, without the concurrence of the mortgagor, discharges him from all liability upon it. The holder cannot enlarge the time of payment, and protect himself by reserving his rights against the surety in the agreement of extension. Such a reservation has no effect unless the mortgagor agree to it." See also, upon the general subject of releasing the surety by the extension of the time for the payment of the debt by the creditor to the principal debtor, 2 Brandt, Suretyship, 2d ed. §§ 359, 360, 368, 364, 369, 372, 373, 375.

With the views above expressed the question then arises, Was the time for the payment of the debt in the present case extended? The note and chattel mortgage taken by the Union Stove & Machine Works from Fisher were not to be paid or to be due for ten days after their date. They were intended, however by the Union Stove & Machine Works to be taken only as additional security. Now, it is true that any kind or any amount of additional or collateral security may be taken by the creditor without discharging a surety on the original debt, provided the time for the payment of the original debt is not extended. But was that the case in the present case? If it was, and if the time for the payment of the original debt was not extended, then, of course, the vendor, Caswell, was not released; but, if the time for the payment of the original debt was extended, then the vendor, Caswell, is released. Now, Fisher was the principal debtor with regard to the original debt, and was not the time for the payment of all debt extended as to him? Could the Union Stove & Machine Works have sued Fisher for the purpose of collecting any debt prior to the expiration of the ten days given by the note and mortgage? We must answer this question in the negative. 2 Brandt, Suretyship, 2d ed. §§ 368, 364. And answering this question in the negative, then would not Caswell, as the surety, be discharged? This question, we think, must be answered in the affirmative. Upon questions of this kind it is possible, however, that the authorities are not entirely harmonious, but we think the weight of authority and of reason is as we have intimated. See the authorities above cited; also Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Randall, 71 Ala. 220; Kane v. Cortes, 100 N. Y. 182, 1 Cent. Rep. 245; Cummings v. Montreal Bank, 15 Grant, Ch. 666.

We think it must be held, under the facts of 16 L. R. A.

this case, that Caswell was discharged, and that by his discharge the judgment held by the Union Stove & Machine Works against him was also discharged, released and satisfied; and probably there was no injustice in this. The Union Stove & Machine Works probably had sufficient security for their debt against Caswell without recognizing or accepting Fisher as their debtor at all, as it voluntarily did. Caswell, with all his property subject to execution, was liable. Besides the Union Stove & Machine Works had a chattel mortgage upon a portion of Caswell's stock in trade, which stock in trade was transferred first to Eastland and then to Fisher; and also had a real-estate mortgage upon the real estate where the goods were kept. But the Union Stove & Machine Works voluntarily chose to recognize and accept Fisher as its debtor, and it thereby, under the law, made him its principal debtor, and from him it obtained additional security which would seem to be ample. It procured a chattel mortgage upon all Fisher's stock in trade, and afterwards replevined it from him; and Fisher, its own witness, testified that the replevied property was worth about $1,500, while the judgment against Caswell, before any payments were made thereon, amounted to only $963.99. This property was probably largely wasted by the transactions had between the Union Stove & Machine Works and Fisher, which perhaps would not have been the case except for the voluntary intermeddling by the Union Stove & Machine Works.

Before closing this discussion, it would perhaps be well to quote a portion of section 1812 of 2 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, 4th ed. as follows: "The principle that whatever discharges the principal discharges the surety is of extended application, and it is operative whenever anything is done which relaxes the terms of the exact legal contract by which the principal is bound, or in any wise lessens, impairs, or delays the remedies which the creditor may resort to for its assurance or enforcement; for, whenever the creditor relaxes his hold upon the principal debtor, he impairs the hold upon him which the surety would acquire by substitution in his place on making payment; and good faith and fair dealing require that the surety should not be exposed to the injuries which might thus be inflicted upon him. In the immense majority of cases the act done does not actually damage the surety a shilling, yet the doctrine is so firmly established that only legislative enactment can change it."

We have now considered every substantial question in this case. There are other questions presented by counsel's briefs, but with the views that we entertain we do not think that it is necessary to discuss them.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

CENTRAL TRUST CO. of New York
v.
MARIETTA & NORTH GEORGIA R. CO.
[INTERVENTION OF BLUE RIDGE MARBLE CO.

(.....Fed. Rep.....)

A receiver of a railroad company is not obliged to complete the transportation of freight or repay any part of the prepaid charges although the freight had been taken by the railroad company with an advance payment of the freight for the whole distance under a contract which gave the shipper the right to take it off and have certain work done upon it at an intermediate point where it was at the time of the receiver's appointment.

(June 22, 1892.)

INTervention in foreclosure proceedings to compel specific performance by the NOTE.—Receiver's obligation on contract of the party whose property he holds.

The doctrine seems to be well established, although the cases on the subject are few, that a receiver is not bound by a contract of the party whose property is committed to his care, unless the contract creates a lien on the property. This is decided in substance not only by the case of Southern Exp. Co. v. Western N. C. R. Co. 99 U. S. 200, 25 L. ed. 821, on which the above decision is based, but also by Brown v. Warner, 11 L. R. A. 394, 78 Tex. 543, and the other cases referred to below.

In Brown v. Warner, supra, the court said: "A receiver as a general rule is but the agent of the court that appoints him with authority to take the possession and control of property, the subject matter of litigation; and is not the representative of the owner for the fulfillment of the latter's contracts, except in cases in which he has made the contracts his own by some act of adoption."

In that case it was held accordingly that a receiver of a railroad company was not liable for removing a switch, although he thereby broke a contract of the railroad company, which was purely personal, to maintain it at a certain place. The court said that for failure to perform the contract, the cause of action was against the company and not of that character which could be brought against the receiver without leave of court.

On the other hand, in How v. Harding, 76 Tex. 17, a contract of a railway company to take and pay for water from a spring on land over which a right of way was granted as part of the same contract was held to be binding upon a receiver of the company, because a lien existed upon the right of way for securing the payments for the water, that being deemed the real consideration for the grant of the right of way.

Although it has now become well established that a court appointing a receiver of railroad property may make the expenses of preserving and operating the road a lien superior to a prior mortgage, the court has no general authority to displace vested contract liens. Kneeland v. American Loan & T. Co. 136 U. S. 89, 34 L. ed. 379.

Somewhat analogous to the case of a receiver is that of trustees of a railroad mortgage to secure bonds, which is confirmed by the Legislature, and gave the trustees power to take and operate the road in a certain contingency subject to redemption within a certain time. It was held that such 16 L. R. A.

receiver of a contract to transport certain freight the charges on which had been paid to the mortgagor. On demurrer to petition. Sustained.

Statement by Newman, J.:

On January 19, 1891, there was an existing contract between the Blue Ridge Marble Company and the Marietta & North Georgia Railway Company, by which the railway company agreed to haul marble from the quarries at Tates Station to Marietta, Ga., and allow said freight to be stopped over, cut and dressed at an intermediate station called Nelson. On said date, under this contract, there was considerable marble at Nelson, being dressed and worked, the freight on which had been prepaid from Tates Station to Marietta; and on said date said railway was put in the hands of a receiver on the petition of the trustee for the bond-holders. Said receiver refused to recognize said contract, and to haul freight stopped over at Nelson, although the freight trustees were not bound by a contract as to transportation of express matter, made between the railroad company and an express company which had notice of the mortgage indenture. Ellis v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 107 Mass. 1.

In Elmira, L. & S. Roll. Mill Co. v. Erie R. Co., 26 N. J. Eq. 224, a railroad company having a contract for the right to run over another road was held not entitled to relief against a severance of the connection by a receiver of the other road, which relief was asked for on the ground that the receiver's conduct was oppressive and unwarranted; but the court made an order requiring the receiver to perform the contract upon certain equitable terms, holding that it was for the advantage of the railroad in his hands that the contract should be performed. The question as to the legal effect of the contract upon the receiver was not discussed.

In Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 32 Fed. Rep. 566, a contract by a railroad company to take up lumber for a mill-owner at a sand switch was held not of such a character that he was entitled to any preference over mortgage bond-holders on a claim of damages for breach of the contract, but the effect of the contract to bind the receiver was not discussed.

The same rule above laid down as to contracts generally applies to a lease. Receivers of a lessee do not become responsible for rent merely by accepting their trust and receiving the assets, unless they elect to take possession of the leased property and assume the liability to pay the rent or do some act which is in law equivalent to such an election. Com. v. Franklin Ins. Co. 115 Mass. 279; Fidelity Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Armstrong, 35 Fed. Rep. 568.

A receiver who enters into possession of and occupies leased property unequivocally manifests his election to recognize the lease and thereby incurs a liability for the payment of the rent. Woodruff v. Erie R. Co. 98 N. Y. 609; Brown v. Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 444; Easton v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 734; People v. University L. Ins. Co. 30 Hun, 142.

The decision in the main case, like the others above referred to, is undoubtedly intended to recognize the validity of a claim against the receiver for breach of contract which can take its place without preference among other debts of the estate.

D. A. R.

charges had been prepaid to Marietta. The Blue Ridge Marble Company intervened in foreclosure proceedings, and asked that a receiver be compelled to complete the haul of all freight at Nelson, the charges on which had been prepaid; or that said receiver return to the Marble Company the freight charges unearned.

The Central Trust Company demurred to intervention, upon the ground that the claim is not a lien superior to the rights of the bondholders, and because the claim was not a traffic balance, or a claim within those usually allowed prior to the bonds.

Messrs. F. C. Tate, R. N. Holland, B. F. Abbott and C. A. Abbott for intervenor.

Mr. Henry B. Tompkins for Central Trust Co.

Mr. A. S. Clay for the receiver.

Newman, J., delivered the following opinion:

I am satisfied that the question involved in this intervention is controlled by the case of Southern Exp. Co. v. Western N. C. R. Co., 99 U. S. 191, 25 L. ed. 819. In that case, the contract was made between the express company and the railroad company, whereby the express company agreed to lend the railroad company $20,000 to be expended in preparing and equipping its road, and the railroad company should grant the express company the necessary privileges and facilities for the transaction of all express business over the road; the sum found to be due the railroad company therefor upon monthly settlements of accounts to be applied to the payment of the loan and the interest thereon.

The $20,000 was paid in compliance with the contract, and shortly thereafter the express company entered upon the road, transporting freight according to the terms of the contract, keeping regular accounts, and exhibiting them to the company, which were always approved; and it continued to act under said contract until a receiver, appointed in a bill to foreclose the mortgage, refused to continue the contract; and the express company was compelled to abandon the road, although its debt was unpaid.

By consent of the court, the express company was allowed to file its bill in circuit court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina, where the foreclosure proceedings were pending. The bill prayed for a decree compelling the railroad company to specifically perform its contract and to such other and further relief as the nature and circumstances of the case might require.

The prayer of petitioners in this intervention is the same in effect as the prayer of complainants in the case referred to. The supreme court, after disposing of other questions, used the following language in the opinion:

"There is another objection to the appellant's case which is no less conclusive.

The road is in the hands of the receiver appointed in a suit brought by the bondholders to foreclose their mortgage. The appellant has no lien. The contract neither expressly nor by implication touches that subject. It is not a license as insisted by counsel. It is simply a contract for the transportation of persons and property over the road. A specific performance by the receiver would be a form of satisfaction or payment which he cannot be required to make. As well might he be decreed to satisfy the appellant's demand by money, as by the service sought to be enforced. Both belong to the lien-holders, and neither can thus be diverted. The appellant can therefore have no locus standi in a court of equity."

I am clear that the view of the supreme court as just quoted must control the question presented by the intervention in this case. It is a peculiar condition of things, and unfortunate for the petitioners and a hardship on them undoubtedly; but to require the receiver to transport its marble to Marietta would be equivalent to require the receiver to pay them in money the amount of the freight from Nelson to Marietta; and this the court certainly could not do, inasmuch as they have no lien.

The petition of intervenors sets forth the fact as above stated, and consequently the demurrer to the petition must be sustained, and it is so ordered.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

RICHMOND & DANVILLE R. CO.,

Pf. in Err.,

v.

C. C. SCOTT.

(.....Va.....)

1. A carrier is not liable for injury to a passenger's hand from striking against a bridge where he put it out of a car window, although it projected but three inches.

2. A verdict in favor of a railway passenger to compensate him for injuries to his arm caused by contact with a bridge abutment cannot be sustained on appeal after the striking of a count alleging that he voluntarily placed his arm out of the car window if the other counts allege that it was

NOTE.—Passenger's negligent exposure of person at car window.

A passenger cannot recover for the breaking of his arm by a timber frame supporting a water tank while the arm is projecting out of a car window if the injury would not have been received if the arm had been inside the car. Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 20 Ind. 28, 22 Am. Dec. 336.

15 L. R. A.

Nothing less than gross negligence on the part of the carrier will permit recovery by a passenger for the breaking of his arm while the elbow was projecting outside of a car window by coming in contact with a standard on a freight car which would not have struck the arm if it had been inside the car. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sickings, 5 Bush, 1.

flung out by a lurch of the car caused by one rail being lower than the other, and the evidence shows only one half inch difference in the height of the rails, that the window was fifteen inches from the abutment, which was not touched by the car, and the body of no passenger was moved from its position, the allegation being so improbable in view of the evidence that the stricken count must have influenced the verdict.

(March 31, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Charlotte County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Staples & Munford, for plaintiff in error:

A railroad company in carrying passengers on its trains over its roads is not an insurer of their lives or safety, but it is only incumbent upon it to provide for their safe transportation by the use of such well-equipped machinery and the maintenance of such well constructed road-bed and bridges as will secure their safety, so far as human skill and foresight and the precautions and appliances ordinarily in use in such business will contribute thereto.

2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1049; Christie v.

Griggs, 2 Campb. 79; Simmons v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. B. Co. 97 Mass. 361, 93 Am. Dec. 99.

The accident, which occurred to the plaintiff in the manner in which he has described was such an accident as could not have been foreseen.

2 Thomp. Neg. p. 985.

Mr. W. W. Henry, for defendant in error:

When carriers undertake to convey passengers by the powerful but dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety require that they be held to the greatest possible care and diligence. Any negligence or default in such case will make such carriers liable in damages under the statute. The slightest neglect against which human prudence and foresight might have guarded, and by reason of which his death may have been occasioned, renders such company liable in damages for such death. Said railroad company is held by the law to the utmost care, not only in the management of its trains of cars, but also in the structure, repair, and care of the track and bridges, and all other arrangements necessary to the safety of passengers.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman, 29 Gratt. 445, 26 Am. Rep. 484. See Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Noell, 32 Gratt. 399; Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 78 Va. 745, 49 Am. Rep. 401; Torian v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 84 Va. 191; Richmond City R. Co. v. Scott, 88 Va. 907.

One whose arm while protruding outside the open window of a car in swift motion was struck on the elbow by wood piled near the track is guilty of contributory negligence which will prevent his recovery, however incautious the carrier may have been in guarding against such accidents, unless it had omitted to warn him after knowledge of his danger. Dun v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 78 Va. 645, 49 Am. Rep. 388.

But it is not contributory negligence for a passenger in a railroad car to ride with his elbow on the sill of an open window where it is jarred outside of the car and broken in a collision of the train with a freight car standing on a side track. Farlow v. Kelly, 108 U. S. 258, 27 L. ed. 726.

To similar effect is Hallahan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 2 Cent. Rep. 324, 102 N. Y. 194, in which a verdict was supported for plaintiff, whose arm while resting on the window-sill of a car was struck by the arm of a crane used to deliver mail to passing trains.

So a passenger whose arm is struck and injured by something on a passing freight train while it was resting upon a window-sill, but not protruding beyond it, is not guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent him from recovering for the injury. Breen v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 391, 100 N. Y. 297.

Simply resting an elbow on the sill of a car window with the head on the arm in a natural and not unusual position, does not make a proper case for instructions on contributory negligence. Winters v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 30 Mo. 463.

In an early Pennsylvania case (New Jersey R. Co. v. Kennard, 21 Pa. 268) it was held not to be negligence for a passenger to allow his arm to project slightly over the edge of a window-sill of a car if not more than was customary for passengers, and that the carrier must so construct the cars if the road was so narrow in some places as to endanger projecting limbs that the passengers could not put their limbs through the windows.

But this case was overruled by a later decision 16 L. R. A.

that it is negligence per se for a passenger to let his elbow protrude from a car window where it is struck by another car. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. McClurg, 56 Pa. 294.

Question of law or fact.

There is a conflict among the decisions as to whether it is negligence per se to allow an arm or any other part of the body to project beyond a car window, or whether it raises a question for the jury. Like the case last above cited, a recent Alabama case holds that it is negligence per se to be declared so as matter of law for a passenger on a steam railway to protrude his arm, hand, or elbow through the window of a car while in motion and beyond the outer edge of the window or outer surface of the car. Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Underwood, 90 Ala. 49, 44 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 387.

In an action by the passenger for such an injury the jury should be instructed to find a verdict for the defendant. Ibid.

So if a passenger's arm or a portion of it is outside of the window of a railroad car and there is no dispute or controversy about this fact, or that the position of the arm contributes to an injury sustained by a blow from the door of a freight car on an adjoining track which had been left unfastened, the court must decide that the passenger cannot recover against the railroad company for the injury. Todd v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. 8 Allen, 18, 90 Am. Dec. 149.

And a passenger whose arm is struck while projecting out of a car window by a freight car which did not touch the car in which he was riding will be held negligent as matter of law and cannot recover for the injury. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Andrews, 39 Md. 329, 17 Am. Rep. 568; Breen v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 391, 100 N. Y. 297.

In support of the same doctrine the court held that a charge that if the elbow of a passenger was out of the car when struck and injured by some object from outside, it was a circumstance or fact cautious the latter may have been in guarding against such accidents." In that case the declaration set forth that the arm of the plaintiff protruded two inches outside of the car, and the lower court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed to this court, where the judgment of the lower court was affirmed. In this case, as that, the declaration containing this count was bad for the same reasons assigned in that case. It is not necessary to consider the declaration further. It cannot be said that the jury found their verdict under the first any more than the third count; and a glance at the evidence indicates that, without the third count, there could reasonably have been no such verdict for the plaintiff. Admitting the evidence for the plaintiff to be true, it appears that the depression of the right-hand rail was one half of an inch lower than the other, when tested by the level which was applied to it. The plaintiff testifies that his body was not moved from its position, and other uncontradicted witnesses testified that they were not moved in their seats. This casting of the hand of a man out of the window fifteen or eighteen inches, to strike a bridge, while his body did not move out of his seat, states a proposition which is as improbable as that half an inch of difference in the rails would cause any lurch that could be discoverable to any occupant of the car. It is shown by a passenger who sat on the next seat to the plaintiff, and by the conductor who came up as soon as outcry was made, and by the doctor, who dressed the injured limb, that the plaintiff said he got his hand hurt by putting it out of the window; and he himself saying in his declaration that he got it hurt by putting it out of the car window, and it being proved that the top of the car did not touch the bridge when the supposed career occurred, and the distance of the car window from the side of the bridge being established, and the depression being only claimed to be half an inch on one rail, it is unreasonable to suppose that the jury disregarded the third count, and grounded their verdict on what must have appeared an impossibility, —that, when the body is not disturbed in the seat, the hand and the arm could have been thrown backwards out of the window while it was still attached to the body of the passenger. We cannot presume this to have been the ground of the jury's action, while the declaration stated and the proof showed that there was a reasonable way by which the hand got out of the window, contrary to no reasonable experience, but in accordance with every-day experience and observation. Passengers sometimes put their arms and other parts of their body out of the window of a car in motion, but that a hand of a passenger should be cast out of a window near which he was sitting, by reason of half an inch depression in one rail, cannot be said to be in accordance with the every-day observation of men. We do not say and we do not know upon what ground the verdict rested, but it is clear that, under the pleadings, it might have rested upon the third count, and the evidence tending to suggest it, and that is enough. No recovery can be had under such circumstances.

The demurrer should have been sustained as to the third count, and the circuit court erred in overruling the same, and for that cause the judgment will be reversed and annulled. It is not necessary to go further into the case. The case will be remanded to the circuit court, where the plaintiff may amend his declaration, if he be so advised, by leave of the circuit court.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

Kate D. EDGERTON, Appt.,

v.

Erastus D. EDGERTON, Resp.

(.....Mont.....)

1. A statutory provision for alimony when a divorce is granted does not by implication exclude a right of action to enforce a husband's obligation to furnish his wife maintenance independent of a proceeding for divorce.

2. A suit to compel a husband, if able, to support his wife whom he has deserted and left destitute is within the jurisdiction of equity, especially where the Constitution provides that a speedy remedy shall be afforded for every injury of person, property, or character, and that right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay, while the statutes provide that a married woman shall have the same protection as a man for all her rights and the same right to appeal in her own name alone to the courts of law or of equity.

3. A judgment of divorce cannot be collaterally attacked as void because the appearance of the wife by an attorney was authorized only by a letter of authority which her husband compelled her to write and sign where such facts did not appear on the record.

(May 2, 1892.)

APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the District Court for Lewis and Clarke County, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to compel defendant to maintain the plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alexander C. Botkin and E. P. Cadwell, for appellant:

Wherever want of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant is shown, the judgment rendered without said jurisdiction is absolutely void and is a nullity. This want of jurisdiction may as well be shown by evidence aliunde the record as from the face of the record. In

NOTE.—The great array of authorities presented by counsel on their respective sides of the question as to the jurisdiction of equity to compel a husband to support his wife, together with the discussion of the question by the court, seem to cover the question so completely that no annotation is called for.

16 J. R. A.

either case, if this want of jurisdiction is shown, the decree is absolutely void; it has no force or effect.

Starbuck v. Murray, 5 Wend. 157, 21 Am. Dec. 172.

The remark of the court in Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 467, 21 L. ed. 897, that the judgment could not be attacked on a collateral proceeding, was unnecessary to the decision, and was in effect overruled by the subsequent cases of D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 52 U. S. 11 How. 165, 18 L. ed. 648, and Webster v. Reid, 52 U. S. 11 How. 437, 18 L. ed. 761.

See also Harris v. Hardeman, 55 U. S. 14 How. 384, 14 L. ed. 444; Christmas v. Russell, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. ed. 475; Elliott v. Peirce, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 840, 7 L. ed. 170; United States v. Arredondo, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 691, 8 L. ed. 547; Striker v. Lynn, 48 U. S. 2 How. 59, 11 L. ed. 178; Hickey v. Stewart, 44 U. S. 8 How. 762, 11 L. ed. 819.

The appearance was the act of the counsel, and not the act of the court.

Shelton v. Tiffin, 47 U. S. 6 How. 183, 12 L. ed. 296.

If the court acts without authority, its judgments and orders are regarded as nullities. They are not voidable, but simply void, and form no bar to a recovery sought, even prior to a reversal in opposition to them.

Elliott v. Peirce, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 828, 7 L. ed. 164.

A judgment rendered by a court that has no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant is void, and it is equally so whether this want of jurisdiction appears upon the face of the record or appears from evidence outside of the record.

Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 418, 419; Canwell v. Canwell, 9 West. Rep. 154, 120 Ill. 877; Greene v. Greene, 2 Gray, 861; Edson v. Edson, 108 Mass. 590, 11 Am. Rep. 398; Freeman, Judgm. §§ 98, 99, 117, 118, 499, 509; Kerr, Fraud, p. 51; Peikert v. Wilson, 88 Minn. 341; Holyoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. 20, 16 Am. Dec. 876; Atty-Gen. v. Purmort, 5 Paige, 631, 8 L. ed. 860; Gest v. Packwood, 39 Fed. Rep. 535; Earle v. Earle, 27 Neb. 277; Bradshaw v. Heath, 18 Wend. 416, 417.

The wife can maintain an action against her husband for support, call it maintenance or alimony as you please, under the facts stated in the complaint.

Galland v. Galland, 88 Cal. 269; Wilson v. Wilson, 45 Cal. 399; Daniels v. Daniels, 9 Colo. 133; Earle v. Earle, 27 Neb. 277; Platner v. Platner, 66 Iowa, 378; Glover v. Glover, 16 Ala. 446; Hinds v. Hinds, 80 Ala. 225; Purcell v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. 507-511; Almond v. Almond, 4 Rand. (Va.) 662, 15 Am. Dec. 781; Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Harr. & J. 485; Macnamara's Case, 2 Bland, Ch. 566, note 667; Grane v. Meginnis, 1 Gill & J. 953, 19 Am. Dec. 287; Helms v. Francisus, 2 Bland, Ch. 544, 20 Am. Dec. 402; Verner v. Verner, 62 Miss. 263, and cases cited; Butler v. Butler, 4 Litt. 202; Lockridge v. Lockridge, 8 Dana, 28, 28 Am. Dec. 52; Walker v. Stringfellow, 80 Tex. 570; Rhame v. Rhame, 1 McCord, Eq. 197-205, 16 Am. Dec. 597; Hair v. Hair, 10 Rich. Eq. 163; Frather v. Frather, 4 Deasau, Eq. 83-87; Bucom v. Bucom, Wright (Ohio) 632; Questel v. Questel, Id. 491; Spiller v. Spiller, 2 N. C. 16 L. R. A.

482; Knight v. Knight, 3 N. C. 101; Bueter v. Bueter (S. Dak.), 8 L. R. A. 562; Spengler v. Spengler, 88 Mo. App. 266; Lindenschmidt v. Lindenschmidt, 29 Mo. App. 295; Barber v. Barber, 62 U. S. 21 How. 582, 18 L. ed. 226; Cheever v. Willson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604.

Messrs. McConnell & Clayberg and T. C. Bach, for respondent.

Our Constitution provides: "The district court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases at law and in equity, etc."

Montana Const. art. 8, § 11.

Under such provision courts of equity can only exercise such jurisdiction as was exercised by the English court of chancery at the date of the Revolution.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. para. 282, 285, 294, et seq.; Fontain v. Ravenel, 58 U. S. 17 How. 869, 15 L. ed. 80; Jones v. Boston Mill Corp. 4 Pick. 507, 16 Am. Dec. 858. See also cases infra.

Lord Loughborough, in Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. Jr. 195, says: "It is contrary to the established doctrine that a married woman should be the plaintiff in a suit in this court for a separate maintenance."

This case was followed in Stone v. Cooke, 7 Sim. 22, and Vandergucht v. DeBlaquiere, 8 Sim. 815.

Unless the jurisdiction is provided for by positive statutory enactment or by constitutional provision, courts of equity in this country possess no jurisdiction to hear or determine suits brought solely for the recovery of alimony or maintenance.

Lawson v. Shotwell, 27 Miss. 680; Bankston v. Bankston, Id. 692; Bowman v. Worthington, 24 Ark. 529; McGee v. McGee, 10 Ga. 477; Goss v. Goss, 29 Ga. 109; Wachli v. Wachli, 1 Blackf. 860, 12 Am. Dec. 251; Muckenburg v. Holler, 29 Ind. 189, 92 Am. Dec. 845; Moon v. Baum, 58 Ind. 194; Chestnut v. Chestnut, 77 Ill. 346; Trotter v. Trotter, Id. 511; Ross v. Ross, 69 Ill. 569; Harshberger v. Harshberger, 26 Iowa, 503; Wilson v. Wilson, 49 Iowa, 544; McFarland v. McFarland, 51 Iowa, 565; Jones v. Jones, 18 Me. 811, 36 Am. Dec. 726; Henderson v. Henderson, 64 Me. 419; Littlefield v. Paul, 69 Me. 538; Shannon v. Shannon, 2 Gray, 287; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 6 Gray, 842; Coffin v. Dunham, 8 Cush. 406, 54 Am. Dec. 769; Adams v. Adams, 100 Mass. 365, 1 Am. Rep. 111; Peltier v. Peltier, Harr. Ch. 19; Perkins v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 167; Doyle v. Doyle, 26 Mo. 545; Simpson v. Simpson, 81 Mo. 24; Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 817, 32 Am. Rep. 362; Sheafe v. Sheafe, 24 N. H. 569; Kirrigan v. Kirrigan, 15 N. J. Eq. 148; Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 60; Yule v. Yule, 10 N. J. Eq. 198; Rockwell v. Morgan, 18 N. J. Eq. 119; Anshutz v. Anshutz, 16 N. J. Eq. 162; Cory v. Cory, 11 N. J. Eq. 400; Atwater v. Atwater, 58 Barb. 621; Ramsden v. Ramsden, 91 N. Y. 281; Codd v. Codd, 2 Johns. Ch. 141, 1 L. ed. 823; Lewis v. Lewis, 3 Johns. Ch. 519, 1 L. ed. 703; Miz v. Miz, 1 Johns. Ch. 108, 1 L. ed. 78; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige, 501, 2 L. ed. 1006; Harrington v. Harrington, 10 Vt. 505; Frosser v. Warner, 47 Vt. 667, 19 Am. Rep. 182; Rees v. Waters, 9 Watta, 281; Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 867; Wilson v. Wilson, 19 N. C. 877; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 1883-1421; 24 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1; Woods v. Waddle, 26 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 83.

The judgment pleaded is not a void but a voidable judgment, and in this action the attack upon it is collateral.

Freem. Judgm. 2d ed. § 116; 1 Black, Judgm. § 170.

A judgment of a state court of general jurisdiction can only be attacked collaterally in the courts of the same state where it bears its own infirmity upon its face.

Cook v. Darling, 18 Pick. 898; Granger v. Clark, 22 Me. 128; Coit v. Haven, 80 Conn. 190; Wingate v. Haywood, 40 N. H. 437; Penobscot R. Co. v. Weeks, 52 Me. 456; Clark v. Bryan, 16 Md. 171; Callen v. Ellison, 13 Ohio St. 440, 82 Am. Dec. 448; Horne v. Doe, 1 Ind. 181, 48 Am. Dec. 855; Prince v. Griffin, 16 Iowa, 552; Hahn v. Kelly, 84 Cal. 891, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 11 Am. St. Rep. 263; Galpin v. Page, 1 Sawy. 817; Hunter v. Ferguson, 18 Kan. 471; Blasdel v. Kean, 8 Nev. 308; Black, Judgm. §§ 271-273; Gilman v. Gilman, 126 Mass. 26, 30 Am. Rep. 646; Lee v. Kingsbury, 18 Tex. 68, 62 Am. Dec. 546; Brown v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 26; Sperry v. Reynolds, 65 N. Y. 179.

Many cases have been cited wherein the particular reasons herein relied upon were urged as reasons that the judgment was void and could be collaterally attacked, but the weight of authority is against such proposition.

Freem. Judgm. § 128; 1 Black, Judgm. § 272; Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302, 44 Am. Dec. 840; Baker v. Stonebraker, 84 Mo. 172; Carpenter v. Oakland, 30 Cal. 440; Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20 Iowa, 161, 89 Am. Dec. 520; American Ins. Co. v. Oakley, 9 Paige, 496, 4 L. ed. 789, 38 Am. Dec. 561; Reed v. Pratt, 2 Hill, 64; Brown v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 26; Rogers v. Burns, 27 Pa. 525; Bunton v. Lyford, 87 N. H. 512, 75 Am. Dec. 144.

Harwood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are two questions brought here for determination by this appeal. The first relates to the jurisdiction, in equity, of the district courts of this state, and may be stated by the following proposition: Have the district courts of this state power, in the existence of their equity jurisdiction, to enforce maintenance of a wife by decreeing proper relief in an action brought by her against her husband, independently of an action for divorce, where it is shown that he, without just cause, has abandoned her, or by his cruelty or other improper conduct has given her just cause for living separate and apart from him, and she is without means of support, and he is able to maintain her. An action of this character, if maintainable at all, would naturally lie within the equitable jurisdiction of the district court. The subjects of equity, as well as common-law jurisdiction, are so well defined there can seldom arise a dispute as to whether a particular action for the enforcement of rights or the redress of wrongs lies within the cognizance of one or the other, or whether such action is not within either of these jurisdictions. In relation to the question just propounded, however, there have been and still are differences of opinion in 16 L. R. A.

the courts and among able jurists; and the discussion of it has sounded the depths and surveyed the scope and circumference of the equity jurisdiction of courts where it has been brought in question. It is unnecessary to recite the facts involved in the case at bar in order to treat this proposition. It may be treated as a question of law, relating to the equity jurisdiction of the court, without reference to any particular action. That the marriage relation lays upon the husband an obligation to furnish his wife necessary and comfortable maintenance, commensurate with his ability to provide, is a proposition upon which there is no dispute. It is an obligation imposed by law as one of the conditions of the marriage contract, and is recognized by all courts of justice, and is enforced, in proper cases, where the jurisdiction lies. Courts of common-law jurisdiction (as distinguished from equity courts) enforce that obligation by giving judgment against the husband for necessary supplies furnished the wife by third persons, where the husband, without just cause, withholds the same, or abandons his wife, or by cruelty or otherwise makes it unsafe or improper for her to abide at the family home. In this way it will be seen that even courts of common-law jurisdiction not only recognize, but to some extent enforce, performance of that obligation. This jurisdiction exercised by the common-law courts was usually explained on the theory that the law presumed the wife to be the agent of the husband to the extent of authority to obtain upon his credit necessary personal supplies. But it is plainly observable by an investigation of these cases that the common-law courts proceeded upon a different ground than the mere relation of principal and agent; for when the husband had abandoned his wife, or driven her away by cruelty or other improper conduct, and had sought to avoid responsibility of her maintenance by giving notice forbidding parties to furnish her supplies, and attempting to revoke her authority in that respect, still the common-law courts, notwithstanding such notice held him bound for her necessary supplies, by an obligation irrevocable at will, arising by virtue of the marriage relation, and gave judgment against him. Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 66; Sykes v. Halstead, 1 Sandf. 483; 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. 572, and cases cited. It will be observed in these cases, too, that, where the wife was living separate and apart from her husband, it was always a proper inquiry whether she had just cause for so doing; and, if she had not, that was a good defense. It seems to be clear, then, that the common-law courts proceeded in such cases upon a different principle than the law of agency alone, and founded their judgments on the obligation of the husband to support his wife, even separate and apart from his habitation, where by his conduct he justified her separation, or where he had, without cause, forsaken her,—an obligation which he could not terminate at will, as may be done in case of principal and agent. 2 Kent, Com. 146; Schouler, Dom. Rel.

§ 66; 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 550-572, and cases cited; Liddlow v. Wilmot, 2 Stark. 77; Casteel v. Casteel, 8 Blackf. 240, 44 Am. Dec. 763; Clement v. Mattison, 3 Rich. L. 93; Hall v. Weir, 1 Allen, 261; Cartwright v. Bate, 1 Allen, 514, 79 Am. Dec. 759; Cunningham v. Irwin, 7 Serg. & R. 247, 10 Am. Dec. 458; Rumney v. Keyes, 7 N. H. 571; Allen v. Aldrich, 29 N. H. 63; McGahay v. Williams, 12 Johns. 293; Mayhew v. Thayer, 8 Gray, 172; Walker v. Simpson, 7 Watts & S. 83, 42 Am. Dec. 216; Schnuckle v. Bierman, 89 Ill. 454; Reese v. Chilton, 26 Mo. 598; Rutherford v. Coze, 11 Mo. 347; Breinsig v. Meitzler, 23 Pa. 156; Billing v. Picher, 7 B. Mon. 458, 46 Am. Dec. 523; Snover v. Blair, 25 N. J. L. 94; Blowers v. Sturtevant, 4 Denio, 46.

Although the common-law courts will give judgment against the husband in such cases, it must be admitted by all to be an uncertain and inadequate relief; for in many cases she may be unable to obtain credit under such circumstances, where she can only offer the chance of compelling payment by suit against a husband who is endeavoring to escape such liability. Her position is also embarrassed by the reluctance of parties generally to becoming directly or indirectly implicated in family troubles, or to undertake to show justification for the conduct of the wife, which operates as a powerful influence in deterring persons from given her credit. The relief offered by the common-law courts is inadequate for still other reasons. While it may succeed for a brief period in some cases, the derelict husband is left free to carry out his purpose, to abandon and neglect the support of his wife, and avoid such judgments altogether by disposing of his property or by carrying it beyond the jurisdiction. In this way he not only ignores his obligation, but sets at naught the attempt of the common-law courts to compel its performance. There are other aspects of this method of granting relief which ought not to be passed without observation. If that remedy happens to be effectual in some cases, because the husband fails to use the means within his power to escape the liability, that method of enforcing maintenance would involve a multiplicity of lawsuits; for the wife must usually go to various parties to secure supplies, whereby would arise a separate cause of action in favor of each party from whom supplies were obtained; and, as often as one collection was made, another cause of action would begin to accrue. Again, the inadequacy of relief worked out by the common-law remedy is not alone relative to the position of the wife. It has its counterpart of hardship in reference to the husband. In case the husband has just grounds for his conduct, and desires to establish the same, he would have to present his defense in as many actions at law as happened to be brought against him for supplies furnished the wife; for having established his defense in one or more actions would not preclude the annoyance, loss of time, and expense of defending other actions of the same character. So the question naturally arises whether or not, upon principle, these cases lie within the jurisdiction of courts of equity, and the conditions just pointed out suggest two familiar principles of equity as grounds upon which courts exercising that jurisdiction take cognizance of actions, and determine the rights of parties, namely: (1) Inadequacy of the relief which can be obtained in the courts of law; (2) that to obtain relief in courts of common-law jurisdiction would involve a multiplicity of suits. Mr. Pomeroy, upon this head observes: "In fact, the multiplicity of suits, which is to be prevented, constitutes the very inadequacy of legal methods and remedies which calls the concurrent jurisdiction into being under such circumstances, and authorizes it to adjudicate upon purely legal rights, and confer purely legal reliefs. On the other hand, the prevention of multiplicity of suits is the occasion for the exercise of the exclusive jurisdiction." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 243. This class of actions was not generally entertained by the English chancery court, for the obvious reason that in England the ecclesiastical tribunal existed, to which, as was conceded by all, such adjudications peculiarly belonged. There was therefore no reason in general for the chancery court in England to concern itself with actions seeking such relief. Fonbl. Eq. 4th Am. ed. 98, note 105. But it nevertheless seems plain that had not another court existed in the judicial system of England, which had jurisdiction of this class of cases, there is every analogy which would have brought those cases within the jurisdiction of the court of chancery. This court took cognizance of other cases concerning marital laws. It enforced against the husband antenuptial contracts, and settlements made on behalf of his intended wife; compelled settlements to be made on behalf of the wife, where he was seeking to obtain possession or control of her property; withheld her separate property from his grasp, and devoted it to her maintenance, where he had so conducted himself as to justify her living in separation from him; enforced agreements by the spouses as to property rights, and maintenances made in contemplation of separation; by writ ne exeat, "restrained the husband from quitting the kingdom to evade the payment of an agreed or decreed allowance;" used its power to enforce decrees of the spiritual court, awarding separate maintenance to the wife; and, by process known as the "writ of supplicavit," the chancery court protected the wife against the husband's violence, and in cases where it was found unsafe for her to abide with him, as incident to such proceedings, compelled the husband to provide maintenance for her while she was separate and apart from him, by reason of his violent conduct towards her. This proceeding, however, appears to have become obsolete, probably because statutes provided a remedy for protection of all persons from threatened violence. No doubt other instances could be pointed out wherein the English chancery court exercised jurisdiction in reference to the marital rights and obligations. Fonbl. Eq. 90-106, and notes; 2 Spence, Eq. Jur.

489, 526: 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1428, 1476; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1114-1120; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 352. It is also clear that within the principles, procedure, and practice applied by courts of equity there are ample and appropriate methods to adequately enforce in one action the right of the wife to support against a husband who without cause abandons her, and at the same time, in the same action, vouchsafe to the husband any defense he may have to offer in justification of his conduct.

It is proper at the outset of this investigation to inquire whether, by statute, any provision has been made in relation to the right in question, and the remedy to be applied in case of its nonfulfillment. Our statute provides that the district court, "sitting as a court of chancery," may, for certain causes specified, decree a "dissolution of the bonds of matrimony," and that, "when a divorce shall be decreed, it shall and may be lawful for the court to make such order touching the alimony and maintenance of the wife, the care and custody of the children, or any of them, as from the circumstances of the parties and nature of the case shall be fit, reasonable, and just, and, in case the wife be complainant, to order the defendant to give reasonable security for such alimony and maintenance, or may refuse the payment of such alimony and maintenance in any other manner consistent with the rules and practice of the court, and may also grant alimony 'a pendente lite,' and the court may, on application, from time to time, make such alterations in the allowances of alimony and maintenance as shall appear reasonable and just." Sections 1000, 1004, 1006, div. 5, Comp. Stat.

It is contended that these provisions of the statute as to the decree for alimony and maintenance "when divorce is granted," by implication, exclude from the courts the jurisdiction to enforce the maintenance, except in an action where divorce is decreed. Some have so held, but upon this phase of the question, as upon nearly all aspects of it, eminent authorities are opposed to one another in the views entertained. Our own conclusion upon this particular feature of the question is that the great weight of reason is against the idea that the Legislature, in adopting the statute referred to, intended any regulation of the 'right of the wife to maintenance, or the obligation of the husband to furnish the same, arising and existing by virtue of the marriage bond prior to the dissolution of that bond by decree of court, or that by such statute the Legislature intended to take away, or in any manner control, whatever jurisdiction the courts may have had to enforce the fulfillment of that obligation in an action independent of a proceeding for divorce. In construing or applying a statute the cardinal rule, always applicable, is to seek the intention of the Legislature. The simple question then is, Did the Legislature, in providing for the granting of divorces on certain prescribed grounds, and providing that, when divorce was decreed, alimony and maintenance might also be decreed, intend to have it inferred or implied therefrom that the obligation of the husband to maintain his wife should not be enforced, unless the bonds of matrimony were first dissolved? Or was it only the intention of the Legislature, as manifest in such statute, to make sure, by the provisions authorizing the decree of alimony and maintenance of the wife after dissolution of the bond of matrimony, to fasten upon the husband the continued obligation to support his wife, even though the bond of matrimony had been dissolved because of his wrongful conduct? After divorce the obligation to maintain the wife, which arose by virtue of the marriage contract, could not be referred to that relation, because of its non-existence; and there might be grave reason to doubt whether a court was authorized to continue to enforce that obligation after dissolution of the bond by which it arose, without a statutory provision to that effect. It is manifest by said statute that the Legislature intended that the offending husband should not escape the obligation he had entered into, to support his wife while she kept faith with her marriage vows and duties, even though he succeeded by his wrongful conduct in driving her to obtain a divorce. If this provision implied that the obligation could only be enforced by first dissolving the bonds of matrimony, the law would be open to the charge that it was so framed as to encourage divorces; for the wife who kept faith with the marriage vows might be driven by privation, in some cases at least, to release the husband from the bonds of matrimony by applying for a divorce, in order to obtain relief from penury and want. Such a construction of the legislative intent would make the statute provide, in effect, that in case a wife was driven away or deserted, and left without means of support, if the husband remained in the state, (and committed no more flagrant violations of the marriage bond,) she must wait a year, and in the mean time suffer in destitution, or suffer the humiliation of becoming a public charge, or seek relief through friends or strangers, before she could call upon a court to grant her a divorce, and then compel the offending husband, out of his substance, to fulfill his obligation to support her; at which time the derelict husband may have placed himself and property beyond the reach of the court; at least, he would in such case be given ample opportunity to do so. It can hardly be presumed that the Legislature, while carefully providing for the continuance of the obligation of the husband to maintain his wife after divorce, intended by the statute to cut off any jurisdiction which might be in the courts to simply enforce the obligation while the bonds of matrimony still existed. A more reasonable conclusion, we think, is that the statute under consideration manifests no such intention, but leaves the marital rights and obligations before divorce to be dealt with by the courts in whatever respect their jurisdiction might allow.

We therefore return to the main question, as to whether there is in the equity courts of this state any jurisdiction to interfere on behalf of a wife deserted and left destitute, without cause, and compel the husband, if able, to support her. This subject has led to a very close investigation by the American courts (see cases cited in briefs of counsel) of the manner in which the chancery court of England dealt with such cases. The jurisdiction exercised by that court upon kindred subjects has already been adverted to. But upon this particular branch of adjudication, as is affirmed by some, the holding of the English chancery court has not been harmonious; and, while this criticism is probably correct, it must still be admitted that the doctrine finally became settled, to the effect that cases where such relief was sought would not be entertained in the chancery court, but left to the spiritual court. This was, of course, the natural result when we considered the judicial system prevailing at that time in England. Even with these conditions, however, the English chancery court did not seem to have construed its jurisdiction as so unyieldingly restricted in this matter that no relief could be granted in that court. There is a notable case, as late as 1811, where Lord Eldon, one of the greatest and most conservative of English chancellors, ordered certain property in probate devoted to the support of a deserted wife. It is not clearly stated in the opinion or statement of the master that this property belonged to the husband by descent, but that seems to be the case from the context; for if the property had descended to the wife in her own right, according to the course of equity, there would have been no hesitation whatever in applying it to her separate maintenance, where she was abandoned by her husband. In ordering the property applied the lord chancellor said: "I have a strong impression on my mind that this has been done; and, independent of precedent, I think the court may do it; as the husband deserting his wife leaves her credit for necessities, and would be liable to an action, and, though execution could not be had against the stock, the effect might be obtained circuitously, as he could not relieve himself except by giving his consent to the application of this fund." Guy v. Pearkes, 18 Ves. Jr. 196. In the American states the ecclesiastical court was not made a part of the judicial system. There being a court of chancery or equitable jurisdiction, however, and there being the conditions involved, whereby that court had grounds, upon principle, to take jurisdiction of such cases, it is not at all strange that some of the American courts of equity entertained them; and thus was established what Judge Story termed the broader jurisdiction asserted by the American courts in such cases. In his work on Equity Jurisprudence, he says: "In America, a broader jurisdiction in cases of alimony has been asserted in some of our courts of equity; and it has been held that if a husband abandons his wife, and separates himself from her without any reasonable support, a court of equity may in all cases decree her suitable maintenance and support out of his estate, upon the very ground that there is no adequate or sufficient remedy at law in such a case. And there is so much good sense and reason in this doctrine that it might be wished it were generally adopted." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1423. It will be seen from these remarks that this eminent authority on equity jurisprudence saw clearly that these cases involved conditions which, upon fundamental principles of equity would bring them into that jurisdiction, i. e., there was a legal right of the wife to maintenance, existing and deeply implanted in the law,—a right capable of judicial enforcement, and that the common-law courts, although recognizing and attempting to enforce such right, by reason of their forms of procedure, fell far short of giving adequate relief. There was therefore the ground in principle for equitable relief.

Since Judge Story wrote, the doctrine of the American courts of equity, which he mentions, has steadily been gaining ground, until now it is held, without the aid of statute, in a large number of the states, as will be seen by reference to citations of appellant's brief. The latest case we have examined was decided in the year 1890 by the Supreme Court of South Dakota, wherein Kellam, J., in a very able opinion held that the case was within the equitable jurisdiction of the courts of that state; and he did not base the conclusion upon any specific constitutional or statutory provision or implication mentioned in his opinion. Bueter v. Bueter, (S. Dak.) 8 L. R. A. 562. The Supreme Court of the United States, in 1858, had occasion, in the case of Barber v. Barber, 62 U. S. 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226, incidentally to review a number of cases in which the equity jurisdiction was held to extend over this class of cases; and no expression is found in the opinion, showing that the court regarded the exercise of such jurisdiction extraordinary, nor in any manner an arbitrary assumption of a jurisdiction not properly belonging to courts of equity on principle. Over against the holding which Judge Story mentions, there are courts of eminent authority holding the contrary. (See cases cited by counsel for respondent.) But the divergence of views upon this subject held by the American courts may not be without reasonable explanation, which would apply at least to some states. While there is a general harmony in the American courts of equity with one another, and with the English court of chancery, in the practice, procedure, and principles applied, and the precedents emanating from them may be safely referred to as authority in cases lying within their jurisdiction, still, when the question is as to the extent of the equitable jurisdiction possessed by courts of one state, the determination of courts of another as to the extent of their own jurisdiction cannot, as a rule, be relied on as furnishing an exact criterion for measuring the boundaries of the jurisdiction in the former state, unless the statutory or constitutional provisions governing the subject are substantially alike. This arises from the great variation in the constitutional and statutory provisions establishing and defining such jurisdiction in the different states. Therefore, for example, to quote from Massachusetts, as denying that the equitable jurisdiction of their courts extends to cases like the one at bar, cannot be regarded strictly as authority for denying that such jurisdiction belongs to equity courts at all, nor that such jurisdiction may not pertain to the equity courts of another state, because, although emanating from one of the ablest benches in the Union, the court is speaking of the extent of its own equity jurisdiction, which appears to be limited to certain heads, specifically defined by statute, and that jurisdiction does not appear to be as broad as that exercised by the English court of chancery or that exercised by other states of the Union. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 286; Mass. Gen. Stat. 1860, p. 558; Adams v. Adams, 100 Mass. 365, 1 Am. Rep. 111. There, also, the statute not only provided for absolute divorce, but for a decree of separation from bed and board, with separate maintenance out of the husband's estate. Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 107, p. 581.

These variations in the scope of the equitable jurisdiction granted to the Federal courts, and that possessed by the courts of the various states, is fully explained by Mr. Pomeroy in his great work on Equity Jurisprudence. He says: "In some of the states this statutory delegation of power is so broad and comprehensive that the jurisdiction which it creates is substantially identical with that possessed by the English court of chancery, except so far as specific subjects, like administration, have been expressly given to different tribunals; but in others the delegation of power is so special in its nature and limited in extent that a reference to the statutes themselves, on the part of the courts, as the source and measure of their jurisdiction, is a matter of constant practice and of absolute necessity. A correct knowledge of these statutory provisions in the various states is of the highest importance from another point of view. Without it the force and authority of decisions rendered in any particular state cannot be rightfully appreciated by the bench and bar of other commonwealths." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 288. In the same chapter the author brings to view the statutory and constitutional provisions under discussion. It is therefore not surprising, when these conditions are considered, to find different views held by different courts, when the question turns upon the extent of the equitable jurisdiction possessed. Mr. Bishop, in his valuable work on the subject of Marriage & Divorce, (vol. 2, § 356, 6th ed.), exerts the great weight of his authority against the proposition that cases like the one at bar lie within the equitable jurisdiction, unless jurisdiction is given by statutory or constitutional provisions. It is observable that, in treating the question, he has in mind a court in this country, invested with an equitable jurisdiction measured exactly by that exercised by the English court of chancery "at the time of the settlement of this country." With his usual accuracy, he states how the English chancery court dealt with the question at that time, and arrives at the conclusion that said court did not then exercise the jurisdiction in question. But he goes further, and lays down the proposition that "there is no head of equity power to which, by analogy, this can be said to belong." If it is meant, in view of the right involved, and the relief obtainable through common-law courts, that there is no analogy, when the principles of equity are considered, by which the case would come within the equitable jurisdiction, upon the same principles as many cases come within that jurisdiction, we cannot subscribe to his views. It is fair to say, however, as to Mr. Bishop's views, that he at all times, in treating this subject, reasons from the proposition that to enforce the right of the wife to support, who by the wrongful conduct of her husband is compelled to live separate and apart from him, is equivalent to, and in fact amounts to, the granting of a divorce a mensa et thoro. From this position he asserts his conclusion that there is no analogy which would bring the case under any head of equitable power, and draws a very striking picture of a court, admittedly without any jurisdiction in a certain case, arbitrarily holding the alleged offender, and "dodging all difficulties," administering a drastic remedy for an alleged wrong. Bishop, Mar. & Div. 6th ed. § 356. With great deference to the learned author, and admiration for the method and discrimination generally employed by him in the treatment of subjects of the law to which he has devoted his labor, we are unable to adopt his conclusion until we find reason to adopt his premise, that merely to compel the husband, who wrongfully abandons or drives away his wife, to support her, is in fact granting her a divorce a mensa et thoro. This is the difficulty which must be either confronted with attention, and fairly treated, or "dodged." He states the proposition in this way: "A divorce from bed and board given to the wife concludes with the same decree for alimony which this proceeding does. But it also contains a finding and a judgment, not that the marriage is dissolved, but that she who is to be alimanted is entitled, by reason of the fault of the other party, to live in separation. In the proceeding under consideration, a court acknowledging itself without power to adjudicate the right to live in separation—for that would be simply and exactly to pronounce a divorce from bed and board—undertakes to make a permanent order for alimony. And yet, as foundation for the order, it passes upon, without reducing to record, the very question of right which it admits not to be within its jurisdiction." 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 356. As long as courts of equity are induced to admit that this proceeding is equivalent to granting a divorce from bed and board, no doubt the jurisdiction will be denied. Let us, therefore, examine this proposition. In every case (where the husband and wife are living separate and apart) in which the common-law courts give judgment for necessities furnished the wife by third persons, one of the facts upon which the judgment rests is that the wife has just cause for living in separation from her husband during the time in question, when such necessary supplies were furnished. See cases from common-law courts, and other authorities, cited supra. Now, may it not be said with quite as much force that in these cases the common-law courts (admittedly without any jurisdiction to authorize the spouses to live separate and apart) do by their judgments confirm the proposition that during the time in question the wife had good cause for living in separation from her husband? In the case of Liddlow v. Wilmot, supra, brought in the common-law court by a third person, against a husband, for necessary supplies furnished his wife while she was living separately from him, Lord Ellenborough said: "The first question for consideration is whether the defendant turned his wife out of doors, or by the indecency of his conduct precluded her from living with him; for then he was bound by law to afford her means of support adequate to her station." In Hultz v. Gibbs, 66 Pa. 360, the same doctrine is stated as follows: "When a husband turns his wife out of doors, without any reasonable or just cause, or forces her to withdraw from him, without any means for her support, the law implies that he has given her credit to supply herself with such necessities as are suitable and proper for her to have, namely, clothing, boarding, lodging, and the like. Her condition would be deplorable, indeed, if this were not so, because of her inability to contract for such things, and to obtain them, if she happens to have no separate estate. When, therefore, necessities are furnished to a wife so situated, on the credit of her husband, the party claiming to be paid for them must bring himself, in order to recover for them, within the rule stated. He must make out a case which shall negative all idea of a captious, voluntary abandonment of the husband's domicile, and show that she has either been turned out or forced to leave his residence. Walker v. Simpson, 7 Watts & S. 85, 48 Am. Dec. 216, and the authorities therein referred to." Declarations of this doctrine could be quoted by great number from the common-law courts. See cases supra.

So the common-law court must try the question whether the wife was abandoned without cause, or compelled to withdraw and live separately. In other words, these conditions must be shown before judgment can be given in favor of a third party for necessities furnished her living separately from her husband. Then, is not the judgment in such case an affirmation by the common-law court that the wife had just cause for living in separation? And, if the conditions thus judicially affirmed as sufficient ground still exist, such judgment would not be far from judicially sanctioning her continuance of the separation. It would at least affirm indirectly that as long as the cause for separation, which was adjudged sufficient, existed, she would be justified in living separate and apart. Yet the jurisdiction of the common-law courts to give such judgments does not appear to be questioned on the ground that the same amounts to adjudging the wife justified in living apart from her husband, which, if decreed in terms, would amount to a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro. The proposition, however, is held up before the equity court as an all-sufficient "difficulty," whenever it is called upon to do, in a more adequate, direct, simple, and just manner, the very thing which the common-law court fearlessly attempts. But does the judgment or decree, whether of common-law or equity court, simply compelling the husband to continue to support his wife when he has, without cause, abandoned her, amount to a divorce from bed and board? We have seen that she must be fully justified in her separation, and that justification must be shown, before either the common-law or equity court will give relief. But the proposition that such inquiry, and the giving of relief, is equivalent to the granting of a divorce from bed and board, it would seem, must involve the common-law court in the same embarrassment as Mr. Bishop has attempted to draw the equity court into whenever it affirms that it lies within the equitable jurisdiction to grant such relief. Is there anything in the proceeding whether in the common-law or equity court, which authorizes the spouses to live separate and apart, or authorizes the delinquent husband to continue his neglect, without cause, to provide for his wife. Is not the wrongful conduct of the husband, instead of the proceeding whereby a court compels him to support his wife, the only justification she has for her separation? And is there anything in the proceeding either authorizing the husband to continue his wrongful conduct, or fail to resume the voluntary discharge of his marital duties? Is there anything in the proceeding which merely compels him to support his wife, in the nature of casting an obstacle in the way of his seeking reconciliation with her, and resuming the voluntary discharge of his marital obligations? It is within the power of courts of equity to make their decrees in all such cases subject to such modifications as circumstances may demand; and it is worthy of consideration whether the actual effect of a just and proper exercise of such jurisdiction would not tend to induce reconciliation, by checking the husband in his willful and unjustifiable abandonment of his marital obligations. The proceeding, it would seem, simply checks the husband in his attempt to entirely abandon his obligation, without sanctioning the separation any further than inquiring whether it is enforced by the husband's conduct,—the same as done by common-law courts,—and without placing the slightest obstacle in the way of reconciliation. These considerations are in no way suggested as furnishing the reasons upon which to base an answer to the question whether the equity courts of this state possess the jurisdiction in question. They are brought to view in connection with the proposition asserted by some, as we have seen, that to grant such relief is equivalent to, and in fact includes, the decree of divorce a mensa et thoro. But we are inclined, after much reflection, to regard the proposition as untenable. When the whole nature and effect of the relief are considered, it appears to be an extreme view, born of a zealous advocacy of one side of this disputed question of jurisdiction.

16 L. R. A.

We will close the inquiry upon this branch of the case by bringing to view certain statutory and constitutional provisions of this state which to some extent, we think, should influence our determination. The statute provides that: "Women shall retain the same legal existence and legal personality after marriage as before marriage, and shall receive the same protection of all her rights as a woman which her husband does as a man; and for any injury sustained to her reputation, person, property, character, or any natural right, she shall have the same right to appeal in her own name alone to the courts of law or equity, for redress and protection, that her husband has to appeal in his own name alone." Section 1439, div. 5, Comp. Stat. Our Constitution provides that "the district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all cases at law and in equity, . . . and for such special actions and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for." Section 11, art. 8. And, further, that "there shall be but one form of civil action, and that law and equity may be administered in the same action." Section 28, art. 8. And, further, that "courts of justice shall be open to every person and a speedy remedy afforded for every injury of person, property, or character; and that right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay." Section 6, art. 8. This latter provision was, we think, set before the courts, by the framers of the Constitution, as a tenet for consideration in a case like this, where, clearly, there is an established right existing, subject to judicial enforcement, and the question is raised on purely artificial grounds, as to whether such right shall be enforced in such an action and in such jurisdiction as by its practice and methods of procedure can insure an appropriate, just, and adequate relief, or whether there shall be a denial of such appropriate and adequate remedy as the courts can afford. It is admitted that the right exists, and it is contended there is a remedy at law; but we have seen that in many cases that answer would be but a mockery to the aggrieved, in her unjust abandonment. The court is then confronted with the question whether there shall be a denial of enforcement of this right, except where absolute divorce is granted. We think the intentment of our Constitution and statutes is to negative that proposition. With these provisions before us, in addition to the grounds of equity jurisdiction considered, we are drawn to the conclusion that our courts are invested with a jurisdiction broad enough to give proper and adequate remedy for the enforcement of the right in question, in proper cases, where it is shown that such jurisdiction ought to be exercised, and that such remedy lies within the equity jurisdiction of our district courts.

The second proposition of law to be determined in this case will be developed by a brief statement of facts set forth in plaintiff's complaint. Among other things, it is alleged that plaintiff and defendant intermarried on or about the 9th day of September, 1879, at Watkins Glen, Schuyler county, state of New York, and lived together as man and wife until October 24, 1886; that from September, 1882, until October, 1886, they resided in the city of Helena, territory of Montana; that in May, 1887, defendant, without any cause or provocation on the part of plaintiff, willfully abandoned and deserted her, and compelled her to live separate and apart from him; that, from the last date up to about seven months prior to the commencement of this action, defendant contributed the sum of $50 per month, and at times $75 per month, for plaintiff's support; that, for about seven months last past, defendant has neglected and refused, and still refuses, to furnish plaintiff any money whatever, and that she is now wholly without means of support, and is entirely dependent upon her personal exertions and the contributions of her friends for support of herself and infant son, the issue of said marriage, now in plaintiff's care and custody; that about April 24, 1887, at the city and state of New York, defendant, by threats and menaces, (particularly alleged and described), compelled plaintiff to write and sign, as dictated by defendant, a letter of authority addressed to E. D. Weed, Esq., an attorney at law, residing, and engaged in the practice of law, at the city of Helena, territory of Montana, authorizing him to appear as her counsel in an action which defendant proposed to commence against her to obtain a divorce from the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant; that, when defendant had thus compelled the writing of said letter by plaintiff, he took the same into his possession; that thereafter plaintiff requested defendant to destroy said letter, and that he then told plaintiff, in order to deceive and defraud her, that he had destroyed said letter, but that, contrary to such statement, defendant retained said letter in his possession, and thereafter presented the same to said attorney, and told said attorney that plaintiff desired said letter to be delivered to him, and desired him to appear for plaintiff, and "represent her in a divorce proceeding to be commenced by the defendant;" that thereafter said attorney appeared as counsel for this plaintiff in an action commenced in the district court of the fourth judicial district of the territory of Montana within and for the county of Yellowstone, by defendant herein against this plaintiff, to obtain a divorce from her; that such proceedings were had in said action as resulted in defendant obtaining from said court a decree of divorce from this plaintiff. Plaintiff further alleges that she did not appear in said action, nor had any knowledge of the fact that said attorney had appeared for her therein. Respondent interposed a demurrer to this complaint, which was sustained by the court, and plaintiff appealed from that order.

Appellant's counsel succinctly state their position on this branch of the case as follows: "Are the parties hereto husband and wife? Is said decree void or voidable? If void, we will then claim that plaintiff is the wife of defendant, and is entitled to maintain this action. If voidable, then we concede that we are premature in our action." It is not contended by appellant that the decree of the territorial district court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony which theretofore existed between plaintiff and defendant, is void for any reason that appears on the face of such decree. It was pronounced by a court of general jurisdiction, and of special statutory jurisdiction of actions for divorce. Comp. Stat. div. 5, § 1000. Moreover, by appellant's own showing in her complaint, it appears that said court had jurisdiction of her person, by her appearance through her attorney, duly and expressly authorized by letter. Sections 80, 491, Code Civil Proc. This decree must be regarded, of course, as if pronounced by a court of this state, as the transformation from territorial to state form of government is for many purposes to be considered as a continuity of government. Const. art. 20, § 2. The theory of appellant's counsel is that the judgment is void, not by reason of any facts appearing on the face of the proceedings, but by reason of the facts pleaded as to the conduct of defendant, which led up to the court obtaining jurisdiction to grant said decree. They contend that, by reason of those facts pleaded, (which are deemed admitted on demurrer), it is shown that the court had no jurisdiction over the person of appellant, who was defendant in said proceedings for divorce. On this premise they submit "that wherever want of jurisdiction over the person of defendant is shown the judgment rendered without such jurisdiction is absolutely void, and is a nullity, and that this want of jurisdiction may as well be shown by evidence aliunde the record as from the face of the record; that in either case, if this want of jurisdiction is shown, the decree is absolutely void, and of no force or effect." It seems to us that, if such a premise be followed, it would sweep away all distinction between judgments void for reasons manifest on the face of the record, and those which, as appears by the record, are valid, and must be given full faith and force until impeached in a proper proceeding, by establishing facts aliunde the record sufficient for that purpose. While there is much conflict relating to certain questions of law concerning judgments, we think it may be safely said to be almost uniformly settled now that domestic judgments of courts of general jurisdiction, valid on their face, cannot be collaterally attacked in courts of the same state, by showing facts aliunde the record although such facts might be sufficient to impeach the judgment in question if brought to bear upon it in a proper proceeding. The proposition in this case appears to be to open a way through said decree of divorce for the progress of this action, by going back of that judgment, and raising a question as to the good faith and lawfulness of the plaintiff's conduct in obtaining it. Such a practice cannot be sustained. It is needless to go into a discussion of the reasons and public policy which forbid such a rule. These are fully developed in the authorities. Freem. Judgm. §§ 116, 128; 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 170, 270; Halen v. Kelly, 84 Cal. 891, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Carpentier v. Oakland, 80 Cal. 440; Granger v. Clark, 22 Me. 128; Penobscot R. Co. v. Weeks, 52 Me. 456; Prince v. Griffin, 16 Iowa, 552; Callen v. Ellison, 18 Ohio St. 448, 82 Am. Dec. 448; Coit v. Haven, 30 Conn. 190; Clark v. Bryan, 16 Md. 171; Wingate v. Haywood, 40 N. H. 487; Galpin v. Page, 1 Sawy. 309; Hornor v. Doe, 1 Ind. 180, 48 Am. Dec. 855; Baker v. Stonebraker, 84 Mo. 172; Reed v. Pratt, 2 Hill, 64; Harshy v. Blackmarr, 20 Iowa, 161, 89 Am. Dec. 520. See also a late case from Oregon, —Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 96, 11 L. R. A. 155, published in 28 Am. St. Rep. 95, with an elaborate note by Mr. A. C. Freeman, editor, and also author of Freeman on Judgments, citing many cases upon the subject.

Upon the view that said decree was not void, but only voidable in a proper proceeding for that purpose, the court sustained respondent's demurrer and in our opinion the ruling is correct.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

Blake, Ch. J., and DeWitt, J., concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Wiseman A. SPARROW, Appt.,

v.

C. H. POND, Recept.

(.....Minn.....)

Blackberries while growing on the bushes are not subject to levy on execution as personal property.

*Head note by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—Classification of growing fruit as real or personal property.

Direct decisions as to the nature or classification as property of fruit before it is severed from trees or bushes are very few indeed, although the ques-
16 L. R. A.

(May 3, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Dodge County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain blackberries which plaintiff had purchased at an execution sale upon a judgment against defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

tion is discussed in a multitude of cases which actually involve only the question of cultivated crops which are grown by annual planting.

Very similar to the main case is the decision that peaches on the trees are not subject to levy as per-

Mr. S. T. Littleton, for appellant:

A levy may be made upon grain or grass while growing and upon any other unharvested crops.

Gen. Stat. chap. 66, § 815.

Chattels real may be levied upon and sold on execution.

Id. § 800.

In this state the interest of the vendee under a contract of purchase of real estate may be levied upon under a writ of execution.

Henry v. Traynor, 42 Minn. 284; Reynolds v. Fleming, 48 Minn. 513.

So may any equitable interest in land.

Atwater v. Manchester Sav. Bank, 45 Minn. 341.

And generally all tangible property which the debtor could himself sell can by execution be made the subject of involuntary transfer to pay his just debts.

1 Freem. Executions, § 110.

Blackberries in this state depend on annual cultivation and do not thrive or produce berries fit for market if left to nature. The crop of berries is the result of the labor and skill of the gardener, fructus industrialis.

Id. § 113; Benjamin, Sales, Bennett's 4th ed. §§ 129, 130.

In Frank v. Harrington, 36 Barb. 415, all the cases prior to that time were reviewed and it was considered that strawberries, grapes, and hops as now cultivated grow by the manurance and industry of the owner and should be put in the category of personal instead of real estate and so of any kind of produce raised annually by labor and cultivation except grass growing or fruit not gathered from the trees.

Latham v. Atwood, Cro. Car. 515.

Messrs. Samuel Lord and Robert Taylor, for respondent:

Blackberries grow wild in these parts and bear fruit with or without manurance or cultivation. They are perennial, living and growing for many years without being renewed or transplanted, and sending up, each year, shoots or canes, which live over, bear fruit the second year and then die. These facts are of such general notoriety and are so commonly known that the court will take judicial notice of them.

1 Greenl. Ev. 14th ed. § 6; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 87, 23 L. ed. 200; Floyd v. Ricks, 14 Ark. 286, 58 Am. Dec. 874; Tomlinson v. Greenfield, 81 Ark. 557; Dixon v. Nicolls, 89 Ill. 378, 89 Am. Dec. 812; Raridan v. Central Iowa R. Co. 69 Iowa, 527; Patterson v. McCausland, 3 Bland, Ch. 69; Weister v. Kelly, 88 Ala. 440; Gordon v. Tweedy, 74 Ala. 233, 49 Am. Rep. 813; Loeb v. Richardson, 74 Ala. 311; Mahoney v. Aurrecochea, 51 Cal. 429; Garth v. Caldwell, 72 Mo. 622.

Growing blackberries do not fall within the term "any other unharvested crops," used in the statute.

Bouvier, Law Dict. titles, Crops, Emblements; sonal property. State v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. (Del.) 9.

The other cases arise in respect to contracts of sale.

A contract for the sale of all the growing fruit in an orchard to be picked and delivered by the vendor at a certain price per bushel and which gives the vendee no right to enter upon the land or touch the trees or the apples until they are picked, is not a contract for the sale of an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds. Brown v. Stancil (Buff. Super. Ct.) Op. by Smith not reported; aff'd by Mem. Dec. 30 N. Y. 627.

A sale of a crop of peaches while growing in the orchard to be gathered and removed as they mature is not within the Statute of Frauds as a sale of an interest in land. Kurner v. Pieroy, 40 Md. 212, 17 Am. Rep. 591.

A contract giving "one half in the orchard of all the apples and peaches and one half of all the blackberries on the bushes" on certain land during a period of three years, which contract was construed to require a delivery thereof by the vendor, is not a contract for the sale of a chattel real, but for the sale of personal property, and therefore is not within that provision of the Statute of Frauds as to the sale of an interest in real estate, although it is within another provision of that statute as to contracts not to be performed within one year. Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56.

A sale of an entire crop of fruit for a certain year is not a sale of realty which needs to be in writing. Vulcoevich v. Skinner, 77 Cal. 229.

In this case it seems that the vendor, as in the cases above, was required to deliver the fruit to the vendee, and in that view the case is strictly parallel with the other decisions above concerning sales of fruit. The court, however, does not mention this fact as having any bearing on the decision, but treats the fruit as fructus industrialis.

As against the above cases concerning sales of fruit an earlier English case decided that the sale of a crop of fruit and vegetables is the sale of an interest in land, within the meaning of a statute requiring a conveyance of such an interest to be stamped. Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 Mees & W. 502.

But in this case it appears, as it does not in any of the American cases above, that the purchaser was by the contract to enter upon the land and gather the fruit and the action was in assumpsit for "not permitting the plaintiff to gather" it. The case therefore can be readily distinguished from the American cases on that ground.

This same distinction will harmonize the American cases as to sales of growing fruit which hold it to be personal property with the main case and the case of State v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. (Del.) 9, which deny that it can be levied on as personalty. Otherwise we have decisions treating fruit as realty for the purpose of levy but as personalty for the purpose of sale.

In full agreement with the decisions holding that growing fruit cannot be levied on as personalty is the generally accepted doctrine that such fruit is not the subject of larceny. Text-books all seem to agree in stating this to be the rule unless changed by statute, but they base it apparently on the reason of the law rather than upon any actual decisions of the courts to that effect. In Bartlett v. Brown, 6 R. I. 37, the same doctrine is stated. That case was an action for malicious prosecution in procuring plaintiff's arrest on a charge of stealing such fruit. The court held, however, that the action would not lie as the charge of theft was only a harsh or exaggerated charge of a statutory offense of taking the fruit without license.

Taking all the cases that can be found in which there was actually decided anything about the kind of property that growing fruit belongs to, it seems that they fairly establish the doctrine that such fruit is real property, but that for the purpose of a contract of sale by which the vendor agrees to sever it from the realty and deliver it to the purchaser it may be regarded as already severed and changed into personal property. B. A. R.

4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 887, title Crops.

At common law the "growing crops" or "emblemments," that were subjected to the levy of a writ of fi. fa. against the tenant were only such crops of his annual planting as were mainly the result of his manurance and labor in their cultivation and as would mature the same season in which they were planted, and did not include the grasses nor the fruits of perennial shrubs, even though planted and cultivated, or pruned, by the tenant himself.

1 Schouler, Pers. Prop. §§ 100, 104, et seq., 475, et seq.; 4 Kent, Com. p. 73; 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. 7th ed. 465; Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 Mees. & W. 501; Smith v. Leighton, 88 Kan. 544, 5 Am. St. Rep. 778; 1 Hillard, Real Prop. 13.

When a product of the soil is claimed not to be subject to seizure and sale under a fi. fa. the claim must be determined by ascertaining whether such product is real or personal estate; and this last question is in turn to be settled by inquiring whether the product is chiefly the result of roots permanently attached to the soil or of the labor and skill of defendant in sowing and cultivating the soil.

1 Freem. Executions, § 118; Schouler, Pers. Prop. §§ 100, 104, et seq.; 2 Bl. Com. 123, Sharswood's note.

An exception was made as to the single product of hops.

Latham v. Atwood, Cro. Car. 515; Frank v. Harrington, 86 Barb. 415.

In Darlington on Personal Property, p. 26, "fructus naturales" are defined to be those products which require to be planted but once and then bear for years.

Thompson, Law of the Farm, § 25. See also Gwynne, Sheriff & Coroner, p. 220; Crocker, Sheriffs & Constables, p. 207; Craddock v. Riddleberger, 2 Dana, 206; State v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. (Del.) 9; Jones, Chat. Mort. § 145; Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 Mees. & W. 503.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At common-law those products of the earth which are annual, and are raised by yearly manurance and labor, and essentially owe their annual existence to the cultivation of man, termed "emblemments," and sometimes "fructus industriales," were, even while still annexed to the soil, treated as chattels, with the usual incidents thereof as to seizure on attachment during the owner's life, and transmission after his death. This class included grain, garden vegetables, and the like. On the other hand, the fruit of trees, perennial bushes and grasses growing from perennial roots, and called, by way of contradistinction, "fructus naturales," were, while unsevered from the soil, considered as pertaining to the realty, and as such passed to the heir at the death of the owner, and were not subject to attachment during his life. 4 Kent, Com. p. 78; 4 Bacon, Abr. 372, title Emblemments; Freem. Executions, § 118; 1 Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 100 et seq.; State v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. (Del.) 9; Craddock v. Riddleberger, 2 Dana, 205; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, title Crops; Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 Mees. & W. 501. A possible exception to this classification is the case of hops on the vines, 16 L. R. A.

which have been held to be personal chattels, and subject to sale as such. The ground upon which this seems to be held is that, although the roots of the hops are perennial, the vines die yearly, and the crop from the new vines is wholly or mainly dependent upon annual cultivation. The decisions upon that question, however, seem to be all based upon the old case of Latham v. Atwood, Cro. Car. 515. See Frank v. Harrington, 86 Barb. 415.

It is sometimes stated that the test whether an unsevered product of the soil is an emblemment, and, as such, personal property, is whether it is produced chiefly by the manurance and industry of the owner. But, while this test is correct as far as it goes, it is incomplete. Under modern improved methods, all fruits are cultivated, the quality and quantity of the yield depending more or less upon the annual expenditure of labor upon the trees, bushes, or vines; but it has never been held that fruit growing upon cultivated trees were subject to levy as personal property. No doubt all emblemments are produced by the manurance and labor of the owner, and are called "fructus industriales" for that reason; but the manner, as well as purpose, of planting is an essential element to be taken into consideration. If the purpose of planting is not the permanent enhancement of the land itself, but merely to secure a single crop, which is to be the sole return for the labor expended, the product would naturally fall under the head of "emblemments." On the other hand, if the tree, bush, or vine is one which requires to be planted but once, and will then bear successive crops for years, the planting would be naturally calculated to permanently enhance the value of the land itself, and the product of any one year could not be said to essentially owe its existence to labor expended during that year; and hence it would be classed among "fructus naturales," and the right of emblemments would not attach. Darlington, Pers. Prop. 26. This classification is, of course, more or less arbitrary, but it is the one uniformly adopted by the courts, (unless hops be an exception), and it is the only one which will furnish a definite and exact rule. Blackberry bushes are perennial, and when planted once yield successive crops. They grow wild, but, like every other kind of fruit or berry, are improved by cultivation. The quantity and quality of the yield is largely dependent upon the amount of annual care expended upon them, but the difference in that respect between them and other fruits is only one of degree. It seems to us quite clear that at common law such berries, while growing upon the bushes, were not subject to levy on execution as personal property, and we have no statute changing the rule. Evidently the main purpose of section 315, chap. 66, Gen. Stat., was, while permitting immature growing crops to be levied on, to prohibit their sale until they were ripe and fit to be harvested. The word "crops" had, long before this statute, acquired in law a meaning synonymous with or equivalent to the common-law term "emblemments," and neither of them included fruits of perennial trees or shrubs, and it is to be presumed that the term "crops" is used in the statute in this same sense. The only change effected by the statute as to the kinds of products of the earth which may be levied on while still attached to the soil is, perhaps, to include perennial grasses. As we are of opinion that these berries, while growing on the bushes, were not subject to levy as personal property, it becomes unnecessary to consider any other question in the case. To prevent misapprehension hereafter, it may be well, however, to say, with reference to the question whether crops growing upon a homestead under the statutes of the state are subject to levy, or whether their seizure would be an interference with the beneficial use and control of the homestead by the debtor, that it is not determined, as counsel for appellant assume, by the case of Erickson v. Patterson, (Minn.) 50 N. W. Rep. 699. In that case the grain grew upon land entered under the United States Homestead Law, by the provisions of which the land was not liable for debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent, the exemption not being at all dependent upon occupancy and use as a home. Hence that case would not necessarily control the question discussed in the present case.

Judgment affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Joseph HERR and Wife
v.
City of LEBANON, Appt.

(.....Pa.....)

The want of a barrier along a steep bank beside a highway is not the proximate cause of injury to a passenger in an omnibus which went over the bank while the horse drawing it was struggling to get up after repeated falls, each of which took it nearer to the bank, where the horse first fell in the middle of the street, which was in good condition.

(May 16, 1892.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Lebanon County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from a defect in a highway for the repair of which defendant was responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank E. Meily and W. M. Derr, for appellant:

The accident was produced by an intervening and independent cause for which the defendant was not responsible and therefore relieved the defendant from liability for the injury to the plaintiff.

Chartiers Twp. v. Phillips, 122 Pa. 601; 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 441, note.

Messrs. Luther F. Houck and Grant Weidman, for appellees:

The authorities whose duty it is to maintain the highways are bound not only to care for the traveled track of the roadway, but also the surroundings.

Jackson Twp. v. Wagner, 127 Pa. 195; Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 738; Lower Macungie Twp. v. Merkhoffer, 71 Pa. 276; Newlin Twp. v. Davis, 77 Pa. 817; Pittston v. Hart, 89 Pa. 889; Burrell Twp. v. Uncapher, 10 Cent. Rep. 828, 117 Pa. 363; Plymouth Twp. v. Graver, 125 Pa. 36.

Negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury, of which it is not the sole or immediate cause. If the defendant's negligence concurred with some other event, other than the plaintiff's fault, to produce the plaintiff's injury, so that it clearly appears that but for such negligence the injury would not have happened, and both circumstances are closely connected with the injury, in the order of events, the defendant is responsible, even though his negligent act was not the nearest cause in the order of time.

Shearn & Redf. Neg. 10.

Where an accident and want of ordinary care concur in producing an injury, the negligent person is liable for the consequences, if without his negligence the injury would not have been caused by the accident alone.

4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 41; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1068-1065, § 8, 1067, § 4; Saltbury v. Herchenroder, 108 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Sulphur Springs Ind. School Dist. 96 Pa. 65, 42 Am. Rep. 529; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 94 Pa. 353, 39 Am. Rep. 787.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff was injured by an accident happening on one of the streets of the city of Lebanon. She seeks by this action to hold the city responsible for the consequences of the accident, on the ground that the proximate cause of her injury was the negligence of the city. The circumstances are told by the driver of the omnibus in which she was a passenger, and whom she called as a witness for that purpose. He says that there were four adults besides himself in and upon the omnibus, five children, and some household goods, including a sewing machine. It was drawn by one horse. The route passed up and along the side of a hill. On the upper side of the street was a high bank. On the lower side a steep descent of several feet. There was no guard-rail along the edge of the declivity. The driver describes the streets as smooth, hard, twenty feet wide, and "well piked." While ascending the hill in the middle of the roadway the horse suddenly fell. It struggled to regain its feet, but failed. Whether the weight of the load, in connection with the grade of the hill, was too much for the strength of the horse,

NOTE.—For notes on the subject of proximate cause, see Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church (Mass.) 2 L. R. A. 695; Erickson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. (Minn.) 5 L. R. A. 768; Read v. Nichols (N. Y.) 7 L. 16 L. R. A.

R. A. 180; Smith v. Kanawha County (W. Va.) 8 L. R. A. 82; Smithwick v. Hall & U. Co. (Conn.) 12 L. R. A. 279; Hunnewell v. Duxbury (Mass.) 13 L. R. A. 738.

or the horse was choked by the harness, or taken suddenly ill, no one ventures an opinion. It continued struggling until it had moved from the middle of the street to the outer edge, and then over the declivity, dragging the omnibus and its load after it. The driver was asked the question, what caused the horse to fall? He replied, "I don't know." He was then asked if the fall was not due to the fact that the horse was choked. His answer was, "I could not say." To the further question whether he could have driven safely over the road if the horse had not fallen, he said, "Yes, sir, the road was all right, but I did not have any control over him [the horse] after he was down." The jury passed upon the same question. The learned judge requested the jury to answer with their verdict two written questions, viz., "Was the city negligent in not erecting a barrier at the edge of the highway? and, Was the fall of the horse caused by the negligence of the city?" They answered the first question, "Yes; the second, "No." Let us accept these answers, as we should do, as correctly disposing of both questions, and as settling the fact that the city was guilty of negligence in failing to erect a barrier. It then follows that for any injury suffered by reason of the absence of the barrier, of which such absence was a proximate or efficient cause, the city would be liable. If, therefore, in the ordinary use of the street, one had been crowded over the bank by the volume of the travel, by the sudden shying of his horse, or by reason of an accumulation of ice upon the roadway, the absence of the barrier might justify a recovery if the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and so in part the author of his own misfortune. Such accidents may be said to be a probable result of the neglect complained of. If so, the city was bound to anticipate and provide against them; and its failure to do so was negligence. But the liability so incurred does not extend to all sorts of accidents upon that street; only to those of which the negligence may be the proximate cause. The proximate cause of this accident was the fall of the horse and its inability to recover. This fall was not due to the negligence of the city, for the jury have so found the fact in their answer to the questions submitted to them. When the horse fell it was near the middle of the roadway, smooth, hard, "well piked," and twenty feet wide. In its struggles to get upon its feet the driver says he could not control it. Each time that it got partly up it fell again. It fell on the same side, and each time nearer to the edge of the bank, until at length it plunged headlong over the edge. These facts bring the case squarely within the doctrine of Chartiers v. Phillips, 122 Pa. 601. Indeed, they make a stronger case for the defendant than was made in that case. The horse went over, not in the ordinary use of the street, but because of its own inability to manage its load. It fell, and it could not get up. Such an accident is not one of the ordinary incidents or accidents of travel which the city ought to foresee and provide against. The duty of road officers is to provide roads suitable for ordinary travel, conducted in the ordinary manner, and to provide such safeguards as may be needed to meet the risks of such travel. Hey v. Phila- delphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733; Jackson v. Wagner, 127 Pa. 184. This is the extent of their liability in this state. The same rule is held in many other states. Warner v. Holyoke, 112 Mass. 362; Chapman v. Cook, 10 R. I. 804, 14 Am. Rep. 686; Keyes v. Marcellus, 50 Mich. 439, 45 Am. Rep. 52; Davis v. Hill, 41 N. H. 829. The learned judge stated the general rule to the jury correctly, but he seemed to be of opinion that the neglect of the city to erect a barrier, and the failure and struggles of the horse, might be regarded as concurring causes of the accident, and the city might be required to pay for its results on that theory. This was a mistake. If two distinct causes are operating at the same time to produce a given result, which might be produced by either, they are "concurrent" causes. They run together, as the word signifies, to the same end. But if two distinct causes are successive and unrelated in their operation, they cannot be concurring. One of them must then be the proximate, and the other the remote, cause. When they stand in this relation to each other and the result to be considered, the law regards the proximate as the efficient and responsible cause, and disregards the remote.

To determine the relation which the falling of the horse in this case bears to the negligence of the city, we must remember that the jury have found that they bear no relation to each other; for they said, in answer to the question of the court, that the falling of the horse was not chargeable to the negligence of the city. It is therefore an independent, unrelated cause, without which the accident would not have happened. It was the first or proximate cause in the series; the efficient and responsible cause. The absence of the barrier was the remote cause. It did not bring about, or help to bring about, the accident, although it made its consequences more serious. It is probable that our failure to notice the assertion of the same doctrine by the court below in Wagner v. Jackson, when it was last here, may be responsible for its introduction into this case. On the argument of that case upon the first appeal, the important question presented was over the duties of road officers. When it came up again the learned judge seemed to have followed in his answers to the points, the rule which had been laid down, and the error assigned to the general charge escaped attention. In the general charge the same error was committed that appears in this case. The jury was substantially told that the township was not bound to anticipate or provide against such accidents as befell Mrs. Wagner in the fright of her horse and the crushing of her wheels, yet, if they failed to anticipate and provide against them, they were guilty of concurring negligence, and liable to respond in damages for the loss sustained. The illogical application of the rule relating to concurring negligence escaped attention. In so far as that subject is concerned, the case, as reported in 183 Pa. 61, is not authority, and cannot be followed. A road that is in suitable condition for ordinary travel, conducted in the ordinary manner, does not become defective, because some extraordinary condition, not foreseen, arises, in consequence of which it is for the moment too rough or too narrow to meet all the exigencies of the situation. Whatever is so much out of the ordinary course as not to be naturally foreseen, as a probable result of the condition of the highway, the road authorities are not bound to provide against; and their neglect to make such provision can be neither a proximate nor a concurring cause of the injury received in consequence of such extraordinary happening. If the road in Jackson township was suitable and safe for ordinary travel, a traveler could ask no more. If, notwithstanding the condition of the road, a traveler was injured as the result of a series of accidents like those that befell Mrs. Wagner, and for which it is conceded the township was not responsible, viz., the fright of her horse, his sudden turn in the road, the crushing of the wagon wheel, the dragging of the axle and the consequent pulling of the wagon out of the track and against the stone pile, it is clear that the stone pile, which did not interfere with ordinary travel or the common beaten wagon track, was not the proximate or a concurrent cause of the injury, and that the question of concurring negligence was not properly in that case.

The judgment in this case is reversed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Henry W. LANGENBERG, Sheriff of Marion County, Appl.,

v.

Philip C. DECKER.

(.....Ind.....)

The power to fine and imprison for contempt is essentially a judicial one and an attempt to confer it on a state board of tax commissioners who have power to take testimony is in violation of a constitutional provision that no person charged with official duties under either the legislative, executive, or judicial department of the government shall exercise any of the functions of another department, since such board belongs to the executive or administrative department.

(May 10, 1892.)

APPEAL by respondent from a judgment of the General Term of the Superior Court for Marion County affirming a judgment of the Special Term in favor of petitioner in a habeas corpus proceeding to release petitioner from the custody of respondent, to which he had been committed by the state board of tax commissioners for alleged contempt in refusing to answer questions propounded to him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. G. Smith, Atty-Gen., for appellant:

The power of assessment and taxation is legislative, with no limitation except that taxation shall be uniform and equal. Courts cannot interfere with this power or the mode prescribed for its enforcement.

U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8; Ind. Const. art. 10, § 1; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 593-596; Blackwell, Tax Titles, 1; Montesquieu, Spirit of the Law, bk. 18, chap. 1; Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318, 350; Van Horn v. People, 46 Mich. 188, 41 Am. Rep. 159; Citizens Sav. & L. Assn. v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 316, 428, 4 L. ed. 579, 606; Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 514, 561, 7 L. ed. 939, 955; Kirkland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S.

491, 25 L. ed. 558; Board of Education v. Lombardborough, 36 Ohio St. 227, 38 Am. Rep. 582; Lima v. McBride, 84 Ohio St. 338, 350; Cooley, Taxn. p. 41; 1 Desty, Taxn. 81, § 22.

For the purposes of state taxation this right and power is exercised by the Legislature. The officers that are to perform the duty must be named by the Legislature; and when they have had conferred upon them the power necessary to carry into execution this great trust, it is conclusive so far as the courts are concerned. No one dare deny that power. No one dare lay his hand upon the Constitution to limit it, for the Constitution has but one limitation, and that is the limitation of eternal equality.

Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, p. 481; 1 Desty, Taxn. p. 83; Robertson v. State, 7 West. Rep. 481, 109 Ind. 79; Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298; Smith v. Myers, 7 West. Rep. 90, 109 Ind. 1-9, 58 Am. Rep. 375.

The subject of taxation is a legislative question, "and over purely legislative questions the courts have no supervision or control. A question of that character is beyond the touch of the judiciary, for one department of government cannot enter the domain of another."

Carr v. State, 11 L. R. A. 370, 127 Ind. 208, and authorities cited; Smith v. Myers and Robertson v. State, supra.

The constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures is not and never has been construed as a limitation upon the taxing power. It has no reference to or connection with the subject of taxation.

Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746; Com. v. Dana, 2 Met. 329; First Nat. Bank of Youngstown v. Hughes, 106 U. S. 528, 27 L. ed. 268, 6 Fed. Rep. 737.

For a person or corporation to give proper information to an officer of the law does not give publicity to his business; and a law requiring such information to be given is not repugnant to the 4th Amendment of the Constitution, and is not in its nature unreasonable searches and seizures of one's private books, papers, etc.

Laundry v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 291, 58 Am. Rep. 635; Van Baalen v. People, 40 Mich. 258; Shuman v. Fort Wayne, 11 L. R. A. 378, 127 Ind. 109; Re Clayton, 18 L. R. A. 66, 59 Conn. 510; Tiedeman, Police Powers, p. 471; Cooley, Const. Lim. 200; Com. v. McCloskey, 2 Rawls, NOTE.—The fullness of the discussion of the question involved in the above case which is furnished by the report of the case itself makes any attempt at annotation unnecessary.

16 L. R. A.

874; Bebe v. State, 6 Ind. 501, 528, 68 Am. Dec. 391; Johnston v. Com. 1 Bibb, 608; Plint River S. B. Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194, 48 Am. Dec. 248; State v. Kruttschnitt, 4 Nev. 178; Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86.

The courts are not the guardians of the rights of the people of the state, except as those rights are secured by some constitutional provision which comes within the judicial cognizance.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 201; Bennett v. Boggs, Baldw. 74; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118, 24 L. ed. 77.

The doctrine of "due process of law" does not apply to the power of taxation at all.

Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Constr. p. 425; McMillan v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 40, 24 L. ed. 835; Pearson v. Yendall, 95 U. S. 296, 24 L. ed. 436; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. ed. 658; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Bell's Gap. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 83 L. ed. 892; Cooley, Taxn. 438; Murray v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. 59 U. S. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478; Cooley, Const. Lim. 436, 437; Vanzant v. Waddell, 2 Yerg. 260; Leas v. Charlton, 28 Wis. 478; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Wynehamer v. People, 18 N. Y. 878, 432; Killoch v. San Francisco Super. Ct. 56 Cal. 229; Baltimore v. Scharf, 54 Md. 499.

If the statute confers upon the tribunal the right to act in a given matter with power to hear and determine questions lawfully submitted to it, and its acts are within the powers granted by the statute, the acts of such a tribunal are judicial and can be enforced as other judicial orders and commands are enforced.

Re Saline County Subscription, 45 Mo. 53, 100 Am. Dec. 837.

The duties of assessors, in estimating the value of property for purposes of general taxation are judicial.

Barhyte v. Shepherd, 35 N. Y. 298, 250; Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 529, 536; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 188, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Williams v. Weaver, 75 N. Y. 30, 38; Cooley, Taxn. 266; Burroughs, Taxn. 102; Jordan v. Hyatt, 3 Barb. 275, 238; Ireland v. Rochester, 51 Barb. 416, 430, 431; State v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 663; State v. Morristown, 34 N. J. L. 445; Griffin v. Mizon, 38 Miss. 424, 437, 438; State v. Wood, 8 West. Rep. 540, 110 Ind. 63; Kunte v. Sumption, 2 L. R. A. 655, 117 Ind. 1; Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co. 128 Ind. 835; Garrigus v. State, 93 Ind. 239; 1 High, Inj. § 492; Mechem, Pub. Off. & Officers, § 616; Shovitz v. McPhosters, 79 Ind. 878; Steele v. Dunham, 26 Wis. 393; South Nashville St. R. Co. v. Morrow, 2 L. R. A. 853, 37 Tenn. 406; Van Steenburgh v. Bigelow, 8 Wend. 43; Martin v. Mott, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 31, 6 L. ed. 541; Jenkins v. Waldron, 11 Johns. 121, 6 Am. Dec. 359; Kendall v. Stokes, 44 U. S. 8 How. 98, 11 L. ed. 512; Porter v. Haight, 45 Cal. 637.

Quasi judicial officers are empowered to punish any one guilty of contemptuous conduct in their presence.

Swafford v. Berrong, 84 Ga. 65; Re Clayton, 13 L. R. A. 66, 59 Conn. 510.

Penalties in tax laws are enforced without the aid of courts.

16 L. R. A.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 856; Olds v. Com. 3 A. K. Marsh. 465; State v. Parker, 33 N. J. L. 192; State v. Bishop, 34 N. J. L. 45; State v. Parker, 34 N. J. L. 49; State v. McChesney, 34 N. J. L. 63; Thompson v. Tyncom, 15 Minn. 295; People v. Stockton & C. R. Co. 49 Cal. 414; Boyer v. Jones, 14 Ind. 354; State v. Washos County Board of Equalization, 7 Nev. 88; State v. Appar, 81 N. J. L. 359; Genin v. Belmont County, 18 Ohio St. 534; Champaign County Bank v. Smith, 7 Ohio St. 43; State v. Woods, 8 West. Rep. 540, 110 Ind. 33.

The power to discover omitted property and cause it to be placed upon the tax duplicate is one of the legitimate powers of taxation. This power, given by the Legislature, carries with it the authority to ascertain what property has been omitted from the tax lists, the character and value of the same, and who is the owner thereof. It does not require the aid of courts to enforce the power. The mode of accomplishing this end is provided in the statute, and the "due process of law" to be resorted to in such cases is the enactment of the Legislature upon that subject.

State v. Wood, supra; Kunte v. Sumption, 2 L. R. A. 655, 117 Ind. 1; First Nat. Bank of Youngstown v. Hughes, 106 U. S. 523, 27 L. ed. 263, 6 Fed. Rep. 737; Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co. 128 Ind. 835; Genin v. Belmont County, 18 Ohio St. 534; Champaign County Bank v. Smith, 7 Ohio St. 43; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746; Pom. Const. Law, §§ 283, 284; Wade v. Kimberly, 5 Ohio C. C. 83; Scott v. Raine, 25 Week. L. Bull. 154; Woll v. Thomas, 1 Ind. App. 232; San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 499; Rev. Stat. 1881, § 6416; Vandercook v. Williams, 5 West. Rep. 248, 106 Ind. 345.

The subject of taxation belongs to the police power of the state, is complete within its scope and subject only to legislative control, and may be exercised to any extent to which the law-making power chooses to carry it.

Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Bell's Gap. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 238, 83 L. ed. 892, 895; Kidd v. Pearson, 123 U. S. 1, 24-26, 32 L. ed. 846, 351, 352; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205; Fick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 865, 874, 30 L. ed. 225, 227; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 528, 24 L. ed. 736; Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 818, 25 L. ed. 1079; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 384, 26 L. ed. 568.

Messrs. Addison C. Harris, Thomas A. Stuart and William A. Ketcham, for appellee:

So much of section 129 of the Act in question as gives to the state board power to punish for contempt a witness who appears and refuses to answer questions is an attempt to confer judicial powers on an administrative branch of the government, and is unconstitutional and void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 2; Ind. Const. art. 8, § 1.

The state board of tax commissioners belongs to the administrative branch, which is but a part of the executive branch; and therefore, under our Constitution, "no person," (using that word in its broad sense,) "charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of any other branch."

Kilbourn v. Thompson, 108 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377.

The power to punish for direct contempt was inherent in all courts of superior jurisdiction, and cannot be created, destroyed, or abridged by the Legislature."

Holman v. State, 2 West. Rep. 761, 105 Ind. 518.

The power to punish for contempt is the highest exercise of judicial power, and is not an incident to the mere exercise of judicial functions.

Re Mason, 48 Fed. Rep. 510; Ex parte Doll, 7 Phila. 595; Re McLean, 87 Fed. Rep. 648; Anderson v. Dunn, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. ed. 242.

Judicial power can only be vested in the courts.

Const. art. 7, §1; Shoults v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 878, 375; State v. Noble, 4 L. R.A. 101, 118 Ind. 867; Vandercook v. Williams, 5 West. Rep. 248, 106 Ind. 845; Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281; Gregory v. State, 94 Ind. 885, 48 Am. Rep. 162; Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 118, 21 Am. Rep. 502.

The question of the power of this board to commit for a contempt is, by the terms of the statute referred to, a question that this court may pass upon, and this would be the rule of law without any statute.

Miller v. Snyder, 6 Ind. 1.

If the commitment be against the law, as being made by one who has no jurisdiction of the case, or for a matter for which by law no man ought to be punished, the courts are to discharge.

Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus, 10.

An unconstitutional law is void, and it is as no law at all, and the alleged offense committed under it is not punishable. A conviction under it is not merely erroneous, but it is illegal and void, and cannot be held a legal cause of imprisonment.

Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 871, 25 L. ed. 717.

If a court having no jurisdiction over the person or subject-matter before it sentences a party or a witness for disobedience of its authority, such person, thus illegally deprived of his liberty, may be released by any court authorized to issue writs of habeas corpus.

Ex parte Fisk, 118 U. S. 718, 28 L. ed. 1117; Ex parte Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216; Ex parte Perkins, 29 Fed. Rep. 900; Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. Rep. 66; Ex parte Lange, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872; People v. Cassels, 5 Hill, 164; People v. Warden of County Jail, 1 Cent. Rep. 173, 100 N. Y. 20; Fisher v. McGirr, 1 Gray, 1-49; Re Morton, 10 Mich. 208.

Coffey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The General Assembly of the state passed an Act, which was approved and went into force on the 6th day of March, 1891, entitled "An 16 L. R. A.

Act Concerning Taxation, Repealing All Laws in Conflict herewith, and Declaring an Emergency." The Act creates a state board of tax commissioners, composed of five persons, viz., the secretary of state, the auditor of state, and the governor of the state, who are styled ex officio members, and two persons of opposite political faith, appointed by the governor of the state. At the time the matters occurred out of which this suit arose the board was composed of the secretary of state, the auditor of state, the governor of the state, Josiah N. Gwin, and Ivan N. Walker. By the provisions of the Act the governor of the state is the chairman of the state board of tax commissioners. Section 130 of the Act provides that this board shall annually convene in the office of the auditor of state on the first Monday of August each year for the purpose of assessing railroad property, and equalizing the assessment of real estate; that it shall not be bound by any reports or estimates of value of railroad property, real estate, or other property, as returned to the county auditors or to the auditor of state, but shall appraise and assess all property at its true cash value, as defined by the Act, according to its best knowledge and judgment, and so equalize the assessment of property throughout the state. It also contains this provision: "They shall have the power to send for persons, books, and papers, to examine records, hear and question witnesses, to punish for contempt any one who refuses to appear and answer questions by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and by imprisonment in the county jail of any county not exceeding thirty days, or both. Appeals shall lie to the criminal court of Marion county from all orders of the board inflicting such punishment, which appeals shall be governed by the laws providing for appeals in criminal cases from justices of the peace, so far as applicable. The sheriffs of the several counties of the state shall serve all process and execute all orders of the board."

Claiming to act under the power and authority conferred upon it by the provisions of the statute, the state board of tax commissioners, on its own motion, caused a subpoena duces tecum to be issued to all the banks in the state, requiring the president, cashier, and bookkeeper, or either of them, of the bank named in the subpoena, to appear before the board at the office of the state board of tax commissioners in the state house in the city of Indianapolis, on a day named in the subpoena, and to bring and have with them then and there such books, papers, and accounts of such banking institution as should fully disclose and show the names of all persons having money, bonds, stocks, notes, or other property of value on deposit and in the custody of such bank on the 1st day of April, 1891, and the respective amounts of such deposits or other property in the custody of the bank, and to answer all questions which might be asked in relation thereto or with reference to the property owned by the bank itself. The subpoena was signed by Joseph T. Fanning, as secretary of the board. At the bottom of the subpoena, and following the signature of the secretary, was the following: "For the purposes of the state board of tax commissioners, as set forth in this subpoena, it will answer if the president, cashier, or bookkeeper of the above-mentioned bank make out a sworn statement of the balances to the credit of its individual depositors on April 1, 1891, giving name in full of each depositor, amount of his credit balance, and forward said sworn statement to the state board of tax commissioners without delay."

One of the subpoenas was served upon the appellee at the city of Evansville, where he resides, and where he is vice-president of a state bank known as the "German Bank of Evansville." In answer to the subpoena he appeared before the state bank of tax commissioners on the 25th day of August, 1891, when there were present of the members of the board the following persons, and others, viz., Claude Matthews, secretary of state, acting as president of the board, J. O. Henderson, auditor of state, and Ivan N. Walker. Upon his appearance he was duly sworn, when the following proceedings were had, viz.: "Question. State your name and place of residence. Answer. Philip C. Decker. I reside in the city of Evansville. Q. In what business are you engaged? A. That of banking. Q. With what institution are you engaged, and in what capacity? A. I am vice-president of the German Bank of Evansville, Indiana. The president lately died, and I am acting as president. Our bank was organized under the laws of Indiana. Q. State the aggregate amount of the individual deposits held by the German Bank, of which you are vice-president, on the 1st day of April, 1891. A. About $300,000. Q. Give the amount of money held on deposit by said bank on the 1st day of April, 1891, belonging to some one depositor. The Witness: Before answering the question, I respectfully ask the board whether there is any appeal, complaint, suit, or proceeding of any kind pending before this board or elsewhere to assess any depositor, or to revise his tax list in any manner. By the Board: No. We are exercising the power of discovery. The Witness: I decline to answer, under the advice of counsel, either as to the name of any depositor or the amount of his deposit. Q. Give me the amount of personal property, other than money, held by your bank as custodian or agent, on the 1st day of April, 1891, such as notes, stocks, bonds, or other property of value belonging to any one depositor. A. I respectfully ask the board to state, before an answer to the question just put, whether there is any appeal, complaint, cause, or proceeding of any kind pending before this board or elsewhere to assess the property of said bank, or any partner therein. Answer by the Board: No. The Witness: I decline to do so, under advice of counsel. Q. For the purpose of ascertaining what, if any, money on deposit in your institution, belonging to persons, firms, companies, or corporations, has been omitted, purposely or otherwise, from the tax duplicate of Vanderburgh county, you will please give this board a list of the names of your depositors on the first day of April, 1891. A. I most respectfully decline to give such list, having just been informed by the board that no appeal, complaint, suit, or proceeding is here pending before this board or elsewhere to assess or revise the tax list of any depositor or partner or officer of the bank. Q.

For the purpose above indicated, give a list of depositors on the 1st day of April, 1891, with the several amounts of money to their credit on that day. A. I decline to give either the names of my depositors or the several amounts standing to their credit, respectively, on the 1st day of April, 1891, either for taxes, or for any other purpose, because I am now informed by the board that there is no appeal, complaint, suit, or proceeding pending here or elsewhere to assess or revise the tax list of any depositor. Q. Likewise give us the names of all persons who have property other than money, stocks, bonds, jewelry, or other property of value by said German Bank held as custodian on the 1st day of April, 1891, and the several amounts, with a description and value of such property. A. I decline to answer your questions for the reasons given above. Q. By an examination of the books and papers of said bank, would you, as its vice-president, be able to furnish to this board the information asked for in the foregoing question? A. I would not. Q. You are now commanded to produce such books and papers of the German Bank for the inspection of this board as will fully afford the information herein sought to be obtained, and which will discover the names of the depositors of said German Bank on the 1st day of April, 1891, and the several amounts to their credit; also such books as will show the names and description of the property of value held by said bank as custodian and agent on said day. A. As vice-president of said bank, I now decline to produce any of its books or papers for the inspection of this board for any purpose." Thereupon the state board of tax commissioners, because of the refusal of the appellee to appear and answer the questions above set forth, and to give the information thereby sought to be elicited, assessed against him a fine of $500, and that he stand committed until the fine be paid or replevied, and entered the following judgment: "Therefore it is considered and ordered by the state board of tax commissioners that Philip C. Decker, on account of his refusal to appear and answer questions, and his disobedience to the order of this board, be, and hereby is, fined in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500), and it is further considered by the board that said Philip C. Decker do stand committed to the jail of Marion county, Indiana, until said fine be paid or replevied." Upon entering the foregoing judgment, the secretary of the board delivered to the appellant, as the sheriff of Marion county, a commitment reciting the fact that the appellee had been fined the sum of $500 for contempt, and ordering that he be committed to the jail of Marion county until discharged by due process of law. Upon this commitment the appellee was arrested. He thereupon filed his petition in the Marion superior court, praying for a writ of habeas corpus. To the writ issued upon this petition the appellant made his return, stating, among other things, substantially the proceedings above set forth. To this return the appellee filed exceptions, which were sustained by the court, and an order was entered discharging the appellee from custody.

The assignment of error calls in question the propriety of the ruling of the Marion superior court in sustaining the exceptions to the return made by the appellant to the writ of habeas corpus. It is contended by the appellee: First. That the power to punish for contempt is a judicial function, which can only be exercised by a court, and, if it be claimed that the Act in question makes the state board of tax commissioners a court, then so much of the Act as seeks to do so is void, because it is not embraced in the title of the Act, and because three of the persons constituting the board are forbidden by the Constitution of the state from exercising judicial functions. Second. That, if the board has power to punish for contempt, it can only do so for the refusal of a witness to appear and answer questions pertinent and material to some issue in a suit, action, or proceeding then pending. Third. That the proceedings of the board in this matter are in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue but upon reasonable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the person or thing to be seized." Fourth. That the state board of tax commissioners has no original jurisdiction, except in the matter of the assessment of railway corporations, and equalizing the assessments of real estate.

These several propositions have been ably and exhaustively argued on both sides, not only in the briefs on file, but also orally in open court; but it seems to us that, if the first proposition presented by the appellee, namely, that so much of the statute in question as attempts to confer on the state board of tax commissioners the power to fine and imprison for contempt of its authority is void by reason of being in conflict with the state Constitution, can be sustained, the other questions presented do not necessarily or properly arise. If this position cannot be maintained, then some or all of the others propositions do arise, and must be decided by this court. But the first inquiry in a case like this leads naturally to an investigation of the authority under which the complaining party has been deprived of his liberty. The solution of the question presented renders it necessary that we shall inquire—first, as to what department of the state government the state board of tax commissioners belongs; and, second, into the nature of the power to fine and commit for contempt.

Article 3, § 1, of our state Constitution is as follows: "The powers of the government are divided into three separate departments,—the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial; and no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in the Constitution expressly provided." The division of power made by our Constitution exists in the Federal Constitution, and in most, if not all, of the state Constitutions. The powers of these departments are not merely equal; they are exclusive in respect to the duties assigned to each, and they are absolutely independent of each other. The encroachment of one of these departments upon the other is watched with jealous care, and is generally promptly resisted, for the observance of this division is essential to the maintenance of a republican form of government. Wright v. DeFreez, 8 Ind. 298; Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 84 Ind. 185; State v. Deany, 118 Ind. 882, 4 L. R. A. 79; State v. Noble, 118 Ind. 850, 4 L. R. A. 101; Hovey v. State, 127 Ind. 588, 11 L. R. A. 763. It is the duty of the legislative department of the state to make the laws; it is the duty of the judicial department to construe and apply them; and it is the duty of the executive department to see that such laws are faithfully executed. No provision of our Constitution was more carefully considered and fully discussed in the constitutional convention than the one now under consideration. As to the legislative department, it is believed that Mr. Biddle expressed what was the understanding of the convention when he said: "The General Assembly has no other duty nor power than to make laws. After a law has been enacted, this department has no further power over the subject. It can neither adjudge the law, nor execute it, but must leave it upon the statute books; and for any functions still remaining in the legislative power, there it would forever remain. All the power of this department here ends." 3 Const. Debates, 1824. It cannot with propriety be contended that the state board of tax commissioners belongs to the legislative department of the state, for it has no power to enact laws. The General Assembly cannot delegate its law-making power to any other person or body. It cannot be successfully maintained that the Legislature could confer on the governor of the state and the principal administrative officers of the state duties pertaining to the judicial department. Indeed, the learned attorney-general admits in argument that the state board of tax commissioners is not a court, and he does not contend that it can perform any function which is of a purely judicial character. As the state board of tax commissioners is neither a legislative body nor a court, it must belong to the executive or administrative department of the state. That it does belong to that department we think it too plain for argument. It is charged with the duty of executing certain provisions of the revenue laws of the state, and when it has performed that duty its functions are at an end. But because it is a body belonging to the executive or administrative department of the government it by no means follows that it may not perform functions which are, in their nature, judicial. Hearing and determining appeals from the county board of review, hearing witnesses, and equalizing the appraisement of real estate, and assessing the railroad property named in the Act, is the performance of a duty judicial in its nature. Mr. High, in his work on Injunctions, (sec. 493), in speaking of the power of courts of equity to enjoin assessments, says: "So the fact that the tribunal fixed by law for determining and equalizing the value of property for the purposes of assessment has assessed it too high will not warrant an injunction, since the action of such officers is judicial in its nature, and will not ordinarily be reviewed in equity." Mr. Mechem, in his work on Public Offices and Officers, in considering the subject of liability of judicial officers on account of their official acts, in section 686 says: "There is still a large class of officers whose duties lie wholly outside of the domain of the courts of justice, or concern the business of the court only incidentally or occasionally, and who are yet called upon by law to exercise, for the benefit of the public or of individuals, power very nearly akin to those of judges in the courts." In the case of State v. Wood, 110 Ind. 83, 8 West. Rep. 540, this court, in speaking of the power of the board of county equalization, said: "The board was not, nor was it necessary that it should be, a court. It was not, and could not be, sitting as a court. It was in the exercise of statutory powers and duties, which duties perhaps may be said to be quasi judicial." In the case of Kvnte v. Sumption, 117 Ind. 1, 2 L. R. A. 655, in speaking of the same tribunal, this court said: "We agree with the appellee's counsel that the board of equalization is not a judicial tribunal in the strict sense of the term; but, while this is true, it is also true that it possesses functions of a judicial nature."

It is often a matter of much difficulty to determine whether the functions exercised by a tribunal of this character are such as pertain exclusively to the courts, or whether they are such as it may lawfully exercise. Mr. Mechem on Public Offices and Officers, section 687, says, "Quasi judicial functions . . . are those which lie midway between the judicial and ministerial ones. The line separating them from such as are thus on their two sides is necessarily indistinct; but, in general terms, when the law in words or by implication commits to any officer the duty of looking into facts, but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is termed quasi judicial." That it was in the power of the General Assembly to confer on the state board of tax commissioners the power to hear and determine appeals from the county boards of review, to equalize the assessments of real estate, and to assess the railroad property named in the Act, is not doubted, and the question as to whether the Legislature could confer upon it the power to fine and imprison the citizens of the state for contempt of its authority depends upon whether such action is purely judicial or only quasi judicial. A proceeding against a person as for a contempt is ordinarily in the nature of a criminal proceeding, and statutes authorizing punishment for the contempt of the authority of a tribunal are criminal statutes, and are to be strictly construed. Maxwell v. Rives, 11 Nev. 213; Holman v. State, 105 Ind. 513, 2 West. Rep. 781. In the case of Ex parte Doll, 7 Phila. 595, in discharging the prisoner, who had been committed by a commissioner appointed by the United States circuit court as for a contempt for refusing to appear and testify and to produce certain books, the court said: "I very much doubt the power of Congress to invest a commissioner with authority in a proceeding originally brought before him to summarily commit a citizen for alleged contempt. This was an exercise of the judicial power of the United States, which, under the Constitution, could not be intrusted to an officer appointed and holding his office in the manner in which they were appointed and held their offices." Again, in the celebrated case of Kilbourn v. Thompson, 108 U. S. 182, 26 L. ed. 384, involving the question of the power of Congress to arrest and punish a witness for contempt in refusing to answer questions before a committee of the house, Justice Miller, in speaking for the court said: "The Constitution declares that no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and it has been repeatedly held by the United States Supreme Court that this means a trial in which the rights of the party shall be decided by a court of justice, appointed by law, and governed by the rules of law previously established." So again, in the case of Re Mason, 48 Fed. Rep. 510, in which Mason had been committed by a United States circuit court commissioner for contempt in failing to appear and testify as a witness, the court said: "To arrest and punish for a contempt is the highest exercise of judicial power, and belongs to judges of courts of record or superior courts. Where jurisdiction exists there can be no review. A pardon by the executive is in most cases a mode of release. This power is not, and never has been, an incident to the mere exercise of judicial function, and such power cannot be upheld upon inference and implication, but must be expressly conferred by law." As bearing upon the question now under discussion, see also in Re McLean, 87 Fed. Rep. 648; Anderson v. Dunn, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. ed. 242; Shoults v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 373; Vandercook v. Williams, 106 Ind. 845, 5 West. Rep. 248, and 106 Ind. 855, 5 West. Rep. 351; Ex parte Milligan, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281; Gregory v. State, 94 Ind. 885; Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 118, 21 Am. Rep. 502.

These cases lead to the inevitable conclusion that the power to punish for contempt belongs exclusively to the courts, except in cases where the Constitution of a state expressly confers such power upon some other body or tribunal. Our state Constitution confers such power upon the General Assembly, but upon no other body. The doctrine that such power rests with the courts alone is based upon the fact that a party cannot be deprived of his liberty without a trial. To adjudge a party guilty of contempt for a refusal to answer questions, the tribunal must determine whether such questions are material, and whether it is a question which the witness is bound to answer; otherwise it cannot be determined that the witness is in contempt of its authority in refusing to answer. So far as we are informed, the trial of a citizen, involving the question of his liberty, by any civil tribunal other than a court, has never been sustained, unless the power to do so was conferred by some constitutional provision. For the reasons above given, our conclusion is that so much of the Act under consideration as attempts to confer on the state board of tax commissioners power to fine and imprison for contempt is in violation of section 1, art. 8, of our state Constitution, and is void. It follows that such board has no authority to fine the appellee, and commit him to the jail of Marion county, and that the Marion superior court did not err in ordering his release.

It is claimed, however, by the learned attorney-general, that the conclusion here reached is in conflict with the conclusion in the cases of Ex parte Mallinkrodt, 20 Mo. 493; Swafford v. Berrong, 84 Ga. 65, and Noyes v. Byrbee, 45 Conn. 882. We have given each of those cases a careful consideration. In Ex parte Mallinkrodt, supra, it was held that the powers of a notary in taking depositions were purely statutory, and that the statutes of the state of Missouri did not confer on such officer the power to commit a witness for refusing to produce books. In the case of Swafford v. Berrong, supra, it was held that the Act of the General Assembly, incorporating the town of Clayton, conferred upon the governing board or council judicial power, with authority to try offenders alleged to have violated the town ordinances; and, inasmuch as it was a court, when sitting for that purpose, it had the power to punish for contempt. No question of the authority of the General Assembly to confer such power, under the Constitution of Georgia, was involved in the case or decided by the court. In the case of Noyes v. Byrbee, supra, it was held that the statutes of Connecticut did not confer on the insurance commissioners appointed to investigate the financial condition of life insurance companies power to commit a witness for refusing to be sworn to answer questions. In our opinion, these authorities do not conflict with the conclusion we have reached in this case. Striking out the portion of the statute which attempts to confer on the state board of tax commissioners the power to punish by fine and imprisonment for contempt does not necessarily affect the validity of any other provision, but it disposes of the question as to whether the appellee is lawfully imprisoned; and, striking out such provision, the conclusion follows that he is entitled to his release. This is the sole purpose of a suit of this kind. The purpose of the suit being attained, the other questions sought to be presented in this cause, and so ably discussed on both sides, do not arise, and we cannot with propriety discuss or decide them. If this were a prosecution for a violation of other provisions of the statute, or if it were a suit to enjoin the collection of increased taxes made on an increase in the value of property not named in the Act, fixed by the state board of tax commissioners in the exercise of original jurisdiction, then we could perhaps make a binding adjudication as to the other questions discussed, but in a suit like this, where the sole question relates to the right of the appellee to be released from an unlawful imprisonment, inflicted by a tribunal without authority to commit him, we do not think they are involved in such a sense as to render it necessary or proper that they should be decided.

Judgment affirmed.

Elliott, Ch. J., concurring:

A citizen can only be imprisoned by due process of law. Where there is an imprisonment without due process of law, the great writ of liberty will deliver the citizen from an unlawful restraint. If, therefore, the appellee was imprisoned without due process of law, the writ of habeas corpus was properly awarded, and this appeal must fail. There is,
16 L. R. A.

It is obvious, one question only that we can with propriety decide, and that is whether the appellee was imprisoned by due process of law. Prison doors open only at the command of the law, and that law must be warranted by the Constitution. It is the law that restrains citizens of their liberty, and the command for the restraint must issue from an officer or tribunal having jurisdiction to adjudge imprisonment. If the state board had jurisdiction to adjudge that the appellee should be imprisoned, there was due process of law; if it had no jurisdiction to imprison, there was not due process of law, and the appellee was unlawfully deprived of his liberty. A judgment of a tribunal—even of the highest in the land—is absolutely void if rendered in a case over which it had no authority. Whether the state board had authority in this instance to consign a citizen to prison depends upon the validity of the statutory provisions assuming to invest the board with the high power of casting citizens into jail. The question is one of legislative power. If the power exists, then the Legislature may authorize a board of town trustees, a board of assessors, a board of road supervisors, or any other administrative officer, to adjudge imprisonment against a citizen who disobeys an order made by it. If it be granted that the power exists, then it inevitably follows that it is one which cannot be limited or controlled by the courts, but is to be exercised without limit or restraint by the legislative department of the government. In my judgment, the Legislature has no power to authorize an administrative or executive officer, whatever his rank or duties, to sentence a citizen to imprisonment. It cannot confer that authority upon the governor of the state, nor upon any other executive or administrative officer, nor upon all the executive or administrative officers of the state combined. The Constitution defines the power of the Legislature to punish for contempt. It expressly provides when the Legislature may punish for contempts committed against its own immediate authority, and thus clearly denies the power to punish save as expressly provided, for the express provision excludes all implied ones. This is the provision of the Constitution: "Either House, during its session, may punish by imprisonment any person not a member, who shall have been guilty of disrespect to the House by disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence; but such imprisonment shall not at any time exceed twenty-four hours." Art. 4, § 15. This provision, as every one can see, closely binds and strongly fetters the power of the General Assembly itself, for it restricts the exercise of the authority to the time that body is in session, and limits the duration of the imprisonment to twenty-four hours. As the Legislature can only exercise the authority given it while in session, it is absolutely without power to lodge the authority in any officer or body of its own creation. The authority to imprison resides where the Constitution places it, and the Legislature cannot give it a residence elsewhere. The authority is essentially a judicial one, abiding in the courts of the land. As it is a judicial power, it is not created by the Legislature, nor vested by that body. The Legislature cannot create judicial power, nor vest it in any tribunal. Judicial power, like all sovereign powers, comes from the people, and vests where the people's Constitution directs that it shall vest. The Legislature may name tribunals that shall exercise judicial powers, unless the Constitution otherwise provides; but the power itself comes from the Constitution, and not the statute. State v. Noble, 118 Ind. 850-854, 4 L. R. A. 101; People v. Maynard, 14 Ill. 419; Perkins v. Corbin, 45 Ala. 103. 6 Am. Rep. 698; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489, 51 Am. Dec. 567; Missouri River Teleg. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Sioux, 74 Ill. 217; Harris v. Vanderveer, 21 N. J. Eq. 424. The Legislature may distribute the judicial power in accordance with the Constitution, but it cannot delegate that power, for the plain reason that it has none to delegate.

If the state board can be regarded as a judicial tribunal in the true sense of the term, the distribution of authority to it to punish for contempt by imprisonment would be valid and effective, but it is not a judicial tribunal. It does, indeed, possess powers of a judicial nature, but so does every officer in the land, high or low, who has the slightest discretion as to the mode of exercising his duty, and yet nothing can be clearer upon principle and authority than that such an officer is not a judicial officer within the meaning of the Constitution. Eastman v. State, 109 Ind. 273-281, 7 West. Rep. 418, 58 Am. Rep. 400, and cases cited; Wilkins v. State, 113 Ind. 514-519, 13 West. Rep. 354, and cases cited. We understand the attorney-general to concede in his able and elaborate argument that the state board is not a court. He says tersely and explicitly that "the state board is neither a court, nor can it be made a court." He endeavors however, to prove that the case is not within the rule that only courts can exercise purely judicial powers by this line of argument: "But," as he says, "the proceeding to assess and value property for the purposes of taxation is neither a case nor a controversy. It does not operate through legal forms, nor require the machinery of the courts to put it in operation. Such proceedings are not authorized to settle private controversies, and they do not involve any questions which courts are or ever were authorized to take jurisdiction of." It may be granted that this argument is in part valid, but it is so only in part. The conclusion spreads far beyond the valid premise. In free countries, courts always have assumed jurisdiction of questions involving personal liberty, and so they must, or else free government, securing personal liberty, ceases to exist. When that great right comes in issue, the courts hear and decide, and the authority of executive or administrative officers is at an end. Whatever else such officers may be empowered to do, they cannot be empowered to sit in judgment upon the right of a citizen to his personal liberty. Only the courts can give the command which takes from the citizen his liberty, and places him within prison walls, and they can only give it in accordance with the law of the land. However extensive the authority of the board may be, it is always ministerial or administrative, and hence it goes not far enough to adjudge imprisonment, for it is beyond the power of the Legislature to invest it, or any 16 L. R. A.

administrative board, with that high judicial function. It is doubtless within the power of the Legislature to authorize the state board to lodge a complaint against a person who disobeys a rightful order made by it in a court of competent jurisdiction, and thus secure by constitutional methods the punishment of a wrong-doer; but the board cannot be invested with the authority to hear and decide, for that dwells only in courts of justice. The board may be made a complainant by law, in a proceeding to punish a citizen who refuses obedience to its rightful authority, or it may be empowered to require some law officer of the state to invoke the assistance of the courts; but a court or a tribunal of judges it can never be as long as our Constitution remains unchanged, or as long as the great principle of free government forbidding the centralization of the powers of government in one department is respected and obeyed. For the reasons thus hastily stated and dimly outlined, I fully and unreservedly concur in the conclusion reached by the court.

Gustoff FRANK, Appt.,

Thomas J. FRAYLOR et al.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A judgment debtor who is in fact only a surety of a co-defendant may on payment of the judgment take an assignment thereof which will be valid al-

NOTE.—Right of surety who has paid judgment to enforce it for his own benefit.

At law.

In Preslar v. Stallworth, 37 Ala. 402, 405, it is said: "At law, it is well settled that the payment of a judgment by or its assignment to one of several defendants, extinguishes the judgment, although the defendant by whom it is paid, or to whom it is assigned, is a mere surety. A court of law cannot substitute such surety in the place of the plaintiff, and allow him to take out execution upon the judgment.

The judgment is regarded as extinguished against all. Bank of Salina v. Abbot, 3 Denio, 181; Hogan v. Reynolds, 21 Ala. 56, 56 Am. Dec. 236; Lyon v. Bolling, 9 Ala. 466, 44 Am. Dec. 444.

At common law sureties who have paid a f. fa. have no right to return it and take out a ca. ad. and arrest their principal. Elam v. Rawson, 21 Ga. 189.

One of several sureties against whom judgment has been rendered cannot by paying the debt, without other proceeding, be substituted for the judgment creditor and proceed against his co-judgment debtors by execution. McDaniel v. Lee, 37 Mo. 204.

Where a surety on a note pays a judgment thereon obtained against the maker only, the judgment is extinguished as a cause of action and an assignment thereof gives the surety no right to enforce it. Cleiman v. Murphy, 34 Ill. App. 633.

Payment by a surety of a judgment against himself and his principal extinguishes it, although he did not so intend, so that an assignment of it to himself gives him no right against the property of his principal other than a simple contract creditor has, (Briley v. Sugg, 21 N. C. 366, 30 Am. Dec. 172) otherwise, however, if he had taken the assign-though there has been no adjudication of his suretyship and that fact is not indicated on the face of the judgment.

2. An assignee of a judgment which has been kept alive after payment in favor of one who appears to have been a principal but who claims to have been a surety, who takes his assignment before the question of suretyship has been adjudged, may raise such question and have it determined in a suit by a subsequent judgment creditor challenging the validity of his judgment as a prior lien.

3. The assignment of a judgment which does not purport to be satisfied to one of the judgment debtors is sufficient to put a purchaser of a subsequent judgment on inquiry as to the rights of the assignee as surety.

(January 7, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to have a judgment to a stranger. Hodges v. Armstrong, 14 N. C. 253; Sherwood v. Collier, 14 N. C. 390, 24 Am. Dec. 264.

It is said obiter in Ussell v. Maack, 4 Humph. 319, 40 Am. Dec. 648: "Where a surety pays a bond or discharges a judgment, he extinguishes the only security the creditor has, and that being extinguished, there is nothing to which he can be substituted." Approved in Miller v. Porter, 5 Humph. 294.

It is said in Bittick v. Wilkins, 7 Heisk. 309, 310, that these cases "only hold that the surety is not substituted to the rights of the judgment creditor in such a sense as that an execution can be issued upon the judgment in his favor as an assignee of the judgment," but the surety can pursue in equity any fund of the principal which the judgment creditor could without obtaining another judgment.

The indorser of a promissory note after the payee, against whom and the maker judgment has been rendered thereon, is entitled upon payment by him of the judgment, and assignment to himself, to enforce the judgment in the same manner as could the judgment creditor. Schleissman v. Kallenberg, 72 Iowa, 338.

A surety may acquire a judgment which has been entered against himself and principal and retain it unsatisfied for his own protection, and payment for that purpose will not satisfy and discharge it. Bleckman v. Butler, 77 Iowa, 123.

A surety taking an assignment of a judgment against himself and principal upon payment thereof, may have execution for his use thereon against the principal alone. Duffield v. Cooper, 87 Pa. 443.

A surety paying an execution on a judgment against himself and principal may have the same assigned to him and hold by a levy the property of the principal attached on the original writ. Edgerly v. Emerson, 23 N. H. 555, 55 Am. Dec. 207; Brewer v. Franklin Mills, 42 N. H. 292.

In Bones v. Aiken, 35 Iowa, 534, it was held that while a surety paying a joint judgment might be entitled in equity to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor, yet he could not take an assignment of the judgment and issue execution thereon against the principal since payment of the judgment extinguished it at law. Following this case is Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42 Iowa, 177.

In Des Moines Sav. Bank v. Colfax Hotel Co., 79 Iowa, 497, it was held that one who was payee and indorser of a note upon which judgment has been obtained against the maker only may pay the judgment and take an assignment of it without extinguishing it, and may garnish the maker's debtor ment held by defendants declared to be satisfied and removed as an apparent prior lien to a judgment held by plaintiff against the same property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. P. Richardson and A. H. Taylor for appellant.

Mr. E. A. Ely for appellees.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, who was the plaintiff, filed a complaint against the appellees, in substance, as follows: That on the 24th day of February, 1884, the appellees La Fayette Brenton and another executed a promissory note to one William W. Totten in part payment for real estate that day conveyed by Totten to Brenton. The note was assigned by Totten to one Offill, who, on the 12th day of June, 1883, took judgment on the note against Brenton for $740.85. This judgment was, on the 6th day of Sep-thereon. The court distinguished this from the cases where the surety was a party to the judgment.

Where separate judgments are obtained against the principal and surety and the surety discharges that against himself, the judgment against the principal is thereby satisfied so that an action of debt thereon cannot be maintained by the surety to whom it has been assigned. Topp v. Branch Bank of Alabama, 2 Swan, 184.

In Clason v. Morris, 10 Johns. 524, it was held that where separate judgments were taken against the maker and indorser of a note, the indorser upon payment of the judgment against himself could take an assignment of the judgment against the maker and enforce the same by execution against the maker.

An indorser of a promissory note having paid a judgment thereon against the maker and himself and taken an assignment thereof may enforce an execution thereon against the property of the maker. Corey v. White, 3 Barb. 12, overruling Ontario Bank v. Walker, 1 Hill, 653, and Bank of Salina v. Abbot, 8 Denio, 181.

In this case the court took a distinction between subrogation by operation of law and express assignment, and also between a joint judgment against an ordinary principal and surety and a judgment against the maker and indorser of a note which is required to be joint by a statute while expressly reserving the rights of the several parties between themselves.

In Eno v. Crooke, 10 N. Y. 60, ignoring these distinctions it was laid down that an indorser of a note who has paid a judgment against himself is subrogated to the rights of the holder on a judgment against the maker, and may take an assignment thereof and maintain an action thereon.

A surety upon paying a judgment against himself and principal may direct an assignment of the judgment to a stranger, where the intention is not to extinguish it, and it may be revived upon scire facias by the assignee for the benefit of the surety. Barringer v. Boyden, 53 N. C. 137.

Payment to the clerk of the amount of the judgment by one of the judgment debtors, who was only a surety upon the original debt, not for the purpose of paying the judgment, but to procure an assignment thereof to his wife, does not amount to a satisfaction of the judgment, but the assignment to the wife and sheriff's deeds to her in its enforcement by her must be treated as valid. Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & A. Co. v. Bush (Iowa) Jan. 23, 1892.

In Baily v. Brownfield, 20 Pa. 41, Black, C. J., says:

tember, 1889, sold and properly assigned to the appellant. The said La Fayette Brenton, Emily Brenton, and one Robert C. Conrad, on the 11th day of June, 1887, executed their joint and several promissory notes to one Charles E. Montgomery, on which notes Montgomery recovered a judgment against the makers, November 6, 1887, for $748.78. On the day the judgment was rendered La Fayette Brenton paid thereon $800, and at another time he paid $100. That on the 30th day of July, 1888, Conrad paid $431.60 in full of the principal, interest, and costs, and, instead of having satisfaction entered, procured Montgomery to assign the judgment to him. On the — day of August, 1889, Conrad assigned the judgment to the appellee Fraylor, who claims that the judgment is unpaid, and that it is senior to the judgment held by the appellant. The prayer is that the judgment held by Fraylor be declared satisfied. The defendant Fraylor answered this complaint, alleging in his answer, among other things, that Conrad was the accommodation surety of La Fayette Brenton in the note to Montgomery, and that he made the payment of the balance due on the judgment as such surety, and at the time he did not intend that the judgment should be discharged. That, as a matter of precaution and notice to others, he procured Montgomery to assign the judgment to him, intending to become subrogated to all the rights of Montgomery in and to so much of the judgment as he paid as such surety. It is also alleged that the appellant, at the time he purchased the judgment, knew that Conrad was such surety, and that he paid the Montgomery judgment as such. The appellant contends that the various pleadings filed by the appellee, disclosing the facts above set out, were each bad on demurrer for failing to show that the question of suretyship between Conrad and Brenton had been determined by a judicial proceeding prior to the assignment of the judg-

"The entry of satisfaction on a judgment collected by execution from a surety, such entry not being made at the instance of the surety, is no ground for refusing subrogation. Whether the fact of payment does or does not appear on the record, it cannot be allowed to have any influence on the rights of the parties, except what equity gives it. It is also true that in this state a surety who has paid a debt secured by judgment against the principal, and who is in other respects entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor, may revive the judgment without first having a decree of subrogation and try his right as it was tried here on the acta facias. This results from our system of mingling equity and law together."

In equity.

In Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 123, 1 L. ed. 786, 8 Am. Dec. 554, it is said to be "a settled principle of English chancery, that a surety will be entitled to every remedy which the creditor has against the principal debtor, to enforce every security and to stand in the place of the creditor."

By the civil law a surety paying the debt is subrogated to the rights of the creditor, ipso facto. Sandford v. McLean, 3 Paige, 117, 3 L. ed. 80, 23 Am. Dec. 778.

A surety upon payment of a judgment against himself and his principal may have the question of his suretyship determined by a suit in equity and be subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor. Manford v. Firth, 68 Ind. 88.

One of several co-sureties on a note, who had paid a judgment against the principal and all the sureties, may take an assignment thereof, and by invoking the equitable powers of the court be subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor against the maker and have his rights as to his co-sureties determined. German-American Sav. Bank v. Fritz, 68 Wis. 390.

In this case it is said: "Ordinarily, to secure the benefit of a judgment lien against a co-surety or co-accommodation indorser, the one paying the amount of the judgment should proceed by bill, suit, petition, or some proceeding in equity, wherein the equitable rights of the respective parties may be adjudicated and enforced. Cuyler v. Emsworth, 6 Paige, 82, 3 L. ed. 886; Speigelmyer v. Crawford, 6 Paige, 254, 3 L. ed. 978; Goodyear v. Watson, 14 Barb. 481; Townsend v. Whitney, 75 N. Y. 425; Smith v. Rumsey, 33 Mich. 183; Neal v. Nash, 23 Ohio St. 483; Furnold v. Bank of State, 44 Mo. 336; Lidderdale v. Robinson, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 594, 6 L. ed. 740. But such relief has been granted 16 L. R. A.

by order of the court upon hearing of the parties. Springer v. Springer, 43 Pa. 518."

A surety paying a judgment against himself and his principal is in equity entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor as against other lien-holders (Dempey v. Bush, 18 Ohio St. 376), as well as against the principal judgment debtor. Neal v. Nash, 23 Ohio St. 483.

Equity regards the lien of a judgment paid by a surety as still subsisting, and will aid the surety in its enforcement for his reimbursement. Searing v. Berry, 58 Ohio, 20.

Sureties who have paid a judgment against themselves and their principal are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor and to enforce in equity the same liens of the judgment which the creditor would have enforced. Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 272, 23 Am. Dec. 206; Perkins v. Kershaw, 1 Hill, Eq. 844.

They are entitled to be substituted for the judgment creditor and may resort to lands fraudulently conveyed by his principal. Lyon v. Bolling, 9 Ala. 463, 44 Am. Dec. 444; McClung v. Betrne, 10 Leigh, 394, 34 Am. Dec. 789.

A surety who has paid a judgment against himself and principal is in equity entitled to be substituted for the creditor, and the lien of the judgment in his hands takes precedence of that of a subsequent judgment creditor. Fleming v. Beaver, 2 Rawle, 128, 19 Am. Dec. 629.

The court says in this case: "An actual assignment is unnecessary. The right of substitution is everything, and actual substitution nothing. By a fiction, to which we are indebted for nearly all our equitable jurisdiction, the law has made the assignment already; and, hence, the right of the party entitled by no means depends on the willingness of the creditor to transfer the security."

Where, on payment of the proceeds of sale into court for distribution, it appeared that a surety for the debtor had paid the judgment against the debtor, which was a lien on the land sold, under an agreement by which debtor was to pay a certain sum on a subsequent judgment lien on which the surety was also liable, the debtor's failure to perform relieves the surety from satisfaction of the prior judgment, and entitles him to have applied on it the money deposited in court as against a subsequent judgment lienor. McCormick's App. (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 471.

A surety who has paid a judgment against himself and taken an assignment of the separate judgment obtained against the principal for the same debt, is entitled to have it paid out of the estate of ment by him to the appellee Fraylor. The judgment in favor of Montgomery upon its face appears to be against all the makers as principals, and they are all primarily liable for its payment. If, in such case, the relationship of the judgment defendants is as it appears upon the face of the judgment to be, the payment by one of them would work a complete extinguishment and satisfaction of the judgment notwithstanding the agreement that it should be kept alive, and its assignment to Conrad. Montgomery v. Vickery, 110 Ind. 211, 8 West. Rep. 878; Klippel v. Shields, 90 Ind. 81. This, however, is not the question with which we have to deal; for it is alleged that Conrad was in fact a surety who had paid the debt of his principal, although such suretyship had not been judicially declared. It has been held that where this question has not been judicially determined in the original action a complaint may be filed after the term, and after the surety has paid the judgment, to adjudicate that question. Scherer v. Schutz, 83 Ind. 548; Richardson v. Housk, 45 Ind. 451; Montgomery v. Vickery, 110 Ind. 211, 8 West. Rep. 878; Knopf v. Morel, 111 Ind. 570, 10 West. Rep. 812; Duffy v. State, 115 Ind. 351; Kreider v. Isenbice, 123 Ind. 10.

The case of Manford v. Firth, 68 Ind. 83, is in many respects similar to this one. In that the deceased principal as a judgment debt and not as a simple-contract debt. Thomson v. Palmer, 3 Rich. Eq. 139; Goodyear v. Watson, 14 Barb. 481, contra, Dinkins v. Bailey, 28 Miss. 284.

Equity will not subrogate a surety who has paid a judgment to the rights of the judgment creditor after the surety has been defeated in an action at law against his principal for the money paid on the judgment. Fink v. Mahaffy, 8 Watts. 384.

A surety who pays a judgment against his principal has a right to an assignment of the judgment which equity will enforce. Creager v. Brengle, 5 Harr. & J. 234, 9 Am. Dec. 518.

A surety on an administrator's bond, who has paid a judgment recovered against the administrator by the administrator de bonis non, for failure to account, is subrogated to the right of the administrator de bonis non. Cowgill v. Linville, 2 West. Rep. 581, 20 Mo. App. 138.

A surety who executed a bond to escape execution on a judgment against himself and principal, and paid the bond, is in equity entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor under the judgment against the principal debtor. Dodd v. Wilson, 4 Del. Ch. 399.

The decree subrogating the surety to the rights of the judgment creditor is not reviewable at the instance of the latter. Springer v. Springer, 43 Pa. 518.

A surety who has paid a judgment against himself and principal, by resorting to equity may secure the benefit of the lien of the judgment which the creditor had, but as his claim rests upon a promise implied by law he must commence his action in equity before the Statute of Limitations runs against such a promise. Johnston v. Belden, 49 Iowa, 301; Neilson v. Fry, 16 Ohio St. 552.

An action for subrogation is an action for equitable relief and as such must be brought within ten years in Ohio. Neal v. Nash, 23 Ohio St. 483.

But the right given to a surety who is certified as such in the judgment, upon payment thereof "to stand in the place of and for all the rights and remedies against the principal debtor or debtors that the plaintiff therein had at the time of such payment" by the Act of 1863, continues till the judgment outlaws. Peters v. McWilliams, 36 Ohio St. 155.

Under statutes.

An indorser who pays for the principal debtor a judgment against them jointly is immediately subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor, by virtue of Miss. Code, 1880, §§ 998, 1140. Yates v. Mead, 68 Miss. 787.

The entry of satisfaction on the execution docket and judgment roll, without the indorser's direction, by simply writing the word "Settled," is not ground for refusing subrogation to an indorser who paid a judgment recovered against himself and the drawer of a draft. Ibid.

16 L. R. A.

Failure of the record to show the fact of payment by an indorser of a judgment recovered against himself and the principal debtor does not affect the indorser's right to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditors. Ibid.

In Pennsylvania provision is made by statute (Brightly's Purdon's Dig. p. 327, § 40) for the enforcement by the surety of the lien of a judgment which he has paid against the land of his principal and co-sureties.

In Indiana provision is made by statute by which a surety who has paid a judgment, by having the fact of suretyship determined, can have execution thereon for his use against his principal. Laval v. Rowley, 17 Ind. 38.

So, too, in Maryland. See Creager v. Brengle, 5 Harr. & J. 234, 9 Am. Dec. 518.

In Georgia by statute a surety who has paid a judgment or execution is entitled to the control of the same in order to remunerate himself out of his principal's property. Davenport v. Hardeman, 5 Ga. 580.

A surety who pays a judgment against himself and his principal has the right, although not certified as such in the record of the judgment as provided by Ohio Rev. Stat., § 5363, to be subrogated to the judgment creditor's place. Hill v. King, 48 Ohio St. —.

If the surety be certified as such in the record of the judgment it seems he may, without the decree of a court subrogating him to the rights of the judgment creditor, under Ohio Rev. Stat., § 5367, issue an execution thereon. Ibid.

If part of the sureties on an official bond pay the judgment thereon, and in due time file the affidavits required by Wis. Rev. Stat., § 3024, to preserve their rights of subrogation to the lien of the judgment upon real estate, their affidavits inure to the benefit of another surety who afterwards pays them his share of such judgment; and he need not also file such an affidavit. Mason v. Pierron, 68 Wis. 565.

Under the Louisiana Code a surety paying a judgment is by operation of law subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor and may issue execution thereon in the name of the creditor for his own benefit against his co-judgment debtors. Spring v. Beaman, 6 La. 63; Connelly v. Bourg, 18 La. Ann. 108, 79 Am. Dec. 568.

By statute in Georgia it is provided that a surety paying off a judgment by satisfying a court of common law that he was not interested in the consideration of the debt may have an order giving him control of the fi. fa. or a court of equity will compel the creditor to assign the judgment to him. McDougald v. Dougherty, 14 Ga. 674.

So, too, in Kentucky. Alexander v. Lewis, 1 Met. (Ky.) 407; Veach v. Wickersham, 11 Bush. 261.

J. G. G.

case a surety paid the amount due on a judgment against all the makers, there having been no adjudication of his suretyship, and took an assignment executed by the attorney of the judgment plaintiff. The assignment was invalid to transfer the legal title of the judgment, because of want of authority on the part of the attorney to make it. It was held that it was good as an equitable assignment, and as such was notice to all subsequent purchasers that it had not been satisfied, and that when the surety had his suretyship determined he was subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor. We regard this as decisive of the objection that the adjudication of suretyship must precede the assignment of the judgment by Conrad to the appellee. We are also of the opinion that Conrad, having paid the amount due on the judgment, and having the right, dependent upon having his suretyship afterwards determined, to hold the judgment under such assignment, was vested with property rights and interests in the same which he might sell and assign to another. Johnson v. Amana Lodge No. 82, 92 Ind. 150; Manford v. Firth, supra.

The equitable right of the surety to be subrogated to the rights and position occupied by the judgment creditor before payment of the judgment is very strong, and the courts are disposed to look with favor upon any arrangement, not in contravention of some rule of law, to place him in that position. Harper v. Keys, 43 Ind. 225; Arbogast v. Hays, 98 Ind. 26. The appellee having been brought into court by the appellant in an action challenging the validity of his claim to hold the judgment as a lien upon the land of Brenton, it became competent for him to have the suretyship of Conrad determined in the action. We have examined the evidence, and are satisfied that it fully sustains the finding of the court. The only objection pointed out in argument is the alleged failure to show notice to the appellant of the suretyship of Conrad, and of the payment of the judgment by him as such surety. If the appellant was a purchaser of real estate upon which the judgment would, if unsatisfied, be a lien, we would have a different question, and the cases of Dougherty v. Richardson, 20 Ind. 412, and Thomas v. Stewart, 117 Ind. 50, 1 L. R. A. 715, would be in point. The judgment did not appear to be satisfied. On the contrary, it bore upon its face an assignment to Conrad, and this, of itself, was sufficient to put the appellant upon inquiry as to the nature of his claim. Manford v. Firth, supra. It is not necessary to charge the appellant with notice that we should go to the extent that we would be authorized by the opinion in Downey v. Washburn, 79 Ind. 242.

Judgment affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Alonzo SANBORN

v.

DETROIT, BAY CITY & ALPENA R. CO., Pff. in Err.

(..... Mich.)

1. A private crossing of which the railroad company has knowledge, and which is used with its consent by men and teams in drawing logs, is not a railroad "crossing" within the meaning of 3 How. Stat., § 3976, at which signals by bell and whistle must be given.

2. Failure to give warning of the approach of a train to a private crossing which has been constructed with the company's consent for skidding logs along its track for

NOTE.—At what railway crossings signals of trains are required.

A street must be traveled as well as public to bring it within the provisions of a statute requiring signals where a railroad "shall cross any traveled public road or street;" it is not sufficient that it has been dedicated to the public. Byrne v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 12; Cordell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 536.

A crossing recognized by the railroad company as public for several years must be regarded as within the statute requiring signals at public crossings. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lee, 70 Tex. 496.

A road open and used by the public for a series of years, must be regarded as within a statute requiring signals at public highways. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Dillon, 24 Ill. App. 208.

A crossing where a highway goes over a railroad by bridge is held in Alabama not to be within the meaning of a statute requiring signals at a public road crossing, as the design of the statute is to warn and protect persons who would be in danger of being struck and run over by a train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 4 L. R. A. 710, 87 Ala. 708.

But on the contrary, in New York a crossing at which a railroad is elevated above the highway over which it passes upon a bridge so as to prevent any danger of collision between travelers on the highway and the engines is within the statute 16 L. R. A.

requiring signals at a railroad crossing, as the danger of frightening teams as well of actual collision is to be guarded against. People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 25 Barb. 190.

So in Pennsylvania, apparently without any regard to statutory provisions, the failure to give signals of the approach of a train to a crossing where a highway passes over a railroad by a bridge until the train is under a bridge, makes a question for the jury as to the negligence of the company in failing to give the signals sooner. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 259.

A switch crossing provided by a railroad and across its own ground for ingress to and egress from its depot is not a "traveled public road" within the meaning of a statute requiring signals of the approach of a train at such crossing. Hodges v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 71 Mo. 50.

But to approach such a crossing without any signal may constitute negligence as a matter of fact. Ibid.

A railroad junction is a regular stopping place within the meaning of a statute requiring signals of the approach of trains. Enaley R. Co. v. Chewing (Ala.) June 11, 1891.

Private crossings.

Failure to give signals of a train at a private crossing is not generally to be regarded as negli-transportation, is not negligence as matter of law.

3. One cannot act upon an agreement by a railroad company to give warning of the approach of a train to a private crossing, in determining his course of action at such crossing, if he knows that the warning is habitually omitted.

4. Failure to give the signals required by law at a railroad crossing renders the company liable for injuries in consequence thereof to a person lawfully crossing the track in that vicinity relying upon the performance by the railroad company of the duty to give such signals.

(May 13, 1893.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Alpena County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. C. Shields, with Mr. A. M. Henry, for appellant.

Mr. Frank Emerick, with Messrs. Turnbull & Dufos, for appellee.

Long, J., delivered the following opinion:

This cause was tried in the Alpena circuit court. Plaintiff had verdict and judgment. Defendant brings error.

The first count of the declaration alleges that "the defendant, at or before the time of committing the grievances, was a corporation organized and existing under the general railroad laws of this state, and was operating and running its railroad and business between Alger and the city of Alpena, portions of its road and tracks passing through Alpena county. And the said portions of its said road and tracks which passed through Alpena county were not, and never had been, fenced, and the public and plaintiff during all of this said time were invited and permitted by the defendant to bring timber and logs to its said track, and pile and skid said timber along the side of said track, so the same could be conveniently loaded upon the cars of defendant for transportation. And the plaintiff says that on the 18th of January, 1890, at the said county of Alpena, he was engaged, by the invitation of defendant, with a team of horses and log boat, in drawing logs and timber to defendant's said track at a point about one mile southwest of the city of Alpena, and was then and there piling and skidding the said timber along the side of defendant's said track, for the purpose of having the same loaded upon defendant's cars and transported to market. And plaintiff says that he had been thus engaged at work for three weeks previous to the said 18th day of January, and that in doing this said work had to use defendant's said track and road, and pass and repass over the same very frequently, and the defendant and its servants knew and had knowledge during all this time while plaintiff was doing his said work, as aforesaid, that plaintiff was thus using its said road and track and doing this said work as aforesaid. And the plaintiff says it was the duty of defendant, in running its trains and carrying on its said business, to have given warning to plaintiff in some manner of the approach of its trains, and not to have run its trains against and into plaintiff, while he was at work as aforesaid, yet the said defendant negligently and carelessly neglected its said duty on said 18th day of January, 1890, while plaintiff was at work as aforesaid, and while observing due care on his part, the defendant negligently and withgence. Hucker v. Railroad Co. 7 Ky. L. Rep. 761; Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. M. S. Op. 1833.

In the absence of a statute requiring it a railroad company is under no duty to give signals of the approach of its trains to a private or farm crossing although it approaches it around a curve. Annapolis, B. & S. L. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 72 Md. 33.

At a private crossing in the open country guarded by gates, where there is no station for passengers or freight, nor any side track, and where no trains ever stop, and where there is no custom to give signals, a railroad company is under no obligation to give signals of an approaching train. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Fronk, 67 Md. 389.

The public use of a foot-way as a crossing over a railroad track with the acquiescence of the company does not convert it into a public crossing within the meaning of a statute requiring signals of a train. Gurley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 104 Mo. 211; Northern Cent. R. Co. v. State, 64 Md. 113.

A place much used as a short cut over a railroad track between highways is not a crossing at which signals are required. Holmes v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 37 Ga. 593.

But the user by the public of a path crossing a railroad track, although it cannot impose on the railroad company the statutory duty to signal the approach of its trains at a public crossing, may make a failure to give signals negligence in fact. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Booser, 70 Tex. 530, 16 L. R. A.

Although a railroad company is not absolutely bound to ring a bell or blow a whistle as the train approaches a place where the public are notoriously in the habit of crossing the track, but which is not a public crossing, some notice and warning is required in order to constitute reasonable care. Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645.

So reasonable care may require signals of the approach of a train at a place which is not a public crossing, but where persons who cannot be regarded merely as trespassers and who are engaged in business at that place may be called upon to pass from one side of the road to the other. Owens v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 187.

A way kept open across a railroad track by the company's employees which the public are permitted to use as a highway requires the same care in handling trains across it as though it were a public way, except perhaps as to the statutory duty of ringing a bell or blowing a whistle on approaching it, and it is negligence to keep or shunt cars across it at great speed without any signal or warning with knowledge that a team is approaching the crossing. Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. & W. R. Co. 87 Mich. 400.

A private crossing treated as a public highway by a railroad company by establishing a custom to give the usual statute signals there must be regarded for that purpose as a public crossing at which the signals are required. Nash v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 51 Hun. 594. B. A. R.

out any warning whatsoever run and caused to be run one of its freight trains along its said track into and against said plaintiff and his said team and boat load of logs, while plaintiff was crossing defendant's said track, doing the work aforesaid, thereby violently knocking the plaintiff down, and throwing the said team and log boat and its load of logs violently over and against the plaintiff, thereby greatly and permanently injuring plaintiff."

The second count alleges "that the defendant, well knowing its said duty, and on the 18th day of January, 1890, at the county of Alpena, did not and would not observe the same, but, upon the contrary, carelessly, negligently and unlawfully so conducted its said business and managed and run its trains on its said road and along this portion of its said track when plaintiff was at work, as aforesaid, as not to give plaintiff any warning or notice of the approach of said train, and then and there, without sounding or giving any signal, alarm or notice to plaintiff that any of its trains were approaching, did with great force then and there run into, over, and against plaintiff with one of its said engines (known as No. 14) and train of cars, thereby permanently and greatly injuring plaintiff, and causing all the damage set forth in the first count of this declaration, which said portion of said first count is hereby made a part of this count."

The third count alleges: "The defendant was daily running its engines and trains, transporting logs and lumber to the city of Alpena; and plaintiff says at said time he was by the permission, invitation, and consent of defendant using a portion of defendant's said road and track near the city of Alpena in banking, skidding, and piling logs upon it for the purpose of having the same transported by defendant's said trains to the city of Alpena, and the defendant and its agents knew and had notice that plaintiff was so using its said tracks and premises, and was in the habit of giving plaintiff notice of the approach of the said trains or engines over that portion of its said track being used by plaintiff as aforesaid; and plaintiff says it was the defendant's duty to give him such notice at this said time, but the plaintiff says that the defendant recklessly and unlawfully neglected its said duty, and carelessly, at the said time, January 18, 1890, ran a train of cars over this said portion of its road where plaintiff was at work, as aforesaid, without any notice or warning to plaintiff whatsoever, and caused the said train of cars to run against, over, and upon plaintiff, causing all the damage and injury to him specially set forth in the first count of this declaration."

It appeared upon the trial that at the time of the injury complained of the plaintiff was hauling and skidding pine saw-logs along defendant's track, about four miles from the city of Alpena, in the woods, and from one half of a mile to a mile from any highway and railroad crossing. The logs were being taken off from an 80-acre tract of land, through which the railroad extended north and south, the logs being taken from the east side of the railroad track. The plaintiff was a man about thirty-seven years of age at the time of the injury. He was hauling out these logs for a Mr. Chapman, who had the job. Plaintiff had been at work two or three weeks prior to the injury. Others were there also, putting in logs alongside the railroad track, for the purpose of having them hauled by the defendant company to Alpena. Skidways had been made on both sides of the railroad track across this 80-acre tract, and the logs were being put on the skidways. For the purpose of crossing and re-crossing the railroad track with the boats upon which the logs were being hauled, Mr. Chapman had in three places across this tract of land placed planking upon either side of the railroad track, and had called the attention of the section foreman of the defendant company, who had examined them, to see whether they would interfere with the running of the trains. Defendant's road was used and operated as a commercial road, running freight and passenger trains thereon, as well as a logging road for the hauling of saw-logs along its line to Alpena and other points. The logs from these 80 acres were being put upon the skidways at the rate of from 100 to 200 per day. Upon either side of the railroad, and coming up to the defendant's right of way, the lands were covered with timber and brush, so that the railroad track could not be seen until one approached within two or three rods of it, when the track could be seen for a mile from where the plaintiff was employed. The plaintiff's haul of logs was only about 80 rods from the railroad, and he was perfectly familiar with the running of the trains over the road, as during the whole three weeks of his work he had been in the habit of crossing the track every day. The train by which the plaintiff was injured was a logging train. All trains had usually given the statutory signal by ringing the bell and sounding the whistle at Beck's farm crossing, which was from one half to three quarters of a mile north of the place where the plaintiff was working.

On the afternoon of January 18, 1890, at about two o'clock, the plaintiff claims that, having loaded three logs upon his boat, some 80 rods distant from the railroad track, he started to haul to the skidway across the track. Two of the logs were 20 feet in length, and the other 18 feet. He testified that he drove upon a little sharp hill, about three rods from the track, and stopped, and looked for the train; that he was then about a horse or two horses' lengths from the track; that he stepped forward of his horses, so he could see up and down the track; that he heard no sound of the approaching train, but that it was snowing and blowing so that he could only see a few rods in either direction; that he then went back to his load, stepped upon one of the logs, started his team forward, which took him from one to two minutes, and when his horses had so far crossed the track that their hind feet were between the rails and his log boat just entering upon the track, he heard a toot of the engine, looked up, and saw the train almost upon him; that he attempted to swing his horses around, and get them off from the track, and for that purpose stepped from the log upon which he was riding, picked up a switch, and struck them; that his horses were frightened by the toot of the engine, and stopped, when the engine struck between the horses and the boat, overturning the logs upon him, and injuring him. He also testified that while all the trains had been accustomed to give the statutory signal at "Beck's farm crossing," the train by which he was struck did not ring the bell or sound the whistle at that crossing. He testified upon that subject as follows: "Question. During all this time, state where the trains would give you the signals as they came from Alpena. Answer. That was at Beck's farm. Q. At this general railroad crossing? A. Yes. Q. State what they did when they came there. A. They generally rung the bell and blew the whistle. The passenger always did there. I never knew it to fail. Q. Did you ever know any other train, up to this time, but what did that? Mr. Shields: I object to that as incompetent and immaterial. The Court: I suppose it is the theory of the plaintiff that on this occasion they did not even do that for a mile distant from where he was working. Mr. Shields: I don't think it has any importance. (The last question being read by the stenographer, the witness answered it as follows:) A. No, I don't think I did; not that I noticed. I think they all blew at that crossing, for that is the crossing that I went by. When I heard that I always looked up. Q. State to the jury whether this train that came there that day on which you got hurt— State to the jury whether that sounded any bell, or gave any whistle up to this crossing, before they reached you. (Which question was objected to as incompetent and immaterial, and not covered by the declaration, by defendant's counsel. Declaration was then read. The court: You may take this. To which ruling defendant did except.) A. No sir, they did not,—that is, until they got right on top of me. Just as they got close to me they gave a little toot. Q. I am asking you about the crossing. Now, then, state to the jury if they had given you this signal or warning by tooting their whistle or ringing their bell at this crossing— State to the jury whether you would have been caught upon the track, or whether the injury would have been inflicted. Mr. Shields: I object to that as incompetent and inadmissible. The Court: You may show, if they had given any whistle or rang the bell at the crossing, whether he would have heard it. Q. You may state, if they had given you any signal at this crossing, whether you would have heard it. A. I could have heard it sure. I always heard it when they whistled there. Q. State to the jury in reference to you hearing the whistle and bells of the other trains that day at this crossing,—that day when they came down there. Mr. Shields: I object to that as incompetent. The Court: I think it is proper. You may have an answer to it. (To which ruling defendant excepted.) A. I did. Mr. Turnbull: Now I want to ask him the question I did before, because our statute is peculiar. It, in so many words, says that the railroad is liable for any injury that they may perpetrate by reason of their not giving those signals at this crossing. Now, then, I want to ask this witness the question whether, if they had given him this signal at this crossing, whether the injury would have taken place. Mr. Shields: Mr. Turnbull cannot make a lawsuit here contrary to the facts and contrary to his declaration. Injuries that happen upon a public highway are one thing; injuries that happen a mile or a half a mile away from the crossing are another thing. The Court: I think you may show that, if the signals had been given at the point that witness has designated, that if he was upon the track he could have withdrawn himself and team,—could have avoided the injury. Q. You may state whether, if those signals had been given at this crossing, at the place where you were on the track, or near the track where you were putting these logs, whether you could have avoided and would have avoided being on the track. Mr. Shields: I object to that as leading, incompetent, and inadmissible. The Court: Take an answer. Mr. Shields: I take an exception. A. Yes, sir; I would have avoided it." Plaintiff further testified that the afternoon freight usually passed that point about two o'clock, and that the log train by which he was injured usually passed there a little behind the freight train, sometimes a half hour and sometimes an hour later; but that on this day the log train came down ahead of the freight, and about an hour earlier.

Mr. Chapman was called by the plaintiff as a witness, and testified that this "Beck's crossing" was about three quarters of a mile from where plaintiff was injured; that he did not hear the ringing of the bell or the blowing of the whistle at this crossing, and the first he heard of the train was the sounding of the whistle at the place of the injury. He further testified that by spells that day the wind was blowing so desperately that you could not see three feet away, and then it would let up; that the wind did not interfere with the sound of the approaching train, and that one could hear the sound a good deal better that day.

The defendant introduced the evidence of the engineer, fireman, and brakeman on the train. They each testified that it was their custom to ring the bell and blow the whistle at "Beck's farm crossing," but that upon that particular day they were unable to state that this statutory signal was observed at that particular crossing any more than they could at any other crossing. The fireman testified that he looked out of the cab window, and saw the plaintiff about three car lengths from the engine; that at that time the plaintiff was within twelve or fourteen feet of the track, walking along the side of his boat; that he at once pulled the bell, and the engineer blew the whistle, when the plaintiff put the whip to the horses, and tried to run across the track, and when struck by the engine had got nearly across, and the boat had got on the track. This testimony was corroborated by the engineer and the brakeman. At the close of the testimony the defendant, by its counsel, requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "Fourth. Whether the bell was sounded or whistle blown on approaching the highway crossing, prior to reaching the place where Sanborn was, is of no importance in this case. Those signals are for persons who may be upon the highway." "Eighth. The plaintiff was aware, from his three weeks' work along the track, that trains were regularly running over the road, and it was his duty to care for himself, and avoid any collision. Ninth. It would be negligence for the plaintiff to go upon the track relying upon the fact that he did not bear any signals at the highway crossing or near there. (a) If the jury believe the plaintiff saw or heard the train coming before going himself near the track, he cannot recover. (b) If the jury believe that the plaintiff, if he had used ordinary care, would or should have known the train was coming, he cannot recover; and in determining this the jury may consider, with other facts, that the train was on schedule time." These requests the court refused to give in charge to the jury, and charged the jury as follows: "Now, the plaintiff further contends that on this day in question the defendant corporation, in running the train which is claimed to have done the injury in this case,—if any was caused,—disregarded the required signals at the public highway crossing, which has been described here to be within half a mile or three quarters of a mile this side—towards the city—from the point of the accident. It is claimed here that the defendant corporation—its employes—in running that train entirely omitted the danger signals at this public highway crossing. I say to you, gentlemen, it was a duty which the law prescribes and imposes upon the defendant corporation at that highway crossing to give the requisite signals by the ringing of the bell and the blowing of the whistle. This is a duty which the law of this state imposes upon every railroad corporation when they seek the right and franchise of laying down and operating a railway and running its trains over their track. Now, it is one of the theories of the plaintiff's case that, if this signal had been given, he would have been warned of the approach of this train which caused the injury. And I say to you, gentlemen, here, that if you find as a fact in this case that the danger signals were not given at the highway crossing, and that, in consequence of the failure upon the part of the defendant corporation to give such signals, this injury occurred, this accident occurred, which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff,—if it has resulted in any injury to him,—the corporation would be liable. It was the omission of a duty which the law prescribes, and if from the omission to perform that duty injury has resulted to this plaintiff, the defendant would be liable. It is further contended and claimed here upon the part of the plaintiff that no warning was given by the train in question which caused the injury as it approached these other crossings, which had been put down, as the plaintiff claims, with the knowledge and acquiescence of this defendant. Now, upon this branch of the case I instruct you, gentlemen of the jury, that, if the defendant corporation knew that a crossing had been made, if the defendant, by its officers or agents, were present, and acquiesced in and recognized the making of a crossing at the point where the plaintiff was injured, if you find that as a fact from the evidence in this case, if you find such to be the fact from the evidence in this case, I charge you that it would then be the duty of this defendant corporation, if they had any notice or knowledge that people were using such crossing and working thereabouts, to give reasonable warning of the approach of trains at that crossing. If that crossing was made there with their knowledge and acquiescence and consent, and they knew it was to be used by men and animals in drawing logs to their railway, and banking them along their railway, it was their duty, when approaching that point, to give such signals and such warning as would give persons to understand or know that a train was approaching, and that danger might be expected, so that they could avoid it." The objection to the testimony, the defendant's request to charge, and the charges as given, raise the important questions for determination here.

It is contended by plaintiff's counsel that the court was not in error in permitting him to show that the danger signals were not given at the highway crossing; that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the failure of the engineer to ring the bell or blow the whistle at this crossing; that the court was not in error in refusing the defendant's request to charge on that subject, and in charging the jury that, if they found that defendant neglected to give such signals, and the plaintiff was injured for such reason, the defendant would be liable. It is also contended that the court was not in error in charging the jury that it was the duty of the defendant, if it knew this crossing, made by Chapman, and used by the plaintiff to haul logs over,—knew that the crossing was made and used by plaintiff in putting in logs,—to give reasonable warning by the whistle or bell of the approach of the train.

Section 3875, 3 How. Stat., provides as follows: "A bell of at least thirty pounds weight, and a steam whistle, shall be placed upon each locomotive engine, and said whistle shall be twice sharply sounded at least forty rods before the crossing is reached, and after the sounding of the whistle the bell shall be rung continuously until the crossing is passed, under a penalty of one hundred dollars for every neglect; provided, that at street crossings within the limits of incorporated cities and villages, the sounding of the whistle may be omitted, unless required by the common council or board of trustees of such city or village; and the company shall be liable for all damages which shall be sustained by any person by reason of such neglect." Counsel for plaintiff contends that under these provisions of the statute defendant, to escape liability, should have given the signals at "Beck's Crossing," and in support of that proposition cites Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 62 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 718; Norton v. Eastern R. Co. 118 Mass. 366; Pollock v. Eastern R. Co. 124 Mass. 158; Palmer v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 88 Minn. 415; Cosgrove v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 88, 41 Am. Rep. 355; Voak v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 320; Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 47 Mich. 402; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 Mich. 582; Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 67 Mich. 525; Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 87 Mich. 400. An examination of these cases will show that not one of them bears out the claim made by plaintiff's counsel in the present case. All of the cases above cited are either where the persons were on the highway when injured, or are cases where some other negligence aside from the ringing of the bell or blowing of the whistle at the public highway crossing was charged. In the case of Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., supra, the plaintiff's wife, accompanied by their two minor children, was driving a horse on the highway towards the railway crossing. The road upon which she was driving was an east and west road and ran parallel with the railroad, and the railroad crossed the north and south highway near that point. As the train approached this crossing of the north and south highway, the engineer failed to ring the bell or blow the whistle. The train had passed through a deep cut near this crossing, and, emerging from it, frightened the horse driven by plaintiff's wife, causing him to run, overturning the buggy, killing his wife, and severely injuring his children. The statutes of Wisconsin provide that, before crossing any highway, except in cities and villages, with any locomotive, the whistle shall be blown 80 rods from such crossing, and the engine bell rung continuously from thence until the highway shall be crossed by the locomotive. It was contended in that case that the defendant company owed the duty to the plaintiff's wife and children to give the signals required by the statute of the approach of its train to the crossing, although she was not driving upon the highway which crossed the railroad track, but upon one parallel with the railroad. The court held that persons driving on the highway in the vicinity of the crossing were within the protection of the statute, and that it made no difference that the highway upon which the deceased was driving was one crossing on a level with the railroad, or whether it passed over or under or parallel with it, yet all persons using the highway for public driving were entitled to the protection that the statute affords, which compels the ringing of the bell and the blowing of the whistle at all highway crossings.

In Norton v. Eastern R. Co., supra, the plaintiff was driving his horse, hitched to a wagon, on the highway crossed by defendant's track at grade, and when within 86 feet of the track a train of cars passed over the crossing, frightening his horse, causing him to kick, breaking plaintiff's leg. It was claimed in that case that no bell was rung or whistle sounded to intimate the approach of the train. It was further claimed in that case that this was a flag station, and no flagman was there. It was also contended upon the part of defendant that, even if the signals by bell or whistle were omitted, and if, in consequence of this omission, the plaintiff approached nearer to the train than he would otherwise have done, the injury being caused by the fright of the horse, occasioned by this proximity, they were not to be held responsible therefor, because they contend that such signals are intended to protect travelers at highway crossings from actual collisions only, or at most from taking any position which involves imminent danger of collisions; and that this is the extent of the protection which the statute affords. It was held by the court that a fair construction of the statutes of Massachusetts (which are somewhat similar to ours) is that these signals are also intended for the benefit of those approaching crossings, for whom their warning would be valuable, and that any one thus situated, who is injured by the omission of that which the statute requires, has just grounds of complaint. The reason of this rule, as stated by the court, is that "at such crossings the railroads are permitted to interfere with the ordinary use of the public easement, and, from the nature of the motive power employed by them; and the difficulties attending its management, the exercise of their right temporarily excludes the ordinary traveler from the use to which he is at other times entitled. But, as this use may often be made with animals liable to be alarmed by the noises of the passing train, it is important for his safety that he should be informed of the approach of the train to the highway, in order that he may take proper measures against injury from such alarm. The signals are intended to give sufficient warning to enable him to do so." The same rule was laid down in Pollock v. Eastern R. Co., supra.

In Palmer v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., supra, one of the acts of negligence complained of was the omission to give the signal of the approach of the train by ringing a bell or blowing a whistle before reaching the crossing, as required by statute. That statute is somewhat similar to our own. The action was for killing plaintiff's cattle, then on a highway crossing. It was contended that these signals required by the statute were only intended as a warning to human beings, and not to cattle. The court held that the omission to give these signals might properly be shown, and that it was for the jury to say, under all the circumstances of the case, whether the giving of the signal would have prevented the accident.

In Cogswell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., supra, the negligence imputed to the defendant was the failure to ring the bell or sound the whistle. The deceased and one Barringer were killed by the collision of the horse and carriage, in which they were riding, with defendant's train, upon a public highway crossing. The question was one of contributory negligence, and there was no question in the case but that it was the duty of the defendant company to ring its bell and blow its whistle.

In Voak v. Northern Cent. R. Co., supra, the plaintiff was riding in a buggy, she herself driving. She approached the track with great circumspection, listening and looking for the train; but, in consequence of certain obstructions, she did not see the train until she was within three rods of the crossing. She could not turn around. Her horse became frightened and restive. She backed it about three rods, and then, at a loud blast of the whistle for the first time given at the crossing, her horse turned around, and she was thrown out of the buggy and injured. The statute of New York provides that, where the railroad should cross any traveled public road or street on the same level with the railroad, the engine bell shall be rung or whistle sounded at least eighty rods from the crossing, and that the bell shall be kept ringing, or that the whistle shall be sounded at intervals, until the engine shall have crossed the road; and for neglect to comply with these requirements the railroad company is made liable for the damages sustained by any person by reason of the negligence. It was stated by the court "that the purpose of this provision is the protection of persons actually crossing a railroad track, and also of persons approaching such a track,"—citing People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 25 Barb. 199, and Harty v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 42 N. Y. 471. "The warning is required to be given so that all persons lawfully using the public highway may keep out of danger at railroad crossings; danger not only from collisions at the crossings, but also from the fright of horses by passing trains. The law makes it negligence not to give the warning, and then imposes a liability for all the damages which can properly be attributed to such negligence.

In Hans v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., supra, the action was brought by the plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of Adrian Leenders, for causing the death of his intestate by negligently running one of its trains so as to collide with his team while he was crossing defendant's track in passing along the public highway. On the trial in the court below the case was taken from the jury by instructions of the judge that they should return a verdict for the defendant. The defense insisted that the only negligence shown was imputable to Leenders himself, who carelessly drove against the train, though he was fairly warned of its approach. It was said in the case that no signboard, as required by the statute, had been erected at this crossing; but the plaintiff gave evidence that his decedent was familiar with the crossing; that he not only knew about it, but had frequent occasion to pass over it. More than this, it was a part of the plaintiff's case that the decedent had the crossing in mind when he approached it on the occasion in question, and checked his team to listen for the signals of the approach of the train. It was said by this court that, in view of that fact and the showing of the plaintiff himself, it was of no importance in the case that the railroad company had failed to erect the caution board; that the duty to erect it was a duty to the public, and no private action could be grounded upon the negligence in his individual injury, though traced to it.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Miller, supra, the injury was one occurring upon the public highway. In that case the complaint was that the defendant company failed to ring its bell or blow its whistle in approaching the highway crossing, by reason of which the plaintiff was injured.

In Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co., supra, the injury was received upon the highway crossing.

It is upon these authorities that the plaintiff's counsel asks this court to give to the statute the broad construction contended for. We cannot agree with the learned counsel for the plaintiff that the statute was ever intended by the Legislature to be so construed. Similar statutes in other states have received a different construction by the court of those states. In Harty v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 42 N. Y. 468, the statute of New Jersey, similar to ours, was construed by the Court of Appeals of New York. The action was brought by the administratrix against the defendant company for negligently causing the death of her husband. The intestate was struck by one of the defendant's engines, and fatally injured, at a point about 200 feet east from a railroad crossing. The railroad runs easterly and westerly, and the highway crosses it northerly and southerly. The train was going westerly. There were three parallel tracks. Upon the south track there were two gravel trains, standing still; one just east of the crossing, and one partly across and west of it. There was a train from the west upon the middle track, which at the time of the accident had reached a point 1,500 feet west of the crossing, and the whistle upon that engine was blowing. The intestate, for three months, had lived within a quarter of a mile of the crossing, and in sight of the railroad. He worked in a slaughter house near the railroad, and about a quarter of a mile east of the crossing. He and many other persons working in the slaughter house had been in the habit of going to and from the slaughter house, passing over the railroad to and from the crossing. On the day of the accident he started from the slaughter house, to go home. He was passing along west upon the middle track, and it is supposed that he either saw the train coming east upon the same track, or heard its whistle. He stepped upon the north track, and just as he did so he was struck by a train going west upon the north track. The bell upon this train was not rung and the whistle not blown, and there was no signboard at the railroad crossing, as required by law. Earl, Ch. J., speaking for the court, said: "I shall assume that the intestate was lawfully upon the railroad at the time of the accident. There was sufficient evidence to authorize the jury to find an implied license to all persons working at the slaughter house to go upon the railroad between the highway crossing and the slaughter house; but I think the plaintiff should have been defeated at the circuit, both because of failure to show negligence on the part of the defendant and because the negligence of the intestate contributed to the accident. The only negligence alleged against the defendant was that its servants upon the engine did not ring the bell nor blow the whistle, as required by New Jersey law. The sole object of this law, it seems to me, was to protect persons traveling upon the highway at or near the crossing. In the language of Allen, J., in People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 25 Barb. 199, in reference to a similar law of this state: 'The hazards to be provided against are twofold: first, the danger of actual collisions at the crossing; second, that of damage by the frightening of teams traveling upon the public highway,' near the crossing. For the protection of such persons railroads were required to put up the signboard at the crossing, and to ring the bell or blow the whistle. The signboard was to be up 'so as to be easily seen by travelers;' and none of these precautions were required except where the railroad and highway crossed each other upon the same level, thus showing clearly that the law-makers had in mind only the danger to travelers upon the highway by collisions at crossings. Railroad companies were not required by this law to ring the bell or sound the whistle when the highway passed along the railroad, nor when it passed at an elevation over it or under it. Nor were they required to take this precaution for the protection of persons walking along the railroad. I conclude, therefore, that the intestate was not within the protection of this law; that the railroad company owed him no duty under the law to ring the bell or sound the whistle; but the duty of the railroad is not limited by the measure imposed by this law. They are bound to use at least ordinary prudence and diligence to avoid collisions with persons lawfully crossing their tracks, and hence at road crossings and in the streets of villages and cities, in the absence of any statute law they would be required to use these ordinary precautions to avoid accidents, and, if they omitted to do this, they would be liable to persons injured without their own fault by collisions."

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Bininger, 114 Ill. 88, it appeared that the trial court instructed the jury that, if the injury happened because of there being no flagman at the railroad crossing at Twenty-Fourth street, to give warning to those about to cross the street and railroad track of the approach of the train of cars to the crossing, contrary to the city ordinance, then the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The evidence upon the part of the defendant showed that at the time the plaintiff was struck he was traveling along and upon the railroad right of way for his own convenience. It was said by the court that, "under such circumstances plaintiff was not a lawful traveler upon the highway. To such a one the railroad company does not owe the duty in respect to a flagman. Flagmen are for the protection of persons crossing railroad tracks, and are not for the benefit of persons walking along and upon the railroad track, employing it as a foot-path. This instruction was calculated to mislead, and should not have been given."

In Ehwood v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 4 Hun, 808, it appeared that defendant's passenger train stood at its depot, in front of the platform for the use of passengers. The deceased (plaintiff's intestate) approached from the opposite side, without the knowledge of defendant or its employes, got upon a car from the side opposite the depot platform, found the car locked, got off from the platform of the car on the side from which he had approached it, and undertook to walk between the tracks to the end of the train, without looking behind him. He was struck by the working train approaching him from behind, and killed. It was held that the negligence of the intestate contributed to the injury; and that the fact that the working train did not give the signals required by the statute on crossing a street before reaching the depot was not an act of negligence towards the intestate, who was not on a street where he had any business to be.

In Bell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 72 Mo. 50, it appears that the court below gave the following instructions to the jury: "It is the duty of those in charge of locomotives and trains of cars in approaching crossings of the public street to ring the bell or sound the steam whistle at the distance of eighty rods therefrom, and to keep ringing the bell continuously, or sound the steam whistle at intervals, until the train shall pass over such public street; and if the jury believes from the evidence that in this case, as the train approached and passed over the public street in the town of Meadville, the persons in charge thereof did not ring the bell or blow the whistle as above required, and that the boy, Athan Bell, was struck by the locomotive and killed by reason of said omission, and without fault on his part, then the jury will find their verdict for plaintiff." The court in speaking of these instructions, said: "The third instruction is also objected to on the ground that it had nothing to do with the case. We concur in this view, although its impropriety alone would scarcely justify a reversal. The statute which requires the bell to be rung and the whistle sounded was for the benefit of persons at the railroad crossing or approaching it; but the boy killed in this case was not on the road or at the crossing, but forty or sixty feet west of it."

In East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Feathers, 10 Lea, 108, the action was brought by the husband to recover damages for injuries received by the wife by her horse being frightened by a train on defendant's track. She was riding her horse on a public highway parallel with a railroad, which was crossed by another highway. The noise of a passing train frightened her horse, which threw and injured her. It was held that the statute of Tennessee did not impose the duty on the railroad company to ring the bell or sound the whistle for the protection of any persons except those crossing or about to cross the railroad track on a public highway. Subsection 2 of the Act provides that signs should be placed by the overseer of any public road at crossings, and marked, "Look out for the cars when you hear the whistle or bell." Subsection 8 provides: "On approaching any crossing so distinguished, the whistle or the bell of the locomotive shall be sounded at the distance of one fourth of a mile from the crossing, and at short intervals till the train has passed the crossing." See also O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211.

The law is therefore well settled that a traveler upon the highway has a right to assume that a railway company will thus perform its statutory duty; and one on a highway, when he approaches a railroad crossing, and can neither see nor hear any indications of a moving train, is not chargeable with negligence for assuming that there is no train sufficiently near to make the crossing dangerous: One in such a position has a right to assume that a railroad company in handling their cars will act with appropriate care; and that the usual signals of approach will be reasonably given. The learned circuit judge, in the present case, by the admission of testimony, the refusal to charge as requested, and in the charge as given, laid down the rule as above stated, and held the defendant to the same degree of care as if the plaintiff were on a public highway; and not only that, but he gave to the plaintiff all the rights which pertain to one approaching a track on a public highway, and applied the rule that the plaintiff had the right to rely upon the defendants giving these signals at Beck's crossing, as well as the crossings put in by Chapman. The theory of the plaintiff upon which the case was tried was that defendant omitted to give these danger signals at Beck's crossing, and that such omission was the cause of the injury. This was the theory upon which the court submitted the case to the jury. Upon the trial the court remarked to counsel: "I suppose it is the theory of the plaintiff that they did not even do that [give the signals] for a mile distant from where he was working." If this can be claimed as negligence as matter of law, and for the reason that the statute requires such signals to be given, then at every farm crossing, or at any other place where people may lawfully work upon or across a railroad track, such signals must be given at the nearest highway crossing, and a failure to do so would be negligence, which any party injured might allege as a ground of action. This question has never before been presented to this court. After a full review of the cases arising in the courts of other states under somewhat similar statutes, it appears that the whole weight of authority is against the claim made by plaintiff's counsel. In fact, but one case has been found (and I doubt if any other can be found) where the court of last resort of any state has given such a construction as claimed here to a statute similar to ours. On the contrary, the courts of New York, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and other states, where the question has been passed upon, have uniformly held that the statute can be invoked only in aid of those actually upon the highway. The case referred to as holding a contrary doctrine is Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (Ky.) 18 Ky. L. Rep. 714, in which the rule is laid down that "persons lawfully using a private crossing are entitled to the benefit of signals which they know it is the duty and custom of the railroad to give at the public crossings." This case has been called to my attention since the argument of the present case, and fully sustains the claim made by plaintiff's counsel. The learned judge who wrote the opinion does not cite a single case to sustain the doctrine laid down by him, but contents himself with a statement from 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 917: "That there is a conflict of authority on the question; the doctrine of some of the courts being that only travelers on a highway or street approaching or using a crossing can complain of omission to give required signals; while by others it is held that all persons in the vicinity of a public crossing, whether intending to use it or not, are entitled to the benefit of signals, and have a right to rely upon their being given." An examination of the cases cited by this author as supporting the last proposition will show that there is no conflict of authority in the cases upon the proposition that one who is not traveling along or in the highway at the time of the injury complained of cannot invoke the aid of the statute; and the only disagreement between the courts of the several states has been whether these statutes applied to others on the highway who were crossing or about to cross the railroad track. I do not think that the author intended to be understood that there was a conflict of opinion on the question whether a person who was not on the highway at all at the time of the injury could invoke the aid of the statute, but that the disagreement had been whether these statutes applied to persons who were on the highway and not actually crossing or attempting to cross the railroad track, and could not aid one who, though on the highway, was not crossing or attempting to cross the track, but traveling along near the crossing; as, for instance, the cases where recovery has been permitted for frightening horses, some of the courts holding that the statute was intended to prevent only actual collisions. Our statute requires the ringing of the bell or sounding of the whistle at least 40 rods before the crossing is reached. This fixes a reasonable distance for warning to be given before the train reaches the highway crossing; and it cannot be assumed that the Legislature intended that one at any other place than on the highway might claim the right to have it sounded; and as to such person, neither at common law nor under the statute is any duty fixed upon the railroad company to ring the bell or blow the whistle at least 40 rods before the crossing is reached.

16 L. R. A.

Upon the second proposition it is claimed that, if the defendant company consented to the placing of those crossings there, and knew that logs were being hauled along its tracks and across them, it was defendant's duty to give some warning of the approach of its trains, either by ringing the bell or blowing the whistle. It is undoubtedly true that, where a railroad company invites parties to bring freight to it, while so doing it owes the duty of reasonable care, the same as a person who expressly or by implication invites persons upon his premises assumes the duty of warning all who may accept the invitation of any danger in coming of which he knows, but of which they are not aware. It appears, however, that the plaintiff knew of the running of trains over this road. He knew of the regular passenger trains, the freight trains, and the irregular running of this log train. He knew a train might pass there any moment. He looked for one, stopped his team, went forward of the horses, and claims he looked and listened. It is difficult to discover in what the defendant company was negligent. If it were not called upon to ring the bell or blow the whistle at Beck's crossing so far as the plaintiff was concerned, what duty did it neglect? What duty did it owe to the plaintiff? The claim is made that, if the company were not called upon to ring the bell or blow the whistle at Beck's crossing, they were called upon to give these danger signals at the crossings made by Chapman, or to do some other act for the protection of the plaintiff. Admitting that the plaintiff was rightfully upon defendant's grounds, placing these logs there, and that Chapman had been permitted to place these crossings for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to haul the logs over, yet the defendant was under no obligation to run its trains other than in the ordinary way. If it was the duty of the defendant to have given these danger signals at this point because the plaintiff may have been about to haul logs across the track, it might as well be held the duty of the company to give these danger signals at every farm crossing, or other points on its road where people are permitted to cross the track or travel along it as a footway. Persons so using the railroad track have no right to claim that the company shall give danger signals at such points. It would be requiring of railroad companies a duty which would be impossible of observance at all times. Highway crossings are very easy to be discovered by those in charge of the engine. Signboards are erected, and the engineer and fireman get familiar with their location. At other places along the route of the road, such as farm crossings, and places where men may be at times temporarily engaged, or where a footway is used by permission, there may be no distinguishing marks. New men may be upon the engines. The work may have just commenced, and the place not known to those in charge of the engine or train. If these signals were to be required of this log train, they would be required of the freight and passenger trains, and the company would have to respond in damages if they were not observed. I can discover nothing in the case which shows any neglect of duty on the part of the railway company or its servants. In fact, the plaintiff testifies that he relied upon the signals at Beck's crossing. He does not claim that the company had been accustomed to give any signals at the Chapman crossings, or that he in any manner relied upon its giving such signals. It is apparent that the engineer and fireman on the engine did all in their power to prevent the accident as soon as the plaintiff was discovered on the track. In Sutton v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 246, the plaintiff's intestate was on the track of defendant company, not on a public highway. He was not a trespasser there, but there by license of defendant. It was said that, in order to recover, some breach of duty on the part of the defendant must be shown. The claim of negligence was in letting some loose cars back upon the plaintiff's intestate without warning of danger. It was held that no negligence was shown. I think also that the plaintiff, by his own showing, was guilty of the grossest carelessness. He admits he stopped one or two horses' lengths from the track. He went in front of his horses, and says he looked and listened, but that the snow was blowing so that he could not see more than three or four rods up the track. He went back and started his team, which took from one to two minutes. He stepped upon one of the logs, and drove upon the track. He did not stop when the horses reached the track, though a few minutes before he was looking for a train. The situation there, considering the blowing of the snow, was such as required the greatest care on his part. Not only his own safety, but the safety of the persons who might be upon the passing train, required this. He should have stopped when his horses reached the track, and, before driving them on to the track, should have gone forward upon the track and looked and listened; and, if he could see only a rod or two up the track on account of the blinding snow, he might well have hesitated about driving across with such a load as he had upon his boat. The defendant's requests set out here should have been given. Some errors are alleged in the admission of testimony which we do not deem it important to discuss.

For the errors pointed out the judgment below will be reversed, with costs, and a new trial ordered.

16 L. R. A.

Grant, J., concurred with Long, J.

Montgomery, J., delivered the following opinion:

The plaintiff adduced testimony tending to show that he was working hauling and skidding pine logs along the defendant's track, at a point where a crossing had been made over the defendant's track for the purpose of hauling logs across; that defendant's agents and servants knew of this track, and that it had been in use for some three or four weeks by plaintiff and others, and that the defendant's trains had daily passed over this portion of the road. The testimony also showed that there was a public highway crossing about three quarters of a mile from where the plaintiff was injured, known as "Beck's crossing." The plaintiff, being upon this temporary crossing with a boat-load of logs, drawn by a span of horses, having gone upon the track, as he claims, after stopping to look and listen, and not being able to see any train coming, was struck by the locomotive of a log train on the defendant's road and received injuries, for which he recovered damages. The evidence also showed that the day was stormy, snow flying in the air, and that it was difficult to see any great distance. Two grounds of negligence were alleged against the defendant, and, under the instructions of the circuit judge, the jury were permitted to find against the defendant upon either ground. The first ground of negligence averred was the omission to ring the bell and blow the whistle at the private crossing. The learned circuit judge instructed the jury: "If this crossing, testified to by Chapman as having been made by him for the purpose of use in the hauling of those logs, if it was made with the knowledge and consent or acquiescence of the defendant railroad company, and they knew . . . that it was to be used, and was being used, as a crossing, the law would impose upon them the duty of giving such warning by giving signal, either by ringing the bell or blowing the whistle, as would fairly warn people in the use of it of approaching trains; and if they failed to do so it would be negligence on their part." The second ground of negligence relied upon was the failure of the defendant's agents to blow the whistle for Beck's crossing, as required by statute. It was clearly error for the circuit judge to instruct the jury, as he did, that the failure to give a signal of the approaching train at the private crossing was negligence as matter of law. Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Dill, 23 Ill. 264; Rorer, R. R. § 1012. It was claimed by the plaintiff that the use of this private crossing was such an implied invitation on the part of the railroad company, or at the least amounted to a license to use it for a crossing. But, if so, it was a limited license, the limitations being understood as well by the plaintiff as defendant's servants. The plaintiff's testimony tended to show that the defendant's train passed this point every day at about the hour of this accident, and that there was no custom of giving any signal at such private crossing. How, then, could the plaintiff be permitted to maintain that he was there under an invitation to cross, with the assurance that warning would be given? On the contrary, if there had been no custom to give such warning, the plaintiff must have been fully assured that no such duty had been undertaken by the company, and, this being so, it should be held that the company had never invited or licensed the plaintiff to make use of this crossing in any such sense as to have assumed the burden or duty of running its trains past this point in any other than the usual way. A discovered and known omission of an alleged duty cannot constitute a proximate cause of an injury which results to one who proceeds, with knowledge that such alleged duty will not be observed, to perform an act which is only safe on the assumption that such duty would be attended to. As is very tersely stated by Mr. Bishop, in his work on Non-Contract Law: "If one discovers another to have been negligent, he must take directions accordingly." Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, § 446; Cooper v. Central R. Co. 44 Iowa, 134.

The question remains as to whether the failure of the defendant to give the statutory warning at Beck's crossing was such a neglect of duty as would, in the absence of contributory negligence on his part, entitle the plaintiff to recover. Section 3375, § How. Stat., provides as follows: "A bell of at least thirty pounds weight, and a steam whistle, shall be placed upon each locomotive engine, and such whistle shall be twice sharply sounded at least forty rods before the crossing is reached, and after the sounding of the whistle the bell shall be rung continuously until the crossing is passed, under a penalty of $100 for every neglect; . . . and the company shall be liable for all damages which shall be sustained by any person by reason of such neglect." It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the omission of this duty cannot support an action on behalf of one who was not injured at the crossing; and there are not wanting cases which sustain this contention, under statutes somewhat similar to the one under consideration. We do not, however, think that this is the proper construction to be placed upon this statute. The statute imposes a positive duty upon the railroad company to sound its whistle and to ring its bell at a certain point. It is a well-known fact that not only those about to cross the railroad track, but those in the immediate vicinity, lawfully there, are frequently induced to rely upon the performance of this statutory duty. If they do so, and without fault of their own suffer an injury, we see no reason why the statute should not be so construed as to protect them. We think the true construction to be that, while a failure to give a signal required by law will not avail a trespasser in an attempt to charge the road, one lawfully in a position where such negligent omission may constitute the direct and proximate cause of the injury to him is entitled to aver such negligent act as the basis of the action. In Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 63 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 718, it was held that the failure to give the crossing signal is a negligent act, of which one may complain who is injured by reason of such failure while driving parallel to the track near the crossing, from the fright of his horses. In People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 25 Barb. 199, it was held that the hazards to be provided against by the enactment of such a statute are twofold: first, the danger of collision at crossing; second, that of damage by frightening of teams traveling upon a public highway near the crossing. And in the late case of Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., (Ky.) 18 Ky. L. Rep. 714, it is distinctly held that persons lawfully using a private crossing are entitled to have the benefit of signals which they know it is the duty or custom of the railroad to give at a public crossing. In Norton v. Eastern R. Co. 118 Mass. 386, it was said: "When the Legislature has by statute directed that at particular points of their road they shall take especial precautions to notify those using the highways of the approach of a train, we cannot say that such precautions were intended solely for the benefit of certain travelers, even if they constituted the most numerous class, or that most likely to be endangered, if there were others also rightfully using such highways who would be liable to be injured by the neglect of them." And in Wakefield v. Connecticut & P. R. R. Co. 37 Vt. 330, it was said: "While such accidents are, in the main, likely to happen to persons approaching and about passing such crossing, yet they are not confined to such persons; and we think it would be an unwarrantable restriction of this provision of the statute to hold that the duty thereby imposed has reference only to persons approaching or in the act of passing the crossing. In our judgment, that duty exists in reference to all persons who, being lawfully at or in the vicinity of the crossing, may be subjected to accident and injury by the passing of engines at that place. The gist of each of these decisions quoted from Massachusetts and Vermont is that one lawfully in a position in which the failure to observe the statutory duty might work him an injury has the right to complain of such failure on the part of the company. An attempt has been made to distinguish those of the cases cited which hold that one upon a public highway, though not intending to cross, may rely upon the performance of the statutory duty by the company, and the case at bar; but in my judgment the cases are not to be distinguished in principle. The only possible ground upon which the company is held liable for this omission of duty to one traveling in a public highway parallel to the railroad is that he is lawfully there, and, having knowledge that the railroad company is required by law to give these statutory signals, he is justified in relying upon the performance of that duty, and that the omission to perform the duty is the proximate cause of the injury resulting to him. So, in the case at bar, the plaintiff occupied such a relation to this defendant company. He was lawfully upon this crossing. He knew that the engineer was required by law to sound his whistle, and he relied upon the performance of that duty. The proximate cause of the injury might very properly have been found by the jury to have been this neglect of duty. Every element that is present in an action by one upon the public highway, not intending to cross, is present under the plaintiff's theory in the present case; and the important question presented is whether we will follow the line of decisions which limits the liability of the company for injuries resulting through its failure to give signals to those about to cross or actually crossing the track at the public highway crossing. We think the better rule is that laid down by the Wisconsin and Kentucky courts, in the cases of Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. and Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. above cited.

Morse, Ch. J., and McGrath, J., concurred with Montgomery, J.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of North Carolina, Appl.

W. T. CUTSHALL.

(.....N. C.)

1. Contracting a bigamous marriage in one state cannot be made a crime in another state which can be punished in the latter in the absence of any illegal cohabitation there although the persons come within the state.

2. Cohabitation within the state under a bigamous marriage contracted in another state is not punishable under Code, § 988, which attempts to make it a crime to contract a bigamous marriage in another state.

(May 3, 1892.)

APPEAL by the state from a judgment of the Criminal Court for Mecklenburg County quashing an indictment charging defendant with a violation of Code, § 988, defining and punishing bigamy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Theodore F. Davidson, Atty. Gen., for the State.

No appearance for appellee.

Avery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Statute (Code, § 988) provides that "if any person, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place in the state of North Carolina or elsewhere, every such offender, and every other person counselling, aiding, or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of a felony, and imprisoned in the penitentiary or county jail for any term not less than four months, nor more than ten years, and any such offense may be dealt with, tried, determined, and punished in the county where the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody as if the offense had been actually committed in that county." The general rule is that the laws of a country

"do not take effect beyond its territorial limits, because it has neither the interest nor the power to enforce its will," and no man suffers criminally for acts done outside of its confines. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 7th ed. §§ 109, 110; People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161, 8 Mich. 385, 74 Am. Dec. 703; State v. Barnett, 88 N. C. 616; State v. Brown, 2 N. C. 100, 1 Am. Dec. 548. In the case of State v. Ross, 76 N. C. 242, 22 Am. Rep. 678, the court said: "Our laws have no extraterritorial operation, and do not attempt to prohibit the marriage in South Carolina of blacks and whites domiciled in that state;" thus recognizing the principle, generally accepted in America, that a state will take cognizance, as a rule, only of offenses committed within its boundaries. Among the exceptions to this general rule are the cases where one, being at the time in another state or country, does a criminal act, which takes effect in our own state; as where one who is abroad obtains goods by false pretenses, or circulates libels in our own state, and contrary to our laws, or from a standpoint beyond the line of our state fires a gun or sets in motion any force that inflicts an injury within the state for which a criminal indictment will lie. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, App. § 110; Ham v. State, 4 Tex. App. 659; Cambioso v. Maffett, 2 Wash. C. C. 98.

Persons guilty of such acts are liable to indictment and punishment when they venture voluntarily within the territorial bounds of the offended sovereignty, or when, under the provisions of extradition laws or the terms of treaties, they are allowed to be brought into its limits to answer such charges. As a rule, the validity of marriages contracted in any foreign country must be determined by the courts of another nation with reference "to the law of the country wherein they exchange the mutual consent to be husband and wife, which consent alone is by the law of nature perfect marriage." 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 855, 856; State v. Ross, supra. Such marriages may be declared

NOTE.—The doctrine of the above case so fully accords with the current of authorities as to the lack of jurisdiction of a state court to try a person for a crime committed in another state or country that the most noticeable thing in the case is the assertion by the dissenting judge of the broad claim of power in a state to make the mere presence in the state of a person who has committed a crime in another state sufficient to constitute an offense against the state if so declared by statute. But without regard to other questions in this connection it may be asked whether so far as this might be attempted in respect to citizens of the United 16 L. R. A.

States, it would not be a violation of their right under the federal Constitution to pass through a state. Crandall v. Nevada, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 35, 13 L. ed. 745.

For one phase of the kindred question of larceny by bringing stolen goods into a state, see State v. Telf (Mont.) 15 L. R. A. 722.

For another kindred question, of the right to try a man for a homicide where death resulted within the state although the fatal stroke was given in another state, see Ex parte McNeely (W. Va.) 15 L. R. A. 223.

unlawful, not simply because they are contrary to the law of the state in which the question arises, but for the reason that they fall under the condemnation of all civilized nations, like marriages between persons very nearly related or those that are polygamous. 1 Bishop. Mar. & Div. §§ 857-862. So a foreigner, not accredited to another government as a representative of his own nation, is subject to the law of the country in which he may travel or establish a temporary domicile, and may be tried in its tribunals for any violation of its criminal laws while within its territorial limits. Wheaton (in his treatise on International Law § 120, note 77) says: "In Great Britain, France, and the United States, the general principle is to regard crimes as of territorial jurisdiction. . . . The question whether a state shall punish a foreigner for a crime previously committed abroad against that state or its subjects also depends upon its system respecting punishing generally for crimes committed abroad; Great Britain and the United States respecting strictly the principle of the territoriality of crime." While, in our external relations with other nations, our federal head, the United States, is the only sovereign, for the purpose of internal government such portion of the sovereign power as has not been surrendered to the general government is retained by the states. 11 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 440, and notes.

In the exercise of their reserved powers, especially in the execution of the criminal law, questions arise which are settled and determined either according to the principles of international law or by analogy to them. It is contended that nothing but comity between nations, in the absence of express provisions of treaties, prevents one nationality from making laws to punish persons who commit criminal offenses in another country, and afterwards come within its territory and that, admitting this principle to be correct, there can be no treaty stipulation, and there is in fact no constitutional inhibition, that restricts the Legislature of one of our internal sovereignties from enacting laws to punish a person who comes into its domain, so as to be apprehended there, for a crime committed in a sister state. Article 39 of the confirmatory charter granted by Henry III. provided that "no freeman should be taken or imprisoned, or disseised of freehold or liberties or free customs, or be outlawed or exiled, or any otherwise destroyed, nor will we pass upon him or condemn him, but by lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land." In the formal Declaration of Independence the king of Great Britain, after being charged with many violations of fundamental principles and invasion of common rights, was arraigned before the world "for depriving us in many cases of trial by jury; for transporting us beyond the seas to be tried for pretended offenses." This language evinces the purpose of our representatives to risk their lives and their fortunes, in part, at least, to secure, not simply the ancient right of trial by jury, but trial by a jury of the vicinage, within easy reach of all evidence material for the vindication of the accused, where the charge might prove unfounded upon a fair investigation. During the same year these principles were embodied in the Declaration of Rights by the colonial Congress, in what now constitutes sections 18 and 17 of article 1 of the Constitution, which are as follows: "Sec. 18. No person shall be convicted of any crime but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful men." "Sec. 17. No person ought to be taken, imprisoned, or disseised of his freehold, liberties or privileges, or outlawed or exiled, or in any manner deprived of his life, liberty, or property, but by the law of the land." Not only has section 18 been construed to guarantee to every person (whether a citizen of this state or of another Commonwealth) a trial by jury in all cases, which were so triable at common law, (such as an indictment for a felony,) but a trial by his peers of the vicinage, unless, after indictment, it should appear to the judge necessary to remove the case to some neighboring county, in order to secure a fair trial. Judge Cooley says, (Const. Lim. *319, 320): "Any of the incidents of a common-law trial by a jury are essential elements of right. The jury must be indifferent between the prisoner and the Commonwealth, and to secure impartiality challenges are allowed, both for cause, and also peremptory, without assigning cause. The jury must also be summoned from the vicinage where the crime is supposed to have been committed; and the accused will thus have the benefit on his trial of his own good character and standing with his neighbors, if these he has preserved, and also of such knowledge as the jury may possess of the witness who may give evidence against him. He will also be able with more certainty to secure the attendance of his own witnesses." Kirk v. State, 1 Coldw. 344; Armstrong v. State, Id. 338; State v. Denton, 6 Coldw. 539. This strong language is used in commenting upon the clause, which, in substantially the same terms, guarantees the right of trial by jury in all serious criminal prosecutions in every one of the states.

Mr. Charles A. Dana, published some years since an article in his paper, the New York Sun, which it was claimed was libelous in its strictures upon the conduct of a public official at Washington city; and Judge Blatchford, upon his being arrested in New York by virtue of a warrant of a United States commissioner and brought to Washington, heard the facts, after granting a writ of habeas corpus, and discharged the prisoner. Re Dana, 7 Ben. 1. Commenting upon this case, Judge Cooley said: "It would have been a singular result of a revolution, where one of the grievances complained of was the assertion of a right to send parties abroad for trial, if it should have been found that an editor might be seized anywhere in the Union, and transported by a federal officer to every territory in which its paper might find its way, to be tried in each in succession for offenses which consisted in a single act not actually done in any of them." If every state of the American Union should enact a statute identical in its terms with that under which the indictment is drawn, (Code, § 988,) the enforcement of these laws might lead to just such a series of prosecutions as the learned jurist seemed to consider so absurd, outrageous, and palpable a violation of a fundamental right asserted in our own national Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence. The defendant might travel through any or all of the states, and be apprehended or in custody in any one or all of them, and thus subject himself to indictments for an offense not committed in any jurisdiction where he is tried. Every state has embodied in its organic law the guaranty that no person shall be taken or imprisoned, etc., "but by the law of the land;" and this term Judge Cooley treats as synonymous with "due process of law." Const. Lim. *353. "Due process of law" not only requires that a party shall be properly brought into court, but that he shall have the opportunity when in court to establish any fact which, according to the usages of the common law or the provisions of the Constitution, would be a protection to him or his property." Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. 460, note, *869; Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. 498, 7 Am. Rep. 558. In Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 16, 25 Am. Dec. 677, Chief Justice Ruffin said: "The clause itself [art. 1, § 17, Const.] means that such legislative Acts as profess in themselves directly to punish persons, or to deprive the citizen of his property, without trial before the judicial tribunals, and a decision upon the matter of rights as determined by the laws under which it vested, according to the course, mode, and usages of the common-law as derived from our forefathers, are not effectually 'laws of the land' for those purposes." After the federal Constitution had been ratified the people of the states, with the recollection of the flagrant invasions of their rights by transporting freemen abroad to be tried for "pretended offenses" still fresh, amended it so that, says Ordonaux, "the crime and its punishment are attached to the jurisdiction within which it was committed." Ordonaux, Const. Leg. 259; U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, cl. 3. These amendments apply only to federal tribunals, but the fact that they were prohibited from trying, except in the state where the crime should be committed, is evidence of a purpose to put it beyond the power of Congress to have a citizen tried for a criminal offense except by a jury of the vicinage, and at a point not so remote as to deprive him of the benefit of his witnesses. Another amendment (art. 4, § 2, cl. 2) supplements that already referred to, and shows by its terms that the purpose in enacting it was to definitely localize the forum of every crime committed by a person not in the land or naval forces, by providing for the extradition of criminals on demand of the governor "to the state having jurisdiction of the crime." It was evidently contemplated by the framers of the Constitution that ordinarily there would be but one state where a crime could be properly said to have been committed, and whose courts would have cognizance of it. It was natural that they should cling to the old territorial rule, which limited the jurisdiction to the courts of the county.

The state of South Carolina was the sovereign whose authority was disregarded when the bigamous marriage was celebrated. If the defendant married a second time in South Carolina or elsewhere outside of North Carolina, the act had no tendency at the time to affect society here, nor can that unlawful conduct be punished as a violation of our criminal laws. On the other hand, the completed act of entering into a second marriage in a neighboring state is not analogous to the cases where a mortal wound is inflicted in one state, and the wounded man lingers and dies from its effects within the limits of another state during the next ensuing twelve months. It is needless now to discuss the question whether, on account of the fact that the ultimate effect of the wound is the resulting death, the state in which the death occurs in such cases should not be held to have common-law jurisdiction to try for murder, since nearly all of the states have enacted statutes providing for such trials, and some of them declared such enactments essential. Com. v. Macdon, 101 Mass. 1. 100 Am. Dec. 89; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, §§ 112-117. Our statute is a re-enactment of that passed in England in the assertion of the almost omnipotent powers of the parliament, yet, as we have seen by reference to Whartons' statement of the rule adopted in England as to jurisdiction of crime, the courts of that country would, never have held "elsewhere" to refer to bigamy committed by citizens of other nationalities, but to second marriages contracted by her own subjects, while a former wife or husband was living. Parliament is not, of course, prohibited by any constitutional provision from passing an act which makes a particular offense, contrary to the general rule, indictable and punishable, not only in a county of England other than that in which it is committed, but when committed in a different dominion of the empire or a foreign land. Walls v. State, 32 Ark. 568; 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 1685. The powers of Congress on this subject are well defined in the Constitution, and the powers of the states are limited by the clause we have cited and others, as well as by the nature of our government, containing, as we look upon it, internally as many sovereignties as there are states. Our statute was not amended so as to incorporate the English idea until the Code was enacted in 1883; but it seems that, in most of those states where attention was attracted to the subject at an earlier date, the Legislatures doubted their power to make the act done in another state punishable as a felony, merely because the offender placed himself within reach of criminal process of their own states. But, according to the express terms of their statutes, the offense was not the act of unlawfully marrying a second time, but the continuous bedding and cohabiting afterwards. Com. v. Bradley, 2 Cush. 533; Brecker v. State, 59 Ala. 102; State v. Palmer, 18 Vt. 570. The statute of the state of Missouri by its very terms seems to amount to a recognition of the principle which we insist is the correct one. It provides that "every person having a husband or wife living, who shall marry another person without this state, in any case where such marriage would be punishable if contracted or solemnized within this state, and shall afterwards cohabit with such person within this state, shall be adjudged guilty of bigamy, and punished in the same manner as if such second marriage had taken place within this state." State v. Fitzgerald, 75 Mo. 571. It is the subsequent cohabitation, and not the fact that the person simply invades the jurisdiction of its courts, which subjects the offender to the same punishment as would the bigamous marriage had it been celebrated within that state. Under our statute we provide for the punishment of any person who has contracted a bigamous marriage in another state, if he can be caught here, even in transitu to another state.

The attempt to evade the organic law by making the coming into this state (after committing an offense in another) a crime is too palpable, in view of the admitted fact that the Constitution of the United States gives to citizens of all the states the immunities and privileges of its own citizens, and of their guaranteed right, under the interstate commerce clause, to pass through another state without arrest and inquiry into their accountability for offenses against their own sovereignty, but especially because the trial for the new felony involves an investigation of the original bigamy by a jury not of the vicinage, and remote from the witnesses. No court has ever questioned the power of a state to pass quarantine laws and statutes regulating the entrance of paupers within its limits, but this does not include the authority to impose a tax per capita, even, on immigrants from a foreign nation, arriving at its ports, or on passengers in transitu from one state to another. Norris v. Boston, and Smith v. Turner, 48 U. S. 7 How. 518, 12 L. ed. 801, 2 Myers, Fed. Dec. 665, 675, 677, 678, 684. Mr. Justice Wayne in that case said: "Some reliance in the argument was put upon the cases of Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 546, 10 L. ed. 582; Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800; Prigg v. Com., 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 539, 10 L. ed. 1060—to maintain the discretion of a state to say who shall come to and live in it. Why either case should have been cited for such a purpose I was at a loss to know, and have been more so from a subsequent examination of each of them. All that is decided in the case of Holmes v. Jennison, is that the states of the Union have no constitutional power to give up fugitives from justice to the authorities of a nation from which they have fled; that it is not an international obligation to do so; and that all authority to make treaties for such a purpose is in the United States." The learned justice in a subsequent portion of the same opinion (page 684) said: "I have never in any instance heard the Case of Miln cited for the purpose of showing that persons are not within the regulating power of Congress over commerce, without at once saying to the counsel that the point had not been decided in that case. . . . Indeed, it would be most extraordinary if the case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23, could be considered as having been reversed by a single sentence in the opinion of New York v. Miln, 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 648. Upon a point, too, not in any way involved in the certificate of division of opinion, by which that case was brought to this court. The sentence is that 'they [persons] are not the subjects of commerce and, not being imported goods, cannot fall within a train of reasoning founded upon a construction of a power given to Congress to regulate commerce and prohibition to the states from imposing a duty on imported goods.' It thus appears that the language relied upon to sustain the assertion on the part of a state of the power to legislate in reference to persons coming from a foreign country has been expressly declared a dictum and overruled. This principle approved by the court is still more explicitly stated in Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543, and in Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550. The court suggested in the latter case that, in the absence of all legislation on the subject by Congress, a state might possibly assume authority to prohibit the entrance from abroad of "paupers and convicted criminals." A treaty entered into by the United States at once operate as a repeal of all state laws repugnant to its provisions. Baker v. Portland, 5 Sawy. 566; Denn v. Harnden, 1 Paine, 59; Re Parrott, 1 Fed. Rep. 481; Gordon v. Kerr, 1 Wash. C. C. 832. "It is not competent for the Legislature of a state to deprive a citizen of any other state of his legal or equitable rights under the Constitution and laws of Congress, by declaring that they must be enforced in a local court." Armory v. Armory, 18 Int. Rev. Rec. 149. Our statute applies by its terms as well to a citizen of another state, who in transitu affords to our local authorities the opportunity to apprehend him, as to those who become domiciled within our borders. Ordonaux, Const. Leg. pp. 339-343. As a citizen of another state, he has the privilege of demanding a trial in a particular locality, and by a jury of the vicinage; and it would deprive him of that right, guaranteed by the federal Constitution, to arrest him while temporarily in this state, and, under the pretense of punishing him for the felony of coming into the state after a bigamous marriage, try him remote from the locality where the marriage was celebrated and his witnesses reside for an offense involving only the question whether the second marriage was in fact bigamous. Ordonaux, supra, p. 255.

Wharton, (2 Crim. Law, § 1685,) after discussing the English statute, says: "In some of the United States a similar statute has been enacted; in others a continuance in the bigamous state is made indictable, no matter where the second marriage was solemnized. But, when the act of bigamous marriage is made the subject of indictment, then, at common-law, the place of such act has exclusive jurisdiction." The court of Alabama has expressly held in Beggs v. State 55 Ala. 108, that where a person is indicted for the bigamous act of marrying a second time in another state, as distinguished from continuing to cohabit within the state after such marriage, the indictment could not be sustained; but the court did not find it necessary in that case to discuss the question of legislative power, as the Legislature had modified the English statute in the same way that it has been altered by law in Vermont, Massachusetts, Tennessee, Missouri, and other states. It will not be insisted that the courts of the state of Maine would have power to enforce a statute which provided for punishing with death any person who had committed murder in another state, and then gone within its limits, by apprehending a Texan, and requiring him to send to the banks of the Rio Grande for testimony to meet and refute that of a malignant neighbor who had followed him almost across the continent to wreak his vengeance. If a state has the power to punish one caught within its borders as a felon for a bigamous marriage committed within another state, what is to prevent the trial of a citizen found in a neighboring state for a homicide, if the statute were broad enough to include murder as well as bigamy? if the statute made it a felony punishable with death to come into the state after committing murder in another? The assertion of such authority would jeopardize the security of every American citizen who ventured beyond the confines of the state in which he resided. The express provision for the extradition of criminals excludes the idea of trying them outside of the limits of the state where the offense is committed, even if there were no direct guaranty that they should not be subject to arrest and trial for offenses against their own sovereign, when beyond her limits.

The additional counts in which it is charged that the defendant, after the bigamous marriage in South Carolina, came into North Carolina, and cohabited with the person to whom he was married, cannot be sustained, because that offense is not covered by our statute. The North Carolina statute would, if enforced, subject him to indictment if he should come across the border and leave the woman behind. While we did not recognize the validity of marriage of parties when they leave the state for the purpose of evading a law which makes a marriage between them unlawful, and with the intent, after celebrating the rites in another jurisdiction, to return and live in this state, (State v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, 22 Am. Rep. 683,) we have no express statute making such acts indictable as a felony, but only as a misdemeanor, where they live in adultery here, (State v. Outshall, 109 N. C. 764). This fact is fatal to another count of the indictment. But we do not wish to be understood as questioning the power of the state to punish one of its citizens who goes out of the state with intent to evade its laws by celebrating a bigamous marriage beyond its jurisdiction, and returning to live within its borders. For the reason given we think that there was no error in the judgment of the court below quashing the indictment; and it is affirmed.

Shepherd, J. I concur in the conclusion that the indictment was properly quashed.

Merrimon, Ch. J., dissenting:

Indictment for bigamy, tried before Meares, J. The indictment charges the defendant with the crime of bigamy as defined and forbidden by the Statute. Code, § 988. It charges that the second marriage took place in the state of South Carolina, and that shortly thereafter the defendant came into the county of Mecklenburg, and there resided with his second wife. He appeared and moved to quash the indictment, upon the ground that it appeared from it that he had committed no offense in this state. The motion was allowed, whereupon the solicitor for the state assigned error, and appealed to this court. The statute declares that "if any person, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place in the state of North Carolina or elsewhere, every such offender, and every person counseling, aiding, and abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and imprisoned in the penitentiary or county jail for any term not less than four months nor more than ten years; and any such offense may be dealt with, tried, determined, and punished in the county where the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, as if the offense had been actually committed in that county," etc. Code, § 988. This enactment is not very aptly, precisely, or clearly expressed, and hence its validity is seriously questioned. But it must receive such reasonable interpretation as will render it intelligible, operative, and effectual, if this can be done consistently with the Constitution. It does not necessarily imply or intend that the offender shall be indictable and convicted in this state for the offense of bigamy in another state; such is not its meaning. It intends that whoever shall be in this state, being married to two living wives or two living husbands, as the case may be, (except in the cases excepted in the proviso to the statute,) shall be guilty of felony, and that without regard to whether the second marriage took place in this state or elsewhere, and without regard to whether the second marriage constituted the offense of bigamy in the state or country where it took place. It makes the bigamist here answerable, because he is here, and an offense to and an offender against this state and society here. The fact of bigamy—having two living wives or two living husbands—and the presence of the offender in this state constitute the offense. It is not simply the second marriage that constitutes the offense,—the felony; but it is the existence of that fact, and the presence of the offender in this state, that make it. The statute does not treat the second marriage as the offense, nor the offense as committed elsewhere than in this state.

It is said that in such case no offense is committed in this state or against it. This is a serious misapprehension. The statute, its purpose, makes the presence of the bigamist in this state an offense; makes him here a bigamist and guilty of a felony, whether he was so where the second marriage took place or not. Suppose the statute under consideration had declared in terms that, if a bigamist shall come into this state, he shall be deemed and held to be guilty of bigamy and felony here, could its validity be seriously questioned? This is what the statute, in effect, declares. The Legislature, in the exercise of the essential police powers of government, may for the protection of the people, the safety and purity of society, exclude from its borders criminals of other states and countries. To that end it may make their coming here, their presence in this state, a felony if they were guilty of a specified offense committed by them in the state from which they came, or if they were chargeable with doing specified acts in the state from which they came, constituting no criminal offense there, but declared and deemed to be an offense here. It is their coming into this state, their presence here, and the fact that they did in the state from which they came the acts deemed and held to be a specified criminal offense here, that constitute the statutory crime and felony in this state. Such exercise of legislative power may be unusual, and perhaps not very expedient, but the power exists, and it is not the province of courts to determine when it shall or shall not be exercised. Criminals have no right to commit crime, and go from state to state or from one country to another, and inflict themselves upon society wherever they may be. It is the right and the duty of government to protect itself and its people against them by all manner of appropriate legislation.

It has been suggested that the exercise of such power, except to a very limited extent, is not consistent with that provision of the Constitution of the United States which confers upon Congress the "power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes." To what extent and exactly in what respects this provision restricts the exercise of the police power of the states is not very definitely settled, but it is very clear that it does not inhibit the enactment of statutes like that under consideration. The right of the state to make and enforce such laws is fully recognized in New York v. Minn., 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 648. In that case the court said: "We choose rather to plant ourselves on what we consider impregnable positions. They are these: That a state has the same undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all persons and things within its territorial limits as any foreign nation, where that jurisdiction is not surrendered or restrained by the Constitution of the United States. That by virtue of this it is not only the right, but the bounden and solemn duty, of a state to advance the safety, happiness, and prosperity of its people and to provide for its general welfare by any and every act of legislation which it may deem to be conducive to these ends, where the power over the particular subject or the manner of its exercise is not surrendered or restrained in the manner just stated. That all these powers which relate to merely municipal legislation, or what may perhaps more properly be called 'internal police,' are not surrendered or restrained; and that consequently, in relation to these, the authority of a state is complete, unqualified, and exclusive." That case is cited with approval in Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 540, 10 L. ed. 579, Chief Justice Taney saying for the court: "Again the question under this habeas corpus is in no degree connected with the power of the states to remove from their territory any person whose presence they may think dangerous to their peace, or in any way injurious to their interest. The power in that respect was fully considered by this court, and decided, in the case of New York v. Minn., 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 648. Undoubtedly they may remove from among them any persons guilty of or charged with crime, and may arrest and imprison them in order to effect this object. This is a part of the ordinary police power of the states, which is necessary to their very existence, and which they have never surrendered to the general government. They may, if they think proper, in order to deter offenders in other countries from coming among them, make crimes committed elsewhere punishable in their courts, if the guilty party shall be found within their jurisdiction. In all of these cases the state acts with a view to its own safety, and is in no degree connected with the foreign government in which the crime was committed." The first of the cases here cited is to some extent criticised in Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 548, and Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550, but not in the aspect of it material here. It is difficult to see any substantial reason why the Legislature may not by proper enactment, make it indictable—a misdemeanor or a felony—for persons who have done acts in one of the states deemed dangerous to its safety, or that of the morals or property or the prosperity of its people, if they be found within its limits. It may by such means keep out of and drive beyond its borders foreign paupers, common gamblers, bigamists, and the like. It must be the judge of the wisdom and expediency of such legislation. Offenders against such statutes are such wherever they may be found in the state, and may hence be tried wherever found, without invading any fundamental right secured to them. The acts forbidden having been done, the presence of the offender in the state anywhere constitutes the offense. This case is very different from State v. Knight, 1 N. C. 44, 65. In that case the statute declared void undertook to make the offense of counterfeiting in another state indictable in this state. The indictment does not charge the defendant with bigamy committed in South Carolina; it charges him with statutory crime (a felony) committed in this state, one of the essential acts constituting it having taken place in South Carolina. The statute does not make the second marriage the offense. It simply treats this as a fact to be taken in connection with others, all constituting the offense in this state. The offense is wholly statutory in its nature, and must be so treated. I think the order quashing the indictment should be reversed, and the case disposed of accordingly.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Amanda PALMERI, Reapt.,
v.
MANHATTAN R. CO. Appt.
(.....N. Y.....)

1. A ticket agent who follows a woman who has bought a ticket out upon the platform and charges her with giving him counterfeit money with a demand for other money in its stead and on her refusal angrily insults her by slandering her character and puts his hand upon her telling her not to stir until he gets a policeman to arrest and search her, but lets her go when he fails to get an officer, is acting within the scope of his employment and renders the carrier liable for false imprisonment and slander, if the detention was unlawful and his charges false.
2. An offer by defendant upon plaintiff's cross-examination to show that she is an habitual litigant, is properly excluded.

(May 3, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kings County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged slander and false imprisonment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Julien T. Davies, and Brainard Tolles, for appellant:

A corporation cannot be guilty of a tort except as the tort of some officer or agent is imputed to it, by virtue of the maxim respondent superior.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 186; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146.

The maxim applies only where the relation of master and servant exist, and the act or omission complained of falls within the scope of the servant's employment, and is done by the express or implied authority of the master.

Mali v. Lord, 89 N. Y. 381, 100 Am. Dec. 448; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 138, 31 Am. Rep. 597; Higgins v. Waterliet Turnp. Co. 46 N. Y. 23, 7 Am. Rep. 293; Mott v. Consumers Ice Co. 73 N. Y. 548.

A servant is not impliedly authorized by his master to do that which the master himself, being present, would not be authorized to do.

Defendant could have no right to detain the plaintiff without a warrant on the mere suspicion of having committed a crime. Dayton, then, in detaining the plaintiff, acted not only altogether outside the scope of his own employment, but outside the corporate powers of the defendant, and his act was no more binding on the defendant than if he had contracted to purchase the Panama canal.

Mali v. Lord, supra; Poulton v. London & S. W. R. Co. 8 Best & S. 616; Goff v. Great Northern R. Co. 3 El. & El. 672; Charleston v. London Tramways Co. 36 Week. Rep. 367, 32 Solicitor's Journal, 557.

A master is not liable for the act of his servant, even when the act is done for the master's benefit, unless it is within the general range of the servant's duties.

Fraser v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 566, 8 Am. Rep. 740; McKenzie v. McLeod, 10 Bing. 885; Meehan v. Morewood, 23 N. Y. S. R. 487; Carter v. House Mach. Co. 51 Md. 290, 34 Am. Rep. 311; Edwards v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 445; Abrahams v. Deakin (1891) 1 Q. B. 516; Bank of New South Wales v. Ouston, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 275.

In the absence of any contractual relation a master is not liable for the act of his servant, even within the general range of the servant's duties, where the act is done from some ulterior motive on the part of the servant and not on behalf of the master or with the purpose to serve him.

Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 791, 129 N. Y. 506; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 139, 31 Am. Rep. 597; Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 848, 32 Am. Dec. 507; Limpus v. London Gen. Omnibus Co. 1 Hurlst. & C. 626; Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnp. Co. 3 N. Y. 479, 51 Am. Dec. 815; Cavanagh v. Dinmore; 12 Hun, 465; Sheridan v. Charlack, 4 Daly, 388; Baldwin v. New York & H. Nav. Co. 4 Daly, 314.

A corporation cannot be guilty of slander unless the slander is expressly authorized by it. Townshend, Slander & Libel, § 265; Odgers, Libel & Slander, p. 368.

The slander was not within the general range of the agent's duties or the scope of his authority.

Mali v. Lord, 89 N. Y. 381, 100 Am. Dec. 448; Hamilton v. New York Cent. R. Co. 51 N. Y. 100.

The slander was not spoken for defendant's benefit, or in pursuance of any real or supposed duty to defendant.

Limpus v. London Gen. Omnibus Co. supra. Defendant was not liable for the acts complained of, on the ground of a breach of the contract of carriage.

NOTE.—For note on liability of master for false arrest, imprisonment, or malicious prosecution by servant, see Mulligan v. New York & R. B. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 791.
16 L. R. A.

There can be no acceptance either of money or of goods until there is a chance to examine and reject.

Benjamin, Sales, § 703.

And where examination is followed by a rejection, nothing can turn the rejection into acceptance, even where there was a duty to accept.

Sweet v. Titus, 67 Barb. 627; Kingston Bank v. Gay, 19 Barb. 459; Edgerton v. Hodge, 41 Vt. 676.

It is clear that in a cash transaction the payment of counterfeit money cannot complete the contract, because the minds of the parties never meet.

Markle v. Hatfield, 2 Johns. 455; Ontario Bank v. Lightbody, 13 Wend. 101, 27 Am. Dec. 179.

Mr. James D. Bell, with Mr. Baldwin F. Strauss for respondent:

For a willful injury to the plaintiff by defendant's agent while engaged in its employment, the defendant is liable.

Stewart v. Brooklyn C. T. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 583, 43 Am. Rep. 185.

The plaintiff was defendant's passenger, and therefore it owed a duty to her to treat her with proper respect, and prevent persons from injuring her, and it is liable for the misconduct of its own servants towards her.

Jackson v. Second Ave. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 274, 7 Am. Rep. 448; Lynch v. Metropolitan Elec. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; Dwinelle v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 8 L. R. A. 224, 120 N. Y. 117.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Quite recently we had occasion to consider a case where the ticket agent of a railroad company directed the arrest, by police officers, of a person in the railroad station, whom he suspected of being a counterfeiter, and the company was thereafter sued for false imprisonment. In that case the facts were briefly stated, that the ticket agent had been notified by the police authorities to watch for men of a certain description, suspected of passing counterfeit bills. Upon a certain occasion two men came into the station, and one of them tendered a bill in payment for tickets. The agent suspected them of being the counterfeiters wanted by the police, and thought the bill looked "queer," but nevertheless took it, and gave back the change with the tickets, saying nothing to them. He then sent for a police officer, to whom he pointed out the men, who were there on the station platform. The bill was subsequently pronounced to be genuine, and the man was discharged. We held that the company was not responsible in damages, because the agent was not, in what he did, acting within the scope and line of his duty. His acts were not such as could be deemed to be performed in the course of his employment, or such as were demanded for the protection of his employer's interest, but rather those of a citizen desirous of aiding the police in the detection and arrest of persons suspected of being engaged in the commission of a crime. His duty, as the particular agent of the company, was to have refused to accept and change the bill tendered in payment for passage tickets, if he supposed it was not genuine; and, when he did accept it, his only purpose could have been to further the efforts of the police authorities by such a step, and could not possibly be considered as something which his employers or his employment required of him. I refer to the case of Mulligan v. New York & E. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 506, 14 L. R. A. 791. In the present case, however, the acts of the ticket agent were of a different character. The plaintiff purchased a ticket of the agent at the elevated railroad station, and passed through to take the cars, after some altercation about the amount of the change. The ticket agent immediately afterwards came out upon the platform of the station, charged her with having given him a counterfeit piece of money, and demanded another quarter in place of the one given him. She insisted upon her money being genuine, and refused to give another quarter or to hand back the change. He became angry, and called her a counterfeiter and a common prostitute. He placed his hand upon her, and told her not to stir until he had procured a policeman to arrest and to search her. He detained her in the station for a while, but let her go when he failed to get an officer. This action was then brought to recover damages because of injury sustained from the unlawful imprisonment, or the restraint imposed upon the plaintiff's person, accompanied by the slanderous words, publicly spoken, concerning her. The jury believed her story, and the judgment which she has recovered the appellant seeks to avoid principally upon the ground that the ticket agent was acting outside of the scope of his employment in doing the acts complained of. The appeal must fail. This is not like the Mulligan Case. Here the agent was acting for his employers, and with no other conceivable motive; losing his temper and injuring and insulting the plaintiff upon the occasion. He believed that plaintiff had passed a counterfeit piece of money upon him, and thus had obtained a passage ticket and good money in change. What he did was in the endeavor to protect and to recover his employer's property; and if, in his conduct, he committed an error, which was accompanied by insulting language and the detention of the person, the defendant, as his employer, is legally responsible in an action for damages for the injury. For all the acts of a servant or agent which are done in the prosecution of the business intrusted to him the carrier becomes civilly liable, if its passengers or strangers receive injury therefrom. The good faith and motives of the servant are not a defense, if the act was unlawful. Once the relation of carrier and passenger entered upon, the carrier is answerable for consequences to the passenger of the willful misconduct or negligence of the persons employed by it in the execution of the contract which it has undertaken towards the passenger. This is a reasonable and necessary rule, which has been upheld by this court in many cases, of which Weed v. Panama R. Co. 17 N. Y. 362; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 25; Stewart v. Brooklyn C. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185, and Dwinelle v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L. R. A. 224, are sufficient instances.

What materially distinguishes the present from the Mulligan Case is that there the servant of the company was not acting for the protection of the company's interests, but went quite outside of the line of his duty to perform a supposed service to the community, by procuring the arrest of criminals whom he knew the authorities were endeavoring to apprehend. That did not enter into the transaction of his employer's business. Whereas here the ticket agent clearly was engaged about the company's affairs, but, in the belief of the jury, unlawfully detained the plaintiff, and insulted her by slandering her character. It is needless to consider the case of Mali v. Lord, 89 N. Y. 881, 100 Am. Dec. 448, so much relied upon by the appellant. There is no parallel between the case of a clerk in a store, who has a person arrested and searched upon suspicion of a theft, and whose general employment could not warrant such an act, and the present case of an agent who is considered to be invested by the carrier with a discretion and a duty in matters of his employment, from which an authority is inferable to do whatever is necessary about it. Though injury and insult are acts in departure from the authority conferred or implied, nevertheless, as they occur in the course of the employment, the master becomes responsible for the wrong committed. Judge Andrews, in Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597, points out the distinguishing principle of these cases, and refers to Mali v. Lord, in the course of his opinion.

The offer by defendant, upon plaintiff's cross-examination, to show that she was an habitual litigant, was properly excluded. It had nothing to do with the issue, and, if true, would not prove her unworthy of belief, any more than it would follow from her admission of its truth that the litigations which such a tendency had encouraged were not upon meritorious grounds.

The testimony of the witness Murphy, a bystander upon the occasion, as to the ticket-agent's conversation with him, I think, was admissible, as occurring simultaneously, and as illustrating somewhat the transaction; but, even if questionable, the defendant appears to have objected to the testimony after it was in, and obtained no ruling by motion to strike out. When, subsequently, upon it appearing to the court that the plaintiff did not hear the conversation, an objection to the testimony continuing was considered proper by the judge, and was at once sustained.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.
All concur.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS. (2d Div.)

Frances E. COOPER, Resp't.

v.

UNITED STATES MUTUAL ACCIDENT
ASSOCIATION of the City of New York, App't.

(.....N. Y.)

Under a clause requiring a suit within one year from the time of the "accidental injury," in a policy of accident insurance providing a weekly indemnity for the insured in case of such injury and a death indemnity for his wife in case of his death therefrom, the limitation period for her suit begins to run at his death and not at the time of the accident to him.

(April 19, 1902.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Orange County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover upon a policy of accident insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William B. Smith, for appellant:

This action was not brought "within one year from the time of the alleged accidental injury," as required in the contract made by the parties, and therefore, as it is not pretended or claimed that appellant did or omitted anything upon which a waiver of this condition could be predicated, the judgment appealed from cannot be sustained.

King v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 47 Hun, 1; Wilkinson v. First Nat. F. Ins. Co. 72 N. Y. 499, 28 Am. Rep. 166; Sleen v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. 815; Fullam v. New York U. Ins. Co. 7 Gray, 61, 66 Am. Dec. 463; Schroeder v. Keystone Ins. Co. 3 Phila. 286; Hocking v. Howard Ins. Co. 180 Pa. 170; Steel v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 47 Fed. Rep. 868; Mum v. London Assur. Corp. 108 N. C. 240; Thompson v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 296; Grigsby v. German Ins. Co. 40 Mo. App. 376; Meersman v. State Ins. Co. (Wash.) June 17, 1891.

In each of the three classes specified in the policy contract the injury itself is the basis alone upon which a claim for indemnity can be made. Keeping this "injury" in mind, there is no confusion, no uncertainty, and no ambiguity.

Claiming that accidental injury might mean actual wounding, or might fairly be construed to mean the ripening of a wound into a claim, then, that if the limitation applied to a death claim, the accidental injury mentioned is the death resulting from the accidental injury, is frittering away the language of the policy by metaphysical distinctions too fine to enter into the understanding or contemplation

NOTE.—In applying a limitation clause to an action on a death claim under an accident policy which provided not only for weekly indemnity to the insured but also for a death indemnity to his wife the above decision is apparently a novel one.

The decisions are in much conflict on the general question whether the time limited for action on a policy by a provision therein is to run from the date of actual loss or from the time when the right of action therefor is complete. See on this question note to Travelers Ins. Co. v. California Ins. Co. (N. Dak.) 8 L. R. A. 769. Later cases show the same conflict.

of parties engaged in the practical business of making a contract of insurance.

Tuttle v. Travelers Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316.

It is not an unreasonable term that in case of a controversy upon a loss resort shall be had by the assured to the proper tribunal, whilst the transaction is recent and the proofs respecting it are accessible.

Riddlesbarger v. Hartford Ins. Co. 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257. See Steel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 47 Fed. Rep. 863; Spare v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 9 Sawy. 145, 17 Fed. Rep. 568.

Mr. Lewis E. Carr, for respondent:

Until the death, the furnishing of the proofs, and their acceptance by the association as satisfactory, there is, and can be, no claim that can be the subject of arbitration or suit. Until then the association is called on to do nothing. When the profits are finally accepted as satisfactory, the association has ninety days in which to pay. Until the expiration of that period no action can be mentioned. For nine months then from the infliction of an injury action is barred, and it may be much longer through asserted defects in the proofs.

Steen v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. 315; Ames v. New York U. Ins. Co. 14 N. Y. 253; Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235, 38 Am. Rep. 607; New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. 45.

The "time of the alleged injury" is the point where the proofs are furnished and accepted and the claimant has something that may be either submitted to arbitration or made the subject of a suit.

Ames v. New York U. F. Ins. Co., New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co., Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. and Steen v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. supra.

In the most favorable view an ambiguous phrase has been inserted in this contract, and the beneficiary is entitled to its most favorable construction.

Dennis v. Massachusetts Ben. Assn. 9 L. R. A. 189, 120 N. Y. 496; Holley v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 7 Cent. Rep. 263, 105 N. Y. 437.

The fair and reasonable construction of this contract is that the limitation begins when a claim is in existence which may be sued upon and not before.

Matt v. Iowa Mut. Aid Assn. 81 Iowa, 185.

The language used at the beginning of the limitation clause, "any claim under this certificate," does not affect the conclusion stated above.

Mallory v. Travelers Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Paul v. Travelers Ins. Co. 3 L. R. A. 443, 112 N. Y. 472.

Haight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought upon a certificate of insurance, issued by the defendant, to recover $5,000. The defendant, by its certificate, undertook to insure Theodore H. Cooper against personal bodily injury, and in case he should receive such injuries, disabling him from transacting business pertaining to his occupation, to pay him certain amounts, specifically named, dependent upon the nature of his injuries; and in case death should result from such injuries within ninety days the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff, as his wife, the sum of $5,000. The certificate contained the following: "No suit or proceeding at law or in equity shall be brought . . . to recover any sum under this insurance unless the same is commenced within one year from the time of the alleged accidental injury." Cooper received an accidental bodily injury on December 10, 1887, which resulted in his death on January 2, 1888. This action was commenced on December 29, 1888, more than one year after the accident, but within one year of his death. It is claimed that the action was not commenced within the time required by the provision of the certificate referred to.

16 L. R. A.

It will be observed that provisions are made in the certificate for two different persons, who, upon the happening of the events specified, may have a right of action against the association. One provision is in favor of Cooper, who may recover during his lifetime the amounts provided for his disability resulting from the accidental injury received. The other is to his wife, which is for the injuries which she suffers by reason of his death, resulting from such accident. The accident received by Cooper did not injure the plaintiff, or give her a right of action until death ensued. So far as she is concerned, the infliction of the wound is but the beginning, and the death is the completion, of the injury. Her suit must be "commenced within one year from the time of the alleged accidental injury;" in other words, within one year from the time of the injury to her, which was the death of her husband, as the result of the accident. As to Cooper, he suffered from the date of the wound. His right to indemnity dates from that event, and it is possible that his right to maintain an action would not continue after the expiration of a year from that date. But, as to the plaintiff, it appears to us that the construction already indicated was intended and should be given to the certificate. As thus construed the various clauses of the contract are rendered harmonious, and the different beneficiaries thereunder are given the same period of limitation within which to bring actions to establish their claims; that is, within one year from the time that their right of action accrued. This construction is in a measure sustained by the authorities. In the case of Steen v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. 315, the policy of insurance required actions to be brought within twelve months next after the "loss or damage shall accrue." In an action upon the policy, it was held that the period of limitation prescribed did not commence to run until the loss became due and payable, and the right to bring an action had accrued. And to the same effect are the cases of New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. 45, and Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235, 38 Am. Rep. 607. The case of King v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 47 Hun, 1, appears to us to be clearly distinguishable. In that case the policy provided that no suit or action could be maintained unless commenced "within twelve months next after the fire shall have occurred." In that case it was held that the year within which the action must be brought commenced to run from the date on which the fire occurred; it so having been expressly stipulated in the policy.

We consequently are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, except Vann, J., not sitting.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Washington, ex rel., F. H. LYSONS, Appt.

G. C. RUFF, Resp't.

(..... Wash.....)

Failure to take the oath of office within the time specified by law does not ipso facto create a vacancy which will prevent the officer from qualifying thereafter if it is done before any steps are taken to declare the vacancy, although the statute declares that the office shall become vacant on refusal or neglect to take the oath within the time prescribed.

(May 6, 1892.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Superior Court of Snohomish County in favor of defendant in a proceeding instituted

NOTE—Vacancy in office by failure to file bond within time prescribed.

A statutory requirement that a bond must be executed within a certain number of days is merely directory, and the bond may be lawfully filed on a subsequent day. Duntley v. Davis, 42 Hun, 229; McRoberts v. Winant, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 210; People v. Holley, 12 Wend. 481; Com. v. Read, 2 Ashm. 281; State v. Churchill, 41 Mo. 41; State v. Texas County Ct. 44 Mo. 230; Kearney v. Andrews, 10 N. J. Eq. 70; State v. Porter, 7 Ind. 204; Smith v. Cronkhite, 8 Ind. 134; State v. Peck, 30 La. Ann. 280.

So a statutory provision that an "office shall become vacant" on failure to furnish a bond within a specified time is merely directory, and may be sufficiently complied with by furnishing the bond after that time. Knox County Comrs. v. Johnson, 7 L. A. B. 684, 124 Ind. 145; State v. Colvig, 15 Or. 37; Sprowl v. Lawrence, 38 Ala. 674; State v. Falconer, 44 Ala. 696; State v. Ely, 43 Ala. 568. But see contra the California, Kansas, Florida and Virginia cases infra.

The same is true where the provision is that a person in default shall be "deemed to have refused" his office, or that the "office shall become vacant." Cawley v. People, 95 Ill. 249; Chicago v. Gage, Id. 533.

So where a statute said that an office shall be vacated if the person failed to give bond within a certain time it was held that the mere fact that the bond was not given within that time was not of itself sufficient to show that the office was vacant without showing that it was his fault in as much as it was customary to notify a person that his commission was ready for him and not to consider the office vacant until notice was given. Ross v. Williamson, 44 Ga. 501.

So a statute which says an "office shall be deemed absolutely vacant" on failure to file a bond within a specified time, was held not to vacate the office ipso facto by such failure, but merely to make it a cause of forfeiture. State v. Toomer, 7 Rich. L. 216.

This was held in an action against sureties on the bond who sought to escape liability thereon on the ground that the office became vacant by delay in filing the bond.

Likewise a statute providing that a person shall "forfeit the office" to which he may have been elected by acting therein without having given the required bond, does not make the office vacant without a proceeding to declare it so where such cause of forfeiture exists. Foot v. Stiles, 57 N. Y. 399; Cronin v. Stoddard, 97 N. Y. 271.

In conflict with some of the above authorities, it is held in California that a statute providing that an office becomes vacant upon the happening of certain events, one of which is the failure to file a bond within the time prescribed, is held mandatory causing a forfeiture of the office if the bond is not filed within that time. People v. Perkins, 36 Cal. 509; Payne v. San Francisco, 3 Cal. 123.

So in Kansas under a statute substantially the same it is also held that the office is vacated by failure to file the bond within the specified time. State v. Matheny, 7 Kan. 327.

Likewise in Florida the failure to give bond within the thirty days specified by statute was held by the judges of the supreme court, in an opinion rendered to the governor not to be cured by performance nearly a year afterward under a statute declaring that for such failure the office should "be deemed vacant." Re Atty-Gen. 14 Fla. 277.

And in Virginia a statute requiring an officer to qualify between the time of his election and the beginning of his term of office is held mandatory, and a qualification on the day the term begins is held too late. Johnson v. Mann, 77 Va. 285.

Again in Mississippi, under a statute providing that an "office shall thereby become vacant" if an officer fails to give a new bond when required by the proper officers, it was held that no steps to declare the office vacant were necessary in order to relieve the sureties on his old bond. Bennett v. State, 56 Miss. 556.

But this is manifestly quite a different case from one in which the offer of a bond after the time specified should be rejected, and the decision cannot fairly be regarded as in conflict with the majority of the cases above cited.

Where a statute provided that a person should "forfeit his right to the office" by failure to give bond within a specified time, and made it the duty of a clerk to notify the governor of such default and of the latter immediately to appoint a person to fill the vacancy, it was too late to file a bond after the failure to file it within a specified time had been certified to the governor and an appointment made by him. Falconer v. Shores, 37 Ark. 593.

This decision does not necessarily deny the right to file a bond after the time specified if no proceedings had been taken to enforce the forfeiture. But although a statute which says that an office shall be vacant if the bond is not given within ten days is merely directory, as it is held in Indiana to be, failure for more than six months to tender the bond will be deemed an abandonment of the office and prevent a qualifying if the delay is not excused. State v. Johnson, 100 Ind. 489.

On the other hand, although such a statute is held in Kansas to be mandatory a different statute, which provides that failure to qualify within the time specified "without sufficient cause" shall forfeit the right to an office, does not prevent qualifying after the time specified where such cause for the delay existed. Carpenter v. Titus, 33 Kan. 7.

The appointment by a board of county commissioners to an office on the "express condition" that a bond be given within two days, will not prevent the board from accepting the bond after three days. State v. Ring, 29 Minn. 73.

The time specified for giving a bond does not run pending a contest for the office. People v. Potter, 63 Cal. 127; Pearson v. Wilson, 57 Miss. 843.

Failure to file a bond within the time prescribed is excused where it is prevented by a conspiracy of the officers whose duty it was to receive it. Culver v. Armstrong, 77 Mich. 194. B. A. R.

to test defendant's right to the office of county auditor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hill, Gilliam & Benson, Fish-back Hardin and L. F. Hart for appellant.

Messrs. Ault & Munns for respondent.

Hoyt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator was, at the time of and prior to the election held in 1880, the auditor of Snohomish county. At said election respondent was duly elected as his successor in office, but did not qualify by taking the proper oath of office and giving bond, within fifteen days after the service upon him of notice of his election, as required by the statute. About the 17th day of January following his election he completed his qualification by complying with the statutes in that regard, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such auditor, whereupon relator brought this action to determine as to the right to said office as between himself and said respondent. Under this state of facts it is contended by the relator that the respondent, by his failure to comply with the statute as to qualification within the time therein provided, vacated said office, and that under the provisions of the law relating thereto he was entitled to hold over until the election and qualification of his successor. On the other hand, the respondent contends that he did not lose his right to said office by reason of such failure to qualify, and that, having qualified before any action seeking to declare said office vacant, his right to the same became vested. This question must be determined by the construction of our statutes. Section 2708, Code 1881, is as follows: "Every auditor, within fifteen days after receiving his certificate of election, and before he shall enter upon the discharge of the duties of his office, shall . . ." And from the language used it will be seen that it was the duty of the respondent to have fully qualified within fifteen days after notice of his election; and, if such language is considered mandatory, it would conclusively establish the position contended for by the relator. Is it mandatory or declaratory? Such provisions have almost universally been held to be simply declaratory. See Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 598; People v. Holley, 12 Wend. 481; State v. Churchill, 41 Mo. 41; State v. Porter, 7 Ind. 204; State v. Falconer, 44 Ala. 696; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 265, 266. The language of this section, then, if standing alone, must, under the authorities, be construed as being simply declaratory. In fact, as we understand the position of relator, he does not question this position, and, if the section above quoted stood alone in our statutes, there would be little ground for controversy in relation to the question at bar; but it is claimed that under the language of this section, as read in the light of section 8063 of the Code, it must receive an entirely different construction from what it would if standing alone. Said last-named section is as follows: "Every office shall become vacant upon the happening of either of the following events: . . . the death of the incumbent; . . . his refusal or neglect to take his oath of office . . . within the time prescribed by law. . . ." In determining the force of these statutes, this well-settled rule must be borne in mind, that forfeitures are abhorred by the courts, and that, when it is reasonably possible so to construe the law as to avoid a forfeiture, such construction will be adopted. If, as we have seen, the first section above quoted is clearly declaratory when standing alone, the last section above quoted might be held to have been enacted in view of such construction of said first section, and the Legislature to have intended in said last section by the words "within the time fixed by law" not within fifteen days, as named therein, but within the time which the court would hold to be covered by said section when construed as declaratory, and not mandatory. With such a construction of section 8063 all difficulty would be done away with, and there would be nothing in it to change the rule of construction which would otherwise obtain as to said section 2708. Said section 8063 is found within the chapter relating to the filling of vacancies, and provides what facts shall be sufficient to authorize the proper authority to exercise its powers in that regard. But it does not follow that the person elected has lost all right by reason of his failure to qualify. The object of such provision will be fully accomplished by holding that such failure to qualify does not in itself work a forfeiture of the right to the office, but simply authorizes the proper authority to declare such forfeiture, and fill the office by appointment. By the construction force would be given to every word in said section 8063, and the usual construction preserved as to the other section in question. Thus construed, the proper authority would at any time after the expiration of the fifteen days prescribed by the statute have the power to declare a vacancy, and at once fill the same by appointment, and, this having been done, the right of the person elected to the office would be determined and ended; but until such action was taken the person elected could, by qualifying within any reasonable time after notice of his election, make perfect his title.

If this were a new question, and if we were to take as the foundation of our decision the fact that said section 2708 would, if standing alone, be construed as declaratory, and would have been substantially complied with by qualification within a reasonable time, instead of within the letter of the statute, this construction of section 8063 would be more reasonable, and would give better force to all the words of both statutes, than would that contended for by the relator. It must be borne in mind in this connection that these two sections are not parts of the same Act, and a different rule of construction will obtain than would if the substance of section 8063 had been embodied as a part of section 2708. If the Legislature had provided in a single section that a person must qualify within fifteen days, and that, if he did not do so, his office should be vacant, there would be much greater force in the argument of relator than under the law as it stands. There have been numerous adjudications bearing more or less directly upon the question here involved, some of which seem to warrant the contention of each of the parties to this action. We shall not attempt a general review of the cases, but shall content ourselves with a brief examination of the question in the light of the authorities. Mechem on Public Officers lays down the general doctrine as follows: "Statutes usually directory and not mandatory. Failure to give bond within time prescribed does not work a forfeiture, even though the statute expressly provide that upon a failure to give the bond within the time prescribed the office shall be deemed vacant, and may be filled by appointment. It is generally held that the default is a ground for forfeiture only, and not a forfeiture ipso facto." The authorities cited by the relator and respondent respectively satisfy us that the conclusion to which Mr. Mechem has come as above stated is warranted thereby. A large list of authorities have been cited by the respective parties as sustaining or contradicting the conclusion of Mr. Mechem as above stated. The leading ones cited sustaining the text above quoted are: State v. Toomer, 7 Rich. L. 216; Sprout v. Lawrence, 83 Ala. 874; Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 598. Of the long list cited by the relator upon the other side the most of them, though perhaps tending in some degree to sustain the proposition for which they are cited, can easily be distinguished from this case, and can have but little force in deciding this question. For instance, he cites State v. Tucker, 54 Ala. 905, and claims that it not only decides the question adversely to the text above quoted, but that it substantially overrules the case of Sprout v. Lawrence, supra; while, as we read this case, it only decides that a judicial determination as to the existence of a vacancy is not a necessary prerequisite to an appointment to fill the same, and to us it seems evident that there was no intention to overrule the case in 83 Ala. above cited, but a direct intention to affirm said case and distinguish it from this. State v. Beard, 84 La. Ann. 278, is also much relied upon, and, if the statute, the construction of which was involved in that case were like ours, the text would justify the citation; but such was not the case. The statute construed there provided that the officer should qualify within a definite time named, and that a failure to do so should ipso facto work a forfeiture of the office, and it needs no argument to show that the language of the court in construing a statute of this kind could throw no light upon the construction of our statute. The same court had in State v. Peck, 80 La. Ann. 281, under a statute which was not dissimilar from ours, held as contended for by respondent. Re Atty-Gen. 14 Fla. 277, was decided without argument, and upon a proceeding substantially ex parte. State v. Matheny, 7 Kan. 827, seems squarely in point, and to justify the contention of relator, but it must be said with reference to that case that the character of statutes of this kind, and the tendency of courts to hold them declaratory, rather than mandatory, received no attention by the judge deciding it. He contented himself with putting his decision solely upon the language of the statute of the state, and, so far as appears from the opinion, the controlling reason therefor may as well have been the fact that one section provided that the bond should be filed within twenty days, and that, therefore, it must be filed within that time, or not at all, as upon the other section, which was something like our section 8063. What the judge says, in deciding People v. Taylor, 57 Cal. 620, is entitled to but little weight, as, so far as it relates to this question, it was pure dicta. Of all the cases cited by relator not more than two or three can be said to be squarely in point, and, in our opinion, they would not justify us in sustaining the contention of relator when that of respondent is upheld by such a text-writer as Mr. Mechem, and by the authorities cited by him, especially as to do so would be to control and change what is conceded to be the ordinary and proper construction of the section directly relating to the qualification of an officer by another section upon a different subject, the language of which can be given force without so doing. Under some statutes the qualification is made a prerequisite to the holding of the office, and in fact that which bestows the office. Under such statutes, the failure to qualify within the time specified would no doubt prevent a later assertion of any right thereto. But under our statute it is the election which gives the right to the office, and the qualification is only an incidental requirement for the protection of the public. If the provisions for such qualification are not timely complied with, the public can protect itself by declaring a vacancy and filling the same by appointment; but until such acts have been done the force of the election has not been exhausted, and, upon a compliance with the incidental duty of qualification, is given full force. The construction which we have above contended for seems to us reasonable and proper. Besides any other construction should be avoided, if possible, on account of the hardship and injustice that would be caused thereby. If the construction contended for by relator is to obtain, then the provisions of our statute must be held to be mandatory, and if they are mandatory they cannot be relieved against. It would follow that, however overwhelming the misfortune or necessity, a failure to qualify within the fifteen days would absolutely forfeit the office, notwithstanding the fact that the person elected there-to should have qualified the day after the expiration of such time. But it is said by the relator that the provision can be waived by the public through their proper officers, and he seeks to meet the force of many of the cases cited by respondent by the assertion that they present the status of the officer after such waiver of the right to declare forfeiture by the public. If the requirements are declaratory, they can of course, be waived, and perhaps a failure to act affirmatively would in itself constitute a waiver; but, the provisions are mandatory, there can be no waiver thereof. A definite time fixed by the Legislature in a statute, which is held to be mandatory in all its provisions, cannot be extended. So soon as you once hold that the court, or any other power, has authority to extend the time fixed by the Legislature, you in fact hold that the statute is declaratory, and not mandatory. The people, by their votes, determine their choice of officers, and they should not be robbed of the fruits of such choice for slight or insufficient reasons; and to hold that the Legislature intended to rob them of such fruits by reason of the fact that their choice qualified sixteen days instead of only fifteen after notice of his election, would only be justified when language had been used which made such construction absolutely necessary. From the expiration of the fifteen days after notice of his election until the date of the qualification of respondent it would have been competent for the proper authority to have declared the office vacant under the provisions of section 3063, but, no action having been taken thereunder until the respondent was fully qualified, his right to the office became absolute.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

Anders, Ch. J. and Stiles, J., concur.

On May 12, 1892, Dunbar, J., filed the following dissenting opinion.

I am unable to agree with the majority. Nor do I think that a plain statutory enactment setting forth specifically circumstances under which an office becomes vacant should be construed out of existence by the mere statement of the theoretical rule that "forfeitures are abhorred by the courts." What the courts abhor should be of very little consequence. The vital question is, What did the Legislature intend? I think it is an excellent idea for courts to give to statutory language its plain and ordinary meaning. Let us see what the language of section 3063 is: "Sec. 3063. Every office shall become vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term of such officer: First, the death of the incumbent; second, his resignation; third, his removal; fourth, his ceasing to be an inhabitant of the district, county, town, or village for which he shall have been elected or appointed, or within which the duties of his office are to be discharged; fifth, his conviction of an infamous crime or of any offense involving a violation of his official oath; sixth, his refusal or neglect to take his oath of office, or to give or renew his official bond, or to deposit such oath or bond within the time prescribed by law; seventh, the decision of a competent tribunal declaring void his election or appointment; eighth, whenever a judgment shall be obtained against such officer for breach of the condition of his official bond." It seems to me that, if the Legislature had desired to enact that an office should become vacant upon the refusal or neglect of the officer elect to take his oath of office or to give or renew his official bond within the time prescribed by law, it could not have expressed itself in language more clear or unambiguous. Nothing is said about a "forfeiture being declared by the proper authority;" that is an idea expressed by the majority opinion, but it is not found anywhere in the law. It may be a wise amendment to the law, but, if so, it must be incorporated by legislative enactment, and not by judicial construction. The interpretation of the majority that the language of section 3063, "within the time fixed by law," does not refer to the time fixed by law, viz., within fifteen days, but means the time within which the court would hold to be covered by said section when "construed as declaratory and not mandatory," is to my mind an interpretation unwarranted by any rule of construction, and will lead to results most confusing. "Within the time prescribed by law" is a very common legislative expression in enactments of this kind, and ordinarily I am inclined to think that in looking up the time in which to qualify under such a statute the mind of every layman, practitioner, or judge would go to the definite time prescribed by the law. It is true that hardships may arise in individual cases by construing these sections as mandatory, but that was a matter for the Legislature to guard against. It is evident that it did not intend that the refusal of the officer to qualify should alone work a forfeiture, for the law specially provides that the neglect to qualify shall also cause a vacancy. Neither do I think there is anything unwise in the requirement. Officers are elected not for the benefit of individuals, but for the benefit of the community; and, if an officer is so careless of the requirements of law under which he is elected that he neglects to qualify, it is a fair indication that he will be neglectful in the transaction of the duties of his office.

The judgment should be reversed.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Thomas REEVE, Impleaded etc., Plff. in Err.,

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF GLASSBORO.

(.....N. J.)

1. Where nothing appears in the body of a note to indicate who is the maker, and it is signed by a person who affixes to his name an official title as officer of a corporation, the note is prima facie that of the person so signing; but it is so far ambiguous in respect to the question whether the officer or the corporation is the maker that parol testimony is admissible to settle it. If, however, the note is signed by the corporate name, followed by the name of a corporation officer, who affixes to his name his official title, such note is conclusively taken to be corporation paper.

Head notes by REED, J.

2. A promissory note made in this form:
"We promise to pay to the order of—the sum of—;" and signed, "Warrick Glass Works.

NOTE.—Without attempting any extended annotation of the question of individual liability of officers of a corporation on notes signed by them for the corporation, we call attention particularly to Liebscher v. Kraus, 5 L. R. A. 493, 74 Wis. 387 and Miller v. Roach, 6 L. R. A. 71, 150 Mass. 140, both of which are closely parallel to the above case; also to 16 L. R. A.

McKensy v. Edwards (Ky.) 3 L. R. A. 397, and note, McCandless v. Belle Plaine Canning Co. 4 L. R. A. 393, 78 Iowa, 161, which present exceptions to or the converse of the rule above adopted.

For agents' liability on contracts, see also note to Farmers' Co-operative Trust Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 13 L. R. A. 344.

J. Price Warrick, Pres.—is the note of the corporation, and not the note of Warrick, or the joint note of Warrick and the corporation.

(February 29, 1892.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court holding circuit in Gloucester County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover from Reeve the amount of a promissory note signed by the Warrick Glass Works, J. Price Warrick, President, and indorsed and sold by Reeve to the plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. J. Grandall, for plaintiff in error:

If the note was made by joint makers, the indorser's liability did not attach until demand of payment had been made upon both makers. Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 239, 255.

The notes have joint makers.

In Appar v. Hiler, 24 N. J. L. 814, the Chief Justice says: "As to the payees they were all principals and all bound jointly and severally to pay the debt."

In Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 94, it is laid down that "if a note runs 'We promise', and is signed A. B. principal, C. D. surety, it is still the joint note of both," citing Hunt v. Adams, 5 Mass. 358, 4 Am. Dec. 68; Palmer v. Grant, 4 Conn. 387; Barnett v. Juday, 38 Ind. 86; Johnson v. King, 20 Ala. 370.

The note being perfect on its face, entirely unambiguous, testimony that J. Price Warrick acted as agent for the sole purpose of avoiding and escaping liability is incompetent.

Fruts v. Stanton, 10 Wend. 271, 1 Am. L. Cas. 5th ed. 744; Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 692, 47 Am. Dec. 182; Pooley v. Harradine, 7 El. & Bl. 481; Strong v. Foster, 17 C. B. 201.

Assuming the proof established J. Price Warrick, to be president, no agency was thereby established to pledge the credit of the corporation.

See Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 87 N. J. L. 102; Nichols v. Williams, 22 N. J. Eq. 68.

Mr. Lewis Starr, for defendant in error:

"We" does not show the plurality of makers because in ordinary parlance it is most natural to designate a corporation by the word "we," because it is suggestive of an aggregation of individuals.

For a determination as to who is bound by an instrument of the kind, it is proper to refer to the signature.

Randolph, Com. Paper, § 129.

The addition of an official title to the signature of the officer is a mere description of the person and makes it doubtful who was intended to be bound. Such ambiguity may be explained by parol testimony.

Abbott, Trial Ev. 87; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 147; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 418; 1 Parsons, Bills & Notes, 168; Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec. 182; Chaddock v. Vanness, 85 N. J. L. 523; Appar v. Hiler, 24 N. J. L. 815; Shotwell v. McKown, 5 N. J. L. 828.

The notes in question are unambiguous and on their face they show conclusive evidence of a corporate promise alone, and that the officer whose name was signed is not liable thereon.

Draper v. Massachusetts Steam Heat Co. 5 Allen, 388; Atkins v. Brown, 59 Me. 90; Castle 16 L. R. A.

v. Belfast Foundry Co. 72 Me. 167; Liebocher v. Kraus, 5 L. R. A. 496, 74 Wis. 887; Falk v. Moebis, 127 U. S. 597, 82 L. ed. 266; Carpenter v. Farnsworth, 106 Mass. 561, 8 Am. Rep. 360; Bean v. Pioneer Min. Co. 66 Cal. 451, 56 Am. Rep. 106; Miller v. Roach, 6 L. R. A. 71, 150 Mass. 140; Chipman v. Foster, 119 Mass. 189.

A note in this form "We promise to pay" etc., signed "W. B. S. Sec'y," and sealed with the corporate seal, has been held in Indiana to be a note of the corporation.

Means v. Swormstedt, 32 Ind. 37, 2 Am. Rep. 330. See also Latham v. Houston Flour Mills 68 Tex. 127; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 148; Newmarket Sav. Bank v. Gillet, 100 Ill. 254, 39 Am. Rep. 89.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause was tried at the Gloucester circuit. The action was brought upon certain promissory notes, of which the following is a copy:

"Glassboro, N. J., Dec. 18, 1890. $97 70-100. Three months after date we promise to pay to the order of Thos. Reeve, at the First National Bank of Glassboro, ninety-seven and 70-100 dollars, without defalcation, value received. Warrick Glass-Works. J. Price Warrick, Pres."

Two additional notes, one for $90.80 and another for $140.10, were in the same form. Each was indorsed by the payee, and held for value by the First National Bank of Glassboro. At maturity a demand of payment was made at the bank upon the Warrick Glass-Works, payment refused, and notice of protest duly given to Reeve, the payee and indorser. The defense interposed by the defendant's counsel was that the note was signed by the Warrick Glass-Works and by J. Price Warrick as joint makers; that demand of payment should have been made upon each of the joint makers; and therefore it was insisted that the failure to make a demand upon Warrick relieved the indorser from liability. The only facts proved in the case bearing upon the question mooted were that the note was given by the corporation for feed furnished, and that J. Price Warrick was the president of the company. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case a motion to nonsuit was made and overruled. This action of the trial court was the subject of the only material exception.

We are of the opinion that the refusal to nonsuit was correct. The note was that of the Warrick Glass-Works alone. The demand of payment was properly made upon the corporation only. The cases in which the liability of parties to paper similar to this is determined are not uniform in their results. Indeed, great contrariety of views can be found in the decisions upon this question. A detailed examination of those cases would not result in much profit. The result of the best-considered decisions is this: Where nothing appears in the body of a note to indicate the maker, and the note is signed by a corporate name, under which name appears the name of an officer of the company, with his corporate official title affixed thereto, in such case the note is taken conclusively to be that of the corporation.

Where, however, a note drawn in a similar form, except as to the signatures, is subscribed by the name of an officer of a corporation, to which name is affixed his title as an officer of a particular corporation, the result is not the same. In respect to notes drawn in the last-mentioned form, the courts in most of the states hold that there is an ambiguity arising out of this manner of coupling the names of the natural person and of the corporation. It is therefore open to the parties to introduce extrinsic testimony to disclose facts from which it can be concluded which of the parties should be regarded as the maker. In this state the rule is that a note drawn in this form is prima facie the note of the person signing and not the note of the corporation; but this is only a disputable presumption, and, upon the ground of an existing ambiguity concerning the maker, evidence is admissible to show that it was intended to be the note of the corporation, which evidence can, of course, be met with counter-evidence of the same character. This rule was definitely settled in the case of Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec. 182. In this case a note was signed, "John Kean, Pres. F. & S. S. R. Co." It was held to be prima facie the note of Kean, but it was held that parol evidence might be introduced to show whether it really was the personal note of the officer or was the note of the railroad company. If, therefore, the present notes had been signed, "J. Price Warrick, President of the Warrick Glass Works," it, in the absence of parol testimony to show a contrary intention, would be regarded as the note of Warrick. As the notes are signed with the name of the corporation, followed by the words, "J. Price Warrick, Pres.," they are taken to be corporation paper. This conclusion seems to rest upon rational ground. The name of the corporation signed first stands as a principal, and that of the officer as agent. The name of a corporation, so placed, raises the implication of a corporate liability. To so place it requires the hand of an agent. The name of an officer of such corporation, to which name the official title is appended, put beneath the corporate name, implies the relation of principal and agent. It means that, inasmuch as every corporate act must be done by a natural person, this person is the agent by whose hand the corporation did the particular act. This form of signature is just as significant in respect to the notes in question as if the name the "Warrick Glass Works" had been written, "Per Warrick, Agent." The following are cases in which notes in similar form to those now in suit have been held to be solely the notes of the corporation whose name first appeared, followed by the name of an officer: Bean v. Pioneer Min. Co. 66 Cal. 451, 56 Am. Rep. 106; Atkins v. Brown, 59 Me. 90; Castle v. Belfast Foundry Co. 72 Me. 187; Miller v. Roach, 150 Mass. 140, 6 L. R. A. 71; Draper v. Massachusetts Steam-Heat Co. 5 Allen, 388; Liebecher v. Kraus, 74 Wis. 387, 5 L. R. A. 496.

I do not perceive any significance in the use of the words, "We promise to pay," instead of "The company promises to pay." The contention was that the use of these words raised an implication that it was the joint note of the corporation and Warrick. But, as has been remarked in more than one of the cases cited, in which the notes contained a promise in like form, the word "we" is often used by a corporation aggregate. Draper v. Massachusetts Steam Heat Co., supra; Bean v. Pioneer Min. Co. supra; Randolph, Com. Paper, § 143.

Our conclusion is that the demand was made upon the only maker, and therefore the refusal of the trial judge to nonsuit was right.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

E. ARCHER, Appt.,
v.
SALINAS CITY, Resp.
(.....Cal.....)

1. A dedication to the public of land for a park is effected by the owner of a tract which lies within an incorporated town if he makes and records a map by which the tract is subdivided into blocks and lots which are bounded by streets connecting with streets of the town already laid out, marks a space thereon "park," and sells lots which according to the map face the park, holding out its existence as an inducement to purchasers.
2. Delay on the part of a town in using land which has been dedicated to it for a park will not impair its right thereto.
3. Although acceptance is necessary in case of an offer to dedicate, actual dedication will vest title in the public without acceptance.

4. A dedication to the public of a portion of land which is subject to a purchase-money mortgage, will be superior to the claim of the mortgagee if he accepts a reconveyance in satisfaction of the mortgage.

(January 21, 1892.)

APPEAL, by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Monterey County in favor of defendant in an action brought to quiet the title to certain real estate to which defendant had set up an adverse claim. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. P. Geil and H. V. Moorehouse for appellant.

Messrs. W. M. R. Parker and B. V. Sargent for respondent.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to quiet title to a block of land in Salinas City. Judgment was rendered for the defendant upon the ground that the land in question had been dedicated for use as a public park. From this judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

NOTE.—For notes on dedication of land for a public park, see Clarke v. Providence (R. I.) 1 L. R. A. 725; West Chicago Park Comrs. v. McMullen (Ill.) 10 L. R. A. 215; Atty-Gen. v. Abbott (Mass.) 13 L. R. A. 251.

16 L. R. A.

The land in question is a portion of a larger tract of about 200 acres within the limits of Salinas City, of which the plaintiff was the owner on January 15, 1874, when he conveyed the same in fee to W. H. Stone for the sum of $25,000, and received from him $5,000 in money, and a mortgage on the same property to secure the remaining $20,000. This mortgage was renewed in 1878, and on December 24, 1880, Stone reconveyed a portion of the tract, including the block in question, in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, and other obligations of his to the plaintiff. In July, 1874, Stone caused the tract to be surveyed and subdivided into blocks, with streets connecting with other streets that had been laid out in Salinas City, marking the blocks with stakes set in the ground; and on the 12th of March, 1875, filed in the recorder's of Monterey county a map of the tract, showing these streets and blocks, and the subdivisions of the blocks. Upon this map the block in question is laid down as bounded by Park street, Homestead avenue, Central avenue, and Villa street, and is itself marked "Central Park." Prior to the filing of the map, Stone had advertised in several newspapers that a sale of the tract would be held March 15, 1875, and had made and circulated copies of the map, and on the day of the sale he had an enlarged copy of the map upon the ground, and sold at public auction a very large number of the lots according to the map. In the advertisement of the sale it was stated that "in the center of this plat is located and held in reservation a block 580 feet square for a city park." At the sale it was represented that the square had been laid out for a city park, and the auctioneer made frequent references to this park as an inducement to pay advanced prices for lots in its vicinity, and the lots around it were sold at much higher prices than those remote from it. Stone was present at the sale, and made no objection to any of these representations. Nearly all of the lots upon the streets bounding the park and fronting thereon were sold at the sale, and during several years after the auction other lots were sold with reference to the map; and, after the conveyance to the plaintiff, deeds were executed by him with reference to the map as late as 1887. Previous to the auction sale, Stone had caused the land within this block to be laid out and planted with trees, and for several years thereafter he kept it fenced and had the trees cared for, and about 1884 the plaintiff cut some of the trees down, and hauled away the wood, under the claim that he was the owner of the land. It does not appear that the city ever made any improvements upon the park or took any steps with reference to it until some time in 1887, when it took possession of the block, and very soon thereafter the plaintiff commenced this action.

Upon the foregoing facts we are of the opinion that Stone dedicated the land in controversy for use as a public park, and that the finding of the court that the land was so dedicated is fully sustained by the evidence. When the owner of property which is within the limits of an incorporated city or town makes and records a map of such property, by which he subdivides the same into blocks and lots bounded by streets which are continuations of other streets already laid out by the city or town, and sells and conveys the lots abutting upon those streets, he thereby dedicates to the public the streets so laid out by him as prolongations of other streets, as well as the other streets which are laid out upon such map intersecting and connecting the same; and if, upon such map or plan, he has designated a space or block as a public park, such space or block is as fully dedicated to public use as are the streets delineated thereon. The purchasers of such lots have not merely an easement in the streets upon which the lots abut, but all of the streets are set apart for the purpose of enabling such purchasers to have reciprocal intercourse with the public outside of the subdivided tract, and are thus themselves dedicated to the entire public for all purposes to which streets can properly be applied. The same principles which are applicable to the dedication of public streets apply to the dedication of a public park or square. All dedications for public use are to be considered with reference to the purpose of which the dedication is made, or the use to which the property dedicated may be applied and that purpose may be ascertained by the designation which the owner has affixed to the land upon the map, whether it be a street, a school lot, or a public park. The setting apart of a public park upon such maps is for the convenience and enjoyment of the inhabitants of the place, and, as it enhances the value of the private property fronting thereon, so the owner who has dedicated it is presumed to have received, in the increased prices for which that property was sold, the compensation for its surrender to the public as a public park. The word "park," written upon a block of land designated upon a map, is as significant of a dedication, and of the use to which the land is dedicated, as is the word "street," written upon such map. The word carries with itself the idea of an open or inclosed tract of land for the comfort and enjoyment of the inhabitants of the city or town in which it is located, and is so defined by lexicographers. In England the word, when applied to an inclosed tract of land in the country, has a different signification, and signifies that the lands inclosed are the private grounds of the proprietor. In this country, too, a man may inclose his own land and style it a "park," or give that name to his place, without giving to the public any right to its use, for in such a case there would be no semblance of dedication; but the meaning of a word is to be determined by the circumstances connected with its use. In London, as well as in any city in this country, the term "park" signifies an open space intended for the recreation and enjoyment of the public, and this signification is the same whether the word be used alone, or with some qualifying term, as "Hyde Park," or "Regent's Park," or, as in the present case, "Central Park." Upon this point the authorities are uniform. Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 513, 8 L. ed. 540; Price v. Plainfield, 40 N. J. L. 608; Carter v. Portland, 4 Or. 339; Cincinnati v. White, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed. 452; Rowan

v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 246; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 640, 644. Dedication is an ultimate fact dependent upon the establishment of other facts, and is to be found from the evidence presented to the court. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 648. It results from the acts of the owner of the land, coupled with the intent with which he does those acts. It may be express and completed by a single act, as when the land is dedicated by deed; or it may be implied from a series of acts, as when the owner subdivides a tract of land into blocks and streets, and causes a map of such subdivision to be recorded, and sells the several subdivisions which front upon those streets. Whenever the dedication is complete, the property thereby becomes public property, and the owner loses all control over it, or right to its use. Even though the acceptance presumed from an express dedication may not impose upon the public all the obligations that an express acceptance would impose, yet the owner is as much concluded by his dedication in the one case as in the other. If the dedication is complete by his act, whether express or implied, it is thereafter irrevocable by him, and the effect of such dedication cannot be qualified by any act or declaration thereafter made on his part. The property dedicated has become public property, impressed with the use for which it was dedicated, and neither can the public divert it from that use nor can it be lost by adverse possession. Nor is the effect of such dedication impaired by any delay in the use of the land for which it was set apart. Such failure to make use of the land does not authorize the owner to resume possession. The public can thereafter appropriate the land to the use for which it was dedicated, whenever convenience or necessity may suggest.

A distinction is to be observed between actual dedication and an offer to dedicate. In the latter case there must be an acceptance on behalf of the public before the dedication is complete, and the owner may at any time before such acceptance revoke the offer, while in the former case the acceptance will be presumed from the benefit arising from the dedication. The acceptance of an offer to dedicate may, moreover, be formal, as by resolution on the part of the city, or it may be implied, as by user or adaptation for use, as in the improvement of the streets. Merely recording a map of the subdivided tract, or simply designating the streets and blocks by stakes or monuments upon the ground, would constitute no more than an offer to dedicate. Whether the owner, by making sales according to such map or designation, has made the offer with reference to other streets than those by which the lots sold are bounded, is a fact that the court must determine from the circumstances of each case, such as the number of sales, their proximity to the street claimed to have been dedicated, the use to which the land has been put, and the means by which, or the extent to which, the streets have been brought into connection with other streets or highways. The owner, after selling some of the lots according to such map, might, either with the consent of the purchasers, or if he should himself repurchase all of the lots so sold, withdraw such offer at any time before the public had acquired any interest in the streets, either from formal acceptance or by actual user. Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 286. In San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170, it was held that the sale of the blocks opposite the space designated on the map as "Court Square," with other lots and blocks upon the map, effected such a dedication of that space that it could not afterwards be revoked by the owner. The principles relative to dedication and an offer to dedicate which are laid down in that case are in accord with the law upon that subject, as well as with previous decisions in this state, and should have controlling effect in the present case. The failure to observe this distinction between a dedication and an offer to dedicate explains the apparent discrepancy in the language used in various opinions, where it is said that a dedication is not complete until the city has given its acceptance. In this state, however, it has been the uniform rule, whenever the question has been presented for decision, that, whenever an actual dedication has been made, no acceptance is required, but will be presumed, even though there may not from such dedication be imposed upon the public an obligation to make expenditures upon the streets. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 648; Stone v. Brooks, 85 Cal. 497. In Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 478, Castro, the owner of the land, made and recorded a map of the town of San Lorenzo in 1856, on which the street in question was delineated, and made some sales of land according to that map. The street, however, was not opened to the public, or even used as a public road. Within less than a year after making the map he conveyed a portion of the tract so laid out, including the place marked for this street, and it was thereafter held in possession under said conveyance. The town was not incorporated until 1876, and after such incorporation its authorities accepted this alleged dedication. The court held that these acts of Castro were only an offer to dedicate, which was revoked by his conveyance of the tract before the actual acceptance. In Phillips v. Day, 82 Cal. 24, the owner had made a map of the tract, marked streets and subdivisions upon the ground, and made sales of a few of the lots according to such map and subdivision. The land was not, however, within the limits of any city or town, and the streets were not traveled, but were kept from use by the public by fences inclosing the entire tract. The lots conveyed by the owner were afterwards repurchased by him, and a sale made of the entire tract, including the streets, before any map was recorded. The court held that these circumstances amounted to only an offer to dedicate the streets, and that the sale of the entire tract operated as a revocation of such offer. In Eureka v. Croghan, 81 Cal. 524, the owner of the land made a conveyance in 1870, describing the tract conveyed with reference to certain streets as they would exist if projected through the tract, and about four months afterwards sold the portion covered by these streets. It was held that the first conveyance was no more than an offer to dedicate, which was revoked by the second conveyance; distinguishing the case from those in which the owner has himself platted the land into blocks and streets, and sold the lots with reference to such streets. In Eureka v. Armstrong, 88 Cal. 628, the dedication was held complete, for the reason that the offer had been formally accepted before any attempt at revocation was made. There is nothing decided in People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, inconsistent with the foregoing principles, although there are certain expressions in the opinion in that case that may seem at variance therewith but they were obiter dicta, or side remarks and unauthoritative views of the justice who wrote the opinion. That the court did not intend to lay down any different rule from that which is given in Stone v. Brooke, supra, or to qualify or limit the authority of that case, is evident from the fact that that case and others are cited on page 78, 81 Cal., as authority for the proposition that "where the owner surveys and plats his property, and makes sales of lots with reference to such plat, the streets designated thereon are irrevocably dedicated to the public as streets." In fact, the question itself was not presented for decision, inasmuch as the facts in People v. Reed showed that there never had been more than an offer to dedicate. The map of the property was never recorded; the part of the alleged street in controversy was never opened as a street, but had for many years been fenced and occupied by substantial and permanent buildings; no sales of lots thereon were ever made; and it did not appear that any of the individuals who purchased property on other parts of the alleged street had ever seen the map of the property; and no action was taken by the city for more than 20 years after the map was made, and the property inclosed and permanently improved. 81 Cal. 76.

When the plaintiff took the conveyance from Stone, in December, 1880, in satisfaction of Stone's indebtedness to him, the title thereby acquired was subject to the dedication in his hands as much as it would have been in the hands of any other grantee of Stone, and subject to this incumbrance as much as to any other incumbrance which Stone might have placed upon the land while he was the proprietor. While Stone might not have made any dedication of the tract that would impair the security of the mortgage that he had previously made thereon, or that would have prevented a purchaser under a foreclosure sale under such mortgage from acquiring a title free of such incumbrance, yet the acceptance by the mortgagee of a deed in satisfaction of the debt gave to him only such title as Stone had at the time when the deed was executed.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: De Haven, J.; Paterson, J.; McFarland, J.; Sharpstein, J.; Garoutte, J.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania
v.

Charles A. ALLEN et al., Appts.

(.....Pa.....)

The regular use of a steam traction engine to draw heavy loads of stone along a public highway from a quarry to a railroad, taking a train of two wagons at a time and making two trips per day, each requiring from one hour to one hour and a half for one way, and sometimes stopping half an hour to get up steam, and frequently making much noise by blowing off steam, constitutes an indictable nuisance where travel is thereby seri-

NOTE.—Nuisance—Traction engine.

The lawfulness of the use of a steam traction engine on a highway is yet an unsettled question, although in recent years the use of such engines on highways has become somewhat common.

In Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 522, it was decided, in an opinion written by Judge Cooley, that a steam engine used as a means of locomotion in a highway is not necessarily a nuisance, and that whether it is so or not is a question of fact, a question of reasonable conduct and management.

In Watkins v. Reddin, 2 Fost. & F. 622, where the declaration charged the owner of a steam traction engine with using it in a highway for the purpose of drawing trucks and carriages, the court charged that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict if the engine was calculated by noise and appearance to frighten horses, so as to make its use in the highway dangerous to persons riding or driving horses, and the owner knew of the danger, whether his knowledge was derived from the nature of the engine or otherwise. Both these cases, it will be noticed, make the question one of fact for the jury, although the former expressly declares that such an engine in a highway is not necessarily a nuisance, while the latter seems to regard it as necessarily a nuisance if from the nature of the engine it is calculated by noise and appearance to frighten horses.

Little, if any, help toward the determination of the question can be drawn from cases concerning the fright of horses by engines on or near railroad crossings, or even on tracks laid in streets, as these engines being operated under a franchise, the question as to them is chiefly one of the reasonable or negligent exercise of the franchise. But cases relating to steam engines operated near a highway may be of some value in this connection.

In Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver, 9 West. Rep. 621, 111 Ind. 195, the operation of a portable steam engine near a highway is held to be not necessarily a nuisance so as to make a person for whom it is operated liable for the negligence of an independent contractor in operating it.

So the owner of a steam threshing machine from whom it is hired by another person is not liable for the latter's violation of a statute by setting it up within a prohibited distance from a highway, where it is done in the owner's absence and without his direction. Harrison v. Leaper, 5 L. T. N. S. 640.

In England a statute prohibiting steam engines to be operated within twenty-five yards of a highway, unless concealed by a building, wall or fence, so as not to be dangerous, is held applicable to an engine which is set up for temporary use only. Smith v. Stokes, 4 Best & S. 84. B. A. R.

ously hindered and women and children are afraid to drive that way, especially where the safety of bridges on the road is endangered by the heavy loads.

(March 28, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Bradford County convicting them upon an indictment charging the maintenance of a nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Rodney A. Mercur, for appellants:

The use being lawful, to constitute an indictable offense it must be charged and laid in the indictment that the effect of the obstruction in the highway unduly or unreasonably prevented the public from their enjoyment of its use. The fact that an obstruction may simply interfere with or prevent for a short time the public from their enjoyment of its use is not sufficient.

See 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, §§ 1410, 1414.

If from the facts stated it appears that no indictable offense has been committed, the indictment will be set aside in the first instance.

1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 772, pp. 467-468.

It is not every obstruction, irrespective of its character or purpose, that is illegal, even although not sanctioned by any express legislative or municipal authority. On the contrary, the right of the public to the free and unobstructed use of a street or way is subject to reasonable and necessary limitations.

2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 730, pp. 721, 722; Macomber v. Nichols, 84 Mich. 312, 23 Am. Rep. 522.

The right to partially obstruct a street does not appear to be limited to a case of strict necessity, it may extend to purposes of convenience or ornament, provided it does not unreasonably interfere with public travel.

Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649; Com. v. Hawck, 108 Pa. 586; Piollet v. Simmers, 106 Pa. 109.

The use of a steam engine in the heart of a city is not unlawful so long as properly used and managed.

Loore v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Wood, Nuisances, § 151, p. 151; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 684, pp. 680, 681; Macomber v. Nichols, supra; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver, 9 West. Rep. 621, 111 Ind. 195; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 684; Bennett v. Lovell, 12 R. I. 166, 84 Am. Rep. 628.

The defendants, having followed the provisions of the Act of June 30, 1885, cannot be convicted of a nuisance, for an obstruction even which would otherwise constitute a nuisance may be legalized by legislative enactment; for that which the state has authorized cannot be a public nuisance.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 484; Cooley, Torts, 615; North Vernon v. Voegler, 1 West. Rep. 566, 108 Ind. 814.

Messrs. John W. Coddington, Dist. Atty., D'A. Overton and John C. Ingham, for the Commonwealth.

Per curiam:

The defendants were convicted in the court below of maintaining a nuisance. They now allege that the indictment does not charge an indictable offense. The first count thereof sets forth that the defendants "set up, established, maintained, kept up, and continued an obstruction in said public road and common highway aforesaid, leading from Rummerfield in Standing Stone township, up the Rummerfield creek, by Phillip Grace's towards Herrickville, by running back and forth several times a day, over said highway, an engine propelled by steam, commonly known as a 'traction engine' which by its smoke, steam, noise, and appearance, frightens the horses driven over said road or common highway, and endangers the safety and lives of people using said road in an ordinary manner, and obstructs and hinders travel thereon, whereby the public road and common highway aforesaid was then and there obstructed and straightened so that the citizens of said commonwealth could not then and there go, return, pass and repass, ride and labor, on foot and on horseback, with their horses, coaches, carts, carriages, and wagons, in, upon, through, and along said public road and common highway, as they ought and were wont and accustomed to do, without great danger of their lives, and also their goods, to the great damage and common nuisance of all citizens of said commonwealth of Pennsylvania, going, returning, passing and repassing, riding and laboring, with horses, coaches, carts, carriages, wagons, on foot and on horseback, upon, through and along said public road and common highway, contrary to the form of the Act of General Assembly in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

Upon the trial below it appears that the defendants had been operating a stone quarry for several years. This quarry is situated on a public road about three miles from Rummerfield station. It is a narrow road, with four bridges between the stone quarry and the station. For several years the defendants hauled the stone from the quarry in the ordinary manner, by horses. Some time during the year 1891 Charles A. Allen, one of the defendants, procured a traction engine, and put it on the road for the purpose of drawing heavier loads of stone. Behind the engine they hitched two wagons, one behind the other, making a train from 50 to 55 feet long, and when loaded, weighing from thirteen to fourteen tons. They made two trips a day from the quarry to the station. It took from an hour to an hour and a half to go over the road one way. There was evidence that the train would sometimes stop for half an hour to get up steam; the steam would blow off frequently, and make a good deal of noise; that it hindered and obstructed travel over the road; that people took other roads several miles out of their way to avoid it; that women and children accustomed to drive to the station for different purposes were afraid to do so; that farmers who had contracted to deliver produce to Rummerfield refused to do so because of the obstruction, and cars partly loaded had to be unloaded on that account; that parties at the station and on the road had been hindered and delayed sometimes for half an hour or more, waiting for this train to get out of the way; that persons who had met it in the road had been obliged to unhitch their horses, and go off behind school-houses into the woods and lanes and wait until it had gone by. We are not prepared to say that the indictment does not set forth a public nuisance and that the jury were not justified in finding in the evidence the existence of such nuisance. The running of a traction engine over a public highway upon a single occasion would not constitute a public nuisance. That may be necessary to remove it from one location to another, as in the case of a steam threshing-machine, which is at certain seasons removed from one farm to another, for the purpose of threshing out the farmers' crops. Indeed, the Act of June 30, 1885, seems to recognize such necessity, and prescribes the conditions and manner in which machinery propelled by steam may be moved over a public road or highway. This, however, we regard as restrictive legislation. It was not intended to license the unrestricted use of steam upon the public highways of the commonwealth. While a man may have a right under this Act of Assembly, to run a traction engine over a public road for a necessary purpose by complying with the terms of the Act, yet, if he uses that privilege in an unreasonable and in an unusual way, it may constitute a public nuisance. At common law, any obstruction which unnecessarily incommodes or impedes the lawful use of a highway by the public is a nuisance. Angell, Highways, p. 255, § 228; 4 Bl. Com. 167; Com. v. Millman, 13 Serg. & R. 404. Any such obstruction of a public road as materially interferes with the public convenience is indictable as a nuisance. 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, 15. A man may lawfully use a public highway in the transaction of his legitimate business, either for travel or for transportation; but it is common law and common sense that he must use it in a reasonable manner, and not interfere with its reasonable use by other citizens. And whether a particular use is an unreasonable use and a nuisance is a question of fact, to be submitted to a jury. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

16 L. R. A.

While each citizen is protected in the enjoyment of his own rights, he must so exercise them as not to interfere with the rights of others. We can understand that it may be sometimes necessary to move a traction engine from one place to another, in the reasonable pursuit of a lawful business. It is quite another matter to occupy a particular road continuously, for such purpose, to the inconvenience of the public, and peril to persons using such road. The jury have found such continuous user to be a nuisance, and we cannot say such finding was not justified by the evidence. In the American & English Encyclopedia of Law, (vol. 16, p. 962,) the learned editor mentions, among other indictable nuisances: "The use on a highway of a traction steam engine, which, by its noise and appearance, frightens horses and makes the highway dangerous to persons riding or driving." Aside from this, it was alleged on the part of the commonwealth that this traction engine with the unusual load that it drew, injured the highway, and endangered the safety of the bridges. As a general rule, highways and bridges are constructed for ordinary use, in an ordinary manner, and not for an unusual or extraordinary use, either by crossing at great speed or by the passing of a very large and unusual weight. A township is not bound to do more than to so construct its bridges as to protect the public against injury by a reasonable, proper, and probable use thereof, in view of the surrounding circumstances, such as the extent, kind, and nature of the travel and business over them. There was evidence upon the trial below that the bridges on this road were built only for the usual and ordinary loads drawn over them, and that such loads were not more than one third or one fourth of the weight of the loads drawn by this traction engine. An examination of the respective specifications fails to disclose error. The case was submitted to the jury under proper instructions as to the law. Judgment affirmed.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of North Dakota

v.

Martin O. HASLEDAHL, Plff. in Err.

(.....N. Dak.)

1. In this state, when during the trial of a criminal case, and before the case has been finally submitted to the jury, a juror becomes sick and unable to sit further in the case, the court may order such juror discharged, and a new juror sworn to complete the panel, and that the trial begin anew; or the court may discharge the entire

*Head notes by WALLIN, J.

NOTE.—The statute construed in the above opinion as to beginning a trial anew when a juror is unable to perform his duty does not seem to have been construed, even if such a statute has been enacted, except in North Dakota and California, and the conflict of the decisions upon it in those states is fully shown by the opinion.

16 L. R. A.

jury, and then or subsequently impanel another jury to try the case.

- 2. When the first course is pursued, the prisoner is not thereby entitled to again exercise all the peremptory challenges given him by statute, or to peremptorily challenge any one of the eleven remaining jurors; and in procuring the new juror the prisoner may exercise only such of his peremptory challenges as he has not already exhausted in procuring the other eleven jurors.
- 3. The information was filed by the state's attorney under chapter 71, Laws 1890, and verified by the state's attorney, as follows: "That the allegations therein contained are true to his best knowledge, information, and belief." Held, that the information was sufficiently verified. Whether such verification is sufficient when made as a foundation for a warrant of arrest, or when made by a person other than the state's attorney, not decided.
- 4. Where the information was not enti- tled in an action, and it nowhere appears by the information that the defendant was prosecuted in the name of or by the authority of the state of North Dakota, proper and timely objection to the information being made,—Held, that the information was invalid, for the reason that it did not conform to the requirements of section 97, art. 4, of the state Constitution, which contains the following language: "All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of North Dakota."

(May 31, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Richland County to review a judgment convicting defendant of embezzlement. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. M. A. Hildreth, for plaintiff in error:

The motion to set aside and quash the information should have been granted.

The Constitution of the state, section 97 of article 4, provides that "the style of all process shall be: 'The state of North Dakota.' All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of North Dakota, and conclude: 'against the peace and dignity of the state of North Dakota.'"

See Jefferson v. State, 24 Tex. App. 585; Gould v. People, 89 Ill. 217; Cox v. State, 8 Tex. App. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 746; Donnelly v. People, 11 Ill. 552; Hay v. People, 59 Ill. 95; Calvert v. State, 8 Tex. App. 538, 2 Crim. Law Mag. 122.

Section 373 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a literal transcript of section 1123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of California.

4 Decring. Anno. Code; California Stat. 252.

The supreme court of that state passed upon this question in the case of People v. Stewart, 64 Cal. 60.

The judgment in that case was reversed, because the court denied to the defendant his peremptory challenges. The case is on all fours with the case at bar, and is decisive of this question.

See also People v. Brady, 72 Cal. 490.

The court should have discharged the defendant for the reason that after discharging the juror, the defendant had been in jeopardy.

See Highlands v. Com. 1 Cent. Rep. 899, 111 Pa. 1, 7 Crim. Law Mag. 491; Ex parte Ulrich, 42 Fed. Rep. 587.

Mr. C. A. M. Spencer, Atty-Gen., for the State.

Wallin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was convicted of the crime of embezzlement, and sentenced to a term in the penitentiary at Bismarck. The bill of exceptions embraced in the record shows that, after the jury had been sworn, and a portion of the testimony introduced, a juror was taken sick, and was unable to sit further on the jury. The court thereupon made an order discharging such juror, entering the reasons therefor in the order, and directed that a new juror be called and duly sworn as a juror in the case, and that the trial of the case begin anew. In the formation of the original jury plaintiff in error had used nine of the ten peremptory challenges to which he was entitled under the statute. When a new juror was called into the box he was peremptorily challenged by the plaintiff in error, and such challenge allowed by the court. The second juror called was likewise challenged, and the challenge disallowed by the court, to which ruling plaintiff in error duly excepted. Such juror was sworn, and served as a juror in the case.

Section 7401, Comp. Laws, reads as follows: "If, before the conclusion of a trial, a juror becomes sick, so as to be unable to perform his duty, the court may order him to be discharged. In that case a new juror may be sworn, and the trial begin anew, or the jury may be discharged, and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled." Under this section plaintiff in error contends that, upon the discharge of the sick juror he was entitled to all his challenges, both as to the 11 jurors remaining in the box and the new jurors called the same as though no jury had been previously selected. This section appears in our territorial Code of 1877, and is an exact copy of a section in the California Code of Criminal Procedure. We have not found the statute elsewhere. Subsequent to its adoption by the territory of Dakota it was construed by the Supreme Court of California in People v. Stewart, 64 Cal. 60, and later in People v. Brady, 72 Cal. 490. The construction placed upon the section in those cases fully sustains the position taken by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error. But, under the circumstances, the case comes before us as an original question. Many provisions in our statutes were copied from California, and in their construction our labors have been greatly assisted by the opinions of the very able and painstaking court of that state, but in this instance we are unable to follow where that court leads. In Stewart v. People, the court says: "What is implied by the clause, 'and the trial begin anew?' The title of the chapter which provides for the challenging the jury is: 'Of proceedings after the commencement of the trial and before judgment.' We think, within the meaning of the Code, a trial commences when the case is called for trial, unless the trial is then postponed; that everything that transpires in the case after that and before judgment is a part of the trial. That being so, it follows that the defendant was entitled, after the change had been effected, to all the challenges which the law gave him in the first instance. Within that limit he not only had a right to challenge the new juror, but likewise any or all of the original eleven." To our minds that reasoning goes too far. If the word "trial" in the phrase and the "trial begin anew" includes everything from the time the case was called, then necessarily, the names of the remaining eleven must go back in the clerk's box to be redrawn. There cannot be eleven jurors in the jury box when the case is called. If the trial is to "begin again" at the calling of the case, necessarily the jury must be impaneled again, and of course must first be discharged from the prior panel. And we think the reasoning in People v. Stewart leads to that result unmistakably. If the accused has the right to challenge any or all of the remaining eleven, then it must be true that there is not an accepted juror in the box. But there were twelve accepted jurors before the one was taken sick, and they could only be relieved from that condition by being discharged. Hence, in every case the practical effect of discharging the one sick juror is to discharge the entire jury, under that construction. But that could not have been the intent of the Legislature, because in the same connection it is provided that the court may discharge the sick juror, and swear another to fill his place, or may discharge the entire jury, and impanel another. It does not meet the point to say that, unless the accused challenges the remaining eleven, or some of them, they retain their character as jurors. That would always place it in the power of the accused to discharge the entire jury or not, at his election. The law places the election with the court. Moreover, the character of juror cannot attach while the right to challenge remains. Under the English practice when, during the progress of a trial, a juror becomes sick and unable to sit, the jury is always discharged. The names of the eleven men are immediately recalled, and another name taken from the panel to complete the number. The accused is then given all his challenges to the twelve, after which each juror or the person substituted by the challenge must be sworn de novo. See Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr., note to section 509. It thus appears that in England, where the jury is always discharged, the process is precisely the same in effect that is announced in People v. Stewart, when the jury is not discharged.

The word "trial" is sometimes used in a broad sense, including all the steps taken in a case prior to final judgment, but in its restricted sense it includes the investigation of facts only. Jenks v. State, 89 Ind. 9. We think it is used in the restricted sense in the statute under construction. Our statute defines a trial to be "the judicial examination of the issues between the parties, whether they be issues of law or fact." Comp. Laws, § 5081. A jury trial would be the examination of an issue of fact. The first definition of the word "trial" in Anderson's Law Dictionary is, "The examination of the matter of fact in issue." Mr. Wharton, in his note on the English practice, already cited, after stating that the jury must be sworn de novo, and charged with the prisoner, adds: "The trial must then begin again." We think that generally where the word "trial" is used in connection with the jury it means the examination of the issue of fact. The sequence of the wording of the statute would indicate that it is so used. It says: "A new juror may be sworn, and the trial begin anew." The trial begins anew after the new juror is sworn. The statute uses the singular number,—"juror;" neither "jurors" nor "jury." Under our practice jurors are sworn separately. Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. Dak. 80. We think the statute clearly intends that when the sick juror only is discharged the condition of the remaining eleven is not affected. They stand as accepted and sworn jurors, subject to no challenge, and but one other man is to be sworn as an additional juror to complete the panel. The condition of the jury after the discharge of the sick juror is identical with its condition when but eleven jurors had been secured. The word

"trial," as used in the first part of said section 7401, is certainly used in the restricted, and not the broad, sense. It says, "If before the conclusion of a trial," etc. Turning to section 7418, we find what course is to be pursued if a juror is taken sick after the jury has retired. Certainly the "trial" mentioned in section 7401 terminates with the termination of the investigation of the facts, otherwise section 7418 would be superfluous. This indicates that the word "trial," as used in section 7401, is restricted in its significance to the investigation of the facts, commencing after the jury is sworn and ending with the charge of the court. The meaning of the word is so limited by both section 7401 and section 7418. This construction deprives the accused of no constitutional right, and involves no hardship. In securing the twelfth juror he may, as he always may, use any peremptory challenges that he has not already exhausted in procuring the eleven. If he has already exhausted all his peremptory challenges, then, in this case, as in every other, the first man called against whom no challenge for cause can be interposed must be sworn as a juror. But the accused exhausted no peremptory challenges in disposing of the sick juror. He has used all the peremptory challenges which the statute gives him in securing the jury of twelve men by whom he is tried, and he has no ground for legal complaint. We think it radically unsound to assume that the Legislature intended to place the accused, so far as his peremptory challenges were concerned, in the same position when one juror was discharged as when twelve men were discharged. To prevent all possibility of prejudice to accused parties, the statute has given the trial court full discretion to discharge the entire jury, and we must presume the court will adopt that course in all cases when there could be a suspicion of prejudice to the rights of the prisoner in adopting the first course. We think the trial court committed no error in the formation of the jury.

Two other errors are assigned, both arising upon the information upon which defendant was tried, viz.: (1) That the information was verified upon "information and belief," and was not verified positively; (2) that the information omits to state in terms or in any other manner that the prosecution of the defendant is instituted either in the name or by the authority of the state of North Dakota. We think the assignment of error relating to the verification of the information is not well taken. The statute allowing an information to be filed in lieu of an indictment in criminal cases (section 8, chap. 71, Laws 1890) declares: "The state's attorney, prosecuting witness, or some other person shall verify the information." The manner of verification is not prescribed in the statute, nor does the statute expressly provide, as is the case in the statute regulating verifications in civil cases, that an attorney may in certain cases verify a pleading to the effect that the same is true to his "best knowledge, information, and belief." But, inasmuch as the statute allows the state's attorney to verify the information in all cases, it would, in our opinion, be unreasonable to say that that officer must swear to the information positively and without qualification in all cases. We think such a construction would, in a majority of cases, necessarily prevent a verification by the state's attorney, and in not a few cases prevent a verification by any witness; in which event, of course, no information could be filed, as all informations are required by the statute to be verified. It rarely occurs that the state's attorney has such personal knowledge of the essential facts of a crime as will permit him to swear to their existence in positive and unqualified terms. In many cases the crime can only be proven as a result of the testimony of several witnesses, each giving testimony as to separate links in the chain of evidence necessary to convict. In such cases no witness would be prepared to testify to all the essential facts constituting the crime positively and without qualification. This view is sustained by the Michigan cases. Mentor v. People, 80 Mich. 91; Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 872. See also State v. Montgomery, 8 Kan. 351; State v. Nulff, 15 Kan. 404. We think the verification sufficient, and hence overrule the assignment of error on that point. But we limit the decision to the facts of this case, and do not wish to indicate in advance what we should hold in a case where it appeared that the information had been verified on information and belief as a foundation for issuing a warrant of arrest, or by a witness or person other than the state's attorney, or in a case where no preliminary examination had been held or waived.

The remaining assignment of error presents a question of great difficulty. The information was first attacked by a motion to set it aside, and, that motion being denied, defendant demurred to the information, and the demurrer was overruled. Subsequently the defendant moved the court to arrest the judgment. In all these modes of assailing the information defendant's counsel claimed, among other things, that the information is invalid, because it does not appear by the information that the prosecution of this defendant is carried on either in the name of the state of North Dakota or by its authority. The information is not entitled in an action in which the state appears as a party, nor in any action, nor does the information aver in terms or indirectly that the defendant is prosecuted either in the name or by the authority of the state. It does appear on the face of the information that it was filed by the acting state's attorney of Richland county in the district court of said county and state of North Dakota. In support of his contention defendant's counsel cites section 97, art. 4, of the state Constitution, which contains the following language: "All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of North Dakota." In support of the information the attorney-general cites the case of Davenport v. Bird, 84 Iowa, 526. This case is one where the city prosecutes under its charter for violating a city ordinance forbidding loud and unusual noises in the streets. The Supreme Court of Iowa, construing a section of the Constitution of Iowa substantially like that above quoted, says in effect, that such prosecution is not one which should be had in the name of the state, 16 L. R. A.

because the language in the Constitution does not relate to such prosecutions, but has reference wholly to cases brought in the courts established by the Constitution, and for offenses arising under the criminal laws of the state. For this reason the prosecution was sustained, but the court says further: "It is fitting and appropriate that prosecutions for the violation of criminal laws of this state should be carried on in the name of the government." We think the case tends to sustain the position of defendant's counsel. See Saine v. State, 14 Tex. App. 144; note to 10 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 708; Jefferson v. State, 24 Tex. App. 535; Hay v. People, 59 Ill. 94; Gould v. People, 89 Ill. 216; Caibert v. State, 8 Tex. App. 538; Donnelly v. People, 11 Ill. 552. The omission in the information could, before trial, on leave of court, have been readily supplied by amendment (10 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 709); but nothing appears in the record showing that leave to amend was asked by the prosecutor. We are aware that the caption or commencement of indictments and informations is merely preliminary and formal, and not a part of the accusation proper, and hence courts have gone a great length in construing such formal parts, and have uniformly held that informalities and omissions in them are curable by amendment, and comparatively of small account, inasmuch as they cannot prejudice the substantial rights of the accused upon the merits. But in the case at bar the omission to state, either directly in the information or indirectly by means of entitling it in an action, that the prosecution of the case is carried on in the name of the state and by its authority, is nothing less than a plain violation of the explicit mandate of the state Constitution. It may be that the requirement is formal and arbitrary, and that to disregard it would not prejudice the defendant in his substantial rights, but we do not feel at liberty to completely ignore any provision of the organic law. On the contrary, our duty is to give effect to all of its terms. Our conclusion is that the information in this case is invalid, because it does not conform to the requirements of the state Constitution. An indictment, moreover, is required, among other things, to contain the title of the action specifying "the names of the parties." Section 213, Code Crim. Proc.; section 7241, Comp. Laws. Informations are to be tested, as near as may be, by the statutes regulating indictments. Chapter 71, Laws 1890.

Defendant objected to being tried before the new jury impaneled after the discharge of one of the original jurors on account of his illness, and based his objection upon the theory of a former jeopardy. But the discharge of the juror, when he became unable to perform his duties, was entirely proper, as it was occasioned by an obvious legal necessity. In such cases, the plea of former jeopardy cannot be allowed under the modern decisions. Wharton, Crim. Pr. & Pl. 9th ed. § 508, and cases cited.

The judgment will be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

All concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

James H. BAKER

c.

FLINT & PÈRE MARQUETTE R. CO.,

Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.)

1. A judgment in favor of a minor in an action brought by his father as next friend, which includes damages for loss of earning capacity from the time of injuries occasioned by defendant's negligence is a bar to an action by the father personally to recover for loss of services of the son during minority.
2. The question whether or not parents allowed their son to play about a railroad track and depot grounds so as to be regarded as having contributed to injuries received by him there, is for the jury where they testify that they had forbidden him so to do after receiving notice that such was his habit and were ignorant that he was there at the time he was hurt.

(April 8, 1902.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Bay County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for loss sustained by, and expense caused to, plaintiff, by reason of the injury of his minor son through defendant's alleged negligence. Reversed.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. A. E. Weadock, with Mr. William L. Webber, for plaintiff in error:

Where the parent has been, as in this case, carelessly negligent of his parental duties, it is against public policy to reward him for such neglect.

Belleville & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399, 98 Am. Dec. 175; Belleville R. Co. v. Snyder, 24 Ohio St. 670; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1191, § 87; Glassey v. Heatonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 57 Pa. 172; Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 187, § 44; Smith v. Heatonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 92 Pa. 450, 87 Am. Rep. 705; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bock, 93 Pa. 427; Williams v. Texas & P. R. Co. 60 Tex. 205; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475, Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 592; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591; Birmingham v. Dorer, 8 Brewst. 69; Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 71; Albertson v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. 48 Iowa, 292; Wright v. Malden & M. R. Co. 4 Allen, 283; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & O. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513; Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 849, 68 Am. Dec. 553; Louisville & P. Canal Co. v. Murphy, 9 Bush, 522.

If the plaintiff, James H. Baker, included in the first suit any part of his personal claim, then he is precluded from asserting other items which might have been included.

Hempstead v. Des Moines, 63 Iowa, 86; Plyfield v. Edwards, 39 Mich. 267; Freeman, Judgm. §§ 241-249.

Messrs. Simonson, Gillett & Court-right, with Mr. W. C. Green, for defendant in error:

In case of an injury to a minor, two causes of action arise; one in favor of the infant for his personal injuries, and one in favor of the parent for loss of service by him or her.

Sibley v. Rutcliffe, 50 Ark. 477; Durkee v. Central Pac. R. Co. 56 Cal. 888; Lehigh Iron Co. v. Rupp (Pa.) 7 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 25; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 608; Smith v. Smithson, 48 Ark. 261.

Can these two actions be united? Clearly not.

In the son's suit the only damages alleged were such as were personal to the son and in this action only such damages are alleged as are personal to the parent.

It was not necessary to allege that the injury was occasioned without any fault or negligence on the plaintiff's part.

Black, Brief and Pleading in Accident Cases, 208, § 143; Holt v. Whalley, 51 Ala. 569; Lopez v. Central Arizona Min. Co. 1 Ariz. 464; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Coss, 73 Ill. 894; Wilson v. Denver South Park & P. R. Co. 7 Colo. 101; May v. Princeton, 11 Met. 442; Hocum v. Weiherick, 22 Minn. 152; Lee v. Troy Citizens Gas Light Co. 98 N. Y. 115; Urquhart v. Ogdensburg, 28 Hun, 75; Street R. Co. v. Nolthenius, 40 Ohio St. 376; Lee v. Union R. Co. 13 R. I. 888, 34 Am. Rep. 668; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Murphy, 46 Tex. 356, 26 Am. Rep. 272; Baltimore & R. R. Co. v. Whittington, 80 Gratt. 805; Snyder v. Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. 11 W. Va. 14; Fowler v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 18 W. Va. 579; Kelley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 50 Wis. 881.

There was no sufficient evidence of contributory negligence in this case.

Morgan v. Illinois & St. L. Bridge Co. 7 Cent. L. J. 811. See also Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475; O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo. 74; Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 276, 8 Am. Rep. 628; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. 257.

The negligence of the parents or guardian of a child in allowing it to stray away or go out unattended is one for the jury to determine, and no rule of law can be laid down which interferes with the jury judging each case on its own merits.

Bottishill v. Humphreys, 7 West. Rep. 806, 64 Mich. 504; Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 56 Mich. 559, 56 Am. Rep. 405; East Saginaw City R. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503; Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 74 Mich. 21; Frick v. St. Louis, K. O. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 54; Boland v. Missouri R. Co. 36 Mo. 484; O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo.

NOTE.—The decision that a judgment obtained by a person as next friend for his minor son binds him personally so far as to prevent a subsequent recovery in his own behalf upon the same demand is a plain exception to the rule that a party is bound by a judgment only in the same capacity in which he was a party to it. But the real basis of 16 L. R. A.

the decision seems to be an equitable estoppel rather than any technical conclusiveness of the prior adjudication. Having actively aided a recovery by another person he is clearly estopped thereby from claiming that he himself is the only person who is lawfully entitled to such recovery.

90; Mulligan v. Curtis, 100 Mass. 512, 97 Am. Dec. 121; Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 52; Slatery v. O'Connell, 10 L. R. A. 653, 153 Mass. 94; McGreary v. Eastern R. Co. 135 Mass. 363, 373; Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236; Hunt v. Salem, 121 Mass. 294; Callahan v. Bean, 9 Allen, 401; Mangam v. Brooklyn R. Co. 88 N. Y. 455, 98 Am. Dec. 66; Kune v. Troy, 6 Cent. Rep. 493, 104 N. Y. 844; Birkett v. Knickerbocker & O. Co. 110 N. Y. 506; Cosgrove v. Ogden, 49 N. Y. 255, 10 Am. Rep. 861; Fallon v. Central Park, N. & E. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 13; Prendegast v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 652; Bahrenburgh v. Brooklyn City, H. P. & P. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 652; Thurber v. Harlem Bridge, M. & F. R. Co. 60 N. Y. 206; Drew v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 26 N. Y. 49; Olufeld v. New York & H. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 810; Ih v. Forty-second St. & G. St. Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bumstead, 48 Ill. 221; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 Ill. 226; Gavin v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 66; Chicago v. Hesing, 83 Ill. 204; Pittsburg, A. & M. R. Co. v. Pearson, 72 Pa. 169; Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 249, 3 Am. Rep. 623; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lewis, 79 Pa. 33; Hoppe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 357; Johnson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 49 Wis. 529; Ewen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 88 Wis. 614; Dahl v. Milwaukee City R. Co. (Wis.) 19 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 121; Johnson v. Chicago & N. Y. R. Co. (Wis.) 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 471; Karr v. Parks 40 Cal. 188, 193; Schierhold v. North Beach & M. R. Co. 40 Cal. 447; Payne v. Humeston & S. R. Co. 70 Iowa, 584; Smith v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 25 Kan. 738; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Freeman, 36 Ark. 41; Robinson v. Cone, 23 Vt. 213.

In the following cases the court refused to disturb the verdict:

Roller v. Sutter St. R. Co. (Cal.) 19 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 383; East Saginaw City R. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Becker, 84 Ill. 483; Collins v. South Boston R. Co. 142 Mass. 301, 56 Am. Rep. 675; Blass v. South Hadley, 5 New Eng. Rep. 124, 145 Mass. 91.

It has been held not to be contributory negligence in parents to permit a child of eighteen months to play in close proximity to a railroad line under the guardianship of another child eight years old.

Pittsburg, A. & M. R. Co. v. Pearson, 72 Pa. 169.

Or to permit a boy eleven and one half years of age to drive a team by night, accompanied by a younger son of nine years.

Parish v. Eden, 62 Wis. 272.

Or to permit young children to play upon the sidewalk unattended.

Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 377; Minick v. Troy, 83 N. Y. 514; Barker v. Savage, 45 N. Y. 191, 6 Am. Rep. 66.

Or to permit a boy four years of age to go upon the street with his sister only eleven years old.

Collins v. South Boston H. R. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 649, 142 Mass. 301, 56 Am. Rep. 675.

Or to send a child six or seven years of age, 16 L. R. A.

accompanied by an older brother into a village through which a railroad track runs.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Becker, 84 Ill. 483.

When children are old enough to go to school, the question whether or not it is safe for them to go through the streets unattended, is usually for the jury.

Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 52; Mulligan v. Curtis, 100 Mass. 512, 97 Am. Dec. 121; Hunt v. Salem, 121 Mass. 294; Schierhold v. North Beach & M. R. Co. 40 Cal. 447.

It has been held that poor parents of infant children are not contributorily negligent if they do not prevent their infant children from straying into the public streets or upon the lines of railways.

Pittsburg, A. & M. R. Co. v. Pearson, 72 Pa. 169; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. 257; Pennsylvania Co. v. James, 81 * Pa. 194; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lewis, 75 Pa. 33; Hoppe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 357; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475; Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 71; O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo. 70; Frick v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 542.

The father has a right of action for loss of services and expenses occasioned by injuries to his minor child, while the child by his next friend, may recover damages for the injuries.

Sibley v. Ratcliffe, 50 Ark. 477; Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co. 125 Mass. 190; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Morin, 66 Tex. 133; Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller, 51 Tex. 275, 49 Tex. 822; Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 64 Ga. 475; Durkre v. Central Pac. R. Co. 56 Cal. 388; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 38 Ark. 350; Covington St. R. Co. v. Packer, 9 Bush, 455, 15 Am. Rep. 725; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 866; State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 24 Md. 84; Oregin v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 75 N. Y. 192, 81 Am. Rep. 459; McGovern v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 417; O'Mara v. Hudson River R. Co. 88 N. Y. 445; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. 385; Oakland R. Co. v. Fielding, 48 Pa. 820; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Zebe, 38 Pa. 818; Ewen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 38 Wis. 618; Evansich v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. 57 Tex. 123; Rains v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 71 Mo. 164; Cumming v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 24 N. Y. S. R. 718; Shearm & Redf. Neg. 608; Patterson, Railway Law, 411; Dacey, Parties, 349; Thomp. Neg. 1242; Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 519; Cooley, Torts, 682.

To constitute a tort, the former judgment must have been upon the merits and for the same causes of action and between the same parties.

Trucker v. Rohrback, 13 Mich. 73; Beeson v. Comly, 19 Mich. 108.

A parent cannot release her child's right of action for an injury by the admission that it had been warned to avoid the danger.

Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107.

The services of a minor during minority belong to the parent and when a minor is injured so that his ability to labor is decreased, the parent alone can recover damages for the decreased ability of the minor to labor during minority.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Morin, supra.

Parents are required to exercise such care as the circumstances of the case and their circumstances in life permit, which, being a question of fact, is for the jury.

Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475; Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 71; Pittsburg, A. & M. R. Co. v. Pearson, 72 Pa. 169; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. 257; Glassey v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 57 Pa. 172; O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo. 70; Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 260, 8 Am. Rep. 628.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to recover damages sustained by plaintiff, arising out of the same accident that resulted in his son, Oscar, losing his leg by being run over by defendant's train of cars on November 5, 1886, at Eleventh Street depot in Bay City, which case is reported in 68 Mich. 90. The facts are so fully stated in that case that it becomes unnecessary to restate them here. The claim of damages in the present case is for the loss of Oscar's services during minority, and money expended for nursing, medicine, and professional treatment for him. There are but two questions raised upon this record which we need discuss. They relate to the ruling of the trial court, and its charge to the jury upon the questions: (1) Whether the plaintiff is estopped from recovery for loss of his son's services during minority by reason of a claimed recovery for the same services in Oscar's suit, where the plaintiff appeared as his next friend. (2) The ruling of the court upon the question of the plaintiffs' contributory negligence as affecting his right of recovery. As touching the first question, it appears that the defendant, under its plea of the general issue, gave notice that the said Oscar Baker mentioned in plaintiffs declaration heretofore brought suit in said court, claiming damages for the same cause of action set forth in the declaration in this cause; that said suit was duly tried by said court and a jury, and judgment was rendered therein in favor of the plaintiff; that judgment and costs of said suit have been paid by the defendant herein to the said James H. Baker as next friend to his said son, Oscar Baker; and that said James H. Baker has signed a receipt therefor in full satisfaction of said judgment and costs. After the jury had been impaneled in the present case, and plaintiff had offered testimony to support his action, defendant's counsel objected to any proof being received under the declaration for the reason that in this court, prior to the commencement of this suit, the same plaintiff, James H. Baker, had commenced a suit for the injury of his son, Oscar, in which suit he recovered verdict and judgment, which suit was taken to the supreme court, and there affirmed, and that judgment had been satisfied by the defendant; that in that suit plaintiff had recovered damages for the boy, or for himself as next friend to the boy, for his crippled condition, and his loss of ability to labor, and therefore plaintiff is estopped from maintaining this suit. The court overruled the objection, and rejected the offered proof, 16 L. R. A.

to which the defendant excepted. The case then proceeded to trial, and at the close of the testimony the counsel for defendant, in his second request, asked the court to charge the jury as follows: "The plaintiff in this case cannot recover, because he has failed to make out a case, in that (a) he previously brought a suit in this court as next friend for his son Oscar Baker and recovered, and in his declaration in that suit he complained of the same injury sued on here, and did not limit the claim for damages to those accruing only to said Oscar Baker; (b) because the uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that Oscar Baker was guilty of contributory negligence; (c) because the uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that the plaintiff and his wife, parents of said Oscar Baker, were guilty of contributory negligence." These requests were refused, and the court charged the jury: Then comes the loss of the boy's services for the fourteen years without lapse between the time of this accident and the time he would arrive at the age of twenty-one. On the amount of this you have no direct evidence, but you have the evidence derived of an inspection of the boy himself, and the father, and the whole family. . . . One question to be got at in the case of damages is: How much worse off in dollars and cents will this plaintiff, James H. Baker, be by reason of the boy having been crippled in the way he is, counting in the loss of his services, and the expenses of taking care of him while he was sick and in the curing of his wound, and the expense of the nurse?" The court further directed the jury that, as none of the items involved in this suit could be legally proved or recovered for in the suit brought by Oscar, therefore the plaintiff would not be barred from recovering such damages in this action.

We have looked into the former record,—the suit of Oscar against the defendant company,—and find that the declaration in that case contains two counts. The allegation as to damages in the first count is, after stating the injury and the disorders arising therefrom: "He so remained for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, during all of which time the plaintiff suffered great pain, and was injured and prevented from doing any work and from attending school, and is still so prevented, all to the damage of the plaintiff," etc. In the second count it is stated that "he so remained for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, during all of which time he, the plaintiff, suffered great pain, and was and is injured and prevented from doing any work and from attending school, and is, and always will be, injured and disabled from earning his own living; wherefore the plaintiff says he is injured and has sustained damages," etc. Evidence was introduced under that declaration by the plaintiff to sustain his cause of action, and the court charged the jury as follows: "If you conclude that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, consider then the extent or the amount of damages that he has suffered. . . . Now, in determining that question the jury are to take into consideration the pain and suffering the plaintiff has endured. . . . Also the nature of the injury, and how it will affect him in his future life, so far as ability to earn money is concerned." It will be seen from this that the jury must have taken into consideration, in fixing the amount of damages which Oscar was entitled to recover, his inability to labor from the time the injury occurred during the remainder of his life. The $5,000 which Oscar recovered in his suit included therefore, the damages which are sought to be recovered by the plaintiff in this suit.

It is contended upon the part of plaintiff's counsel in this court that, though Oscar did recover for the value of such services in his suit, yet the plaintiff in the present suit would not be barred from recovery, or estopped from making claim therefor, for the reason that, as matter of law, Oscar had no right to recover for such damages in his suit. In support of this proposition counsel cites: Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co. 125 Mass. 180; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Morin, 66 Tex. 133; Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 64 Ga. 475; Durkee v. Central Pac. R. Co. 56 Cal. 388.

As we have before stated, the sole ground upon which the plaintiff's counsel now contends for the right to recover damages in behalf of the father, which have once been recovered in behalf of the child by his next friend, is that the child had no legal right to recover for such damages in the action brought by him. In the case of Texas & P. R. Co. v. Morin, supra, the action was brought by the minor, by his father as next friend, against the company for personal injuries. The trial court charged the jury that in estimating damages they had a right to take into consideration his capacity to earn money. This was held error, for the reason that the services of the infant belonged to the parent during his minority, and not to the infant, unless it was shown that the child had been emancipated by the parent; and the court cited in support of this Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Miller, 51 Tex. 275, and Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 519. The question of the right of the father to recover such damages, though the same had been recovered by the infant in another action, was not involved in the case.

In Durkee v. Central Pac. R. Co. the action was by the father to recover damages for negligent injury to his infant son, and it was said by the court that "whatever was merely personal to the infant should not enter into what was the father's damages, because for them the son would have a right of action;" and that the court states the rule laid down by Shearman & Redfield, in their work on Negligence, (§ 608,) as follows: "The damages recoverable by a parent, guardian, or master for a negligent injury to the person of his child or servant are strictly limited to an amount fully compensatory for the consequent loss of services for a period not exceeding the minority of the child, or the term of service of a servant, and the expenses which the plaintiff has incurred in consequence of the injury, such as for surgical attendance, nursing, and the like. . . . Damages awarded upon any other ground than these clearly belong to the person corporally injured, whose right to sue, it must be remembered, is entirely unaffected by the action of his parent or master. If the latter should be allowed to recover for the pain and suffering of the servant (or child) it would follow either that the servant (or child) could not recover himself for the same cause, or that the negligent person would be liable to pay twice the amount of damage done. Either alternative is contrary to justice and common sense."

The case therefore did not involve the question involved in the present suit, and no such rule is contended for there as here.

In Central R. Co. v. Brinson, supra, the action was by the father, as next friend to his son, to recover damages for negligent injuries. To this suit was filed the plea of the general issue, and a special plea in bar, which was that the father of the plaintiff had brought his individual suit for the same cause of action and for the same injury which was then pending and undetermined in the same court. On motion this plea was stricken out, and the cause proceeded to trial under the general issue, and plaintiff had judgment. It was held that the striking out of this plea was not error, for the reason that a minor, being damaged in his person, may bring suit to recover for any permanent injury which he has sustained reaching beyond his majority, while the father may sue for trespass done or damage sustained whereby he loses the services of the child, as also for any expense incurred in and about the healing and restoring of said child's health. It will be noticed that the question involved in that case is not the same as that involved in the present case; the court holding that it would not bar the infant's right of recovery simply because the father had brought his action in the same court, and had set up in his complaint or declaration a claim for damages of like character as those claimed by the infant in his suit, the court laying down the proper rule of damages under which each might recover.

In Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co., supra, the action was by the father for the loss of services of Ellen Wilton, his daughter, occasioned by her being run over by one of defendant's cars. At the trial it appeared that Ellen, in the name of her father as next friend, had brought an action and recovered $5,000 for the injuries done her by this accident. This case is reported in 107 Mass. 108. The trial court was asked to rule upon this that, the former action having been brought by the plaintiff, and money having been paid to him as next friend, he could not bring an action for any loss of service, because he had already been paid therefor. The trial judge refused so to rule, and held the plaintiff entitled to recover the reasonable value of Ellen's net earnings to her father over and above what, but for the accident, her support would have cost, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. The court said of that case: "The previous suit is not a bar to the present. The money which the plaintiff received in the former action is not his money, nor can he appropriate it to the payment of labor which the child was bound to perform. The measure of damages in the former action was the injury to the child, and not the injury to the father. It is analogous to the cases, formerly quite frequent, in which for injuries to a wife the husband and wife must join for personal injuries to the wife; but for the expenses incident thereto the husband must bring his sole action in his own name." It does not appear in that case that in the action which the father brought as next friend for his daughter any claim was made or recovery had for damages for loss of service of the child, or expenses incurred in and about the restoration of the child to health; and the court says that the measure of damages in the former action was the injury to the child, and not the injury to the father. The court very properly held, therefore, that the money which the plaintiff received could not be appropriated to the payment of labor which the child was bound to perform. If the case had been presented to that court which is presented in the present case,—as to whether the father, as next friend, having recovered for the loss of services of the child, could again recover in an action brought by himself for the value of the loss of the same services,—there can be no doubt that that court would have said that it would be contrary to justice and common sense to allow the plaintiff, first, as next friend, and, second, in his own personal interest, to recover damages for the value of the loss of the services of his infant daughter.

It appears that the plaintiff in this case, as next friend of his son Oscar, took part in the trial of the former case, and insisted upon a recovery by his son for the very damage—that is, the value of the loss of Oscar's services—which now seeks to recover in the present case. It is undoubtedly true that as matter of law Oscar had no right in his suit to recover such damages without the consent of his father, but he did recover with the consent of his father; therefore the father is now estopped from setting up claim for the same damages in this action in his own name. It is true that the earnings of a minor son belong to the father, unless the father has given him his time and earnings; but the father could not recover for such earnings when he has emancipated him. Shoenberg v. Voigt, 38 Mich. 310; Allen v. Allen, 60 Mich. 635; Bell v. Bumpus, 63 Mich. 375. 6 West. Rep. 180. If the case here had been for the earnings of the minor son, and it appeared that in a former action by the son—the father acting as his next friend—he had recovered the value of his wages in such former suit with the consent of the father, that fact would be held tantamount to manumission of the infant, so far as that suit was concerned, and the father would be estopped from recovery of the same wages. There can be no distinction between such a case and the present; and the fact that the father appeared and prosecuted as next friend was tantamount to a relinquishment of such loss of services. The court should have admitted the evidence, and have directed the jury that no recovery could be had by the father for the loss of such services, as their value had already been recovered by the son with the father's consent.

The amount expended by the father in nursing, medicine, and medical attendance does not seem to have been litigated in the former action, and it therefore becomes necessary to discuss one other question raised. It is contended that the parents of the child was guilty of contributory negligence in permitting the boy to make a play-ground of the railroad tracks and yard there, and for that reason the plaintiff could not recover. Upon that branch of the case the court charged the jury that "before the plaintiff can recover he must prove not only that the defendant was negligent, but that the negligence of the defendant was the cause of the injury, and that this means that there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff himself or of the boy which caused or helped or contributed to cause the injury; that the boy cannot carelessly run into danger, and then complain, or lay the foundation for the father to complain, if he gets hurt, but that children are only required to exercise so much care and discretion as ought reasonably to be expected for their mental capacity when placed in that situation. If the boy did all that could reasonably be expected of such a boy as we find him to have been at that time, he did all that the law requires, and was not guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent the father from recovering damages in this suit. If he did not do so, then his father can have no verdict." Again, the court directed the jury: "If the plaintiff himself was negligent, and his negligence contributed to bring about the injury, he cannot recover. If he was negligent in allowing the boy—such a boy as this was—to be playing there, or in not preventing him from being there, or omitted any precaution that he ought to have taken under the circumstance, he cannot recover." Some testimony was given upon the part of the defendant that the boy, Oscar, was frequently about the fright-car in front of the depot, and was in the habit of catching on and jumping off from the cars, and was told by the employes of the railroad company that he would get hurt. Defendant's testimony also shows that the father was advised that his boy, Oscar, was in the habit of coming to the defendant's grounds and jumping off and on cars, and that he ought to chastise him for it. The father does not deny in his testimony but he was told of the custom of his boy in playing about the grounds at the depot, but claims it was about a year previous, and that he had cautioned Oscar about playing about the grounds, and when at home would not allow him to play about the depot, and gave him particular instructions not to do so. The father was a barber, and left home early in the morning for his work, returning to his meals, and was absent during the day and evening. On the day in question the father was away from home. The boy had been to school, crossing the railway track on his way home. Mrs. Baker testified that he got home at 4 o'clock, got a lunch, and went into the yard to play, back of the house; that she looked out, and saw him twice playing there; and within twenty or twenty-five minutes after he first went out to play she heard of his injury upon the railroad track; and until that time she did not know he was out of the yard. We think, under these circumstances, it was a question of fact for the jury to determine whether the plaintiff or Mrs. Baker was guilty of such negligence that the plaintiff could not recover. We find no error in that part of the charge, for the errors pointed out, however, the judgment must be reversed, with costs, and a new trial ordered.

The other Justices concurred.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

LOWENBERG, Resp't.,

v.

LEVINE, App't.

(.....Cal.....)

A discharge under state insolvency laws will not release a judgment obtained in another state upon a contract made there if the creditor does not participate in the insolvency proceedings, although he resides within the jurisdiction of the court granting the discharge and the judgment appeared on the insolvent's schedule.

(February 4, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of a judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry I. Kowalsky and Rein-stein & Eisner for appellant.

Mr. George A. Rankin for respondent.

De Haven J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action upon a money judgment recovered by plaintiff against defendant in a court of general jurisdiction in the territory of Montana, while plaintiff and defendant were residents of that territory, and upon a contract made to be performed there. Subsequently to the rendition of this judgment the defendant filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco his petition in insolvency; and such proceedings were thereafter had in the matter that upon August 14, 1888, the court duly made and entered its decree discharging defendant from all his debts and liabilities. At the date of this decree, and during the entire time of the pendency of these insolvency proceedings, both plaintiff and defendant were residents of this state. In his answer the defendant pleads this decree in insolvency as a bar to this action. The case was submitted to the court below upon an agreed statement of facts showing the matters hereinbefore stated,

NOTE.--For note giving authorities on the point that state insolvent laws have no extraterritorial efficacy, see Phoenix Nat. Bank v. Batcheller (Mass.) 1 L. R. A. 644.

For effect of proving claim by nonresident creditor, see Murray v. Roberts, 6 L. R. A. 348, and note 130 Mass. 353.

16 L. R. A.

and in addition thereto the following facts: "That in the schedule of indebtedness of defendant, Levine, filed with said petition in insolvency, was set forth as required by law, a statement of the judgment rendered against him and in favor of the plaintiff, Lowenberg, by the district court of the third judicial district of the territory of Montana in and for Lewis and Clarke county as set forth in plaintiff's complaint. That said plaintiff, Lowenberg, never filed a verified or other statement of his claim and demand in said proceedings in involuntary insolvency, or in any other manner whatever participated in any of the proceedings connected therewith; but such failure to participate therein was due to no neglect, default, or omission on the part of the defendant, Levine." The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

The only question presented in the record before us is whether, in view of the facts as above stated, the decree discharging defendant from his debts and liabilities is a bar to this action. It is claimed by the appellant that as the parties hereto were resident citizens of this state at the time when the insolvency proceedings were begun, and until their completion, the decree therein discharging him from all his debts is conclusive upon the plaintiff, and is a bar to this action, and that the binding force of such decree is in no wise affected by the fact that the judgment sued upon was recovered in the territory of Montana, and is based upon a contract made and to be performed there.

In support of this proposition counsel for appellant rely upon Felch v. Bugbee, 48 Me. 9; Hawley v. Hunt, 27 Iowa, 803; Bedell v. Scruton, 54 Vt. 493; Marsh v. Putnam, 3 Gray, 551. These cases, however, with the exception of Marsh v. Putnam, are not in point, as in each of them, with the one exception stated, the only matter before the court for decision was as to the effect of a discharge in insolvency upon debts held by non-residents of the state in which the discharge was granted, the creditor not having proved his claim in the insolvency proceedings, nor otherwise participating therein; and it was with reference to this question that it was said in those cases that the binding effect of the discharge in insolvency then before the court upon the citizenship of the parties, and not upon the place of the contract. Thus, in the case of Bedell v. Scruton, supra, it is said: "The debt attends the person of the creditor, and unless he is within the jurisdiction of the court, no discharge granted by it can affect his rights. It is a question of citizenship, and state courts and state laws are powerless to affect the rights of non-resident creditors by any jurisdiction they may have or exercise over the person of the debtor, or by any proceedings in rem affecting the debt itself." So, also, in Hawley v. Hunt, supra, the only matter before the court was whether a discharge in insolvency made by the courts of one state would affect non-residents not parties to it; and, in holding that it would not, Dillon, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "I have said that the settled law now is that a non-resident and non-assenting creditor is not bound by the debtor's discharge under state insolvent laws, no matter where the debt originated or is made payable. In other words, the citizenship of the parties governs, and not the place where the contract was made or is to be performed." There can be no doubt of the correctness of this proposition, when considered in connection with the question which the court had before it. Indeed, it is only the statement of a very familiar principle, which is not at all peculiar to decrees in insolvency proceedings, that no court can render a valid personal judgment against a defendant, or one affecting property which attends or follows his person, without first obtaining jurisdiction of his person. But the rule itself has no application whatever to the facts of this case, as the question here is not whether the superior court, when it made the decree upon which appellant relies, had jurisdiction over the person of respondent, but whether the court was authorized to discharge, by its decree in insolvency, the obligation of the contract made in another state or territory.

Section 53 of the Insolvent Act of this state declares: "A discharge duly granted under this act shall . . . release the debtor from all claims, debts, liabilities, and demands set forth in his schedule or which were or might have been proved against his state in insolvency." This language is broad enough to include the debt sued upon in this action; but if the state is without authority to pass an insolvent law affecting the obligations of contracts made without the state, then the general terms of the statute must be restricted, and the act construed as not intended to effect or apply to them. Danforth v. Robinson, 80 Me. 466. So that after all the real question for decision in this case is as to the power of the state to enact a law having the effect to discharge the obligation of contracts made elsewhere, when the creditor in no wise participates in the proceedings in which the discharge is entered, although he may have been a resident of this state at the time of the insolvency proceedings. This precise question came before the Supreme Court of New York in the case of Witt v. Follett, 2 Wend. 457, and was there determined in the negative; and such seems to be settled doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Cook v. Moffat, 46 U. S. 5 How. 308, 12 L.

ed. 165, that the court, while conceding the authority of a state to pass an insolvent law in the absence of a law of Congress establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy, nevertheless held that in view of section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States which denies to a state the power to pass any law impairing the obligation of contract, the insolvent law of a state "could have no effect on contracts made before their enactment beyond their territory. And in the later case of Baldwin v. Hale, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 223, 17 L. ed. 531, that court, after reviewing the previous cases decided by it as to the effect of state insolvent laws, takes occasion to again state upon what contracts such laws cannot operate, and in so doing uses this language: "Undoubtedly a state may pass a bankrupt or insolvent law under the conditions before mentioned, and such a law is operative and binding upon the citizens of the state; but we repeat what the court said in Cook v. Moffat, supra, that such laws 'can have no effect on contracts made before their enactment, or beyond their territory.'"

The rule upon this subject, and the reason upon which it is founded, is thus stated in section 1890 of Story on the Constitution, as the result of all the cases: "The question is now understood to be finally at rest. The state insolvent laws, discharging the obligation of future contracts, are to be deemed constitutional. Still, a very important point remains to be examined; and that is, to what contracts such laws can rightfully apply. The result of the various decisions on this subject is (1) that they apply to all contracts made within the state between citizens of the state; (2) that they do not apply to contracts made within the state between a citizen of a state and a citizen of another state; (3) that they do not apply to contracts not made within the state. In all these cases it is considered that the state does not possess a jurisdiction, co-extensive with the contract, over the parties, and therefore that the Constitution of the United States protects them from prospective as well as retrospective Legislation. Still, however, if a creditor voluntarily makes himself a party to the proceedings under an insolvent law of a state which discharges the contract, and accepts a dividend declared under such law, he will be bound by his own act, and be deemed to have abandoned this extra-territorial immunity." In the case of Marsh v. Putnam, 3 Gray, 551, cited and relied upon by appellant, a contrary rule was declared. But this case stands alone, and, in our opinion, should not be followed.

The plaintiff not having in any manner participated in the insolvency proceedings had in this state, and relied upon as a bar, and the judgment sued upon having been recovered in Montana upon a contract made there, it results from the foregoing views that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: Sharpstein, J., McFarland, J.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Wilbur F. DOUGHERTY, Resp't.,

v.

John L. AUSTIN, Treasurer of Marin County, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

1. An order of the board of supervisors of a county made during the term of office of a county clerk, allowing him a deputy whose salary is to be paid by the county is void, though authorized by a statute in force prior to his election, where the Constitution forbids an increase of his compensation after his election or during the term of his office.
2. A statute classifying the counties of the state according to population for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers according to their duties, cannot be amended so as to provide that in certain classes of counties the supervisors may order that some of the officers be allowed deputies whose salaries shall be paid by the county where the Constitution requires all laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation.

3. The Legislature has no power after fixing the salaries of county clerks, to authorize the boards of supervisors to allow them one or more deputies at the expense of the county if in their opinion the salary provided is insufficient, where the Constitution requires the Legislature to regulate the compensation of all such officers in proportion to duties performed.

(January 20, 1892.)

NOTE.—Delegation of legislative power to county boards of supervisors.

The above decision that the Legislature cannot delegate to a board of supervisors the power to change a provision of the general law, is plainly based on an express constitutional provision that the Legislature shall by general and uniform laws provide for the matter in question; but on the general question of the power of the Legislature to delegate legislative power to a county board of supervisors, where no express constitutional provision against it exists, there is little explicit authority to be found.

In New York the Constitution expressly provides that the Legislature shall, by general laws, confer upon the boards of supervisors of the several counties of the state such further powers of local legislation and administration as the Legislature may from time to time deem expedient. Substantially the same provision is found in the Constitutions of Kansas, Michigan and Wisconsin.

The Maryland Constitution says that the Legislature may confide to the county authorities "all powers necessary for the management of the public local concerns." But the Constitutions of most states are silent on the subject or confer in terms administrative and police powers only.

There is no express constitutional provision to be found in many if in any Constitution against the delegation by the Legislature of its law-making power. The usual provision is simply that "the legislative power of the state shall be vested in the General Assembly," or equivalent words. Nevertheless it is established as a fundamental principle of constitutional law subject to the exception of local government that legislative authority cannot be delegated. An exception is too well established to need citation of authorities in case of the delegation to municipal corporations of the power to enact ordinances.

In Cooley's Constitutional Limitations it is said that fundamental as the maxim is that the Legislature cannot delegate its power to make laws it is "so qualified by the customs of our race and by other maxims which regard local government, that the right of the Legislature, in the entire absence of authorization or prohibition to create towns and other inferior municipal corporations and to confer upon them the power of local government and especially of local taxation and police regulations usual with such corporations, would always pass unchallenged." In fact the delegation of legislative power to county supervisors seems to have been generally unchallenged.

In Alabama a general statute allowing the court:

of county revenues in a county, on petition of freeholders to establish a stock district where cattle shall not be allowed to run at large, was held to be valid. Stanfill v. Dallas County Ct. 80 Ala. 287.

The court said that intrusting to county authorities quasi legislative powers and functions has never been considered a violation of the maxim that legislative power cannot be delegated. The same decision was made in respect to a statute authorizing the court of county revenues in a specified county to establish such a district as against an objection that it was in violation of a constitutional provision that "the General Assembly shall not have power to authorize any municipal corporation to pass any laws inconsistent with the general laws of the state." The court based the decision on the fact that a county is not a municipal corporation within the meaning of that provision and also that the power given by this statute was not a power to "pass laws" but was only a quasi legislative police power. Dunn v. Wilcox County Ct. 85 Ala. 144.

In this case it will be seen that a larger freedom in delegating legislative power was allowed to counties than to municipal corporations.

In State v. Wood County Suprs. 61 Wis. 278, the court in speaking of the legislative powers of county authorities under the provision of the Constitution, which is similar to that of New York, above quoted, says the powers are limited only by the provisions of the statutes.

It is clearly apparent that the status of counties in different states varies. In New York, at least, legislative functions are commonly exercised by boards of supervisors and the statutes have for many years expressly given them authority "to make such laws and regulations as they may deem necessary, and provide for the enforcing of the same" in respect to various specified subjects. Also in the latest statute concerning counties, (1892) provision is made in respect to the enactment and publication of "every act or resolution of such board in the exercise of its legislative powers" while it expressly declares by way of definition that, "a county is a municipal corporation, comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries, and formed for the purpose of exercising the powers and discharging the duties of local government, and the administration of public affairs conferred upon it by law."

No reason is apparent why the Legislature of any state without express constitutional provisions on the subject may not make a county a municipal corporation of a distinctive kind and give it as much legislative power as is given to other municipal corporations.

B. A. R.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Marin County granting an application for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to pay a certain warrant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Carter P. Pomeroy and F. M. Angellotti, for appellant:

The Constitution provides: "The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases; that is to say: . . .

"9. Regulating county and township business, or the election of county and township officers. . . .

"29. Affecting the fees or salary of any officer. . . .

"33. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable."

Cal. Const. art. 4, § 25.

The provision in question is clearly in violation of each of the above divisions.

It is a provision regulating county business.

Earle v. San Francisco Board of Education, 55 Cal. 490.

This provision for the relief of officers of certain classes of counties is entirely confined as to its subject and in its operation to specified localities. It is therefore local, as contradistinguished from general, and within the constitutional inhibition.

Ibid.; Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142.

By "uniform operation," is meant an operation which is equal in its effect upon all persons or things upon which the law is designed to operate at all.

Brooks v. Hyde, 87 Cal. 875.

The County Government Act is essentially a law of a "general nature,"—must be so to be a valid law at all.

Const. art. 11, § 5; art. 4, § 5, subsecs. 9, 28, 29.

Being so, it must operate uniformly upon all persons or things upon which it is designed to operate at all, or it or any portion thereof failing to operate uniformly is void.

Miller v. Kister, supra. See People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 444; Manning v. Klippel, 9 Or. 867; People v. Central Pac. R. Co. 88 Cal. 898; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 544.

By excepting any particular persons or corporations from the operation of any law, the uniformity thereof is at once destroyed.

Omnibus R. Co. v. Baldwin, 57 Cal. 165.

The Legislature had no authority to delegate to the boards of supervisors of certain classes of counties the power therein attempted to be conferred.

Longan v. Solano County, 65 Cal. 125.

The judgment of the board of supervisors in such matters, if this provision be upheld, would be final, and not reviewable by the courts.

San Mateo County v. Maloney, 71 Cal. 208; Porter v. Haight, 45 Cal. 630.

Where the Constitution has located the authority, there it must remain.

People v. Riordan, 73 Mich. 508.

Mr. Hepburn Wilkins for respondent.

Messrs. Works, Gibson & Titus, on behalf of other counties interested, filed a petition for rehearing.

The real question is, Was the statute authorizing such an order valid, or was it unconstitutional. 16 L. R. A.

tional. Unless the statute is unconstitutional the order must be valid.

This statute was not enacted after the term of office of the clerk had commenced, but before.

Suppose that it had been enacted that the officer should receive $2,000 until the population of the county should increase to a certain number, and that thereafter he should receive $3,000. Could the objection now urged against it be maintained? We think not.

Hanlon v. Floyd County Comrs. 53 Ind. 123.

And yet we see no legal difference between the supposed provision and the one under consideration.

We might name section after section of this whole statute that is not uniform with other sections relating to the same matter and fixing the compensation of the same officer. But we contend that these discrepancies in the statute do not violate this requirement of the Constitution. The evident purpose of this constitutional provision is that all laws of a general nature shall "bear equally in their burdens and benefits upon persons standing in the same category."

Smith v. Judge of Twelfth Dist. 17 Cal. 548; McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 228.

The very object of a classification is that such provisions may be made for each county as will require it to pay a reasonable compensation to each of its officers, according to the services to be performed.

State v. Reile, 62 Ind. 159; Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 418.

Without some such enactment the statute could not possibly have been made uniform throughout the state under existing circumstances.

Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 388.

Some of the counties needed no such provision because they were not changing in population as others were, and fixed salaries could be made permanent and would work no injury.

State v. Judges, 21 Ohio St. 1.

Before the adoption of the present Constitution it was held in this state that a law fixing fees or salaries of officers was not a general but a local law.

Ryan v. Johnson, 5 Cal. 87.

And the present Constitution does not prohibit local legislation for each county but only as to one officer or office.

Const. art. 4, § 25, subsec. 29.

Mr. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for respondent upon the rehearing.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an application for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant to pay a warrant for services rendered by plaintiff as deputy county clerk of Marin county. The trial court ordered the writ to issue, and this is an appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial. The facts of the case are: One Bonneau was, at the commencement of this proceeding, and had been for more than four years next preceding thereto, the county clerk of Marin county. Said Bonneau was last elected in 1888, his term of office beginning January 7, 1889. Upon January 10, 1889, he filed an affidavit with the supervisors of said county by which he showed that a deputy was required by him in the proper discharge of his duties as such county clerk, and said board at that time made an order allowing him a deputy at a salary of $50 per month, to take effect from January 7, 1889. The order of the board of supervisors was made by authority of a provision of section 211 of the County Government Act as amended, found at page 207 of the Statutes of 1887, which reads: "Provided, further, that whenever, in the opinion of the board of supervisors, the salary of any county officer in the third, fourth, fifth, twelfth, twentieth [and several others] classes as fixed and provided in this Act is insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the services required to be performed, then said board shall allow such officer a deputy, or such number of deputies as in their judgment may be required to do the business of such officer in connection with the principal, at a salary not to exceed one hundred dollars per month, to be paid at the times and in the manner said principal is paid: provided, that an affidavit shall be filed by such officer with the said board showing that such deputy or deputies are required by him in the proper discharge of his duties as such officer."

It is insisted by appellant that the order of the board of supervisors made January 10, 1889, allowing the county clerk a deputy at a salary of $50 per month to be paid by the county, was an increase of the compensation of such county clerk after his election and during his term of office, and that such order for those reasons was void and of no effect, being in violation of the provisions of section 9, art. 11, of the Constitution of this state, wherein it is provided that "the compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office." The order of the board under consideration was made after the election and during the term of office of said Bonneau, and the question presented is, did the order allowing the clerk a deputy, and ordering that his salary be paid from the county treasury, increase the compensation of the county clerk? If it did increase his compensation, it is violative of the provision of the Constitution just quoted, and must give way for that reason. That part of the order wherein it is recited that "the clerk is allowed a deputy" of itself is practically of no effect and force, because the clerk by virtue of his office has the power to appoint one or more deputies to perform or assist him in the performance of the duties of such office, entirely regardless of the wishes or demands of the board of supervisors, and this order of the board, construed in connection with the statute is substantially as follows: "In the opinion of the board of supervisors of Marin county, the salary of the county clerk of said county, as now provided by law, is insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the services required to be performed by him, and, it further appearing by the affidavit of the said clerk that a deputy is necessary to a proper performance of the duties of his office, it is ordered that such deputy be paid fifty dollars per month from the county treasury."

The duties resting upon Bonneau when he qualified as county clerk and entered upon his 16 L. R. A.

office were plain and unmistakable, for they are enumerated in detail by the statute, and upon every principle he was bound to discharge those duties. The law would not even allow him to take a single step in the performance of them until he agreed under the solemnity of his oath that he would "perform all the duties of his office to the best of his ability." If his duties as county clerk during the life of his term of office becomes so burdensome and assume such proportions that he has not the ability, either mental or physical, to perform them, he is not thereby released from the obligations he assumed at the inception of his term of office. His services are purely ministerial, and if, through simple desire or actual necessity, assistance is wanted, the law allows him to call to his aid as many deputies as he may see fit to appoint. If unwilling to adopt this course, and unable to perform the duties of the office personally, he can resign; but as long as he remains in office he is bound to perform the duties of the office under his official oath, or remain and render himself amenable to charges and removal for neglect of official duty. In Evans v. Trenton, 24 N. J. L. 766, it is said: "It is a well-settled rule that a person accepting a public office with a fixed salary is bound to perform the duties of the office for the salary. He cannot legally claim additional compensation for the discharge of these duties, even though the salary may be a very inadequate remuneration for the services; nor does it alter the case that by subsequent statutes or ordinances his duties are increased, and not his salary. His undertaking is to perform the duties of his office, whatever they may be, from time to time during his continuance in office, for the compensation stipulated, whether these duties are diminished or increased; and whenever he considers the compensation inadequate he is at liberty to resign." The Constitution provides that the Legislature shall, by general and uniform laws, provide for the election or appointment of county officers, and that it shall regulate the compensation of all such officers in proportion to duties. Art. 11, § 5. In pursuance of this provision the Legislature, by an Act entitled "An Act to Establish a Uniform System of County and Township Governments," found at page 299, Cal. Stat. 1888, proceeded to carry into effect this provision of the Constitution, and as amended by Stat. 1885, p. 178, fixed the salary of county clerks of counties of the twentieth class (of which Marin county was one) at $2,500 per annum, which was to be for the "services required of them by law or by virtue of their office;" and section 211 of the same Act (Stat. 1887, p. 207) further provided: "The salaries and fees provided in this Act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies or assistants, unless in this Act otherwise provided, and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries hereinbefore provided, unless in this Act otherwise provided." It will thus be seen from the foregoing principles and provisions of the statute and Constitution cited that a public officer accepts an office upon the condition that he will perform all the duties of the office, and while he remains in such office the public have the right to demand that he perform such duties. In accordance with the mandate of the Constitution, the Legislature fixed the salary of the county clerk of Marin county in proportion to the duties of the office, not in proportion to the duties of the office the county clerk could personally perform, for the statute itself expressly provided that it should be in full compensation for the performance of all the duties of the office; although such would be the necessary construction of the provision of the Constitution, regardless of the statute.

The fact that the law under which the board of supervisors acted in making the order was in force prior to the election of the county clerk is immaterial to the question involved, for it is not the Act of the Legislature that increases the compensation, but the order of the board of supervisors, passed long after the Act took effect, long after the election of the county clerk, and during his term of office. The provision of the statute is entirely ineffectual, save simply as a delegation of power to the board of supervisors to order these things to be done. The Legislature had no power upon the 10th day of January, 1889, to increase the compensation of the county clerk of Marin county; and, not having the power itself so to do, much less could it authorize such board to do so. This provision of section 211 of the County Government Act applies to twenty classes of counties, and the county clerks in some of those classes of counties have salaries ranging from $10,000 to $18,000 per annum. Every reason that can be urged and every principle of law that can be invoked to sustain the validity of this order can be urged and invoked with the same force to sustain an order made by the various boards of supervisors of these counties, allowing their county clerks all the deputies necessary for the proper administration of their offices, the counties paying therefor, and thus leaving their entire salaries remaining as compensation for their personal services. If such is the law, all the deputies of all the county officers of twenty classes of counties, under the general election of 1888, by order of the various boards of supervisors, could have been paid out of the county treasury of the respective counties. The doctrine can only be sustained upon the theory that the word "compensation," as used in the Constitution, refers simply to the personal services of the public officer, and not as compensation for the performance of all the duties of the office. The fact is directly to the contrary, and is so recognized by the Legislature throughout these various provisions of the County Government Act. The board can only allow such deputy upon the request of the principal, and only when the principal insists that his services are necessary in the performance of the duties of the office. If not paid by order of the board from the county treasury, the principal, being bound to perform all the duties of his office, and a deputy being necessary, would be bound to employ the deputy and pay him from his own salary. The county, by order of the board, pays $600 per annum as part of compensation for the performance of the duties of the clerk's office. From a pecuniary standpoint such course is a very substantial benefit to the county clerk. The deputy is under his control, is impowered by law to act in the place and stead of his principal in all matters, the principal is liable for his salary, and a payment by the county of such deputy's salary is for all practical purposes a payment to the principal, and in this case necessarily results in an increase of the principal's compensation to the extent of $600 per annum. It is perfectly immaterial to the clerk whether his salary is increased to $3,100 per annum, and from that sum he pays his deputy $600 per annum, or that it remains at $2,500 and the county pays the deputy the $600. The clerk reaps the full benefit of the $600 in both cases. To be sure, this reasoning concedes that the clerk must have the deputy, but such must be the fact, for the clerk is bound to perform all the duties of his office, and a deputy is a necessity to the performance of those duties, for, by his affidavit, he himself has so declared. To construe the provision of the Constitution so that a county clerk's salary could not be increased during his term of office. But that an Act of the Legislature would be valid which provided that all of his deputies, men whom he was bound to employ and bound to pay, in the absence of such an Act, should be paid by the county, independent of and in addition to the clerk's salary, would be to allow that to be done indirectly which could not be done directly, and would be establishing a medium for the practice of the very abuses which the constitutional provision was inserted to destroy. The provision of the statute appears to be a crude and ill-conceived effort to evade a very plain and very wholesome provision of the Constitution of this state.

Let us take a broader view of this provision of the County Government Act, which authorizes the boards of supervisors of twenty classes of counties to pay the salaries of the deputies of all county officers of the counties of those classes under certain conditions and contingencies, and estimate its true worth by another test. Article 1, § 11, of the Constitution, requires that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." The County Government Act is essentially a law of a "general nature." It must be so to have any validity whatever, and with the provision under discussion before our eyes, can it be said the County Government Act has a uniform operation? In Ex parte Smith, Justice Sanderson said, referring to the meaning of the Constitution in the use of the words "uniform operation:" "Its meaning, as repeatedly declared by the highest judicial tribunal in the state, is not that general laws must act alike upon all subjects of legislation or upon all citizens or persons, but that they shall operate uniformly, or in the same manner, upon all persons who stand in the same category; that is to say, upon all persons who stand in the same relation to the law, in respect to the privileges and immunities conferred by it or the acts which it prohibits." 38 Cal. 702.

We must view this question in the light of the fact that the County Government Act was intended to establish a uniform system of county governments, and that the classification of counties and regulation of the compensation of county officers, in proportion to duties, were important elements in the formation of that Act, and were material portions to which the principle of uniformity was to be applied. When amended in 1887 by the provision delegating these powers to the boards of supervisors in twenty classes of counties, that provision simply became a part of the whole,—a strand of the rope which formed the County Government Act. That provision certainly gained no additional strength or weight, simply by being a more recent creation of the Legislature than the Act of which it became a part, and its validity must be weighed and tested as if it were a provision placed in the Act of 1888. Now, does it disturb the uniformity of the operation of that Act? We find the Act first classified the counties of the state according to population, for the sole and express purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers according to their duties. It then regulated the compensation of county officers according to their duties, but it did not stop there. It provided, further, that in twenty classes of counties, naming them, the supervisors of those counties might relieve the county officers of some of their official burdens by ordering that their deputies be paid from the county treasury. By this provision the Legislature destroyed the uniformity of the operation of the Act. In twenty-eight classes of counties the compensation of county officers is fixed at an amount certain and definite,—an amount that cannot be changed, save by an Act of the Legislature; but in the remaining twenty classes of counties the compensation for the performance of the duties by the various officers may fluctuate every month in the year, at the mere whim of the boards of supervisors. The County Government Act, upon the same matters and under the same state of circumstances, should operate equally upon all classes of counties, but the Legislature has said that in twenty classes of counties only, whenever the salary of county officers is insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the services required to be performed, the board of supervisors may allow them deputies at the county's expense. Now, if the salaries should prove insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation to the county officers for the duties to be performed in the remaining twenty eight classes of counties of the state, why should they not be allowed the same relief? In twenty-eight classes of counties the Legislature fixed the salaries of county officers at a definite sum, in proportion to the duties of the office. In twenty classes of counties the minimum sum only is fixed, and the boards of supervisors have the power to fix the compensation for the performance of the duties of the various officers at any sum which the board may think is a proper proportion, as compared with the duties of the office. This certainly is a very unjust discrimination against twenty-eight classes of counties, and, not acting alike upon all classes of counties, necessarily destroys the uniformity of the operation of the Act.

Respondent's counsel insist that an amendment to the Act of 1888, relating to the compensation of county officers of one class of counties is a law of a general nature in itself, 16 L. R. A.

and that consequently this provision of section 211, applying to twenty classes of counties, is no less a general law; and, purporting to deal with twenty classes of counties only, and having a uniform operation as to those classes, the provision complies with the test in both respects, and is therefore within the Constitution. This contention is true to a limited extent, and was so held by this court in Cody v. Murphey, 88 Cal. 522, wherein it was decided that legislation pertaining to the compensation of officers of one class of counties was a law of a general nature, and in that case uniform in its operation, it being directly in line with all other provisions of the County Government Act, pertaining to the same subject-matter. But there is a broad distinction between that provision of the Act and the one under consideration in this case. If the Legislature, as has been attempted here, can delegate the power to the supervisors to regulate the salaries of county officers of twenty classes of counties, it could provide a separate and distinct means for the regulation of the salaries of the county officers of each separate and distinct class of counties; and thus the uniformity of the operation of the County Government Act, upon the question of the regulation of salaries of county officers, would consist solely in the fact that the operation of the Act was uniformly different in each class of counties. It would seem that the case of Miller v. Kister, 63 Cal. 142, is conclusive against respondent upon this question. In that case the section under consideration was section 4 of the Act of 1885, amending the County Government Act as to salaries (Stat. 1885, p. 195), which section provided that in three classes of counties the salaries fixed in said amendment (all reductions, which were within the power of the Legislature to make) should take effect on the first day of the following month, while the amendment provided that in all other classes the salaries should not take effect during the terms of the then officers. Held, (1) that the same was special legislation; and (2) that the operation of the law is exceptional and eccentric, and causative of discrimination between the officers upon whom it is to operate,—“the few are excluded from the privileges given to the many;” and the section was held to be void. We think this provision destroys the uniformity of the operation of the County Government Act in respect to the matters upon which it attempts to speak, and is a violation of a plain requirement of the Constitution, which should be scrupulously guarded and upheld.

Let the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the proceedings.

We concur: De Haven, J.; Sharpstein, J.; Harrison, J.

Beatty, Ch. J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment of reversal. If the amendment to the County Government Act under which the respondent claims applied equally to all the counties of the state; if, in other words, it was general, and not special and local, in its operation,—I think it is susceptible of the construction which would not bring it in conflict with section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution forbidding the increase of a compensation of a county officer during his term. What I think the Legislature really meant by the provision in question was to empower the boards of supervisors in those classes of counties to which it applies to allow deputies or additional deputies in county offices, and to pay their salaries whenever, from some unusual increase of population or other cause, the business of such offices was so increased as to require for the discharge of its duties a deputy or deputies in addition to the number employed at the date of the Act fixing the salary of the office. I do not think it was the intention of the Legislature to authorize the boards of supervisors in their discretion to relieve county officers of the payment of the deputies employed at the time their compensation was established by the County Government Act. To give the law in question such a construction would render it invalid as an attempt to delegate to the supervisors of the respective counties a power and a duty conferred and imposed by the Constitution in express and mandatory terms upon the Legislature itself. Art. 11, § 5. Such a construction is, of course, to be avoided if possible. Giving to this law, then, the construction above indicated, it would not have the effect, if properly administered, of increasing the compensation of any county officer during his term, and the only constitutional objection to which it is exposed, in my opinion, is this: That it is special and local in a case where general law could be made applicable, and perhaps in some of the enumerated cases in which special and local legislation is prohibited (art. 4, § 25), or that it is an amendment to a general law which destroys the uniformity of its operation. To all these objections the respondent's answer is that the law is neither special nor local, because it applies to classes of counties created in pursuance of authority expressly conferred by the Constitution itself, viz., the authority to classify counties by population for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers according to their duties. Art. 11, § 5. But while this would be a sufficient answer to such objections in case of a law regulating the compensation of county officers, it is no answer to the same objections to a law passed for a wholly different purpose. In other words, a classification of counties made for a special purpose authorized by the Constitution cannot be made the basis of discriminating legislation of any and every kind. Classification which is proper and rational and necessary for one purpose may be utterly arbitrary and unnecessary for another purpose, and it is necessarily so with reference to a law with relation to which every county in the state stands upon the same plane. Such is the character of the law in question. If it is right that the supervisors should have the power to make allowance for the unexpected increase of business in the county offices, by authorizing the payment out of the county treasury of the salaries of such additional deputies as may be needed, then it is right that the supervisors of every county should have the same power. This law, however, selects certain classes of counties apparently at random, some large, some small, some of intermediate size, omitting others of every grade of population above, below, and intermediate, and confers upon the classes so arbitrarily selected a power and a privilege in the transaction of the county business which is denied to others standing in precisely the same relation to the subject of this enactment. This case is much stronger than that presented in Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, in which a similar law was held unconstitutional upon the ground that it was special legislation. But even if this law could be held a general law, in accordance with the contention of the respondent, I think his case is not within it. One deputy clerk was employed in 1885, at the date when the salary of the office was fixed, and it must be presumed that the salary was fixed with reference to that fact. There has never been any increase in the number of deputies required, and the respondent is the only deputy that was employed by the clerk during the time for which a salary is claimed. As there was no increase in the number of deputies, the case did not arise in which, according to my construction of the law, the supervisors were empowered to make the allowance of a deputy's salary. Upon these grounds I concur in the judgment.

14 T. R. A.

We dissent: McFarland, J.; Paterson, J.

A rehearing was subsequently granted after which, on May 30, 1892, DeHaven, J., on behalf of the court delivered the following opinion:

In the former decision of this case (28 Pac. Rep. 634) the court, in its opinion, held that the order of the board of supervisors of Marin county, upon which the respondent bases his right to the relief which he asks, was, in effect, an increase of the compensation of the county clerk of Marin county, made after his election to such office, and was for this reason void, as being in conflict with section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution of this state; and, secondly, that section 211 of the County Government Act, as amended in 1887; (Stat. 1887, p. 207.) under which the board of supervisors acted in making such order, was invalid, as it made the County Government Act, of which it formed a part, lacking in that uniformity of operation which is required by section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state. It being supposed that the decision thus made would affect officers in other counties who had not been heard, and that the question presented for decision was of sufficient importance to justify it, it was deemed proper by a majority of the members of the court to grant a rehearing, in order to give an opportunity for further argument. The case has been reargued, and upon a reconsideration of the questions involved we adhere to the conclusions announced in the former opinion of Mr. Justice Garoutte, and the reasoning by which those conclusions were reached.

There is, however, an additional ground which is equally fatal to the right of respondent to maintain this action, which will be briefly referred to. The Constitution of the state declares: "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of boards of supervisors, sheriffs, county clerks, . . . shall regulate the compensation of all such officers in proportion to duties, and for that purpose may classify the counties by population." Art. 11, § 5. Under this section it is made the imperative duty of the Legislature to regulate—that is, to fix or adjust—the compensation of all county officers in proportion to their duties. In the exercise of the authority thus conferred upon it by the Constitution, the Legislature, in the County Government Act of 1888, (Stat. 1888, p. 299.) and the Act amendatory thereof, passed in 1888, (Stat. 1888, p. 178,) fixed the salary of the county clerk in the class of counties to which Marin belonged at $2,500 per annum, with the special provision that this sum should be in full compensation for that officer, and that all deputies employed by him and deemed necessary to properly discharge the duties of such office should be paid by him out of the salary thus fixed by the Act. But in 1897 section 211 of the County Government Act was again amended, and by such amendment the Legislature undertook to confer upon the supervisors of Marin—and certain other counties—the power to change that provision of the law which required their county officers to pay their own deputies. This amended section, so far as it is necessary to be here set out, is as follows: "That whenever, in the opinion of the board of supervisors, the salary of any county officer in the third, fourth, . . . twentieth, . . . classes, as fixed and provided in this Act, is insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the services required to be performed, the said board shall allow such officer a deputy, or such number of deputies as in their judgment may be required to do the business of such office in connection with the principal, at a salary not to exceed one hundred dollars per month, to be paid, etc.; . . . provided, that an affidavit shall be filed by such officer with the said board, showing that such deputy or deputies are required by him in the proper discharge of his duties as such officer." It was under this section, as thus amended, that the board of supervisors of Marin county acted in making the order by virtue of which plaintiff claims the right to be paid his salary as deputy county clerk from the treasury of the county.

The question is thus squarely presented whether it was competent for the Legislature thus to delegate to the board of supervisors of that county the power to change or suspend that part of the general law fixing the salaries of county officers, which provided that the county clerk of Marin county should himself pay the deputy or deputies employed by him. There can be, under well-settled principles of constitutional law, but one answer to this question, and that is one which denies to the Legislature any right to thus delegate to any other body or tribunal what is most clearly a legislative power, the exercise of which the Constitution has confided to that department of the state alone. This principle is one so universally accepted as true, that Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, states it as a maxim of constitutional law. He says: "One of the settled maxims in constitutional law is that the power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by that department to any other body or authority. Where the sovereign power of the state has located the authority, there it must remain; and by the constitutional agency alone the laws must be made until the Constitution is changed. The power to whose judgment, wisdom, and patriotism this high prerogative has been intrusted cannot relieve itself of the responsibility by choosing other agencies upon which the power shall be devolved, nor can it substitute the judgment, wisdom, and patriotism of any other body for those to which alone the people have seen fit to confide this sovereign trust." Page *117. A general statute of the state of Missouri concerning roads and highways contained a provision that, "if the county court of any county should be of opinion that the provisions of the Act should be enforced, they might, in their discretion, suspend the operation of the same for any specified length of time, and thereupon the Act should become inoperative in such county for the period specified in such order," and in that event roads in such county should be opened and kept in repair under previous statutes. The Supreme Court of that state, in State v. Field, 17 Mo. 529, 59 Am. Dec. 275, held such Act unconstitutional, as an attempt to delegate to the county court of the county a power vested exclusively in the Legislature. There is no difference whatever, in principle, between the statute held invalid in the case just referred to and section 211 of the County Government Act as amended in 1887, and under which the board of supervisors acted in making the order upon which the plaintiff relies. By this section, as thus amended, an attempt is made to delegate to the board of supervisors of Marin county the authority to change the law fixing the salary of the county clerk of that county whenever it shall appear to such board that the salary as thus fixed is insufficient to pay him a reasonable compensation for his services. The salary of this officer was fixed by the Legislature, with direct reference to the fact that out of it he was to pay his own deputies, and the purpose of this amended section is to authorize the board of supervisors of that county to suspend the operation of this law, in so far as he is thereby required to pay such deputies, and to place that burden upon the county. The power thus to change a law of the state is necessarily legislative in character, and is vested exclusively in the Legislature, and cannot be delegated by it to the board of supervisors of the county. It follows from this that the order of the board of supervisors of Marin county, allowing the plaintiff a salary of $50 per month as deputy county clerk of that county, and payable out of the treasury, is void, and plaintiff is not entitled to the judgment which he demands. As already stated, the Constitution of this state has made it the imperative duty of the Legislature to fix the salaries of county officers in proportion to their duties. Whether, if that body should wholly fail to discharge this obligation in respect to any county, the board of supervisors of such county would by virtue of its general authority in relation to the government of such county, have power to provide for the payment of its officers, is a question not involved in this case, and upon which we express no opinion.

Judgment reversed, with directions to dismiss the proceeding.

We concur: Garoutte J.; Harrison, J.; Sharpstein, J.

Beatty, Ch. J., concurring:

At the first presentation of this case I was impressed with the conviction that very serious consequences must flow from any conclusion the court might reach, and have therefore given it the most careful and anxious consideration. It was apparent that so important a provision of the County Government Act as that which is in question here could not be held unconstitutional without producing disorder and confusion in the public business of a number of the most populous counties of the state, besides injuriously affecting the pecuniary interests of the deputy county officers whose compensation it was intended to secure. It was therefore with great reluctance that I yielded to the conviction that, upon any construction of the proviso under which the respondent claims, it could not be upheld without disregarding the manifest intention of the Constitution. Actuated by the same feeling, I willingly united in the order for a rehearing, hoping that a fuller discussion of the case by additional counsel representing the state and the several counties affected by the decision might lead to the discovery of some happier solution of the difficulty. I regret to say, however, that, after carefully weighing and considering every argument that has been advanced from the beginning to the end of the discussion, the conflict between the Act of the Legislature and the Constitution still seems to me plain and irreconcilable. Unless by express words declared to be otherwise, every provision of our Constitution is mandatory and prohibitory. Art. 1, § 22. Among these mandatory and prohibitory provisions are found the following: Art. 11, § 5. "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of the boards of supervisors, sheriffs, county clerks, district attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties, and fix their terms of office. It shall regulate the compensation of all such officers in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and it shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid to them, or officially come into their possession." Art. 11, § 9; "The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed." It is not denied, and it cannot be, that by section 5 of this article the Legislature is commanded to regulate the compensation of all county officers in proportion to duties. A comparison of sections 5 and 9 makes it equally plain that such regulation must be made to take effect before the election of the officers whose compensation it controls, and that it cannot be subsequently changed so as to increase the compensation of any officer during the term for which he has been elected. It may be conceded that to regulate the compensation of an officer does not necessarily mean to ascertain or fix the exact amount which he is to receive for discharging all the duties of his office. Indeed, it seems plain to me that the Legislature might have satisfied this requirement of organic law, without any classification of counties according to population, by the simple expedient of adopting a uniform fee bill, and allowing each county officer to retain for his compensation all the fees by him collected, not exceeding a certain amount, and a percentage computed according to a sliding scale, such as that used in determining the compensation of executors and administrators, upon all higher amounts collected. This is one example of a regulation by which a just correspondence between the duties and compensation of county officers might be maintained without trenching upon the apparent design of the last clause of section 5, requiring provision to be made for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees by them collected, and without the necessity of dividing the counties into classes. No doubt other, and perhaps better, examples might be suggested of regulation by other means than the fixing of a definite sum to be paid to each officer for discharging all the duties of his office, and requiring him to provide all necessary deputies.

But the Legislature has not seen fit to adopt a regulation of the character suggested. On the contrary, by the first County Government Act (Stat. 1838, p. 299), the duties of all county and township officers were prescribed by general provisions, and every county and township officer, except supervisors and judicial officers, was authorized to appoint as many deputies as might be necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Sec. 61, p. 316. The Act then proceeded to classify the counties of the state by population for the express purpose of regulating the compensation of the officers therein provided for. Section 162, p. 332. By the next section (sec. 163) the compensation of each officer in every class of counties except the first (the city and county of San Francisco alone constituted the first class, and was left subject to the provisions of its old charter) was fixed at a certain sum of money (or sometimes certain fees), which, by a subsequent and general provision (sec. 164, p. 361), was declared to be "in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in the Act, their deputies and assistants." To leave no doubt of the meaning of this clause the Act proceeds: "and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries hereinbefore provided." As an example of the provisions of section 163 we quote those relating to counties of the second class: "Sec. 163. In counties of the second class the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law, or by virtue of their office, the following salaries, to wit: (1) The county clerk, $18,000 per annum; (2) the sheriff, $15,000 per annum; (3) the recorder, $15,000 per annum; (4) the auditor, $2,000 per annum; (5) the treasurer, $4,500 per annum; (6) the tax collector, $8,000 per annum; (7) the assessor, $14,000 per annum; (8) the district attorney, $6,500 per annum; (9) the coroner, such fees as are now or hereafter may be allowed by law; (10) the public administrator, such fees as are now or hereafter may be allowed by law; (11) the superintendent of schools, $3,400 per annum; (12) the surveyor, such fees as are now or hereafter may be allowed by law; (13) justices of the peace, such fees as are now or hereafter may be allowed by law; (14) constables, such fees as are now or hereafter may be allowed by law; (15) supervisors, $1,000 per annum." Now, conceding again that to regulate the compensation of officers does not necessarily mean to fix the exact amounts to be paid them for discharging all the duties of their offices, including the services of deputies, it cannot be denied that this is one method of regulation by which the requirement of the Constitution is satisfied, without denying that the County Government Act of 1885, and all subsequent acts on the same subject, were and are in this respect unconstitutional and void. But the contrary has been decided in Longan v. Solino County, 65 Cal. 122, and no one here—least of all the respondent—is disputing the correctness of that decision. Assuming, then, what is conceded on all sides,—that the Act of 1888 did regulate the compensation of county officers according to duties,—let us consider for a moment the nature of that regulation and its effect in limiting the compensation proper of the officers themselves. The sum allowed to any given officer being a lump sum, out of which he must pay for the services of all deputies and assistance necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of all the duties of the office, it is evident that his own compensation consists of the residue remaining after payment of such deputies and assistants; and it is equally evident that, just so far as the county assumes the payment of such deputies and assistants, such residue is enlarged and the compensation increased.

The cases reviewed by the Supreme Court of Illinois in deciding Daggett v. Ford County, 99 Ill. 334, cover this point very completely. By the Constitution of Illinois the duty of "fixing the compensation of all county officers, with the amount of their necessary clerk hire, stationery, fuel, and other expenses," is imposed upon the respective county boards, with the proviso that the compensation of no officer shall be increased or diminished during his term of office. It was shown in the opinion delivered in the case cited that this clause of the Illinois Constitution had been construed in a series of decisions, by which it had been held, among other things, that the county boards might either allow a lump sum to cover the compensation of the officer and his expenses for clerk hire, etc., or that they could allow a certain amount for his proper compensation, and a separate amount for his expenses; that, if the latter method was pursued, he could retain out of the fees collected by him the amount of his fixed compensation, and also the actual amount of his expenses, and no more, provided they did not exceed the amount allowed; that, if the board, after allowing a separate amount for expenses found that it was insufficient, they could from time to time during the term increase such allowance, though they could not increase or diminish the certain sum fixed as the compensation of the officer. In other words the supreme court recognized this distinction between the allowance for compensation and for clerk hire, etc., when separately fixed; that the latter could, but the former could not, be increased or diminished during the officer's term. But when the board allowed a lump sum to cover compensation and expenses, so that the compensation proper consisted of the residue remaining over after payment of expenses, it was held that they could not, during the term of the officer, make any increased allowance, though convinced that their original estimate of expenses had been too low; nor could they require the officer to refund any part of the gross amount allowed upon the ground that his actual expenses had fallen below the estimate upon which the gross allowance was made; and this for the reason that any increase or decrease of the gross allowance necessarily increased or diminished the compensation of the officer. Here, then, is most respectable authority—if authority were needed—for the proposition that our Legislature could not, either by direct enactment or by authorizing the boards of supervisors to so order, impose upon a county treasury the payment of the salary of any deputy of a county officer elected while the Act of 1888 remained in force and unamended as to the provisions under discussion.

This being so, it remains to consider what changes have been made by amendments or additions to the original Act. By the amendments of 1885 the sections of the Act were re-numbered, and salaries in some counties reduced, but no change was made that need be considered here. In 1887, however, the Act was revised and re-enacted. In the revision, section 164 of the original Act became section 211, and among other changes therein were the following: Instead of the words above quoted from section 164, section 211 was made to read as follows: "Sec. 211. The salaries and fees provided in this Act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers herein named either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this Act otherwise provided, and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries hereinbefore provided, unless in this Act otherwise provided. . . . And provided, further, that whenever, in the opinion of the board of supervisors, the salary of any county officer in the third, fourth, fifth, twelfth, thirteenth, fifteenth, twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-sixth, twenty-ninth, thirty-third, thirty-fourth, thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, and forty-first classes, as fixed and provided in this Act, is insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the services required to be performed, the said board shall allow such officer a deputy, or such number of deputies as in their judgment may be required to do the business of such office, in connection with the principal, at a salary not to exceed one hundred dollars per month, to be paid at such times and in the manner that said principal is paid: provided, that an affidavit shall be fled by such officer with the said board showing that such deputy or deputies are required by him in the proper discharge of his duties as such officer." By their terms these amendments (which I have put in italics) were applicable to the county officers then in office, and who had been elected while the system of compensation established by the Act of 1883 was in force, and (if so construed) were, for the reasons above given, clearly unconstitutional. But the respondent's case does not require such a construction, and he does not contend that said amendments went into operation until after the expiration of the term of the county officers in office at the date of their enactment. His principal, Bonneau, was clerk of Martin county—a county of the twentieth class—when the Act of 1887 was passed, and respondent was his deputy. But Bonneau was re-elected for a new term in November, 1888, and entered thereon January 7, 1889. On January 10 he filed the affidavit prescribed by the statute, showing that he required a deputy in his office, and on the same day the board of supervisors made an order allowing him such deputy at a salary of $50 per month, to take effect from January 7. In pursuance of this order respondent was appointed, and, having obtained a warrant for the amount of his salary for the month of January, presented it to the appellant, the county treasurer, who refused to pay it on the ground that the proviso above quoted from the Act of 1887 was unconstitutional, and the order of the board of supervisors therefore void. Thereupon this proceeding by mandamus was commenced for the purpose of enforcing payment. The learned judge of the superior court, in awarding a peremptory writ of mandamus, held (if he is correctly quoted in the respondent's brief) that Bonneau, having been elected subsequent to the passage of the Act of 1887, went into office with "a right to the amount of salary named in the statute, and a contingent right, dependent on the facts, to have additional clerical assistance."

This being a fair statement of the proposition for which the respondent contends, it becomes necessary to consider whether it will bear the test of a critical examination. It is to be observed, in the first place, that it assumes a construction of the proviso which is more restricted than its terms, and more restricted than its application in this case, viz., that it was intended to apply only when, from change of conditions, an officer might require additional clerical assistance, meaning, as I understand the expression, clerical assistance in addition to that which was required at the date of the passage of the Act. If this is the construction placed upon the proviso by the superior court, it must be admitted that it is not very fully borne out by the terms of the statute. The Act says nothing about change of conditions through increase of population, or from any other cause. No facts are enumerated upon which the action of the board is made to depend. The only condition is that the officer shall file an affidavit showing that for the proper discharge of his duties he requires the assistance of a deputy or deputies, which it is apparent might be the case in a county in which the conditions were unchanged, or where the change of conditions had resulted in lightning the duties of the office. Nor does the statute require the board of supervisors to find that the duties of the office have become more onerous since the passage of the Act. All they have to do is to reach the conclusion in the exercise of their own discretion that the salary as fixed and provided in the Act is insufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the services required to be performed, and, if they are of that opinion, they shall allow such officer not "additional clerical assistance," but "a deputy, or such number of deputies as in their judgment may be required to do the business of such office, in connection with the principal," with salaries payable out of the county treasury. Giving to this language its literal and obvious construction, the working of the law may be fairly illustrated by applying it to counties of the second class, which, by the amendments of 1889, were brought within its operation. Referring to the clause of the statute above quoted, it will be seen that the compensation allowed to the different officers of this class of counties is fixed upon a scale which clearly indicates that it was intended to cover the salaries of a number of deputies in each of the principal offices. The clerk, for instance, has $18,000, the sheriff $15,000, and so on. Now, let it be supposed that the Legislature intended the clerk to have for his proper compensation the sum of $3,000 (which is equal to the maximum allowed by the Constitution to the state treasurer, secretary of state, comptroller, and other state officers), and that the remaining $10,000 was allowed for his necessary deputies, say six in number. This is the condition of things when the law is passed, and when the clerk is elected. On assuming the office, he can truthfully swear, although the conditions are entirely unchanged, that he requires the assistance of six deputies for the proper discharge of the duties of his office, and he files an affidavit to that effect. Thereupon it becomes the duty of the board of supervisors to consider whether his salary, as fixed and provided in the Act, is sufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the service of the clerk and six deputies; and, if they happen to be of the opinion that $3,000 is not a reasonable compensation for the clerk, or that $10,000 is not sufficient for the compensation of the six deputies, they must make an order allowing the clerk to appoint, not additional deputies, but as many deputies as he requires in connection with himself to perform the duties of the office, and order their salaries paid out of the county treasury. This result of a literal construction of the law is so flagrantly absurd, when applied to counties of the second class, that it must be rejected in favor of one more reasonable, though certainly less consonant with the terms of the statute. And it may be conceded that the most reasonable construction that can be given to his proviso is that indicated in the foregoing extract from the opinion of the judge of the superior court. It seems to me, however, that, although the law may have been construed by him according to the actual intention of the Legislature, it was applied in this case in its literal sense, for the respondent was Bonneau's sole deputy when the law was passed, and when he was last elected. It was not shown that an additional deputy was required, and in fact none was required. Respondent continued after the order of the board, and his new appointment, to be as he had been before, the sole deputy in the office, and what was in fact done in Marin county by its clerk and supervisors was precisely what I have supposed done in attempting to illustrate the working of the law according to its express terms in a county of the second class. If, therefore, the order under which the respondent claims, can be upheld, all the proceedings above supposed to have taken place in a county of the second class would be entirely legitimate and proper.

In making this statement I have not overlooked the fact which appears in the evidence, though not in the findings or decision of the court, that the business of the clerk of Marin county did increase, after the passage of the Act of 1887, so much that the respondent, who had before given but a part of his time to his duty as deputy clerk at a small salary, was subsequently compelled to devote his whole time to the duties of the office, and necessarily earned and received a larger salary. If this fact—testified to but not found—is to be considered as bringing the respondent's case within his construction of the law, it will be necessary to bring the law so construed to the test of the Constitution. According to this construction, the Legislature, after dividing the counties of the state into forty-eight classes for the express purpose of regulating the compensation of the county officers, and having regulated such compensation by the system of allowing to each officer a certain fixed sum, or certain fees out of which he must pay the salaries of all necessary deputies and assistants, has proceeded to ingraft upon this system a proviso applicable to twenty classes, to the effect that the supervisors may, after the election of any officer, if they think the compensation allowed him by the Act in force at the date of his election is insufficient, pay out of the county treasury the expense of employing any deputies he may require in addition to those required at the date of the passage of the Act. Assuming this to be the true meaning of the proviso, it either is or is not a mode of regulating the compensation of the officers of the selected classes of counties. If it is a mode of regulation, how does it regulate, and through whose agency? Clearly, it seems to me, through the agency and subject to the discretion of the board of supervisors. If, under the law in force at the date of his election, an officer is to receive for his proper compensation one sum (viz., what is left of his fixed salary after paying his necessary deputies), and under order of the board made after his election a larger sum (viz., what is left of his fixed salary after paying at most only a part of his necessary deputies), it is the discretion of the board, and not that of the Legislature, which fixes the amount, and such amount, instead of being fixed in advance of his election, can only be fixed after his election, for by the terms of the proviso the affidavit of the officer is a necessary preliminary to the order of the board. Passing over this last objection, which, in view of the evident purpose of sections 5 and 9 of article 11, is serious enough, let us consider only the first. For myself, I am far from believing that the plan of regulating the salaries of local officers by local boards is a bad one. On the contrary, I think the best plan would be to leave such matters to the control of those who are most directly interested and most capable of deciding for the best. But it is very certain that the framers of our Constitution distinctly intended to give this power to the Legislature, to the exclusion of the boards of supervisors. This is not only evident from the language of section 5 of article 11, but is shown by the debates of the convention. When this article was reported to the convention, Mr. Webster, of Alameda, offered an amendment to section 5, providing in effect that the respective boards of supervisors should regulate the compensation of other county officers. After a short debate, in which the only argument against the amendment consisted of a statement of the supposed mischiefs involved in conferring such a power upon local boards, the amendment was voted down, and the section adopted substantially as reported. Deb. Const. pp. 1048, 1049. The framers of the Constitution having thus deliberately rejected the proposition to invest the board of supervisors with discretionary authority in this particular, and having committed the whole matter to the discretion of the Legislature, under a mandatory injunction to exercise the power by regulating in advance the compensation of all officers according to their duties, it is clear that the Legislature cannot delegate such power to the supervisors, to be exercised according to their discretion. But counsel for respondent seek to avoid the force of this argument, by insisting that the proviso in question, according to their construction of it, does not in any way regulate or affect the compensation of the county officers. They make a distinction between the compensation of the officer and the expenses of his office, and contend that the County Government Act itself fixes the compensation of the officers beyond the power of the board of supervisors to change or alter it, and that the proviso merely gives the board power to allow and pay the expenses of the office occasioned by the changed conditions and unforeseen contingencies. I understand this to be the position to which the respondent commits himself, and upon which he feels the most confident of sustaining the judgment in his favor.

In view of the foregoing discussion it would seem rather difficult to maintain that the proviso in question does not affect, and was not intended to regulate, the compensation of county officers; but, conceding for the moment that the respondent is right in his construction of it, what is the result? The result is that we have an Act in direct conflict with various provisions of the Constitution prohibitory of local and special legislation. If there is any one feature of the Constitution more marked, and any characteristic more pervasive, than all others, it is this oft reiterated, this general and specific inhibition of local and special laws. I cite the following clauses as bearing more directly upon the matter under discussion: Art. 1, § 11: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Art.

4, § 25: "The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say; . . . Ninth. Regulating county and township business, or the election of county and township officers. . . . Thirty-third. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." Now this law, which for the present we assume has nothing to do with the compensation of county officers, but merely empowers the board of supervisors to allow and pay the expenses caused by changed conditions and unforeseen contingencies, is certainly a law of general nature, relating, as it does, to a matter of equal interest to every part of the state. It ought, therefore, to have a uniform operation throughout the state, instead of being confined to less than half of the counties. But, passing over this objection to the law as one founded upon a disputed, and perhaps doubtful, construction of section 11, art. 1, it seems clear that this proviso is in direct conflict with the ninth and thirty-third subdivisions of section 25, art. 4, for certainly it is a regulation of county business, and the case not only admits, it demands, the application of a general law. But this law is local and special. It selects certain classes of counties, apparently at random, some large, some small, some of intermediate size, omitting others of every grade of population, above, below, and intermediate, and confers upon the classes so arbitrarily selected a power and a privilege in the transaction of the county business which is denied to others standing in precisely the same relation to the subject of the enactment. The fact that it is made applicable to classes of counties created in pursuance of authority expressly conferred by the Constitution itself, viz., the authority to classify counties by population for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers, does not make it a general law; for, on the construction which is here assumed, it is not a regulation of the compensation of officers, but a provision for contingent expenses; and a classification permitted for one kind of legislation cannot be made the basis of a different kind of legislation to which it is manifestly inappropriate. It is this consideration which distinguishes this case from Cody v. Murphey, 89 Cal. 532, and People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 444. In the first-mentioned case an Act was upheld, although it applied to but one class of counties; but it was an Act to regulate the compensation of the county officers. In the Henshaw Case the Act upheld affected only one class of cases; but it was an Act relating to municipal organization, for which purpose the Constitution expressly authorizes the classification of cities and towns in proportion to population. Art. 11, § 6.

The case of Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, on the other hand, holds that the classification of counties established by the Act of 1883, for a legitimate purpose, cannot be made the basis of discriminating legislation, even when it relates to the compensation of county officers. The case of Ex parte Westerfield, 55 Cal. 550, is also directly in point on the proposition that a law is not general merely because it applies equally to all of a class arbitrarily defined. Mr. Justice McKinstry says in that case: "A general law must be as broad as its object." There- fore a law, the object of which is to provide for the payment of county expenses arising from unforeseen contingencies, must be as broad as the state, for it is absurd to say that unforeseen contingencies will happen in some counties, but not in others. In the case of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 288, a law applying to two classes of municipal corporations was held unconstitutional, because it related to a subject foreign to the purpose for which the classification of such corporations is authorized, and the discussion on this point was summed up in the following words: "The conclusion is that, although a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, it is not general or constitutional if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar disabilities or burdensome conditions upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from the general body of those who stand in precisely the same relation to the subject of the law," Pages 251, 252, 91 Cal. In view of these decisions, the conclusion cannot be avoided that the proviso, construed as something distinct from a regulation of the compensation of county officers, is local and special legislation, and therefore void. And this vice of the statute in question distinguishes it broadly from the law which was sustained in Kirkwood v. Soto, 87 Cal. 894, upon which the respondent so confidently relies. That was a general law, allowing superintendents of schools in every county in the state certain necessary official expenses, and was in this respect similar to many general provisions of the Codes allowing for extraordinary expenses of county officers; such, for instance, as the preparation of a new great register (Pol. Code, § 1113), to which I see no constitutional objection. If I am correct in the views above expressed, the proviso in question is void as special legislation, even if construed according to respondent's contention,—that it does not affect the compensation of county officers. But, although I have for the moment conceded the correctness of his position as to this point, I do not think it can be maintained. The proviso, in my opinion, is an attempt to regulate such compensation by committing to the discretion of the supervisors a duty which the Constitution had confided to the Legislature exclusively,—a duty which, under the terms of the Act, the supervisors cannot perform until after the election of the officers to be affected, whereas the Constitution requires it to be performed by the Legislature in advance of their election. For these reasons I concur in the judgment of reversal.
16 L. R. A.

McFarland, J., dissenting:

I dissent. I have not the time, and there is no necessity, to state my views at large on the questions here involved. I will state some of them, however, briefly.

1. The undisputed general rule is that all presumptions are in favor of the constitutionality of statutes; that before an Act of a co-ordinate branch of the government can be declared invalid by the judiciary for the reason that it is in conflict with the Constitution, such conflict must be clear, positive, abrupt, and unquestionable; and that, in case of fair, reasonable doubt of its constitutionality, the statute should be upheld. I state this old rule here because I think it particularly applicable to the case at bar; for, at best, the unconstitutionality of the statute here in question is certainly not so clear as to be seen without a good deal of microscopic aid.

2. The Amendment of 1887 was not, in my opinion, in violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, which provides against increase of compensation "after election." Bonneau, the county clerk, whose deputy Dougherty, the plaintiff, is, was elected after the passage of said amendment; and he did not "contract," as contended by appellant, that he would do all the work of his office, or pay a deputy, if necessary to employ one. The law which gave the contingent right to have a deputy paid by the county was in force at the time of his election. Moreover, the employment of a deputy paid by the county did not "increase the compensation" of the county clerk. His compensation was the same after the employment of the deputy as before. It is contended that his compensation was increased because his work was lessened. Now, in the first place, there is no such presumption; the presumption is that the board allowed the deputy because there was additional work for him to do. But, in the second place, suppose his work was lessened, shall a solemn Act of the Legislature be declared void by the circuitous reasoning which brings us to the conclusion that a decrease of duties is an "actual increase of compensation" within the meaning of the Constitution? Suppose that the Legislature had created a new county office, and transferred to the incumbent of such new office a part of the business formerly required to be done by the county clerk, would that have been an "increase of compensation" of the county clerk?

3. Neither do I think that the amendment is "special legislation" inhibited by section 25 of article 4, or that it has not a "uniform operation" within the meaning of section 11 of article 1. The Legislature has the power to "establish a system of county governments," (sec. 4, art. 11,) and to "regulate" the compensation of county officers, "and for this purpose may classify the counties by population" (sec. 5, art. 11). Under these provisions the Legislature may create as many classes as its judgment dictates, and such classification is not special legislation. Longan v. Solano County, 65 Cal. 122. And, of course, if such legislation is not "special," it has a "uniform operation," because it operates alike on each of the classes upon which it operates at all.

4. And I see nothing in the point that the board of supervisors could not be given the power to allow the deputy and provide for his salary. The Constitution merely declares that the Legislature shall by general laws provide for the election "or appointment" of certain named county officers, and regulate their compensation. Sec. 5, art. 11. The deputy involved in the case at bar can hardly be considered as one of the county officers mentioned in the section just referred to; but, if he were, it is difficult to see why the Legislature could not "provide" for his appointment in the way mentioned in the statute under consideration. And the Legislature is only to regulate the compensation. I confess that I can find no authority in either common or law literature for giving to the word "regulate" the meaning of "fix,"—that is, to name definitely, exactly, and mathematically the very sum in dollars and cents of the compensation. I find no general or law dictionary which uses the word "fix" at all in defining the word "regulate," or gives one as the synonym of the other. Indeed, the words seem to have quite different significations. Some of the definitions of "fix" are to make "firm, stable, or fast;" "to set or place permanently;" "to fasten immovably." Webster. The common definitions of "regulate" are "to adjust by rule, method, or established mode;" "to direct by rule or restriction;" "to subject to governing principles of law." Ibid. These same definitions of "regulate" are to be found in law dictionaries. The latter word therefore, has much greater latitude of meaning than "fix," which includes the notion of inflexibility and rigidity. To fix is to fasten a thing immovably,—as with nail and hammer; while to regulate includes the idea of marking the boundaries and prescribing the methods within and by which the thing may be done by others. I know that words are uncertain things, and must be construed with reference to the context and relations in which they are found; but certainly a word should not be strained from its usual to a restricted sense when the result of such construction is to upset a statute. Therefore, giving to "regulate" what, it seems to me, is clearly its usual meaning, I see no question in the case about unwarranted "delegation of authority" by the Legislature. The Constitution expressly provided that "the Legislature shall provide a system of county governments," which shall have, to a large extent, legislative powers; and I cannot see how the power to employ and pay deputies in county offices, within restricted limits, is different from the numerous other powers which boards of supervisors are exercising every day without question. The Code formerly provided that the board of supervisors shall have the power "to fix the compensation of all county officers not otherwise in this Code, or by general or special law, fixed, and provided for the payment of the same." Section 4048, Pol. Code (Newmark, 1839). And this court held in Kinsey v. Kellogg, 65 Cal. 115, that such power was properly granted. This was practically holding that the county governments might be given the power to fix the salaries of all county officers. I do not think that the position of appellant is made any stronger by putting it in the form of the proposition that the Amendment of 1887 undertook to give the board of supervisors the power to change or suspend the law." The amendment is in the very section 211 which contains all the law on the subject; and the change was made by the Legislature itself. In my opinion, the judgment should be affirmed.

Paterson, J. I concur in the views expressed by McFarland, J.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

Hammond COLEMAN et al., Plffs. in Err.,

NEW ORLEANS INSURANCE CO.

(.....Ohio.....)

A policy of fire insurance, issued by the defendant, which, for a premium in gross, insured the plaintiffs to the amount of $200 on their storehouse, and $3,800 on their stock of goods therein, contained a condition that, "if the building intended to be insured stands on ground not owned in fee simple by the assured, the policy shall be void, unless consent in writing by the company be indorsed thereon." Within the period covered by the policy the house and goods were destroyed by fire, and it appeared that the plaintiffs did not own in fee simple the ground on which the building stood. In an action on the policy,—Held, that the contract is severable, and that the breach of the condition as to the title to the land does not defeat the plaintiffs' right to recover for the loss of the stock of goods insured by the policy.

*Head note by the Court.

(April 29, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Scioto County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Reversed.

Statement by Williams, Ch. J.:

The New Orleans Insurance Company, on the 17th day of November, 1883, issued to H. Coleman & Co. a policy of fire insurance, whereby the company insured Coleman & Co. against loss or damage by fire for the period of one year from the date of the policy, to the amount of four thousand dollars, as follows: "$200 on their one-story frame shingle-roof storehouse; $3,800 on the general stock of merchandise, consisting principally of dry goods, groceries, clothing, boots and shoes, hats and caps, queensware, glassware, cutlery, and such other articles as are usually kept for sale in a country store; all contained in their one-story frame shingle roof storehouse, situated in Pike county, Kentucky." On the 11th day of April, 1883, the property was totally destroyed by fire; and thereafter proof of the loss was made out and forwarded to the company. The loss not having been paid, Coleman & Co. commenced an action against the insurance company in the court of common pleas of Scioto county, to recover the amount of the policy; the loss exceeding that sum. The petition is in the usual form in such cases, and contains all the necessary averments to entitle the plaintiffs to recover. The answer set up the following defenses: "The said policy was issued and was accepted by the assured upon the following condition and agreement, expressed therein, to wit, that this policy shall become void 'if the assured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property.' The said H. Coleman & Co., the assured, were not the sole and unconditional owners of the said storehouse at the time the said policy was issued. The said policy was issued and was accepted by the assured upon the following condition and agreement, expressed therein, to wit, that this policy shall become void 'if any building intended to be insured stands on ground not owned in fee simple by the assured.' The said storehouse intended to be insured by the said policy stood on ground not owned in fee simple by the assured, H. Coleman & Co." To these defenses the plaintiffs replied, denying that they were not the "sole owners of said storehouse;" also denying that the policy became or was void because said storehouse stood on ground not owned in fee simple by plaintiffs; and further denying that the plaintiffs "stated or represented that said storehouse stood on ground owned by them, or agreed in any way that said policy was or should become void if said storehouse did not stand on ground owned in fee simple by them." On the trial of the cause by a jury the defendant prevailed. A motion by the plaintiffs for a new trial was overruled, and judgment was entered on the verdict. Exceptions taken by the plaintiffs to the charge of the court, together with the evidence showing the materiality of the instructions, were embodied in a bill of exceptions, which was duly allowed, and made part of the record. Error was prosecuted to the circuit court, where the judgment was affirmed, whereupon the plaintiffs commenced the present proceedings in error in this court. The charge of the court to which the exceptions were taken will be noticed in the opinion.

Mr. J. J. Harper, for plaintiffs in error:

The contract was not an entirety so as to defeat a recovery for the loss of the personal property insured.

Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 452, 29 Am. Rep. 184; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 128; Trench v. Chenango County Mut. Ins. Co. 7 Hill, 122; Koontz v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 126. 97 Am. Dec. 325; Lochner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 16 Mo. 247; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 53 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115; Schuster v. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co. 8 Cent. Rep. 183, 103 N. Y. 260.

If no inquiry was made as to the state of the title and the record discloses none, then that portion of the policy was waived, otherwise such conduct and such a policy as the one in suit would be a trap for the illiterate and unwary.

NOTE.—As illustrating the disagreement of decisions on the question of the severability of an insurance policy we call attention, without attempting an exhaustive collection of the cases, to the following cases already reported in this series, in which substantially all the cases on the subject will be found cited either in opinions or in briefs of 16 L. R. A.

counsel. Essex Sav. Bank v. Meriden F. Ins. Co. 4 L. R. A. 759, 37 Conn. 385; McQueeney v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 5 L. R. A. 744, 52 Ark. 237; State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 6 L. R. A. 524, 27 Neb. 527; Loomis v. Rockford Ins. Co. 8 L. R. A. 384, 77 Wis. 87, 20 Am. St. Rep. 93.

See O'Brien v. Ohio Ins. Co. 53 Mich. 181; Dwelling-house Ins. Co. v. Hoffman, 125 Pa. 636; Wood, Ins. §§ 890, 392, 895; Bilenberger v. Protective Mut. F. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 464; Clark v. Manufacturers Ins. Co. 49 U. S. 8 How. 235, 12 L. ed. 1061; Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cusick, 109 Pa. 157; Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Dougherty, 102 Pa. 588; Riley v. Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. 1 Cent. Rep. 119, 110 Pa. 144; Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Elkins, 124 Pa. 484; Com. v. Hide & L. Ins. Co. 112 Mass. 186, 17 Am. Rep. 72; Hall v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 165; Liberty Hall Assn. v. Housatonic Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 Gray, 261; Washington Mills E. Mfg. Co. v. Weymouth & B. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 503; May, Ins. 8d ed. § 292; Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 9 L. R. A. 45, 47 Ohio St. 409.

Mr. George O. Newman also for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Wells A. Hutchins and Williams & Wambaugh, for defendant in error:

The stipulation does not work a forfeiture. It is not a condition subsequent. On the contrary, it is a preliminary stipulation, and, if not complied with before the making of the contract, prevents the parties from ever entering into the contractual relation.

Langdell, Cont. §§ 26, 28.

As to the building, the policy was void from the beginning.

Gasper v. Kinsinger, 89 Ohio St. 429; Citizens F. Ins. Co. v. Doll, 85 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 860; Mera v. Franklin Ins. Co. 68 Mo. 127.

The policy was void from the beginning as to the contents of the building. This policy is an entire contract; for:

(1) There is but one consideration.

2 Parsons, Cont. 519; May, Ins. 2d ed. §§ 74, 189, 227.

(2) The words of the stipulation are clear, saying that in case the stipulation be broken "the policy" shall be void. It is not the insurance on the building that is void, but "the policy."

(3) The risk on the two items insured, the building and its contents, is necessarily identical.

In Ohio the doctrine of entirety is applied to contracts of all kinds.

Witherow v. Witherow, 16 Ohio St. 288; Allen v. Curles, 6 Ohio St. 505; Larkin v. Buck, 11 Ohio St. 561; Goldsmith v. Hand, 26 Ohio St. 151.

By a vast preponderance in number and weight the authorities sustain the contention that a breach of the stipulation violated in this case, must avoid the whole policy.

Hagens v. Home Ins. Co. 9 West. Rep. 683, 111 Ind. 90; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 119 Ind. 153; Pickel v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291; Geiss v. Franklin Ins. Co. 128 Ind. 172; Cuthbertson v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 96 N. C. 480; Western Assur. Co. v. Stoddard, 88 Ala. 606; Essex Sav. Bank v. Meriden Fire Ins. Co. 4 L. R. A. 759, 57 Conn. 835; McQueeney v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 5 L. R. A. 744, 52 Ark. 257; Loomis v. Rockford Ins. Co. 8 L. R. A. 834, 77 Wis. 87, 20 Am. St. Rep. 96; Lee v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 3 Gray, 588; Day v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 91; Gottman v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 56 Pa. 210, 94 Am. Dec. 55; 15 L. R. A.

Bowman v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 40 Md. 620; Hinman v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 159; Plath v. Minnesota Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 28 Minn. 479; Moore v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 28 Gratt. 508, 26 Am. Rep. 873; Schumitach v. American Ins. Co. 48 Wis. 26; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Reah, 44 Mich. 55, 38 Am. Rep. 228; Baldwin v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 423, 49 Am. Rep. 324; American Ins. Co. v. Barnett, 78 Mo. 864, 29 Am. Rep. 517; Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 203; Kelly v. Humboldt F. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 484; Gore Dist. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Samo, 2 Can. Sup. Ct. Rep. 411.

An examination of the title (which could be made through the records only) is not contemplated by the statute.

Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 9 L. R. A. 45, 47 Ohio St. 409.

There having been a breach of warranty as to the title to the land on which the store building stood, and as to the ownership of the building there can be no recovery for the goods. The contract is entire, not divisible.

May, Ins. §§ 74, 189, 258, note 5, 277; Wood, Ins. §§ 152, 828, note 2; 2 Parsons, Cont. pp. 484, 519; 9 Ins. L. J. pp. 56, 61, 62; 3 Ins. L. J. pp. 904, 906; 10 Ins. L. J. p. 83; 11 Ins. L. J. p. 104; Stein v. The "Prairie Rose", 17 Ohio St. 471.

As to warranty of title and its effect—

See Philips v. Knox County Mut. Ins. Co. 20 Ohio, 174, 181; Hutchins v. Cleveland Mut. Ins. Co. 11 Ohio St. 477; Smith v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 19 Ohio St. 287; Byers v. Farmers Ins. Co. 85 Ohio St. 606, 85 Am. Rep. 623; Farmers Ins. Co. v. Archer, 36 Ohio St. 608; Home Ins. Co. v. Lindsey, 26 Ohio St. 848; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Michigan, S. & N. I. R. Co. 28 Ohio St. 69; Gasper v. Kinsinger, 89 Ohio St. 429; May, Ins. §§ 156, 158, 185, 186; Wood, Ins. §§ 159, 165, 167, 176; 2 Parsons, Cont. pp. 421, 429, 432, 438.

Accepting a policy amounts to a declaration that the assured's interest is truly stated therein.

Mais v. Insurance Co. 8 Ins. L. J. 505; Oltizens F. Ins. S. & L. Co. v. Doll, 85 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 860; Waller v. Northern Assur. Co. 10 Fed. Rep. 282; Oleaver v. Traders Ins. Co. 8 West. Rep. 815, 65 Mich. 527; May, Ins. § 167; Wood, Ins. § 270; 10 Ins. L. J. p. 892.

Williams, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The policy of insurance contains the provisions that, "if the assured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property, or if any building intended to be insured stands on ground not owned in fee simple by the assured," the policy "shall become void, unless consent in writing by the company be indorsed thereon." The policy was issued without any written application signed by the assured, and the insurance was solicited, as the evidence shows, at the request of the company's agent, by a third person, on whose report the agent made up the application on which the policy was issued. The assured made no statement, nor was any requested, in regard to the ownership or title of the ground on which the house referred to in the policy stood; and it does not appear that there was any intentional concealment of the title, or of any fact material to the risk. It was shown by the evidence that the fee simple of the land on which the insured building stood was vested in Hammond Coleman, a member of the firm of H. Coleman & Co., and his wife, who was not a member of the firm; but that several years previous to the date of the policy Hammond Coleman executed a deed for the land directly to his wife, with the intervention of a trustee, in which the following provision is contained: "This deed is not to take effect until my death. This deed is in compliance with my will heretofore made." The copartnership of H. Coleman & Co., when the insurance was effected, and at the time of the fire, consisted of Hammond Coleman, Adam Venters, and Henry E. Coleman, and the actual value of the stock of goods and merchandise covered by the policy exceeded the valuation therein set forth.

The court instructed the jury that their inquiry in regard to the title to the land on which the storehouse stood must be: "Did the plaintiffs—not Hammond Coleman—have such (fee simple) estate in this land upon which the building stood? It is not enough to satisfy this provision that Hammond Coleman, one of the plaintiffs, had a life estate in the land. It is not enough that he alone had an interest in the land. This would not constitute an estate in fee simple. If you should find that he has an estate in fee simple in the land, still it must be the insured who must have this estate in fee simple in the land to satisfy this provision, and therefore if you find from the evidence that the plaintiffs were not the owners in fee simple of the land upon which the store building stood, then this policy is void, and the plaintiffs cannot recover in this action." The court further instructed the jury as follows: "This contract, gentlemen, is termed in law an 'entire contract,' and if you find that there has been a breach of any condition of this contract to which I have called your attention, it violates the policy, renders it void, and nothing can be recovered for either building or goods destroyed." The effect of the instructions were that, if the fee simple title to the land on which the storehouse was situated, was not vested in the copartnership of H. Coleman & Co., but was in Hammond Coleman, a member of the copartnership, the policy of insurance was void, and the plaintiffs could not recover, either for the loss of the building or of the goods. These instructions were excepted to by the plaintiffs, who contend they were erroneous, and on account of which the judgment should be reversed. The principal ground of the contention is that the contract of insurance evidenced by the policy is so far severable as to entitle plaintiffs to recover for the loss of the goods, though they may not be entitled to recover for the loss of the building, by reason of the state of the title to the land on which it stood.

Whether such a contract is so severable is a question upon which the adjudications of courts of the highest respectability are in direct conflict. The following are some of the cases which hold the contract to be entire: Barnes v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 110; Hosens v. Home Ins. Co. 111 Ind. 90, 9 West. 16 L. R. A.

Rep. 685; Cuthbertson v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 96 N. C. 480; Essex Sav. Bank v. Meriden F. Ins. Co. 57 Conn. 835, 4 L. R. A. 759.

On the other hand, such contracts are held severable in the following, and other cases: Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115; Lochner v. Home Mut. F. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247; Koontz v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 126, 97 Am. Dec. 325; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (Ky.) 9; Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 452; Schuster v. Dutchess County Ins. Co. 102 N. Y. 260, 8 Cent. Rep. 183. And such we understand to be the effect of the decision in Clark v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 342. There the policy, for a gross premium, insured the plaintiff's "tavern house," to the amount of $2,200, and his shop, valued at $900. The act of incorporation of the defendant provided "that, when any property insured by this company shall in any way be alienated, the policy shall thereupon be void, and should be surrendered to the directors, to be canceled." The shop was alienated by the assured, and the "tavern house" was afterwards destroyed by fire. It was held that the alienation of the shop did not prevent a recovery for the loss of the tavern. The court says: "The next ground taken by the defendants is that the shop, which was insured in the same policy, had been alienated by the plaintiff, and that this is such an alienation as will avoid the policy. But the shop was valued separately, and was insured separately, as a separate, distinct, independent, subject of insurance, though insured in the same policy. The alienation of the shop would no doubt avoid the policy pro tanto, and only pro tanto. The tavern house and the shop being insured separately, the alienation of one would no more affect the insurance on the other than if they had been insured in separate policies." In the case of Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Walsh, cited above, two houses were embraced in the same policy, and insured for different sums for a gross premium paid, the policy providing that, if the insured premises should remain vacant for a certain time without notice to the company, the policy should become void; and it was held that the fact that one of the buildings remained thus vacant without notice to the insurer would not invalidate the policy as to the other. The action in Lochner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247, was upon a fire policy covering a dwelling house and furniture therein. It was held: "A policy may be void in part and valid in part, if the subject-matter is capable of being separated; and, although a failure to disclose an incumbrance would avoid the policy as to the house insured, it would not avoid it as to furniture insured in the same policy, but separately appraised, unless the fact concealed was material to the risk." Koontz v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co., 42 Mo. 126, 97 Am. Dec. 325, was a case where a policy of insurance upon a certain livery stable was made to cover both personal and real property, and the application of the assured contained a false warranty touching incumbrances upon the real estate; and where it further appeared that the personal property was separately appraised, and nothing showed that the representations as to the incumbrances upon the stable formed any inducement to the execution of the policy covering the personal property. The court held that the assured might recover the value of the latter, although the policy was rendered void as to the real estate by reason of such false warranty.

The case of Phanix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (Ky.) 9, is much like the one before us. There, the appellant, (company,) for a premium of $14, insured J. B. Lawrence & Co., against loss by fire from the 25th of May, 1858, to the 25th of May, 1859, "to the amount of $200 on their frame storehouse, situated on the Ohio river, in Gallatin county, Kentucky, known as 'Jackson's Landing,' and $1,200 on the stock of goods in said storehouse." The premises and goods were destroyed by fire on the 5th of April, 1859, and suit was brought on the policy for the value of the goods, but not for the loss of the building. One defense was that Lawrence & Co., when they obtained the insurance, represented themselves to be the owners of the house, when in fact they were not, which, by the terms of the policy, rendered it void. But the court held, "in the absence of proof that the plaintiffs procured the insurance upon the house for a fraudulent purpose, or that their supposed interest in the house induced the defendant to insure the goods that this does not vitiate the insurance on the goods;" and the plaintiffs had judgment. In the case of Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 452, the policy, for one premium, insured the plaintiff against loss or damage by fire to the amount of $8,000, as follows: "$1,000 on dwelling house and wood house, if attached; $300 on household furniture therein; $200 on provisions etc., therein," and various other items of property described in the policy, each having a specific valuation therein set forth. The policy contained a condition that, if the property insured was incumbered by mortgage or otherwise, unless so represented in the application, the policy should be void; also, that if it should become incumbered by mortgage, judgment, or otherwise, policy should be void until the written consent of the company was obtained. The real estate was incumbered, and that fact was set up in defense of the action on the policy; and it was claimed by the defendant that it not only avoided the policy as to the building insured, but also as to the chattel property; and whether it did or not it was conceded depended upon whether the contract was entire or severable. In a well considered opinion Judge Folger, after commenting upon various decisions on the subject, discusses the question on principle, and in the course of the discussion says: "It is plain from the fact of a separate valuation having been put by the parties upon the different subjects of the insurance that they looked upon them as distinct matters of contract. The effect of a separate valuation was to make them so. No matter how much value there might have been in any one of those subjects, even to the whole amount of the policy, had it been totally destroyed, the defendants could not have been made liable to an amount greater than that named in the policy as the valuation of it. Thus it was at the inception of the contract, distinguished from the other subjects of insurance, and the contract so made as to be capable of application to it alone. So, too, if but one of the subjects of insurance had been burned, the defendants (ceteris paribus) could not have avoided liability to pay for that up to the value put upon it; and, if not wholly destroyed, but so far damaged as to reach in deterioration the value put upon it in the policy, the defendants would have to pay that damage; and that subject would no longer form a part of the general matter insured, and hence not a part of the continuing contract. Thus there would of necessity be a severance of the contract worked out by the operation of its own terms. Again, the principle, in the case of a contract about several things, but with a single consideration in gross, is this: that we are not able to say that the party would have agreed for one, or for more than one, yet less than all of them, without he could at the same time acquire a right to have them all. But our daily experience and observation shows that an insurance company is as ready to insure buildings without insuring the contents, and the contents without insuring the buildings, as to insure them together; so that the principle does not press so hard in considering such a contract as that before us. Besides it is the rule that an agreement embracing several particulars, though made at one time and about one affair, may yet have the nature and operation of several different contracts; as, when they admit of being separately executed and closed as we have instanced just above, where the contract may be taken distributively, each subject being considered as forming the matter of a separate agreement after it is so closed. Per Washington, J. Perkins v. Hart, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 287-251, 6 L. ed. 468-467; Rodemer v. Gonder, 9 Gill, 294. In our judgment, this rule applies fitly to the contract in hand. It admits of being separately executed and closed as to each of the separate subjects of insurance. When one species of the property insured is burned, a contract to insure as to that may be performed as to that alone. The insured has paid the premium. A fire doing damage to that subject, the damage may be paid for by the insurer, and that subject be thus put out of the contract, while it remains in fieri as to all the other subjects named in it. When there are several subjects of insurance (as there are fourteen here) separately valued, on which a gross sum is insured not exceeding the aggregate of that valuation for the insurance of which a premium in gross is paid, it is easy to see what is the rate of premium on the whole valuation and what is the amount of premium on each subject insured. This being so it seems fanciful to say that, if the facts thus easily reached were stated in detail in the contract, it would be severable, while not being specifically spread out it is entire. If there were anything in the terms or nature of the particular contract, or in the circumstances of the case, or in the nature of the different subjects of the insurance, from which it was to be inferred that the insurer would not have been likely to have assumed the risk on one or several of them, unless induced by the advantage and profit of having a risk on all, that would be a rational cause for deeming the contract entire. But when, for aught that appears it is indeed as likely that the insurer would have taken a risk upon any one or any few of the subjects insured, at the same rate of premium as upon the whole, and has in the policy so separated the subjects, and so singled them out by a specific valuation, as that there is no difficulty in distinguishing the subject from the rest, and closing the contract as to that separately, and carrying forward the contract as to the rest, it does result that the contract is separable in practical operation, and hence, in law. And so, also, that, though there may have been some conduct of the insured as to some of the property, not evil in itself, but working a breach of a condition in its letter, the effect of that breach may be confined to the insurance upon that property, the contract as to that be held avoided, and as to the other subjects be held valid."

16 L. R. A.

Forfeitures do not readily find favor in the law, and courts are reluctant to declare and enforce them, if by reasonable interpretation it can be avoided. It is not likely that in this case the small amount of insurance on the storehouse constituted any inducement for the insurance placed upon the stock of goods; and it does not appear that the rates upon these classes of property were different, nor how it could make any difference if they were, since the only effect, in this respect, of holding the contract severable, is that the insurance company is enabled to retain the whole of the premium, which it accepted as the consideration for the insurance of all the property, for the lesser risk on part of the property only; and it is not to be presumed that the premium for the insurance of part only of the property would exceed that accepted for the risk on all of it. It was not shown at the trial that the plaintiffs were guilty of any misrepresentation or intentional concealment concerning the title to the land on which the storehouse stood. No inquiry was made of them about it. The subject was not a matter of negotiation between the parties in effecting the insurance, and the plaintiffs were ignorant of the condition, for the breach of which the company claims the right to forfeit the whole policy. If the position taken by the company be correct, the condition was broken when the policy issued, and there was, therefore, no consideration for the premium that was paid, for no risk attached; and yet the company, while asserting the invalidity of the contract, holds on to its fruits. This is not a very consistent position, nor a very just one. A just result is reached, and, as we think, the lawful one, by holding, as we do, that the contract of insurance in this case is severable, and the breach of the condition as to the title of the land does not defeat the plaintiff's right to recover for the loss of the stock of goods insured by the policy in suit.

It follows that, in our view of the case, the court erred in the instructions we have referred to, for which error the judgment is reversed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE, ex rel. Village of COLFAX, Appt.,

Robert MAXTON et al.

(.....Ill.....)

1. The publication in pamphlet form by village authorities of an ordinance is a sufficient affirmative act by the village on which to base an estoppel against denying its validity in case it is acted on, under a statute which provides that when ordinances are so printed the pamphlet shall be received as evidence of their passage and legal publication in all places without further proof.

2. A village is estopped from denying the legal passage of an ordinance disconnecting part of its territory after it has published the same in pamphlet form and the town authorities have taken and maintained possession of such territory for several years, levied taxes, worked the roads, and built a bridge, while the village authorities have made no claim to jurisdiction over it.

November 2, 1891.)

APPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for McLean County in favor of defendants in a proceeding by mandamus to compel defendant Maxton as county clerk of McLean County to extend NOTE.—Estoppel as to assertion of governmental power.

The question of estoppel in respect to the assertion of governmental power has been almost entirely untouched. The doctrine that municipal corporations are to the same extent that individuals would be in the same circumstances has become well established so far as the property rights of a municipality are concerned. In respect to the assertion of public rights in property, as in case of highways, the liability of a municipality to estoppel is affirmed in some cases and denied in others. But on the question whether a municipal corporation, a state, or the general government can be estopped between it and an individual to assert its governmental power there seems to be an entire absence not only of decisions but of discussion.

16 L. R. A.

On the question of boundary, as in the main case, where it arises between municipal corporations, states, or nations, there are decisions which recognize the doctrine of estoppel.

Thus in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 45 U. S. 4 How. 591, 11 L. ed. 1118, it was held that long possession in a case of disputed boundary between states would be protected.

And again in Indiana v. Kentucky, 136 U. S. 479, 34 L. ed. 829, the same doctrine was applied to a case of boundary between Indiana and Kentucky, and it was said that the long acquiescence of Indiana in the claim of Kentucky to an island and the rights of property of private parties under grants from that state and the general understanding of the people of both states in the neighborhood forbid any disturbance of Kentucky in her taxes levied for the use of relator over lands adjacent to the village and which had previously been a part of it but had been disconnected therefrom by an ordinance which was alleged to be invalid. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. E. De Mange, for appellant:

It would be a pernicious doctrine to establish that public rights of municipalities could be cut off by the neglect of the appointed officers for an unreasonable time to enforce them.

Logan County Supra. v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 159.

This proposed ordinance, because it did not receive the votes of a majority of the members elected to relator's board of trustees, was an absolute nullity. These acts were void in their inception, remain so, and no rights were acquired under them.

Taylor v. People, 66 Ill. 826.

If the Statute of Limitations can operate to bar the village of its right to assert jurisdiction over its territory by mandamus to compel the extending of its taxes, it could only do so after twenty years abandonment of such jurisdiction.

Peoria County Supra. v. Gordon, 82 Ill. 435.

There is no question of hardship involved. It is simply a question of whether these defendants, guilty of more culpable negligence and ignorance of the law than is chargeable to relator's trustees, shall succeed in nullifying the provisions of the statute, and divesting relator of its title to its territory without due process of law.

Taylor v. People, 66 Ill. 822.

Relator never at any time during the seven years had a right to the writ herein prayed for until demand was made upon the county clerk to extend the taxes levied by it upon the disputed territory, therefore the Statute of Limitations did not commence to run, and relator's action will not be barred until the expiration five years from the date of its demand.

People v. Hyde Park, 6 West. Rep. 815, 117 Ill. 462.

The Statute of Limitations cannot be pleaded to any public right of a municipal corporation.

Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 88;

Logan County Supra. v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 157;

Lee v. Mount Station, 6 West. Rep. 329, 118 Ill. 304;

Oran v. People, 19 Ill. App. 174.

Mr. T. F. Tipton for appellees.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 17th of October, 1882, the village of possession and jurisdiction over it after a lapse of nearly a hundred years since the admission of that state into the Union.

The latter case also declares that the same principle as to the effect of long acquiescence in the possession of the territory and in the exercise of dominion and sovereignty over it is applicable as between nations.

So in Roane County v. Anderson County, 39 Tenn. 250, in a contest as to the boundary line between counties it was held that the fact that notwithstanding some difference of opinion between residents of the locality, one of the counties had for a half century claimed the disputed territory and exercised governmental jurisdiction up to the line claimed by it is entitled to great weight in favor of the claim.

In the same case a prior decision of the court is 16 L. R. A.

Colfax, by its president and board of trustees, attempted to pass an ordinance disconnecting certain territory, which had formerly been within its boundaries. The ordinance received a majority of the votes of the members present, but not a majority of the members elect, which was requisite under the statute. The ordinance, therefore, was never legally passed. It was, however, published, and recognized as valid by the officers of the village and the officers of the township in which the territory lay. The latter took charge of it; levied taxes upon it; worked the roads; built a bridge within it, costing $6,000, one half of which was paid for by the county; and from the time such disconnecting ordinance was published the territory so attempted to be disconnected was recognized and treated by both village and township as not being a part of the village, until the 5th day of August, 1889, when the president and board of trustees of the village passed an ordinance levying a tax upon the real and personal property within its limits for corporate purposes, and a demand was made upon appellee Maxton, who was county clerk, that he extend such taxes; and, upon his refusal to do so, a writ of mandamus issued, to compel him to extend such taxes. No defense was made by Maxton, but the commissioners of highways of the township, by leave of the court, became parties, and filed a demurrer to the petition, which being overruled, they answered, setting up the same facts recited in the petition, and also that relator caused said disconnecting ordinance to be printed in pamphlet form; that they, the said defendants, believing said ordinance to be valid, have each year since 1882 assessed road and bridge taxes on the lands described in the said ordinance; that they opened a public highway through the territory therein described, and worked the same, and expended large sums of money on the same; that they caused a bridge to be constructed, at a cost of $6,000, and procured county aid therefor to the extent of $3,000, and that no road tax was assessed against relator's inhabitants for the construction of said bridge, nor the opening of said highway; that the voters residing on said territory have not since 1882 exercised any rights in relator's government, nor has relator exercised any jurisdiction over said territory; and that relator was therefore estopped and barred by the lapse of time from claiming jurisdiction over said territory. The answer also denied that the appropriation ordinance upon which relator's petition for a writ recited to the effect that acquiescence of one county for about eighteen years in an unconstitutional statute reducing it below its constitutional area defeated the legal right of the county to claim the territory which was taken away.

The question of the estoppel of a city to deny the right of territory attached thereto to elect a member of the city board of education is raised in a Kansas case, which denies that long acquiescence in such election will estop the city from denying the right. Jay v. Emporia Board of Education, 46 Kan. 525.

Although this case involves the question of estoppel in respect to the assertion of a political right it is not as to the assertion by the city of its own governmental authority, but as to its denial of an asserted political right of a particular community.

B. A. R.

was based ever passed or became an ordinance. Relator then demurred to all of the answer except that part which denied that the appropriation ordinance was ever passed. The court overruled the demurrer. Relator then filed three pleas to the answer, as follows: "(1) that its board of trustees did not, on the 17th day of October, 1882, or at any other time, pass and adopt said disconnecting ordinance; (2) that its board of trustees did pass said appropriation ordinance; (3) that its village clerk, of his own wrong, and without authority of law, certified that said alleged disconnecting ordinance was properly passed, and of his own wrong, and without authority of law, filed a copy of said disconnecting ordinance in the office of the recorder and county clerk of said county, and that relator did not cause the said clerk to so certify to or so file said ordinance." Defendants demurred to third plea, which was overruled. Defendants then filed a motion for judgment on the issues joined, which the court sustained, and gave judgment to defendants for costs. The appellate court affirmed the judgment of the circuit court, holding that the village was estopped to deny the validity of said ordinance, under the decisions of this court; citing Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 25, and Lee v. Mound Station, 118 Ill. 304, 6 West. Rep. 329.

It is insisted by appellant here that the doctrine of estoppel in pais has no application to this case, for the reason that the village authorities are not shown to have done any affirmative act calculated to influence others to act on the faith of said invalid ordinance. Theirs, it is said, is mere non-action. The judgment of the circuit court, being rendered on the issues joined without evidence, must rest on the allegations of the answer, not denied by the pleas; but among such allegations is the averment that, after the attempted passage of the disconnecting ordinance, the village board caused it to be published, with its other ordinances, in pamphlet form. Here certainly was an affirmative act. Was it calculated to lead others to act upon the supposition that the ordinance was valid? Our statute provides that when city or village ordinances are printed in book or pamphlet form, purporting to be published by authority of the board of trustees or city council, such book or pamphlet shall be received as evidence of the passage and legal publication of such ordinances as of the dates mentioned in such book or pamphlet, in all courts and places without further proof. Section 4, chap. 24, Rev. Stat. Certainly respondents and all others had a right to act on that which relators had made legal evidence of the passage of the ordinance which they now seek to treat as invalid. We entertain no doubt that on the authorities cited by the appellate court, as well as upon reason and justice, the village is estopped from claiming any power over the territory in question as being within its limits.

The judgment of the Appellate Court will therefore be affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

REAPPLICATION OF THE BOARD OF STREET OPENING AND IMPROVEMENT of the City of New York to Acquire Title to Lands for a Public Park on the Grounds known as St. John's Cemetery.

(.....N. Y.)

A private cemetery belonging to a religious corporation may be taken in condemnation proceedings for a public park under Laws 1887, chap. 320, giving power to condemn "any and all lands" within a district which includes the cemetery.

(May 24, 1892.)

A PPEAL by the rector, churchwardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for New York County appointing Commissioners to assess damages for the appropriation of St. John's Cemetery for a public park. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.
Mr. S. P. Nash, with Mr. J. McL. Nash, for appellants:

The taking of the premises for a public park or pleasure ground requires the taking

NOTE.—For note on the right to take by eminent domain property already devoted to public use, see Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co. (Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 785.
16 L. R. A.

and removal of the human remains there interred.

But property which is not required for a proposed public use cannot be taken by the power of eminent domain.

Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 148, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Embury v. Connor, 8 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325. See also Re South Beach R. Co. 119 N. Y. 141.

The suggestion that the city authorities can proceed to exercise the power of removal overlooks the rule that proceedings for the condemnation of property for public use are strictissimi juris.

Re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 272, 108 N. Y. 875; Re Poughkeepsie Bridge Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 283, 108 N. Y. 453.

Human remains in a cemetery do not form part of the land. They are considered as belonging in a most real sense to the relatives of the deceased, and not to the owner of the soil. They do not, like a house built upon the land, or fixtures in the house, become part of the land.

Hunter v. Sandy Hill Trustees, 6 Hill, 407; Windt v. German Ref. Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 471, 7 L. ed. 1175.

Courts of equity will restrain the disturbance of burial places.

Beatty v. Kurtz, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 566, 7 L. ed. 521; Pierce v. Swan Pt. Cemetery & M. Proprs. 10 R. I. 237; Thompson v. Hickey, 8 Abb. N. C. 159; Schroder v. Wanzor, 36 Hun, 423; Mitchell v. Thorne, 57 Hun, 405.

This court has held in several cases, considered in Re New York, L. & W. R. Co., 99 N. Y. 12, that under the general powers conferred to acquire any and all lands, "there is necessarily excepted property already held upon a public trust by the authority and under the ward and control of the state."

There are other cases in which general powers given by legislative Acts have been limited by construction.

Osgnell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co. 4 Cent. Rep. 225, 108 N. Y. 10; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 817, 27 L. ed. 789; Suburban R. Transit Co. v. New York, 128 N. Y. 510.

The burial of the dead is a matter affecting the public welfare, and grounds may be taken for public cemeteries under the power of eminent domain as being taken for a public use.

Mills, Em. Dom., § 19.

Parks for purposes of pleasure and recreation are certainly not public purposes of a higher character than those which are intended to secure the repose of the dead.

Evergreen Cemetery Assn. v. New Haven, 43 Conn. 234, 21 Am. Rep. 648; Hyde Park v. Oak Wood Cemetery Assn. 6 West. Rep. 784, 119 Ill. 141; Wood v. Macon & B. R. Co. 68 Ga. 539; Mills, Em. Dom., § 19; Balch v. Essex County Comrs. 103 Mass. 106.

Unless expressly authorized by law, the disturbance of graves and the removal of human remains is a criminal offense.

1 Russell, Crimes, 629; Rez v. Lynn, 2 T. R. 733; Reg v. Sharpe, Deane & B. 160; Com. v. Cooley, 10 Pick. 87.

Messrs. William H. Clark, David J. Dean, and John P. Dunn, for respondents:

Cemeteries or burial places are not excepted from the general rule that private property may be taken for public use on payment of just compensation.

Mills, Em. Dom., § 19; Lewis, Em. Dom., § 262; Schoonmaker v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church of Kingston, 5 How. Pr. 269.

The cemetery in question is the private property of the rector, etc., of the Trinity Church, and the use thereof, as a cemetery, when it was so used, cannot be considered to have been a public use.

Re Deansville Cemetery Assn. 66 N. Y. 569, 23 Am. Rep. 86.

Counsel for appellants would, by construction, affix a limitation upon the power conferred by the statute so as to exempt cemeteries.

Such an addition to the statutory provisions is not within the province of the court.

McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 601; People v. Woodruff, 82 N. Y. 364; Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co. 49 N. Y. 282; Benton v. Wickwire, 64 N. Y. 228; Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Re Beekman Street, 4 Bradt. 608.

The authority to condemn a cemetery for a public park necessarily implies authority to make a proper provision for the removal of bodies therefrom.

Stief v. Hart, 1 N. Y. 30.

Consideration of hardship, or sentimental injury, will not avail to forbid the exercise of eminent domain.
16 L. R. A.

Re New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 77 N. Y. 268.

Earl, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Act, chapter 320, Laws 1887, provides that the board of street openings and improvements of the city of New York "is authorized and empowered to select, locate, and lay out such and so many public parks in the city of New York south of 155th street as the board may from time to time determine;" and it confers upon the board power to acquire for park purposes, by condemnation proceedings under the statute, "any and all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which said board shall deem necessary to be surveyed, used, or converted for the laying out, surveying, and monumenting of any parks so selected as aforesaid." The board instituted this proceeding under the Act to acquire for park purposes the title to land below 155th street, known as "St. John's Cemetery," which belonged to a religious corporation in the city of New York commonly called "Trinity Church." It was established as a cemetery as early as 1801, and was used for that purpose until 1839, during which time about 10,000 human bodies had been buried therein. In 1839 an ordinance was passed by the city of New York forbidding interments south of Eighty-Sixth street, and since that time no interments have been made in the cemetery, but Trinity Church has preserved and kept it in order, and prevented any disturbance thereof. It is contended on behalf of Trinity Church that, under the general authority given by the Statute of 1887, this land which had been devoted to cemetery purposes could not be taken for a park. The authority conferred upon the board by the Act is broad and general. It is authorized to take for park purposes any land south of 155th street. It is undoubtedly true that this general language would not be sufficient to authorize it to take land which had been previously taken for and was then devoted to a public purpose. Re New York, L. & W. R. Co., 99 N. Y. 12, Suburban R. Transit Co. v. New York, 128 N. Y. 510. But this was not a public cemetery, and, so far as appears in this record had never been devoted to a public use. The public general never had any right of burial therein. No burials therein could be made except by permits given by Trinity Church, and all the interments therein had been made by its authority. The cemetery land was therefore devoted to a private and not to a public use. Re Deansville Cemetery Assn. 66 N. Y. 569, 23 Am. Rep. 86. The fact that lands have previously been devoted to cemetery purposes does not place them beyond the reach of the power of eminent domain. That is an absolute, transcendent power, belonging to the sovereign, which can be exercised for the public welfare whenever the sovereign authority shall determine that a necessity for its exercise exists. By its exercise the homes and dwellings of the living and the resting places of the dead may be alike condemned. It seems always to have been recognized in the laws of this state that under the general laws streets and highways could be laid out through cemeteries, in the absence of special limitation or prohibition. So it is provided in section 10, chap. 183, Laws 1847, entitled "An Act Authorizing the Incorporation of Rural Cemetery Associations," that "no street, road, avenue, or thoroughfare shall be laid through such cemetery, or any part of the lands held by such association for the purposes aforesaid, without the consent of the trustees of such association, except by special permission of the Legislature of the state." The Act, chapter 273, Laws 1866, authorizing the incorporation of associations to erect monuments to perpetuate the memory of soldiers who fell in defense of the Union, contains a similar provision. The Act, chapter 843, Laws 1868, provides that no private or public road shall be laid out or constructed upon or through any graveyard or burying ground in this state, unless the remains therein contained are first carefully removed, and properly reinterred in some other burying ground at the expense of the person desiring such road. The Act, chapter 203, Laws 1878, provides for the incorporation of pipe-line companies, and empowers them to take land by condemnation proceedings; and in section 34 it is provided that "no company formed under the provisions of this Act shall locate or construct any line of pipe or pipe line through or under any building, dooryard, lawn, garden or orchard, except by the consent of the owner thereof in writing, duly acknowledged before some officer authorized to take acknowledgment of deeds, and no pipe line shall be constructed through any cemetery or burial ground." It is the necessary implication that, but for the express prohibition contained in these statutes under the general provisions of law authorizing the construction of streets, highways, and pipe lines cemetery lands would not be exempt from invasion.

We have not overlooked the cases in which the general language of statutes has been limited and curtailed of its literal import, so as not to give the statutes effect beyond the intent of the law-makers. But here we can find no sure ground for curtailing the scope of the statute which we have to construe. We certainly cannot be sure that the law-makers, if they had known of this cemetery, disused for burials for fifty years, and never more to be used for that purpose, located in the midst of a dense and teeming population, would have preferred that it should remain appropriated for the resting place of the long since dead rather than that it should be devoted to use for the comfort, welfare, and health of the living. We cannot say that the taking of such a cemetery for such use is such an unreasonable, unnatural, impolitic, or unjust thing that we ought to hold that the general language of the statute does not authorize it to be done. We have examined the authorities to which our attention has been called by the learned counsel for Trinity Church, and none of them in the least degree sustain the contention that lands devoted to private cemeteries owned by private individuals, or a private corporation, cannot be condemned under the general language authorizing their condemnation for public use. On the contrary, the following authorities give strong sanction to the claim that such lands can be taken under general legislative authority for a public use, unless specially protected by statute: Wood v. Macon & B. R. Co. 68 Ga. 589; Re Opening of Twenty-Second Street, 102 Pa. 108; Re Egypt Street, 2 Grant, Cas. 455; Re Beekman Street, 4 Bradf. 503; Schoonmaker v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church, 5 How. Pr. 269; Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Windt v. German Ref. Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 471, 7 L. ed. 1175.

What are the limits of the doctrine contended for on behalf of Trinity Church? If a cemetery has for a century been disused as a place of burial, can it not, if the welfare of the public require it, be taken for public use? Countless millions of the human race have been interred in the earth, and must their remains be inviolably left where they are found so long as they can be distinguished from the earth which contains them? There is no law which prohibits the removal of human remains from a cemetery for lawful purpose and placing them elsewhere. On the contrary, the law regulates their removal in certain cases. Laws 1878, chap. 349; Laws 1847, chap. 183, § 11, as amended by chapter 566, Laws 1880. The remains of the dead in this cemetery can be removed without violating any law, and certainly without violating the law (Penal Code, § 311) against body stealing. Trinity Church, having given permits for burials in this cemetery without granting any interest in the lots in which the burials are made, could at any time remove the remains of the dead, and place them in a suitable manner in some other cemetery. No one has acquired any right from it that their remains shall forever remain there. It could not remove them and leave them exposed in the street or elsewhere. Such an act would shock public sentiment, and could probably be restrained by action in the name of surviving relatives. But that it could decently remove them, and place them in some other proper place, cannot be doubted. As said by the learned vice-chancellor in Windt v. German Ref. Church, supra, "the only protection afforded to the remains of the dead interred in a cemetery of this description is by the public laws prohibiting their removal, except on the prescribed terms, and in a still stronger public opinion. Probably these furnish all the protection which is consistent with the exigencies of a large city, the population of which increases with marvelous rapidity, and whose wants leave but little room for the remains of the dead, in the dense and crowded haunts and thoroughfare of the living." By this proceeding the city of New York will acquire all the title of Trinity Church, and it will thus be clothed as owner of the land with all the rights Trinity Church had; and thus it will and must find some way to dispose of the remains in a manner that will not shock the refined sensibilities or the pious sentiments of the living. It is not needful, however, to determine now what the precise duties and obligations of the city will be in reference to these remains. It is enough now to determine that there is no obstacle in the way of the condemnation of the title to the fee of the land in this cemetery.

The order should therefore be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel. Locke W. WINCHESTER, Treasurer of the National Express Co., Resp't., Michael COLEMAN et al., Appts.

(.....N. Y.)

A joint-stock company created solely by agreement of the members and in which their individual rights and liabilities are not merged as in the case of a corporation is not taxable on its capital as a "stock corporation."

(May 24, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the Special Term for New York County vacating an assessment of taxes upon the capital stock of the National Express Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George S. Coleman, with Mr. William H. Clark, for appellants:

A corporation is known by its attributes. If shown to possess the essential characteristics of a corporation, an associated body must be deemed in law to be a corporation, whether brought into being by a special Act of the Legislature or by compliance with the provisions of general law; or acquiring its powers by accepting from the Legislature the grant of corporate privileges. The only requirement is that corporate character must in some manner be derived from the supreme power of the state.

Thomas v. Dakin, 23 Wend. 9; Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. 103; People v. Niagara County Suprs. 4 Hill, 20, affirmed, 7 Hill, 504.

Every artificial body must act through officers or agents. And the individual shareholders have no more control, as individuals, of the property and affairs of the National Express Company than the stockholders of a railroad corporation have of the business of their company. In either case the individuality of the members is merged in the artificial being. But in both cases, in spite of legal fiction, the individual shareholders are, in reality, the corporation.

People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 9 L. R. A. 38, 121 N. Y. 582.

NOTE.—The able discussion in the above opinion and briefs of counsel of the fundamental characteristics of joint-stock associations and corporations, and the decision that they are still distinct in character, is of great interest in view of the statutory recognition and regulation of joint-stock com-

The National Express Company possesses all the essential features of a corporation as the word is used in the Constitution and statutes of New York. It is, therefore, a corporation.

People v. Wemple, 6 L. R. A. 308, 52 Hun, 434, 117 N. Y. 186.

Mr. James C. Carter, for respondent:

The method of inquiring whether the company alleged to be a corporation has its capital represented by transferable shares of stock or governs its actions through by-laws, or can sue and be sued in a collective name, or use a common seal, or buy and sell property in a collective name, which are the common modes of corporate action, for the purpose of determining corporate existence, is fallacious.

They can provide by contract that the death or bankruptcy of a member, or an assignment of his share, shall not work a dissolution, and thus provide for a representation of the capital by transferable shares.

Story, Partn. § 319a; Tyrrell v. Washburn, 6 Allen, 466; Skilman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198, 83 Am. Dec. 96; Lindley, Partn., Ewell's ed. 1093, 1094; Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. 103.

The just definition of a corporation aggregate is an artificial person created by the sovereign from natural persons, and which artificial person the natural persons of which it is composed become merged and nonexistent.

Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 639; People v. Watertown, 1 Hill, 616; Niagara County Suprs. v. People, 7 Hill, 504; Gifford v. Livingston, 2 Denio, 380; Warner v. Beers, supra.

The weight of authority is decisively in favor of the view that companies like the National Express Company are not corporate bodies.

Bell v. Streeter, 1 N. Y. Transcript, N. S. Jan. 26, 1872, p. 63; Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 566, 19 L. ed. 1029; Witherhead v. Allen, 8 Keyes, 564; McGuffin v. Dinsmore, 4 Abb. N. C. 241; New York Marble Iron Works v. Smith, 4 Duer, 862; Whitman v. Hubbard, 30 Fed. Rep. 81; Taft v. Ward, 106 Mass. 518; Bodwell v. Eastman, Id. 525; Taft v. Ward, 111 Mass. 518; Gott v. Dinamore, Id. 45; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Pearson, 128 Mass. 445; Frost v. Walker, 60 Me. 468; Bacon v. Dinsmore, 42 How. Pr. 377.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator was taxed upon its capital, on the ground that it had become a corporation, within the meaning of the provision of the Revised Statutes which enacts that "all moneyed or stock corporations deriving an income or profit from their capital, or otherwise, shall be liable to taxation on their capital in the manner hereinafter prescribed." 1 Rev. Stat. pt. 1 chap. 18, title 4, § 1. The company was formed as a joint-stock company or association, in 1853, by a written agreement of eight individuals with each other, the whole force and effect panies by which they have been treated in large measure like corporations.

See, in reference to the enlarged statutory powers and liabilities of joint-stock companies, People v. Wemple, 6 L. R. A. 308, 117 N. Y. 186.

of which, in constituting and creating the organization, rested upon the common-law rights of the individuals, and their power to contract with each other. The relation they assumed was wholly the product of their mutual agreement, and dependent in no respect upon the grant or authority of the state. It was entered into under no statutory license or permission, neither accepting nor designed to accept any franchise from the sovereign, but founded wholly upon the individual rights of the associates to join their capital and enterprise in a relation similar to that of a partnership. A few years earlier the Legislature had explicitly recognized the existence and validity of such organizations, founded upon contract, and evolved from the common-law rights of the citizens. Laws 1849, chap. 258. That Act provided that any joint-stock company or association which consisted of seven or more members might sue or be sued in the name of its president or treasurer, and with the same force and effect, so far as the joint property and rights were concerned, as if the suit should be prosecuted in the names of the associates; but the Act explicitly disclaimed any purpose of converting the joint-stock associations recognized as existing into corporations by a section prohibiting any such construction. Section 5. In 1851 the Act was amended in its form and application, but in no respect material to the present inquiry. There is no doubt, therefore, that, when the company was formed and went into operation, the law recognized a distinction and substantial difference between joint-stock companies and corporations, and never confused one with the other; and that the existing statute which taxed the capital of corporations had no reference to or operation upon joint-stock companies or associations. But two things have since occurred. The Legislature, while steadily preserving the distinction of names, has, with equal persistence, confused the things, by obliterating substantial and characteristic marks of difference; until it is now claimed that the joint-stock associations have grown into and become corporations by force of the continued bestowal upon them of corporate attributes. It is said, and very probably correctly said, that the Legislature may create a corporation without explicitly declaring it to be such, by the bestowal of a corporate franchise or corporate attributes, and the cases of banking associations are referred to as instances of actual occurrence. Thomas v. Dakin, 23 Wend. 9; Bank of Watertown v. Watertown, 25 Wend. 686; People v. Niagara County Suprs. 4 Hill, 20. It is added that such result may happen even without the legislative intent, and because the gift of corporate powers and attributes is tantamount to a corporate creation. It is then asserted that a series of statutes, beginning with the Act of 1849, has ended in the gift to joint-stock associations of every essential attribute possessed by and characteristic of corporations (Laws 1853, chap. 58; Laws 1854, chap. 245; Laws 1867, chap. 289); that the lines of distinction between the two, however far apart in the beginning, have steadily converged, until they have melted into each other and become identical; that every distinguishing mark and characteristic has been obliterated; and no reason remains why joint-stock associations should not be, in all respects, treated and regarded as corporations. Some of this contention is true. The case of People v. Wemple, 117 N. Y. 77, 6 L. R. A. 303, 52 Hun, 434, shows very forcibly how almost the full measure of corporate attributes has, by legislative enactment, been bestowed upon joint-stock associations, until the difference, if there be one, is obscure, elusive, and difficult to see and describe. And yet the truth remains that all along the line of legislation the distinctive names have been retained as indicative and representative of a difference in the organizations themselves. As recently as the Acts of 1880 and 1881, which formed the subject of consideration in the Wemple Case, the Legislature, dealing with the subject of taxation, and desiring to tax business and franchises, imposed the liability upon "every corporation, joint-stock company, or association whatever, now or hereafter incorporated or organized under any law of this state." It is significant that the words "or organized" were inserted by amendment, and evidently for the understood reason that joint-stock companies could not properly be said to be "incorporated", but might be correctly described as "organized" under the laws of the state. This persistent distinction in the language of the statutes I should not be inclined to disregard or treat as of no practical consequence, when seeking to arrive at the true intent and proper construction of the statute, even if I were unable to discover any practical or substantial difference between the two classes of organizations upon which it could rest or out of which it grew; for the distinction so sedulously and persistently observed would strongly indicate the legislative intent, and so the correct construction.

But I think there was an original and inherent difference between the corporate and joint-stock companies, known to our law, which legislation has somewhat obscured, but has not destroyed, and that difference is the one pointed out by the learned counsel for the respondent, and which impresses me as logical, and well supported by authority. It is that the creation of the corporation merges in the artificial body and drowns in it the individual rights and liabilities of the members, while the organization of a joint-stock company leaves the individual rights and liabilities unimpaired and in full force. The idea was expressed in Superior v. Niagara County v. People, 7 Hill, 512, and in Gifford v. Livingston, 2 Denio, 880, by the statement that the corporators lost their individuality, and merged their individual characters into one artificial existence; and upon these authorities a corporation is defined, on behalf of the respondents, to be "an artificial person created by the sovereign from natural persons, and in which artificial person the natural persons of which it is composed become merged and nonexistent." I am conscious that legal definitions invite and provoke criticism, because the instances are rare in which they prove to be perfectly accurate; and yet this one offered to us may be accepted, if it successfully bears some sufficient test. In putting it on trial, we may take the nature of the individual liability of the corporators on the one hand, and of the associates on the other, for the debts contracted by their respective organizations, as a sufficient test of the difference between them, and contrast their nature and character. It is an essential and inherent characteristic of a corporation that it alone is primarily liable for its debts, because it alone contracts them, except as that natural and necessary consequence of its creation is modified in the act of its creation by some explicit command of the statute which either imposes an express liability upon the corporators in the nature of a penalty or affirmatively retains and preserves what would have been the common-law liability of the members from the destruction involved in the corporate creation. In other words, the individual liability of the members, as it would have existed at common-law, is lost by their creation into a corporation, and exists thereafter only by force of the statute, upon some new and modifying conditions, to some partial or changed extent, and so far preventing by the intervention of an express command the total destruction of individual liabilities which otherwise would flow from the inherent effect of the corporate creation. The penalties sometimes imposed are of course new statutory liabilities which never, at common-law, rested upon the individual members. The retained liability occasionally established is in the nature and a parcel of such original liability, as we had occasion to show in Rogers v. Decker, 181 N. Y. 490, but is retained by force of the express command of the statute, and in that manner saved from the destruction which otherwise would follow the simple creation of the corporation. Ordinarily these individual liabilities exist upon other than common-law conditions, and make the corporators rather sureties or guarantors of the corporation than original debtors, since in general their liability arises after the usual remedies against the corporation have been exhausted. But, where that is not so, the invariable truth is that the creation of the corporation necessarily destroys the common-law liability of the individual members for its debts, and requires at the hands of the creating power an affirmative imposition of new personal liabilities, or a specific retention of old ones from the destruction which would otherwise follow. Exactly the opposite is true of joint-stock companies. Their formation destroys no part or portion of their common-law liability for the debts contracted. Those debts are their debts, for which they must answer. Permission to sue their president or treasurer is only a convenient mode of enforcing that liability, but in no manner creates or saves it. The Statute of 1858 did interfere with it. That Act required, in the first instance, a suit against the president or treasurer, and so a preliminary exhaustion of the joint property. But that Act was modal, and determined the procedure. It suspended the common-law right, but recognized its existence.

We so held in Witherhead v. Allen, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 628, and at the same time said that the associations were not corporations, but mere partnership concerns. Even that mode of procedure has been modified by the Code, (§§ 1922, 1923,) so that the creditor, at his option, may sue the associates without first bringing his action against the president or treasurer. These last and quite recent enactments show that the legislative intent is still to preserve and not destroy the original difference between the two classes of organizations; to maintain in full force the common-law liability of associates, and not to substitute for it that of corporators; and, preserving in continued operation that normal and distinctive difference, to evince a plain purpose not to merge the two organizations in one, or destroy the boundaries which separate them. That intent, once clearly ascertained, determines the construction to be adopted, and may be the only reliable test in view of the power of the state to clothe one organization with all the attributes of the other. The drift of legislation has been to lessen and obscure the original and characteristic difference. On the one hand, corporations have been created with positive provisions retaining more or less the individual liability of the members, and on the other, the joint-stock companies have been clothed with most of the corporate attributes; but enough of the original difference remains to show that our legislation not only carefully preserves the distinction of names, but sufficient, also, of the original difference of character and quality to disclose a clear intent not to merge the two. We may thus see upon what the legislative intent to preserve them as separate and distinct is founded, and what distinguishing characteristic remain. The formation of the one involves the merging and destruction of the common-law liability of the members for the debts, and requires the substitution of a new, or retention of the old, liability by an affirmative enactment which avoids the inherent effect of the corporate creation; in the other the common-law liability remains unchanged and unimpaired, and needing no statutory intervention to preserve or restore it. The debt of the corporation is its debt, and not that of its members; the debt of the joint-stock company is the debt of the associates, however enforced. The creation of the corporation merges and drowns the liability of its corporators; the creation of the stock company leaves unharmed and unchanged the liability of the associates. The one derives its existence from the contract of individuals; the other, from the sovereignty of the state. The two are alike, but not the same. More or less they crowd upon and overlap each other, but without losing their identity; and so, while we cannot say that the joint-stock company is a corporation, we can say, as we did say, in Van Aernam v. Bleistein, 102 N. Y. 360, 3 Cent. Rep. 685, that a joint-stock company is a partnership, with some of the powers of a corporation.

Beyond that we do not think it is our duty to go.

The order should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Emma RYDER, by Next Friend, Appt.,

Frank HORSTING et al.

(.....Ind.....)

Lack of notice to the owner of premises of proceedings to lay out a highway over them is not fatal to jurisdiction if a tenant or other occupant was made a party duly notified.

(January 5, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Knox County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin them from opening a public highway through plaintiff's lands. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. C. Johnson for appellant.

Messrs. W. A. Cullop and C. B. Kessinger, for appellees:

The complaint does not say a word about whether the occupant of the land was named in the petition and notice or not.

If he was that was all that was necessary, and notice to him, and his name mentioned in the petition was all the law required.

Porter v. Stout, 78 Ind. 8.

Every presumption is to be indulged in favor of the proceedings of the board.

Crossey v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 835, 87 Am. Dec. 829.

Hence the board must have found the occupant of the said land was named in the petition and he was notified by the notice thereof given.

It must be presumed in this proceeding that all jurisdictional steps were taken by the board before the order was made to open the highway.

Binford v. Miner, 101 Ind. 147; Railsback v. Walke, 81 Ind. 409; Graves v. Duckwall, 1 West. Rep. 480, 108 Ind. 560.

NOTE.—Sufficiency of notice to occupant only of condemnation proceedings.

The Indiana statute construed in the principal case provides that the petition for the location of a highway in one county only must set forth "the names of the owners, occupants, or agents of the land through which the same may pass," Rev. Stat. 1888, § 5015. The construction there adopted is justifiable, especially under grammatical rules. The rights of land-owners, however, would be better secured by a construction which supplied "and" instead of "or" before "occupants," a construction justified by reason and by the rules of statutory construction. This view is strengthened by the wording of the corresponding section (Ind. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 5001) relating to the location of highways running into more than one county which provides that in such cases the petition shall set forth "the names of the owners and occupants or agents of the lands through which the same may pass."

16 L. R. A.

The subject-matter herein was one the jurisdiction whereof is given by statute to boards of commissioners of the various counties in the state, and in all such cases jurisdiction is presumed where they act.

Bloomfield R. Co. v. Burrese, 82 Ind. 88; Stout v. Woods, 79 Ind. 108.

And in such cases where jurisdiction has been taken of a subject-matter and in order to take such jurisdiction it was necessary for it to decide and ascertain facts essential to its jurisdiction its judgment thereon cannot be collaterally attacked.

Ricketts v. Spraker, 77 Ind. 371; Muncey v. Joest, 74 Ind. 409; Stoddard v. Johnson, 75 Ind. 20; Argo v. Barthand, 80 Ind. 68.

The law only requires notice to be given by publication or posting of notices. And it is immaterial whether appellant had actual notice or not.

McIntyre v. Marine, 98 Ind. 193; McDonald v. Payne, 14 West. Rep. 102, 114 Ind. 359; Adams v. Harrington, 13 West. Rep. 299, 114 Ind. 66; Erwin v. Fulk, 94 Ind. 285.

In this case the board assumed jurisdiction of the petition and notice. In order to do so it had to impliedly hold at least that it had jurisdiction. In such case its decision cannot be attacked as is here sought in a collateral proceeding.

Adams v. Harrington, Muncey v. Joest, Stoddard v. Johnson, and Ricketts v. Spraker, supra.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by the appellant against the appellees for an injunction.

The complaint shows that the appellant was the owner of a tract of inclosed land in Knox county, and a resident and tax payer thereof. That at the March term of the commissioners' court of said county, preceding the filing of her complaint, a petition was filed in said court for the opening of a

The construction of section 5015 here suggested would require both owners and occupants or their agents to be made parties, as they are expressly required to be by section 5001. That they should be parties seems obvious, since they have different interests in the land to be cut off, unless the occupant is also owner.

The Supreme Court of Vermont has decided the same question differently than the principal case, holding that under a statute providing for notice to the "occupants or owners of the land" the interest of the owner was not divested by proceedings of which only the occupant was notified.

Notice to one who without connection with the owner, went upon the land for the purpose of receiving notice in collusion with the petitioner in the condemnation proceeding confers no jurisdiction as to the owner. Dunlap v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. 46 Mich. 190 J. G. G.

highway through her land. That in the petition she was not named or set forth as one of the owners of said real estate, nor was the name of her authorized agent or guardian mentioned therein, nor was the real estate described as the property of persons unknown to the petitioners. That no notice of the filing of the petition was ever given to her, her agent or guardian, and that neither she nor her agent or guardian had notice that the petition had been filed or was for hearing in said court; that at said term of the commissioner's court, an order was made by the court, directing the opening of the highway, that the order did not set out or contain the name of the plaintiff, her agent or guardian, or in any way intimate that she was connected with, or interested in the same; that she did not appear in such proceedings, either in person or by her guardian, agent or attorney; that the defendants, one of whom is the township trustee and the other the road supervisor, are proceeding under said order to tear down her fences and expose said lands to depredation, to her damage in the sum of five hundred dollars. Wherefore she asks that they be enjoined.

A demurrer was sustained to this complaint and final judgment rendered against her for costs. The sufficiency of this complaint is the only question before us.

This being a collateral attack upon an order of the commissioner's court, made in a matter presumptively within their jurisdiction, must fail unless the proceedings are so defective as to be void.

McDonald v. Payne, 114 Ind. 359, 14 West. Rep. 103.

The commissioner's court, having ordered the opening of the highway, necessarily passed upon the facts necessary to acquire jurisdiction.

In Elliott on Roads and Streets, 219, it is said: "The judgment of an inferior court upon jurisdictional facts is generally regarded as conclusive, and where there is a judgment necessarily affirming that jurisdiction exists, and this judgment could not have been pronounced without passing upon jurisdictional facts it will be conclusive as against all collateral attacks." Rossier v. Grimmer (Ind.) at this term; Lamb v. Cain (Ind.) 14 L. R. A. 518. Without notice there could be no jurisdiction. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 364.

It may now be considered settled that in a petition for the location of a highway the names of the owners, occupants, or agents must be set forth. Hays v. Campbell, 17 Ind. 430; Hughes v. Sellers, 84 Ind. 337; Wild v. Deig, 48 Ind. 455, 18 Am. Rep. 399; Meyers v. Brown, 55 Ind. 596; Porter v. 16 L. R. A.

Stout, 78 Ind. 3; McIntyre v. Marine, 93 Ind. 193.

In Porter v. Stout, 78 Ind. 3, the statute, now sections 5001, 5015, was construed, and it was held that the provisions of the Act were complied with, by making either the owner, the agent, or the occupant a party. In that case it is said: "The language plainly indicates this, for, in legal effect, it is precisely the same as if the words were 'shall set forth the names of the owners, or the names of the occupants, or the names of the agents.' Unless we do violence to the language used, we must hold that the statute requires that one of the three persons designated, the owner, the occupant, or the agent shall be named, but that it does not require that the owner of, the occupant of, and the agent for the same land shall all be named in the petition."

This case must be decisive of the one before us, for with all the care taken to charge that neither the appellant, her agent or guardian, nor any owner of the property unknown to the petitioners were named in the petition, or that either of them had notice or knowledge of the proceedings, no allegation whatever concerning the "occupant" is found in the complaint. The omission seems significant.

We are to presume in favor of the jurisdiction of the commissioners' court and the regularity of their proceedings, where a collateral attack is made upon the same. It may well be, that every statement in the complaint is true, and yet the jurisdiction of the court be complete to order the opening of the highway through the lands of the appellant. In aid of the presumption in favor of the action of the commissioners court we must, upon a collateral attack, infer that the lands of the appellant were occupied by some one as tenant, or otherwise, and that such tenant was made a party to the proceedings and duly notified. Had the complaint disclosed the fact that at the time the proceedings in the commissioners' court were instituted, the appellant was the sole occupant of the land, or that the occupant, if there was such, was not made a party, a different question would be presented. In Kinney's Case, 5 Har. (Del.) 18, it was held, that in a petition for a public road, a law requiring a notice to the owner or holder of the land was complied with by serving a notice on any person occupying or in possession of the land, placed there by the owner, and such occupant need not necessarily be a tenant.

The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Mary T. FAY, Resp't.,
v.

PACIFIC IMPROVEMENT CO., Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The fact that a hotel stands in inclosed grounds the gates of which are closed at night, does not prevent it from being a public inn when the patronage of the public generally is solicited.
2. One does not lose the character of guest at a hotel merely by inquiring the price of room and board before being assigned to a room where no agreement is made as to the time of staying or any reduction made from the price charged to transient guests.
3. The burning of a hotel cannot be attributed to an irresistible superhuman cause where the origin of the fire is not shown except that it broke out in a room containing nothing but batteries which supplied the place with electricity.
4. Jewelry daily worn by a woman who is a guest of the hotel need not be deposited with the innkeeper in order to make him liable for its loss by fire.

(June 23, 1891.)*

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Monterey County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the value of certain personal property which plaintiff lost in consequence of the burning of defendant's hotel while she was a guest therein. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Geil & Morehouse for appellant.

Mr. D. M. Delmas for respondent.

De Haven, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for damages occasioned by the loss of her jewelry, wearing apparel, and other articles of personal property consumed by fire at the burning of the Hotel Del Monte, April 1, 1887, of which the defendant was at that time the proprietor: The court below found the Hotel Del Monte was at the date named a public inn, and that plaintiff was a guest therein. On this appeal the defendant claims that the evidence does not sustain these findings; and also that the burning of the hotel was an irresistible superhuman cause for which it is not liable, and that it is not, in any event, liable for plaintiff's diamonds and other jewelry, because not deposited in defendant's safe.

1. An inn is a house which is held out to the public as a place where all transient persons who come will be received and entertained as guests for compensation,—an hotel. In Wintermute v. Clarke, 5 Sandf. 247, an "inn" is defined as a public house of entertainment for all who choose to visit it, and this definition was quoted with approval by this court in Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 596, 91 Am. Dec. 657. The fact that the house is open for the public, that those who patronize it come to it upon the invitation which is extended to the general public, and without any previous agreement for accommodation, or agreement as to the duration of their stay, marks the important distinction between an hotel or inn and a boarding-house. This difference is thus stated in Schouler on Bailments: "An inn is a house where the keeper holds himself out as ready to receive all who may choose to resort thither and pay an adequate price for the entertainment, while the keeper of a boarding-house reserves the choice of comers and the terms of accommodation, contracting specially with each customer, and most commonly arranging for long periods and a definite abode." Schouler, Bailm. p. 288. We think that the evidence in this case is full and complete to the point that the Hotel Del Monte was a public inn. It not only had a name indicating its character as such, but it was also shown that it was open to all persons who have a right to demand entertainment at a public house; that it solicited public patronage by advertising, and in the distribution of its business cards, and kept a public register in which its guests entered their names upon arrival, and before they were assigned rooms; that the hotel, at its own expense, ran a coach to the railroad station for the purpose of conveying its patrons to and from the hotel; that it had its manager, clerks, waiters, and in its interior management all the ordinary arrangements and appearances of an hotel, and the prices charged were for board and lodging. These facts were certainly sufficient to justify the court in finding, as it did, that the appellant was an innkeeper. Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly, 200. Nor was the force of this evidence in any wise modified by the fact that the hotel was not immediately upon a highway, or that the grounds upon which it stood were inclosed, and the gates closed at night. The location of the hotel, the extent of the grounds surrounding it, and the manner in which these grounds were improved, and reserved for the exclusive use and enjoyment of those who patronized it, doubtless made the hotel more attractive to those who chose to make a transient resort of it, but did not convert it into a mere boarding-house. An hotel is none the less one because in some respects it may be conducted differently or have more attractions than other public hotels, so long as it is held out to the public as a place for the entertainment of all transient persons who may have occasion to patronize it. "Modes of entertainment alter with the fashion of the age, and to preserve a clear definition is not easy. It is not wayfarers alone, or travelers from a distance, that at the present day give character to an inn; the point being

*A rehearing was subsequently granted and on February 4, 1892, the court stated that it was satisfied with the conclusions set forth in the opinion given herewith. [Rep.]

NOTE.—For notes on relation of innkeeper and guest, see Cookery v. Nagle (Ga.) 6 L. R. A. 452, and Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe (Neb.) 6 L. R. A. 809; Glenn v. Jackson (Ala.) 12 L. R. A. 382.

For notes on innkeepers' liabilities, see same cases, also Shults v. Wall (Pa.) 8 L. R. A. 97.
16 L. R. A.

rather than people resort to the house habitually, no matter whence coming or whither going, as for transient lodging and entertainment." Schouler, Bailm. p. 249.

2. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was a guest, and not a boarder. The fact that upon her arrival, and before being assigned to her room she ascertained what she would have to pay for the room and board, is not sufficient of itself to show that she was not received as a guest. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 88 Cal. 597, 91 Am. Dec. 637; Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 112; Jailie v. Cardinal, 85 Wis. 118; Hall v. Pike, 100 Mass. 496; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 417. The Del Monte being a public hotel, in the absence of evidence showing that plaintiff went there as a boarder, the presumption would be that she went there as a guest. Hall v. Pike, supra. Not only does the evidence fail to overthrow this presumption, but the testimony of the plaintiff shows that she was there as a mere temporary sojourner, without any agreement as to the time she should stay, and with only the intention on her part of resting a week or two, and then proceeding to the east. She obtained no reduction of price in consideration of an agreement to remain a definite time, or as a boarder; nor was there anything said from which it could be inferred that there was any understanding between her and the defendant that she was to be received as a boarder, and not as a guest.

3. Under section 1859 of the Civil Code, an innkeeper is liable for the loss of personal property placed by his guests under his care, "unless occasioned by an irresistible superhuman cause, by a public enemy, by the negligence of the owner, or by the act of some one he brought into the inn." In this case the loss was occasioned by the burning of the hotel, and the origin of the fire is not shown further than that it broke out in one of the rooms in which there was nothing except the batteries which supplied the bells with electricity. Under this state of facts the defendant is liable. Hulett v. Swift, 88 N. Y. 571. A fire thus occurring cannot be considered an "irresistible superhuman cause," within the meaning of section 1859 of the Civil Code. The words "irresistible superhuman cause" are equivalent in meaning to the phrase "the act of God," and refer to those natural causes the effects of which cannot be prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care, and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ. 1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 174. A loss arising from an accidental fire is not caused by the act of God, unless the fire was started by lightning or some superhuman agency. Miller v. Steam Nav. Co. 10 N. Y. 431; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 285.

4. The court finds that the property lost was such as was needed for the present personal use of the plaintiff. We cannot say that the evidence does not support this finding. It certainly cannot be said that jewelry worn by a woman daily must, when not actually upon her person, be deposited with the innkeeper in order to make him responsible for its loss in the inn. If worn daily, it does not cease to be needed for present personal use, when its possessor lays it aside upon retiring for the night. Nor is it necessary, in order to render the innkeeper liable, that the property should have been delivered into his exclusive personal possession. "The guest may retain personal custody of his goods within the inn, as of his trunk and its contents, his wearing apparel and other articles in his room, and any jewelry or valuables carried or worn about his person, without discharging the innkeeper from responsibility." Jailie v. Cardinal, 85 Wis. 126. We have examined the other points made by appellant, but do not think they call for special discussion. The rule which makes an innkeeper liable for the value of the property of his guest in case of its loss by fire, may at first thought be deemed a harsh one; but the loss must fall somewhere; and section 1859 of the Civil Code provides upon whom it should properly fall, and the innkeeper's liability, in this respect, is one of the burdens pertaining to the business in which he is engaged, and in view of which it must be supposed that he regulates his charges.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: Sharpstein, J.; McFarland J.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (2d Div.).

GRATIOT, Recept.,
v.

MISSOURI PACIFIC R. CO., Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Failure of one approaching a railroad crossing to constantly look both ways for the approach of trains will not be pronounced negligence by the court.

NOTE.—We report the above case on account of the full and clear discussion by the court of the relative functions of the court and jury on the question of negligence. For exceptions to the general rule, on this subject, see note to Emry v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. (N. C.) 15 L. R. A. 332.
16 L. R. A.

2. Continuing to approach a railroad crossing under the mistaken belief, honestly conceived after investigation, that an engine seen 800 or 1,000 yards away is standing on the track engaged in switching, when it is in fact coming towards the crossing at a rapid rate, is not negligence as matter of law.

3. Whether or not due care requires one, who, after observation as to the safety of crossing a railroad track has received the impression that no trains are approaching the crossing, to test the accuracy of such impression by further observation, before acting upon it, is a question for the jury and not for the court.

4. To sustain the action of the trial court in overruling a demurrer to the evidence which was based on the contention that it showed contributory negligence, it is not necessary to decide that there was no such negligence.

5. Evidence of negligence in running the train is admissible under an allegation in the petition that plaintiff sustained injuries through the negligence of defendant's servants "while running, controlling, and managing, its locomotive engine and train of cars."

6. Running a train thirty to sixty miles an hour within the limits of a city whose ordinances forbid greater speed than six miles an hour, is such negligence as to render the company liable for injuries to a traveler attempting, with due care, to pass over a highway crossing.

7. Ten thousand one hundred seventy-five dollars damages is not so excessive as to cause a reversal on the ground of corruption, passion, or prejudice, when given to a doctor, sixty years old, who was injured at a railroad highway crossing by the company's negligence, where his horse and buggy were demolished, and he received permanent injuries such as a disfigured and partially paralyzed face, broken ribs, lameness, and constant pain which disabled him to some extent from practicing his profession, the income from which was $2,500 a year at the time of the accident.

On Rehearing.

8. The question of negligence must be left to the jury when the facts or the inferences to be drawn from them are in any degree doubtful.

9. An instruction that it is the duty of a person attempting to cross a railroad track to exercise the degree of care and prudence that an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the circumstances, is not erroneous although it fails to state what the man of ordinary prudence would do at such a time and place.

(May 19, 1891.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. Pike for appellant.

Messrs. Davis & Davis, A. R. Taylor and James P. Maginn for respondent.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court of the city of St. Louis against the defendant corporation for the sum of $10,175 for personal injuries. The petition charges three distinct acts of negligence as causes of the injuries: (1) That the injury occurred within the limits of the city of St. Louis, and that defendant's train that caused it was running at a rate of speed greater than six miles an hour, in violation of a city ordinance; (2) that defendant's agents in charge of the train at the time failed to ring the bell of the engine constantly, as required by the city ordinance; and (3) that defendant's negligently ran and managed the train. The answer contained a general denial and a plea of contributory negligence.

16 L. R. A.

1. It is urged with much earnestness and ability that the trial court committed error in overruling defendant's demurrer to the evidence. It is claimed that the evidence discloses contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff which precludes his recovery. There is no disagreement between counsel as to principles of the law of negligence and contributory negligence, but they disagree, and disagree radically, as to the application of these principles to the facts of this case. The only question touching the phase of the case under review, therefore, for us to determine, is whether, upon the admitted or indisputably proved facts, the court can, as a matter of law, declare that plaintiff has no case entitling him to recover. The facts are these: The injury occurred at Campbell's crossing, 150 or 200 yards west of Cheltenham, a station on defendants road, about five miles from the Union Depot, and within the limits of the city of St. Louis, twenty or twenty-two minutes to 10 o'clock on the 19th day of August, 1887. Howard, another station on defendant's road, is about 1,000 yards east of this crossing; and near this station are the Howard Fire-Brick works and the smelting-works. The Manchester road runs near to and parallel with the railroad a mile and a half north of the crossing in question. This goes up an elevation west of Cheltenham, and there is a cut of twelve or fifteen feet deep where the Campbell road crosses the railroad. The Campbell road makes a right angle with the Manchester road; the latter being on the west side of the railroad, and the former running south from it. After getting onto the Campbell road one cannot see the railroad east until he comes within a few feet of the railroad track. The train that caused the injury was the morning mail, and its schedule time for leaving the Union Depot was 9 o'clock A. M. but the morning of the accident it was twenty-five minutes late. The plaintiff is a doctor, and lives at Cheltenham. That morning he was on the road in his phaeton, drawn by a single horse. He knew the time this train ordinarily passed Cheltenham, which he says was about ten minutes after nine. He was near this crossing about twenty minutes before the accident, but would not cross then. He went over to Mrs. Given's, 150 yards distant, to see a clock, and post himself as to the time. It was then twenty-three minutes after 9. He did this in order to be sure he could have the right of way. He drove to and turned into the Campbell road, and halted his horse, he says, within five or six feet of the track, in order to ascertain whether a train was approaching. He could see west a considerable distance, and from where he stopped he could see the railroad track through the cut there to the east 800 or 1,000 yards. He heard a whistle, which he took to be between Howard station and a bridge on the road east of Howard, some 1,200 or 1,400 yards from where he was. He raised up in his buggy, looked to the eastward, and saw an engine about 800 yards away, which he took to be a switch-engine on the track of the smelting-works there situated. He thereupon proceeded to cross the track, and when his horse got his fore feet on the track the engine struck him, knocking the horse off, turning the buggy over, throwing plaintiff to the ground and injuring him seriously. The train was run at a rapid rate. Its speed was variously estimated, some witnesses fixing the maximum at sixty miles, and some the minimum at thirty miles, an hour. The plaintiff thinks it was very little over half a minute from the time he saw the engine 800 yards east of him before it struck him. He says he stopped a period of three to five minutes before he attempted to cross the track; but he is evidently mistaken about this, for if the train was running at the minimum rate of speed fixed by the witnesses, it would have reached him from where he saw it in one minute. He must be very near accurate in placing the time of the approach of the train at half a minute after he saw what he supposed to be a switch-engine. After seeing this engine he started across the track, and did not look any more to see if a train was coming. He heard no bell nor whistle as the train approached, except just at the time of the collision. He says he did not see the train at all before it struck his horse, but there was a "waver" on his spectacles that indicated to him that a train was coming. He undertook to pull his horse, but it was too late. The crossing in question was a public crossing. The agent in charge of the train testified that the bell was rung all the way from the Union Depot to the place of the accident, and the whistle was blown at stations and crossings. The engineer discovered plaintiff when within 150 feet of him, and then it was impossible to stop the train in time to avoid the collision. It is conceded that the engine plaintiff saw was the engine that caused the injury, and we think conclusively appears from the evidence that plaintiff was honestly mistaken about it, he supposing it was a switch-engine at the smelting-works, as he testified. The train did not stop at Howard or Cheltenham. The ordinances of the city mentioned in the petition were read in evidence.

The proof is unquestioned that the train was running at a greater rate of speed than six miles an hour in violation of the ordinances of the city, and this has been held by a long line of decisions of this court to be negligence per se. Kelley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 101 Mo. 67, 8 L. R. A. 783, and cases cited; Murray v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 101 Mo. 236.

It was urged in argument that this ordinance was an unreasonable restraint upon defendant's management of its business, and that the traveling public would not tolerate six miles an hour a distance of several miles for a train the character of this. No such issue was made by the pleadings, evidence, or instructions, and that question is not presented by this record for our determination. There can be no question that the collision would not have occurred if the defendant's agents had been running the train at the maximum speed allowed by the ordinance. The plaintiff traveled five or six feet after he saw the train, and before it reached him, when it was running certainly at thirty, and probably at forty or fifty, miles an hour; and of course it takes only a mathematical calculation to show that he could have gone from five to eight times that distance if the train had been running at the rate of six miles an hour, and this would have put him across the track, and out of danger. We take it, then, that the defendant was guilty of negligence that directly caused the injury. This brings us face to face with the question: Was plaintiff so clearly guilty of contributory negligence that we can say, as a matter of law, that he cannot recover? We think not. It is claimed that it was plaintiff's duty, in approaching and crossing defendant's track, to look constantly both ways. It is said one before crossing a railroad is bound to stop, look, and listen, but we know of no rule of law requiring a party to constantly look even one way, and especially none requiring him to constantly look both ways. We have to deal with man as we find him. When we get information that fixes upon our minds an impression that a certain state of facts exists, we act upon that impression. We satisfy ourselves that we are right, and then go ahead. At least, ordinarily prudent men to do this. Dr. Gratiot looked and saw an engine half a mile away that he supposed was on a switch, and of course was not approaching him at all. He accepted this as a fact, and acted on it; and there would be no more reason in requiring him to look constantly up the track to learn whether he was mistaken about this supposed fact than to require men in their multitudinous affairs to hesitate at every step and question not only the correctness of their judgment, but even the truth or falsity of what seem to be the facts that environ them. It would be a great boon to humanity if no mistakes could occur, but to require men to hesitate to act upon what seems manifest to their eyes and ears, simply because it is possible that they may not have seen or heard the fact as it is, would virtually stop business and commerce. But, says counsel for defendant, plaintiff saw the identical train that injured him, and his mistake in regard to it cannot relieve him of responsibility for the damage he suffered. We do not concur in this view of the matter. That plaintiff's mistake was an honest one there is no question. We do not pretend to say that a man might not make a mistake that would not relieve of responsibility. A man may be guilty of making a mistake negligently. Take, as an illustration, the instance when one seeing a train approaching, and, thinking he can cross in front of it, attempt to cross, and is injured, as was the case in Moody v. Pacific R. Co., 68 Mo. 470, he and those representing him cannot be heard to complain. Moody thought (and no doubt honestly thought) the train he saw was the regular mail, and would stop, but yet he knew it was a train approaching him, and he thought he could make it across the track in front of it, and attempted to cross, and was killed. This was held to be negligence on his part which precluded his representative from recovering. But even in such case this court held in Petty

v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 88 Mo. 806, 8 West. Rep. 297, that it was not negligence per se when a party supposed the train was more than eighty rods from the crossing, though he was mistaken about it, to attempt to cross. The case of Bonnell v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 89 N. J. L. 189 is precisely in point on the question under discussion. There the plaintiff, when about one hundred yards from the railroad, looked and saw a train with the rear towards him, and was deceived by appearances, supposing it was going away from the crossing. He was driving a wagon, and proceeded to cross the track without looking any more. Some men saw his peril and signaled to him, but he misconstrued the signal, and was injured. The court held it a proper case to go the jury. Scudder, J., speaking for the whole court, said: "Where there are doubtful and qualifying circumstances, the question of negligence or want of proper care is a matter of ordinary observation and experience of the conduct of men, and, as such, must be left to the jury, as being within their legal province. The law has said in these cases that the plaintiff shall have the judgement of twelve men, and not the opinion of one man. The fact upon which the defendant mainly relied in this case was that the plaintiff did not look up the track as he approached, and before he attempted to cross it. But the plaintiff had looked when about one hundred yards from the crossing, and saw, as he supposed, a train going in the opposite direction, with the rear towards him. He was not required by any legal rule to look continually until he crossed the track. A man of prudence might have received a fixed impression from the appearance of the train that it was going away from the station. Having that belief, his further attention may have been called off by the actions of the men near the station, who were gesticulating, which he misunderstood. . . . It was for the jury to weigh all these facts, and say whether his mistake and consequent feeling of security were unreasonable, and manifested a want of proper care." In the language of Lord Coleridge, we think that opinion contains excellent sense, and is elegantly expressed. The principle announced is sound. It is a familiar rule, also, that where a party is placed in a position of peril, or is frightened, a mistake of facts excuses him. Keim v. Union R. & Transit Co. 90 Mo. 814, 7 West. Rep. 144, and cases cited Beach, Contrib. Neg. pp. 198, 201. As was said in the Bonnell Case, supra, so we say in this case: It was for the jury to weigh all the facts, and say whether plaintiff's mistake and consequent feeling of security were unreasonable, and manifested want of proper care. It is not necessary for us to decide that he was not guilty of negligence in going upon the crossing to sustain the ruling of the trial court in overruling the demurrer to the evidence. Before the court is justified in taking a case from the jury the facts must be proved in the first place; and then, in the second it must appear that only one fair inference can be drawn from the facts thus proved. In cases of his character the party has a right to demand a jury to pass not only on the facts, but to determine also what inferences shall be drawn from the facts found; that is, determine the ultimate facts in issue, where men of ordinary ability and judgment might honestly differ. Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 98 Mo. 79, 11 West. Rep. 458; Huhn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 92 Mo. 440, 10 West. Rep. 405; Keim v. Union R. & Transit Co. 90 Mo. 814, 7 West. Rep. 144.

2. It is contended that the court erred in authorizing the jury to find for the plaintiff if they found that defendants agents were guilty of negligence in moving and managing the train, because there was no proper averment in the petition to support such a finding. There is an independent allegation in the petition that plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of "through the negligence and carelessness of defendants agents and servants while running, controlling and managing its locomotive engine and train of cars." We have had occasion to examine this question in the cases of Dickson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 491, and Hanlon v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 881, submitted at the same time this was, and we held in those cases, as we again hold in this, that this averment is sufficient to authorize proof of negligence in running the trains. There is another reason, however, in the case now in hand, why this point will not avail defendant, and that is, it was guilty of negligence directly causing plaintiff's injury in running its train from thirty to sixty miles an hour in violation of the city ordinance, and it is utterly immaterial whether it was guilty of negligence in any other form or not; and yet on this issue there was evidence of recklessness in the management of the train in question. It must have been running at break-neck speed. The weight of the evidence is that it was running from forty to sixty miles an hour. Plaintiff saw it, and in the twinkling of an eye, almost, "a waver," and the crash came. The jury might very well find it to be carelessness to go at such a rate, in such a place, under such circumstances, flying by stations and over crossings without halting, aside from the requirement of any ordinance or statute.

3. It is again insisted that the court erred in submitting the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence to jury in the instructions given, and that certain instructions prayed by defendant on that question ought not to have been refused. The court in substance told the jury in its instructions Nos. 1, 2, and 3 that plaintiff was entitled to recover if he was himself exercising that degree of care and prudence that an ordinarily careful and prudent person under like circumstances would have exercised, and that the collision was caused by the negligence of defendant (1) in moving the train at a greater rate of speed than six miles an hour (2) in failing to constantly sound the bell; or (3) in failing to exercise that degree of care and prudence in the handling and managing of the train which an ordinarily careful and prudent person, engaged in like business, would have exercised. As we have remarked, it is immaterial in this case what the court says about the sources of defendant's negligence. It being conceded that it was guilty of negligence per se in running the train in violation of the city ordinance, the only question of fact that the jury had to deal with and determine was whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and on this question the court instructed the jury as follows: "(4) And, on the other hand, it was the duty of the plaintiff, in crossing or attempting to cross the defendant's railroad track, to have exercised that degree of care and prudence that an ordinarily careful and prudent person under like circumstances would have exercised; and a failure to exercise such a degree of care and prudence would render him guilty of negligence." "(6) But although the defendant was guilty of negligence in running its train at a greater rate of speed than six miles an hour, and although you may believe from the evidence that the defendant was also guilty of negligence, as that term is explained in either the second or third of the foregoing instructions, and although you may believe from the evidence that such negligence of the defendant contributed to cause the collision in question, yet if you also believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was also guilty of negligence as that term is explained in the fourth instruction foregoing, and that such negligence of the plaintiff directly contributed to cause said collision,—that is to say, if you believe from the evidence, that said collision was the result, not of the negligence of the defendant alone, but of the joint negligence of both plaintiff and defendant,—then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and your verdict should be for the defendant." (7) If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff approached the railway crossing with his horse and buggy without paying any attention to his own safety, but trusted to the obligations imposed upon the railway company to warn him of an approaching engine and train, and was injured by reason of his failure to so pay attention, they will find a verdict for the defendant." The defendant asked the court to instruct, and the court refused to instruct, the jury that, unless the plaintiff carefully and constantly looked and listened for a train as he approached and went onto the crossing, he could not recover; or, if he attempted to cross before he had ascertained whether a train was approaching, or if he saw a train which he supposed to be a switch-engine, and then paid no further attention to ascertain whether such engine was approaching in fact, he could not recover. We will not say anything further in regard to the mistake plaintiff made. We think we have said enough to show that the part of the charge prayed by defendant as to that was properly refused. Nor will we add anything to what has already been said about the duty of plaintiff to constantly look and listen, or to look and listen after he honestly supposed he knew the facts of the situation. Defendant urges that the instructions it asked ought to have been given because the instructions given are not specific enough in informing the jury what contributory negligence is. We differ with defendants' counsel in this regard. In the fourth instruction the court defines negligence to be a failure to exercise that degree of care and prudence that an ordinarily careful and prudent person, under like circumstances, would exercise. Then in the sixth instruction the court says that, although defendant was guilty of negligence, yet if plaintiff was also guilty of negligence, as defined by the court, and that such negligence directly contributed to cause the collision,—i. e., if "the collision was the result, not of the negligence of the defendant alone, but of the joint negligence of both plaintiff and defendant"—then the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. This is terse, vigorous English, and we do not see how the court could have made it more plain to the jury what was meant by contributory negligence of the plaintiff that would defeat his claim for damages. Negligence is admirably defined by the court, and the definition given conforms to the law. Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 2, 8; Tetherow v. St. Joseph & D. M. R. Co. 98 Mo. 74; Wilkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 101 Mo. 93. And then the court tells the jury in an explicit manner when negligence is contributory. The court, in this case, could not have told the jury that plaintiff was negligent if he failed to look and listen. He did both. If he was negligent at all, it was because he failed to exercise proper care in verifying his impression about the engine he saw being a switch-engine. It is a question of fact for the jury, and not of law for the court, to determine whether plaintiff should, under the circumstances, have looked again. It was, we think, properly left to the jury to say whether plaintiff's conduct conformed to that of an ordinarily careful and prudent man. Jurymen are taken from the body of the people, and they are supposed to be men of ordinary care and prudence, and it is peculiarly within their province to determine what care and prudence dictate under given circumstances. But, if anything was lacking in the definition of plaintiffs' duty under the circumstances, it was supplied by the seventh instruction, supra, which was given at the instance of defendant. We hold that the instructions, taken as a whole, were exceptionally clear, and presented the issues to the jury in a very concise and yet lucid manner. Under these instructions the jury in their verdict negated the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, and in this we think they were supported by the evidence.

4. Defendant contends, in the last place, that the verdict of $10,175 is excessive to that degree that it must have been the result of corruption, passion, or prejudice on the part of the jury. We confess that the sum awarded plaintiff is large, but we did not think it so excessive that we ought to interfere. The $175 we presume was allowed for the damage to the horse and buggy, and the $10,000 for the injury to plaintiff's person

The evidence tends to show that the plaintiff, after the accident, was found lying on the ground in an insensible condition; that he came to in a short time; that he was terribly scarred and bruised about the face, his nose broken, three of his teeth knocked out, three of his ribs broken, near the spine; that there was partial paralysis on the left side of his face; his left side and spine were injured from the shock; that his hip on the left side was injured, and there was constant pain on that side, and that he was lame at the time of the trial, which occurred in April, 1888, the accident occurring in the previous August; that plaintiff was sixty years old; that the injuries were probably permanent, and disabled him from practicing his profession to some extent, his income previous to the accident being about $2,500 per annum. It is evident plaintiff's injuries have wrecked him physically. The shock received, under the circumstances of this case, in connection with the injuries inflicted, must of necessity leave its impress for life upon a man of the plaintiff's age. What damage he ought to receive must be left somewhat to the jury. There is no fixed standard by which to estimate damages of this character, and it is unfortunate there is none. This is an imperfection in the administration of law, but it is an imperfection that inheres in all human institutions. We cannot help it if some juries place a high, while others put a low, value on life and limb. All the courts can do is to interfere with the verdicts of juries when it is manifest that they are the result of corruption, prejudice, or passion. We cannot say that of the verdict in this case. It was for the jurors to say what damage the plaintiff ought to have. They fixed the amount at $10,175, and under the facts of the case we do not feel authorized, and we have no disposition, to interfere. Porter v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 66; Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co. 97 Mo. 647; Griffith v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 98 Mo. 168; Sheehy v. Kansas City O. R. Co. 94 Mo. 574, 18 West. Rep. 658.

Judgment affirmed.

All concur.

A motion for rehearing was subsequently filed in response to which Thomas, J., on behalf of the court delivered the following opinion:

The questions decided in the foregoing opinion are of such gravity and frequent occurrence that we have gone fully over the same ground, on the motion for rehearing. The able counsel for defendant prepared and printed an elaborate argument in support of this motion, and displayed great learning and industry in collecting and arranging the authorities, and thereby the task of re-investigation was made comparatively light for the court.

1. It is assumed in the motion for rehearing that we decided (1) that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence; and (2) that he did not make the mistake negligently. We decided neither. We simply held that there was some evidence from which the jury might fairly infer that plaintiff exercised ordinary care in crossing the track, and that, under the facts of the case, it was a question for the jury whether his mistake, and consequent feeling of security, were reasonable.

2. Speaking of what was said in our opinion on the question of plaintiff's mistake, defendant's attorney, in his argument, says: "The standard of judgment set up in this case should be universally applicable, for the law is no respecter of persons; but, with due deference, we submit that, in a suit against a railroad company, the honest mistake of its employes will never be accepted as sufficient to relieve it from liability. We know the court has meant nothing of the sort, but it has, none the less, set up a double and ranging standard of duty, making one requirement of members of the general public, and a different and far higher requirement of railroad men." This is a very grave charge, if true. Counsel contends that he is justified in making this charge by a reference to the varying standards announced in Donahoe v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 83 Mo. 548, 58 Am. Rep. 594; Werner v. Citizens R. Co. 81 Mo. 864; and Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 60 Mo. 475,—on one side, and the case at bar on the other. In the Isabel Case "the engineer saw what he honestly took to be a dog on the track; it was a child." The trial court instructed the jury that if they found that the engineer, "by the exercise of ordinary skill and caution might have observed the child on the railroad track and recognized him as an infant, in time to stop the train before it reached and ran upon him," then the corporation was liable. This court approved the instruction. The jury found the fact, and the court declared the law. In the Werner Case a "street-car driver saw what he honestly took to be a bag of oats or bunch of hay upon the track. It proved to be a prostrate man." The court again instructed the jury that if the driver of the car "by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, might have ascertained that the object he saw lying in the track was a human being, before he ran over it, and might have stopped the car and avoided running over the deceased," the corporation was liable. The jury again found the fact, and the court declared the law. In the Donahoe Case a child was killed, and the court told the jury: "If the injury of the child could have been avoided after the employes learned of the danger in which the child was, or might have learned of his dangerous situation by the use of reasonable diligence," then the railroad company was liable. Here, likewise, the jury found the fact, and the court applied the law. In none of these cases did the court say that defendant's mistakes were negligent as a matter of law. In each case it was distinctly left to the jury to find whether there was negligence or not. The court did not assume that duty. Nor in the case at bar did the court instruct the jury that plaintiff's mistake excused him, but the court did instruct that, if plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in crossing, he could not recover. As in the other cases, so here, the jury decided the fact; the court, the law. There is a marked difference however, in the cases cited and the one under discussion. The street-car driver in the Werner Case and the engineer in the Isabel Case saw something on the track, and they knew that anything in that position was dangerous to the life and property under their charge. Hence if they had not been mistaken, but had there been in fact a sack of oats on the track in one case, and a dog in the other, they would have been guilty of negligence, even recklessness, in taking no steps to guard the car under their control from danger. Not so with Dr. Gratiot. If he had made no mistake, that is, if the engine had been in fact what he supposed it was, as to him it would have been perfectly harmless. This, we take it, sufficiently disposes of the argument that this court applies one standard of duty to railroad corporations and another to the general public. The same rule is applied, and ought to be applied, to both. We did not say, nor do we now say, that a mistake excuses a man in all cases and everywhere, nor do we say that a mistake will not excuse him in any case or under any circumstances.

3. There are two contentions of defendant that we will consider together: (1) That the evidence so clearly shows contributory negligence on plaintiff's part that the court, as a matter of law, ought to have declared that he could not recover; and (2) that conceding the facts of the case were of such a character as to authorize the submission of the question of plaintiff's negligence to the jury, yet the court ought to have told the jury what facts, if proved, would have constituted negligence. If we understand the second contention correctly, it is that the court, in its instructions, ought to have informed the jury what a man of ordinary prudence would have done at the time and place of this injury; that simply telling the jury that "it was the duty of the plaintiff in crossing, or attempting to cross, the defendant's railroad track to have exercised that degree of care and prudence that an ordinarily careful and prudent person, under the circumstances, would have exercised, and a failure to exercise such degree of care and prudence would render him guilty of negligence," and that he could not recover "if he approached the railway crossing with his horse and buggy, without paying any attention to his own safety, but trusted to the obligations imposed upon the railroad company to warn him of an approaching engine and train," was not enough. It seems that the question of demurrer to evidence has been so often before the English and American courts, and has been so ably and exhaustively discussed by the courts and text-writers, especially in the last 25 years, that we ought ere this time to have some reliable guides; but we must confess the question is apparently involved in as much difficulty as ever, and in an especial manner do we find a great contrariety of conflicting opinions on what may aptly be termed "the law of the railroad crossing." The difficulty does not lie in the formulation, but application, of general rules. That contributory negligence of the injured party, with but few exceptions, will defeat a recovery, and that a party is guilty of contributory negligence when he fails to conform to what the law requires of him, or to what a man of ordinary prudence would usually do under the same circumstances, are axioms of the law. Thus far all is easy, but when we enter upon an inquiry into what men of ordinary prudence would do, under given circumstances, the divergence of judicial opinion begins. The adjudged cases not only show that the courts and judges have been and that they are now divided as to what ordinary prudence is, but also as to who shall determine when a man has exercised ordinary prudence in a concrete case. An effort has been made to find and mark the line where the province of the court ends and that of the jury begins, but it has, in a large degree, been fruitless. Much of the difficulty and confusion involved in the discussion of the subject of negligence and contributory negligence has grown out of a desire on the part of the court to lay down abstract rules touching them, and a failure to make proper distinctions between a question of fact and a question of law. Negligence results from a violation of duty. If the duty be prescribed by law, its violation is negligence per se, and the court is bound to so declare it. But whether A. B. violated such a duty is always a question of fact. If the duty be not prescribed by law, then the question whether its violation is negligence is one of fact. Of course, we make a distinction between what the positive law requires and what prudence requires. The law cannot prescribe what men shall do, except in a comparatively few cases. In the majority of cases the law gives no specific instructions, but it requires everyone to exercise ordinary prudence in his dealings with others. In those cases where the law gives no specific directions as to conduct, the question whether A. B. was guilty of a violation of duty, and hence guilty of negligence, is always a question of fact; the law neither prescribing the standard by which to measure A. B.'s conduct nor determining what his conduct was. And here again it is important to note a distinction between the capacity in which the court acts in determining and declaring a fact and the law. Our meaning can be better understood by illustrations. The court declares, as a matter of law, that the running of a train at a greater rate of speed than that prescribed by ordinance is negligence, and, as a matter of fact, that A. B. ran a train at a greater rate of speed than authorized by ordinance. The law never declares that A. B. violated the ordinance, but the court, sitting as a trier of the fact, does. In other words, the court sitting as a jury, finds and declares that A. B. violated the ordinance, and then, as a court administering the law, declares that A. B. was guilty of negligence. Take a case where the law has not prescribed what a party shall do, except that he shall be ordinarily prudent. The law has not prescribed the speed of trains outside of cities and towns, and not always in them. Hence in this class of cases there are two questions of fact to be determined: (1) What is an imprudent speed of a train. (2) Did the party charged run the train at this imprudent speed? The law does not require a party approaching a railroad to stop, look, and listen, but it does require him to exercise ordinary prudence. When A. B. crosses the track, therefore, two questions of fact must be determined: (1) What did ordinary prudence require him to do? and (2) did he come up to the standard of ordinary prudence? "There is no doubt that, where it appears beyond controversy that a failure to stop, look, or listen was a proximate cause of an injury, the courts will hold such failure contributory negligence as a matter of law. Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224; Hixon v. St. Louis, H. & K. R. Co. 80 Mo. 335. But this is a very different matter from holding a failure to stop, look, or listen negligence per se, sufficient to bar a recovery. In the one line of cases, it is properly held that a failure to stop, look, or listen negligence per se, sufficient to bar a recovery. In the one line of cases, it is properly held that a failure to stop, look or listen was negligence, as a matter of law, upon the undisputed facts, because ordinary care required the precaution, and the failure to take it was a proximate cause of the injury that followed. In other words, there is a difference between negligence per se, without regard to the surrounding circumstances, and negligence as a matter of law, in view of all the circumstances." Note 2, p. 72, 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. This seems to be a refinement without substantial basis; a distinction without a difference. It seems, at first blush, to be somewhat ambiguous. What is the difference between negligence per se and negligence "as a matter of law, in view of all the circumstances?" The ambiguity, however, disappears by putting the proposition in another form, and in a form, too, which does not change its significance. Negligence, "as a matter of law, in view of all the circumstances," is simply negligence as a matter of fact under the law, in view of all the circumstances, in a concrete case. That is to say, the court, sitting as a jury, finds the fact of negligence from all the circumstances, and then declares the law upon the fact thus found. That the fact of negligence may be admitted or may clearly appear from undisputed facts does not render it any the less a fact as contradistinguished from law, and, when the court finds and declares it, it proceeds as a jury, and not as a court. Sometimes negligence is called a mixed question of law and fact. This is strictly not an accurate statement, but misleading. In every concrete case there is a question of fact and a question of law, but the fact is an unmixed fact, and the law unmixed law. Simply because the court as a jury finds the fact, and the law is applied by the same court as a court to the fact thus found, does not make them a mixed question of law and fact. In that line of cases where the law does not prescribe what shall be done, the standard of ordinary prudence, in the very nature of things, shifts with the varying circumstances of each case. Men, from nature and habit, vary in their conception of prudence. There is no fixed standard of universal application among men. When the trier, whether judge or juror, determines that a party has not exercised ordinary care, he necessarily fixes in his mind a standard by which to measure the party's conduct, and then finds he failed to come up to that standard. Where the law has fixed no standard, a standard must be adopted before we can proceed in a given case. Who shall fix the standard, the court or jury? The court, in determining a demurrer to evidence, has a delicate and important duty to perform. We think, however, that if the distinction between law and fact, and the capacity in which the court acts when determining the one and the other, as heretofore indicated, be kept in mind, but little difficulty can arise in the disposition of a given case. There is no question about the right and duty of the court to declare the law, but when it assumes to determine a fact as contradistinguished from law, and peremptorily direct the jury to conform to that fact, it enters a field whose boundaries have not been definitely fixed, and the decision must be predicated on the facts of each case. Are there any rules by which the court must be governed? We know of none, but there are rules which, though not infallible, are helpful guides in our concrete investigations. "Where the facts are so clear and decided that the inference of negligence is irresistible, it is the duty of the judge to decide; but when the facts, or the inferences to be drawn from them, are in any decree doubtful," the jury must decide. Keller v. New York Cent. R. Co. 24 How. Pr. 172. This language was quoted and approved by this court in Barton v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 253, 14 Am. Rep. 415. "A demurrer of the evidence admits every fact which any of the evidence tends to prove, and also every fact that the jurors may, with any propriety, infer from the evidence before them. It should be allowed only when the evidence thus considered wholly fails to make proof of some essential averment." Noeninger v. Vogt, 88 Mo. 590, 5 West. Rep. 390. "If, upon a given state of facts, negligence can be clearly asserted, then the court may so declare; but, if reasonable minds may differ as to the conclusions to be drawn from the given facts, then the question of negligence must be determined from all the surrounding circumstances." Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 98 Mo. 62; Kelly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 70 Mo. 604; Tetherow v. St. Joseph & D. M. R. Co. 98 Mo. 74; Huhn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 92 Mo. 440, 10 West. Rep. 405; Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 93 Mo. 79, 11 West. Rep. 455; Wilkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 101 Mo. 98.

Judge Cooley in Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 90, clearly expresses our views on this important subject in the following language: "The case however, must be a very clear one, which would justify the court in taking upon itself this responsibility. For, when the judge decides that a want of due care is not shown, he necessarily fixes, in his own mind, the standard of ordinary prudence, and, measuring the plaintiff's conduct by that, turns him out of court upon his opinion of what a reasonably prudent person ought to have done under the circumstances. He thus makes his own opinion of what would be generally regarded as prudence, a definite rule of law. It is quite possible that if the same question of prudence were submitted to a jury, collected from different occupations of society, and perhaps better competent to judge of the common opinion, he might find them differing with him as to the ordinary standard of proper care. The next judge, trying a similar case, may also be of a different opinion, and, because the case is not clear, hold that to be a question of fact which the first has ruled to be one of law. Indeed, I think that cases are not so numerous as has been sometimes supposed, in which a judge could feel at liberty to take the question of the plaintiff's negligence away from the jury. . . . Negligence, as I understand it, consists in a want of that reasonable care, which would be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence, under all the existing circumstances, in view of the probable danger of injury. The injury [inquiry] is therefore one which must take into consideration all these circumstances, and it must measure the prudence of the parties' conduct by a standard of behavior likely to have been adopted by other persons of common prudence. Moreover, if the danger depends at all upon the action of any other person, under a given set of circumstances, the prudence of the party injured must be estimated in view of what he had a right to expect from such other person, and he is not to be considered blamable if the injury has resulted from the action of another, which he could not have reasonably anticipated. Thus the problem is complicated by the necessity of taking into account the two sets of circumstances, affecting the conduct of different persons, and is only to be satisfactorily solved by the jury placing themselves in the position of the injured person, and examining those circumstances as they presented themselves to him, and from that standpoint judging whether he was guilty of negligence or not. It is evident that such a problem cannot usually be one upon which the law can pronounce a definite sentence, and that it must be left to the sifting and determination of a jury."

"Twelve men," says Justice Hunt of the Supreme Court of the United States in Stout City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 659, 21 L. ed. 745, "of the average of the community, comprising men of education, of little education, men of learning, and men whose learning consists only in what they have themselves seen and heard, the merchant, the mechanic, the farmer, the laborer, these sit together, consult, apply their separate experience of the affairs of life to the facts proven, and draw a unanimous conclusion. This average judgment, thus given, it is the great effort of the law to obtain. It is assumed that twelve men know more of the common affairs of life than does one man; that they can draw wiser and safer conclusions from admitted facts, thus occurring, than can one single judge."
16 L. R. A.

Judge Porter's observations in Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co., 32 How. Pr. 91, are apposite in this connection. He says: "Even among the cases which have been held so plain as to justify a nonsuit, there have been few in which the judges have not themselves disagreed, and the inquiry naturally occurs to the mind whether we are less liable than jurors to err on questions of pure fact, pertaining to the ordinary affairs of life. Our law is framed upon the theory that on such questions the citizen can rely with more security on concurrent judgment of twelve jurors than on the majority vote of a divided bench. Unanimity is not required in our decisions on questions of law. It is otherwise with jurors, charged with determining issues of fact, and such issues should not be withheld from the usual arbiters, unless the evidence leads so clearly to one result that there is no room for honest difference between intelligent and upright men. A nonsuit should always be granted where the proof is so clear as to warrant the assumption, in good faith, that, if the questions were submitted to the jury they would find the culpable negligence of the plaintiff contributed to the injury. But we have had occasion recently to hear nonsuits of this kind justified on the novel ground that, unless the fact be determined in one way by the judge, it will be sure to be determined the other way by the jury. The correctness of judicial opinions on mere questions of fact may well be distrusted when we find them confessedly opposed to the common sense of mankind." Mr. Beach says: "In the ultimate determination of the question whether plaintiff was guilty of negligence, two separate inquiries are involved: First, What was ordinary care, under the circumstances? and second, Did the conduct of the plaintiff come up to that standard? With respect to the standard of ordinary care, it may be remarked that it is not always a fixed standard, and in many cases it must first be found by the jury. In such a case each of these inquiries is for the jury. They must assume a standard, and then measure the plaintiff's conduct by that standard. Whenever the standard is fixed, and when the measure of duty is precisely defined by law, then a failure to attain that standard is negligence in law, and a matter with which a jury can properly have nothing to do." Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 163.

"Legal," says Holmes in his work on the Common Law, p. 127, "like natural divisions, however clear in their general outlines, will be found on exact scrutiny to end in a penumbra or debatable land. This is the region of the jury." Speaking of these doubtful cases, Torrance, J., in Farrell v. Waterbury H. R. Co., 60 Conn. 239, uses this language: "In such cases the law itself furnishes no certain, specific, sufficient standard of conduct, and, of necessity, leaves the trier to determine both what the conduct is, and whether it comes up to the standard, as such standard exists in the mind of the trier." On this subject, in McCully v. Clarke, 40 Pa. 399, 80 Am. Dec. 584. Strong, J., says: "When the standard shifts, with the circumstances of the case, it is, in its very nature, incapable of being determined as a matter of law, and must be submitted to the jury. . . . Here the standard of duty was to be found as a fact, as well as the measure of its performance."

Let us view plaintiff's conduct in the light of these authorities, and the principles deducible from them, and see if the court ought to declare, as a matter of law, that he cannot recover. It will be conceded, we presume, that there is no law which gave plaintiff specific direction what he was required to do under the circumstances of this case. His conduct must therefore be judged by what men of ordinary prudence would usually have done if they had been situated as he was, the law having fixed no standard of conduct for him. Two questions of fact, then, must be answered in order to determine his rights: (1) What would a man of ordinary prudence usually have done under the circumstances? And (2) Did plaintiff's conduct conform to that standard? The trial court submitted both of these questions to the jury for determination. This, defendants attorney insists, was error. The contention is that the court ought to have fixed a standard of conduct for the plaintiff at the time and place of the injury, and the standard which, it is claimed, ought to have been thus fixed, is higher than that to which plaintiff did in fact conform; that is, it is claimed that the court ought to have instructed the jury that plaintiff, after stopping within five feet of the track, and being satisfied no train was in dangerous proximity, ought to have looked again, and, having failed to do so, he was guilty of contributory negligence, and therefore could not recover. We think this case lies in the "penumbra or debatable land" of Holmes. In this case, the triers of the fact were properly left to determine the standard of ordinary prudence which plaintiff was bound to conform, at his peril, and also whether plaintiff did in fact conform to that standard. We cannot conceive how we are more competent to determine what a man of ordinary prudence would have done, situated as Dr. Gratiot was, than twelve jurors, taken from the ordinary walks of life. The demurrer to the evidence in this case concedes that plaintiff stopped his horse within five or six feet of the track; that he looked, and saw the train 800 or 1,000 yards away; that the engine emitted no smoke, and he took it to be a switch-engine, and not approaching him; that the train which injured him was running sixty miles an hour when the ordinance fixed its maximum speed at six miles an hour; that no whistle was sounded or bell rung within 800 yards of the crossing where the collision occurred; and that plaintiff had a right, when he attempted to cross the track, to assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the train that injured him had passed on schedule time, which was, at least twenty minutes before he attempted to cross. We do not say that we find all these facts in the record, but we say there was evidence tending to prove each one, and, under the rule announced, they must be conceded in determining this demurrer. We do not think that the inference of plaintiff's negligence, from these conceded facts, is so clear and irresistible that it ought to have been taken from the jury. The jury found that plaintiff "exercised that degree of care and prudence that an ordinarily careful and prudent person, under like circumstances, would have exercised," and that he did not approach the crossing "without paying any attention to his own safety," and did not trust "to the obligations imposed upon the railroad company to warn him of an approaching engine and train" and we think there was evidence that warranted such finding.

On the questions of inadvertence, not looking the second time, and mistake, we cite the following additional authorities in support of the view we take of the case: Rennick v. New York Cent. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 132; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co. 32 How. Pr. 79; Beisiegel v. New York Cent. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 623; Maginnis v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 52 N. Y. 215; Plummer v. Eastern R. Co. 73 Me. 591; Keess v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 67 Barb. 205; Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 98 Mo. 62; Barton v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 253, 14 Am. Rep. 418; O'Connor v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 94 Mo. 150, 13 West. Rep. 587; Piper v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 77 Wis. 247.

This disposes of all the questions presented by the motion for rehearing, not fully covered by the original opinion.

The motion will be denied.

All of this division concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

RICE, BROWN & CO., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

William MOORE.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. An action upon the judgment of a

*Head notes by HORTON, Ch. J.

NOTE.—That the revival of a judgment in another state without personal service, will not 16 L. R. A.

sister state must be brought in Kansas within five years, or it will be barred.

2. The revivor of a judgment in Ohio is merely a continuation of the original suit, so as to restore the judgment, and such revivor, made without an appearance by or personal service upon the defendant, who has been a resident of Kansas for more than five years prevent the bar of a state Statute of Limitations is established without conflict of authority after the rendition of the original judgment, will not remove the bar of the Statute of Limitations of this state.

(May 7, 1892.)

ERROR to the District Court for Garfield County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce payment of a judgment which had been recovered in the state of Ohio. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. R. Boyd for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Milton Brown for defendant in error.

Horton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion the court:

On the 27th day October, 1879, Rice, Brown & Co., a firm doing business in the state of Ohio, recovered a personal judgment against William Moore in the county of Ottawa, in that state. There is an unpaid balance upon the judgment of $249.80. The judgment became dormant under the statutes of Ohio; but at the January Term for 1889 of the court of common pleas of Ottawa county it was revived by publication. William Moore was not personally served with any notice that the judgment would be revived, nor did he enter any appearance in the proceedings of revivor. It is not alleged in the petition that the defendant, William Moore, is a non-resident of this state, or that he has ever been out of the state, or has absconded, or concealed himself. This action was commenced on the 1st day of May, 1889, nearly ten years after the rendition of the judgment in Ohio, and a few months after the revivor by publication in January, 1889. A general demurrer was filed to the petition, which was sustained by the court below. Rice, Brown & Co. complain of this ruling.

The question is whether the petition is sufficient, in view of the five-years Statute of Limitations prescribed by our statute. Section 18, Civil Code, Burns v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; Marchinney v. Doane, 40 Kan. 676. Where it is apparent from the face of the petition that the debt or claim is barred, a demurrer is properly sustained. Zane v. Zane, 5 Kan. 134; Standliff v. Norton, 11 Kan. 218. If there had been no revivor of the judgment in Ohio, we suppose it would be conceded, even if the judgment had not become dormant under the statutes of that state, no recovery could be had upon the judgment in this state, if Mr. Moore had been an actual resident of this state for five years—the full time of our limitation—after the rendition of the judgment. The authorities are to the effect that “remedies are to be governed by the laws of the country where the suit is brought.” The laws of this state where the action is brought must govern the limitation. It was recently decided by this court in Bauserman v. Charlotte, 46 Kan. 480, that, “where an action is brought in this state, upon a judgment of a court of record of a sister state, which is in full force in that state, the Statute of Limitations of this state, and not that of the sister state, will control. Bank of United States v. Donnelly, 83 U. S. 8 Pet. 372, 8 L. ed. 978. It is contended, however, as the judgment was revived in Ohio in January, 1889,—a few months only before this action was commenced,—that the bar of the Statute of Limitations is not effective. A scire facias to revive a judgment is not a new suit, but the continuation of an old one. Freeman, Judgments, § 444; Elsasser v. Haines, 52 N. J. L. 10. In Irwin v. Nixon, 11 Pa. 425, 51 Am. Dec. 559. It is said to be a common, plain, and familiar principle that a scire facias to revive a judgment . . . is but a continuation of the original action, and the execution thereon is an execution on the former judgment. The judgment on the scire facias is not . . . a new judgment, giving vitality only from that time, but it is the revival of the original judgment, giving, or rather continuing, the vitality of the original judgment, with all its incidents, from the time of its rendition.” Penn v. Klyna, 1 Pet. C. C. 448; 2 T. & H. 379. Hence the proceeding in Ohio in January, 1889, must be regarded as a continuation only of the former suit or judgment. This seems to be admitted in the brief of counsel for plaintiff, for it is stated that “reviving a judgment is the act by which a judgment which has lain dormant or without any action upon it for a year and a day is, at common law, again restored to its original force.” The revivor of the Ohio judgment removes its dormant quality only, but does not affect the Statute of Limitations in this state, or in any way prevent its running against the judgment rendered in 1879. We think, within the provisions of our Civil Code concerning limitations, the action upon the judgment ought to have been brought within five years after its rendition, if during all of that time Moore was personally present within this state. If brought after five years, it is too late. If, however, it be claimed that the revivor in Ohio is not a mere order that execution issue, but a new judgment, and therefore of full force as a new judgment of the date of January, 1889, no action can be brought thereon in this state, because Moore was not personally served in the proceeding for revivor, nor entered any appearance therein. Kay v. Walter, 28 Kan. 112. In the last case this court decided that a judgment rendered in Pennsylvania on May 26, 1864, and revived in 1867, and again in 1877, but sued on in this state in 1881, “was unquestionably barred by the five-years Statute of Limitations.” In the case of Hepler v. Davis, (Neb.) a judgment was recovered against A., in Illinois, in 1879. A. removed to Nebraska soon afterwards, and continued to reside in that state. In 1888 the judgment was revived in Illinois, without personal service upon so far as we have learned. The decisions on the subject are cited in the above case and in the case of Hepler v. Davis (Neb.) 13 L. R. A. 563.

That it is otherwise where the revivor was obtained on personal service within the jurisdiction, see Packer v. Thompson, 23 Neb. 688, which is distinguished in Hepler v. Davis, supra.

tained on personal service within the jurisdiction, see Packer v. Thompson, 23 Neb. 688, which is distinguished in Hepler v. Davis, supra.

A., or an appearance by him. In December, 1888, nine years after the judgment was rendered, an action was brought upon it in Nebraska. In that state, as in ours, the limitation of five years as to judgments exists. It was held in that case, Maxwell, J., delivering the opinion, that an action upon a judgment of a sister state must be brought in Nebraska within five years, or it will be barred, and that the alleged revivor of the judgment in Illinois, in 1888, did not remove the bar of the Statute of Nebraska. That case is very similar to this one. See also, Eaton v. Hasty, 6 Neb. 419, 29 Am. Rep. 365; Tessier v. Englehart, 18 Neb. 167; Marz v. Kilpatrick, 25 Neb. 107.

Moore having resided in this state for five years after the original judgment against him was rendered and before the alleged revivor, or the commencement of this action, our Statute of Limitations prevents any action upon the judgment from being maintained.

The ruling and judgment of the District Court will be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Samuel K. WILSON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

City of TRENTON.

(.....N. J.....)

*1. In a proceeding to lay out and open a street, the charter of Trenton requires notice

*Head note by MAGRE, J.

NOTE.—What constitutes "personal service" of papers.

On principle, the view taken in the principal case, that there can be personal service of some papers without direct delivery by the person serving to the one to be served strikes us as unsound and we do not find it supported by authority. Slight support for it is found in Wade on Notice, 2d ed. §1343, where it is said that service of notices by leaving them at the party's place of abode "has been denominated personal, to distinguish it from service by mail; and substituted, as contradicting distinguished from service strictly personal."

In Hurd v. Davis, 13 How. Pr. 57, where service of an answer by mail was held irregular because not mailed at the postoffice indicated by the defendant's attorney as his residence, Harris, J., remarked: "Had it in fact reached the attorney in time, it might have been treated as a good personal service from that time."

In Burdett v. Lewis, 7 C. B. N. S. 791, Erie, Ch. J., said: "Upon inquiry, we find the rule to be perfectly well settled, that service of a notice or rule by putting it under the door of the attorney's office or chambers would be made complete by calling the next morning to ascertain that it had been received, or by some other evidence that it had duly come to hand; but that, without some such evidence, it would not be good service."

Alderson, B., said in Goggs v. Huntingtower, 12 Mees. & W. 503: "Service means serving the defendant with a copy of the process, and showing him the original if he desires it."

When a statute requires service of a paper on a person, it means personal service, unless some other mode is specified. Rathbun v. Acker, 18 Barb. 386; McDermott v. Board of Police, 25 Barb. 635; People v. Lockport & B. R. Co. 18 Hun, 211.

A statute requiring personal service of a notice is not satisfied by a notice by mail, though it reaches the party to be served. Rathbun v. Acker, supra.

A clause in an order to show cause directing "service of a copy of this order on plaintiff's attorney" requires personal service. Marcele v. Saltzman, 66 How. Pr. 205, relying on Rathbun v. Acker, supra. In the first case service by mail was held irregular notwithstanding the paper was received by the plaintiff's attorney within the time fixed for service.

16 L. R. A.

See also 18 L. R. A. 498, 500.

of the report of the board of assessors to be given to nonresident persons, assessed, by publication, and to be served upon residents assessed. Held: (a) That the mailing of a copy of the notice to the address of a nonresident was insufficient service.

(b) That the service on residents must be personal; but personal service, within the meaning of the statute, would appear from the fact of the de-

A statutory requirement that a rule be served personally is not satisfied by leaving a copy at the "notorious place of abode" of the party. Bond v. Whitfield, 28 Ga. 537.

In State v. Jacobs, 47 N. C. 52, it was held that under the statute subjecting free negroes immigrating into North Carolina to prosecution if they failed to remove within twenty days after being "informed" thereof, notice to remove must be given personally and was not sufficient if left at the residence of the party.

Under an ordinance providing for prosecution after "the party shall be served with a notice" and fails to comply, notice must be served personally and is insufficient if left at his residence with his wife. St. Louis v. Goebel, 22 Mo. 295.

Service of the notice of tax sale by handing it to the wife of the occupant is not sufficient service upon him, unless done in his presence. Gage v. Bani, 141 U. S. 844, 35 L. ed. 776.

Under a statute giving highway officers power to make certain improvements and charge the expense to the adjoining owner, if he fails to make the same after written notice has been "personally given" to him, the notice is not properly served by leaving it at his residence, although it afterwards came to his hands. Simons v. Gardiner, 6 R. I. 255.

A statutory requirement that a person shall have "notice in writing" is not satisfied by simply reading the notice to the person but a copy thereof must be left. Hart v. Gray, 3 Sumn. 839.

A statute requiring a party taking a deposition to "either cause personal notice to be given by the magistrate taking such deposition to the adverse party, or a citation signed by a justice to be served on the adverse party in the same manner as a writ of summons," &c. by copy, is not satisfied by the officer serving a citation merely reading it to the party to be notified. Fitts v. Whitney, 32 Vt. 539.

Under a statute providing that a notice "shall be served personally, or by copy left with or at the usual place of abode of each occupant" it may be served by reading it to the person to be served. Green v. State, 56 Wis. 533.

The court said, "Of course, leaving a copy with the occupant would be personal service, as ordinarily understood, but it is not the only method of personal service. Here the Legislature have expressly prescribed this method in addition to per-livery of a copy of the notice to an agent duly authorized to receive it, or from circumstances justifying an inference of the actual delivery of a copy to the person to be affected thereby.

2. The return showed that the only service on some residents assessed was by leaving a copy of the notice at their residence with a member of the family. Held, that this did not show the service required by the statute.

(November 17, 1891.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment confirming proceedings for the laying out of a highway and the ascertainment of the damages and assessment of benefits. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George M. Robeson for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. John Rellstab and William M. Lanning for defendant in error.

Magie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal question presented in this case was raised by a reason filed on the return of the certiorari in the supreme court, objecting to the assessment upon plaintiff in error on the ground that certain notices had not been given as required by law. The law regulating the mode in which lands in the city of Trenton may be taken and condemned for public highways and assessments may be imposed to pay for the same, is, in the respect now in question, contained in the provisions of the "Act to Provide for the More Efficient Government of the City of Trenton," approved March 19, 1874, (Laws 1874, p. 831.) By the terms of that Act a board of assessors is required to first assess the damages sustained by each owner of land taken, including the value of such land, and to next assess the amount of such damages upon lands benefited, and to then report their action on both assessments to the common council. By section 83 of the Act the common council is required within a month from the presentation of the report, "to cause a notice of the proportion of said assessment and costs to be served upon every person, his or her guardian or legal representative, against whom the same is made, and whose residence sonal service and have, therefore, pretty clearly shown that by declaring that the notice may be personally served, they meant to include something other and different than leaving a copy with the occupant."

In Stillwell v. Kennedy, 51 Hun, 114, it is held that under the statute requiring the poor officer of a city upon being informed by a county superintendent of the poor that a pauper is being supported at his city's expense to "notify" the superintendent that he denies the liability of his city, if he desires to contest it, personal service of a notice upon the superintendent is not necessary but that receipt of the notice by mail in due time is sufficient.

Section 426 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure provides that personal service of a summons upon a defendant being a natural person be made by delivering a copy thereof "to the defendant in person."

The delivery of a summons to the right defendant by one upon whom it was served by mistake at the house of the defendant is not personal service thereof. Williams v. Van Valkenburg, 16 How. Pr. 152.

In Van Rensselaer v. Palmatier, 2 How. Pr. 24, the defendant concealed himself from the sheriff who had process to serve on him. The sheriff delivered the process to a person occupying a part of defendant's house and requested him to give it to the defendant. The defendant told such person to take the process back to the sheriff with the statement that it had been served on the wrong man. The paper never came to the hands of the defendant although he did not deny knowledge of its contents. This was held not valid personal service.

In Wallis v. Lott, 15 How. Pr. 567, a motion to set aside a judgment for irregular service was denied because (forsooth) it appeared that the defendant received the summons the next day after it was served upon another person by mistake, and more than twenty days before judgment was entered, and because he consulted counsel as to the sufficiency of such service, and allowed considerable time to elapse before making the motion.

A service forcibly made by thrusting the papers into the bosom of the person to be served is void. In case such person refuses to receive them after being informed of their nature valid personal service may be effected by leaving them in any appropriate place in his presence. Davison v. Baker, 24 How. Pr. 39.

In Van Rensselaer v. Petrie, 2 How. Pr. 94, it was held that to constitute valid personal service of declarations, "they should have been given or offered to the defendant, within his reach, or laid down within his reach."

Placing the paper on the defendant's shoulder after he had refused to receive it is valid service thereof. Bell v. Vincent, 7 Dowl. & R. 238.

In Niles v. Vanderzee, 14 How. Pr. 547, a special term decision, it appeared that after the commencement of publication for constructive service of the summons in an attachment suit against an absconding debtor, the latter returned and in answer to an inquiry as to the amount claimed was handed a copy of the summons and complaint by the plaintiff's attorney which he examined but laid down and refused to retain. It was held that, inasmuch as the plaintiff's attorney did not inform the defendant that it was intended to abandon the service by publication and to rely upon the personal service, entry of judgment as upon personal service was irregular.

There is no valid personal service of the summons and complaint where after receiving and examining them the defendant handed them back to the person attempting to make the service, who carried them away without offering to leave copies. Beekman v. Cutler, 2 N. Y. Code Rep. 51.

An admission of service of a summons and complaint will not support a judgment unless it states that they were personally served. Head v. French, 28 N. Y. 255.

Under Neb. Code Civ. Proc. §72, providing that "an acknowledgment on the back of the summons, . . . is equivalent to a service," such acknowledgment, although made in another state, is equivalent to actual legal service of such summons by the sheriff to whom it is addressed, made in his proper bailiwick. Cheney v. Harding, 21 Neb. 65.

Leaving a notice of appeal on a table in an attorney's office in the presence of the attorney who refused to receive it is a sufficient service thereof. Nathan v. Sutphen, 68 Cal. 227.

Delivery of a notice of appeal to an attorney which is returned to the party serving with the understanding that the latter shall serve it on the client, is not service thereof on the attorney. Earl v. Chapman, 3 R. D. Smith, 214. J. G. G.

is in said city, and also to cause like notice, directed to such persons as do not reside in said city, to be inserted in one or more of the newspapers of said city for the space of one month." It is also provided that, if within two months from the presentation of the report, two thirds of the persons assessed file with the city clerk their refusal in writing to agree to the assessments, no proceeding to enforce their collection shall be had; but if within that period no such refusal is filed, the assessments become binding and conclusive. They may be collected by action, or by sale of the land in respect to which they were made. While the Act does not expressly declare that the assessments will thus become binding only in case notice to those assessed has been given as required, yet this intent is so plain that it was conceded in the argument that such construction must be given to these provisions. The Legislature may prescribe how such notices may be given. The mode prescribed must be strictly followed, and the proceedings must show the prescribed notice. State v. Guttenberg, 38 N. J. L. 419; State v. Elizabeth, 40 N. J. L. 274; White v. Bayonne, 49 N. J. L. 311, 6 Cent. Rep. 536. When no mode of giving notice has been prescribed, it was also conceded that what is called "personal service" is required, and must appear. The Trenton charter directed notice to nonresidents to be given by publication; to residents, to be given by service on them, which must be construed to be personal service. The return shows that assessments were imposed on sixteen persons, of whom one was nonresident, and the others, including the plaintiff in error, were residents. It also shows that the common council directed the city clerk to give notice to them in the manner required by the charter. How he gave the notices only appears by his unverified report to the council. I cannot discover that the charter makes the service of such notices a part of his official duty, and so within the sanction of his official oath. Had the council directed any citizen to serve these notices, and then acted upon his letter stating the manner of service, the cases would seem to be undistinguishable. But this objection was not argued, and has not been considered. Assuming that the report of the city clerk properly exhibits the mode of service of the notices, it thus appears that the only service upon the nonresident was by mailing a copy of the notice to his address at Woodbury, N. J. This was obviously not a compliance with the Act, which required in that case notice to be given by publication in a newspaper.

It further thus appears that service of the notice on ten of the residents assessed, including the plaintiff in error, was only made by leaving a copy of the notice at the person's residence, with a member of the family. It is contended that this does not show such service as is required by the Trenton charter. Personal service, within the meaning of such acts, is to be distinguished on one hand from what may be called "official service," such as the personal service of a summons in an action at law, which is required to be made by the officer on the defendant in person; and, on the other hand, from substituted or constructive service, which is such as by law conclusively results from the performance of certain prescribed acts, such as publication, posting, and the like. The service required by this and similar statutes need not be made by an official or in any particular mode. If the required notice is conveyed to the person to be affected thereby, it is sufficient. When a question of such service arises in a court of law on the trial of an issue, evidence of actual delivery to the party in person is conclusive proof. But, in the absence of such direct evidence, indirect or circumstantial evidence would be admissible, and, if it justified a reasonable inference that the notice came to the hands of the party to be affected, would be sufficient proof. Whether the required service has been made in a proceeding like that before us must be determined by the facts appearing in the return. It will not, however, follow that the service must be pronounced insufficient because it is not stated that the notice was actually delivered to the person assessed in person; for if the facts stated justify a reasonable inference that the notice actually came to his hands, in the absence of counter-proof, that inference should be drawn. Moreover it cannot admit of doubt that a person to be affected by such a notice may expressly authorize an agent to receive such a notice for him, and that delivery of the notice to such an agent would be a delivery to his principal, which would be a personal service, within the meaning of such statute. But the existence of an agency, and the authority of an agent, may be implied from the acts and conduct of the principal. So if the facts stated raise the implication of an agency, with authority to receive such a notice for the principal, delivery of the notice to the agent so authorized would also be sufficient service thereof.

Similar views have been taken by English courts in the respect to the service of notice to quit, which in order to terminate certain tenancies must be served upon the tenant. In Burose v. Lucas, 5 Esp. 153, Lord Ellenborough held that proof that such a notice was left at the house, where the tenant lived would not sufficiently establish its service. But in Smith v. Clark, 9 Dowl. P. C. 203, where the proof was that notice had been delivered to the wife of the tenant at the door of his house, she being informed that it was a notice for him, it was left to the jury to say whether an actual delivery should not be inferred. The verdict showed that the jury found that there had been due service of the notice, and Lord Denman held that the inference could properly be drawn from the facts. Of like import are the cases of Griffiths v. Marsh, 4 T. R. 464; Doe v. Dunbar, Mood. & M. 10; Doe v. Watkins, 7 East, 551; Widger v. Browning, 2 Car. & P. 523; Prior v. Ongley, 10 C. B. 25. In Tanham v. Nicholson, L. R. 5 H. L. 561, it was held in the house of lords that when a tenant was shown to have an agent empowered to receive all communications for him the delivery of a notice to quit to such an agent was effectual service on the tenant. Lord Westbury held that, if the circumstances were insufficient to establish an agency, they might raise a presumption of actual delivery of the notice to the tenant, which in the absence of contradiction would be sufficient.

When a question arose in our supreme court in respect to the proper mode of serving a rule of court on a defendant corporation, it was said by the learned justice who delivered the opinion that if a defendant was an individual such a rule must be served on him personally, but if he had appeared by attorney the service might be made on the attorney. Dock v. Elizabethtown Steam Mfg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 312. But this does not carry the inference that, when no attorney had appeared, such service could only be established by proof of an actual delivery to defendant in person. The service upon the attorney was sufficient, because he was defendant's agent in the suit. On like grounds the sufficiency of a service upon any agent duly appointed and authorized may be sustained, and the view is not inconsistent with the admission of proof of service from circumstances from which actual delivery may be inferred.

While, therefore, I conclude that the contention in behalf of plaintiff in error that the service of the notices in question upon him and other residents of Trenton must appear to be of that sort which is called personal must be sustained, I do not agree that such service will only appear by a statement of actual delivery thereof to them in person. On the contrary I deem that such service would appear either from the fact of delivery to a duly accredited agent to receive such notice or from circumstances justifying an inference of actual delivery. But, looked at in this light, it is obvious the proceeding before us does not show any sufficient service of notice on the persons assessed who were residents. The only fact stated is that a copy was left at the residence with a member of the family. It does not appear of what age or degree of intelligence the member of the family was, nor whether accustomed to receive communications for the person affected by the notice. There is nothing therefore, which shows delivery to an accredited agent. Nor is the single circumstance which is stated sufficient to justify an inference of the actual delivery of a notice. This conclusion is fatal to the assessment imposed on the plaintiff in error. But if that assessment be set aside, and the award for lands taken remain undisturbed, plaintiff in error may collect from the city the amount thereof. Unless that amount can by some subsequent proceeding be imposed on lands benefited according to the plain intent of the charter, the city cannot reimburse itself.

Extensive powers have been given to the courts by the "general Act respecting taxes, assessments, and water-rates" (Supp. Rev. 602) to reimpose any defective assessment upon lands in fact liable thereto. So under other general Acts a partial reassessment may be made by the city. But the charter of Trenton is peculiar. Power has been given the city to condemn lands for public streets, and to assess the expense on lands benefited; but if two thirds of those assessed object in the specified mode the assessments for benefits cannot be collected. Moreover the city may within a specified time abandon the proposed improvement, when the right of the owner to collect the award, and the right of the city to take the land, will cease. Section 84. These peculiar features, designed for the relief of the assessed and of the city, remove this case out of the operation of the first Act above referred to. For these lands are not at all events subject to these assessments, but only in case the due proportion of the assessed fail to object, and the city does not exercise its option of abandoning the improvement. The right to object, and to have all parties interested so notified that they may object, and the right to abandon, ought not to be taken from the parties. Those rights can only be preserved by setting aside the whole report, so that a new report can be made; for they can only be exercised within a limited time after the presentation to council of the report. The whole report, with the resolution of January 21, 1890, should be set aside.

Other objections to the proceeding were strongly urged in argument, but on consideration no error has been discovered in the determination of the supreme court thereon.

The judgment must be reversed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Annie PURCELL, Resp't.,
v.
ST. PAUL CITY R. CO., Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. If the negligence of a carrier place a passenger in a position of such apparent imminent peril as to cause fright, and the fright causes nervous convulsions and illness, the negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, and the injury is one for which an action may be brought.

*Head notes by GILFILLAN, Ch. J.

2. A passenger injured by negligence of the carrier is entitled to recover to the full extent of the injury so caused, without regard to whether, owing to his previous condition of health, he is more or less liable to injury.

(January 12, 1893.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling a general demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—For a note on fright as a basis of a cause of action, see Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 686, in which case it was held that fright alone was not the basis of a cause of action although that case was distinguishable from 16 L. R. A.

this, being one in which a woman was frightened by cars thrown by collision against her dwelling-house, and did not involve the duty of a carrier toward a passenger.

Mr. Henry J. Horn, for appellant :

The alleged negligence of the defendant was not the natural and proximate cause of the injuries complained of.

The plaintiff evidently assigns her fright or mental distress as the direct consequence of the alleged negligence of the defendant, and the alleged physical injury which ensued as the consequence of the fright.

It appears, also, that the plaintiff was in that delicate condition in which one so situated is susceptible to groundless alarms, and which accounts more naturally and fairly for her alleged grievance than the conduct of the defendant.

Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co. 6 Nev. 234, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 452; Lehman v. Brooklyn R. Co. 47 Hun, 355; Wulstein v. Mohlman, 25 N. Y. S. R. 691; Flemington v. Smithers, 2 Car. & P. 292; Victorian R. Comrs. v. Coultas, 13 App. Cas. 222; Renner v. Canfield, 38 Minn. 90; Keyes v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. Id. 290; 3 Suth. Damages. 259, 260, note 5; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 267; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 29.

In an action against a common carrier for injuries sustained by a passenger, an instruction allowing the jury in estimating damages to consider the character of the plaintiff's "pain of mind," aside and distinct from his bodily suffering, is error.

Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co. supra.

One who obtains property by duress of threats is not liable for consequential mental distress and physical suffering caused by such distress as such damages are too remote.

Wulstein v. Mohlman, supra.

The mental distress and anxiety which may be proved in actions for personal injuries is confined to such as is connected with the bodily injury.

Keyes v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., and Renner v. Canfield, supra.

Messrs. Johnston W. Straight, and Leonard A. Straight, for respondent:

The physical bodily injury complained of and caused to the plaintiff was the direct and proximate result of the negligent, careless, and tortious act of the defendant.

An efficient adequate cause being found it must be considered the true cause, unless some other cause not incident thereto, but independent of it is shown to have intervened between it and the result.

Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 475, 24 L. ed. 259.

If the state of facts complained of was brought about through the negligence of defendant and it produced directly, without an efficient intervening cause, the bodily injury complained of, then clearly the defendant is liable. The new cause or force, if any, was set in motion by the first, original cause, the negligent act of the company, and therefore the bodily injury complained of comes equally within the rule and the authorities, whether the effect was produced directly upon the body of plaintiff or through the medium of the mind and nervous system.

Montoya v. London Assur. Co. 6 Exch. 451; Smith v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 30 Minn. 169; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell, 23 Pa. 147; 16 L. R. A.

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Lockhart, 79 Ala. 315; Borée v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183; Oliver v. LaVale, 36 Wis. 592; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 351; Seger v. Barkhamsted, 22 Conn. 290; Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. 211; McKinny v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 44 Iowa, 322, 24 Am. Rep. 748; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 333; Sneeby v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 42; Lund v. Tyngsboro, 11 Cush. 563, 59 Am. Dec. 159; Montoya v. London Assur. Co. and Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, supra; Fent v. Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. 59 Ill. 349; 2 Redf. Railways, 4th ed. 238; Wharton, Neg. §§ 93, 94.

Gillilan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from an order overruling a general demurrer to the complaint. From the complaint it appears that the plaintiff was a passenger on one of defendant's cars running upon its line on Jackson street, St. Paul; that, when the car reached the intersection of that line with the defendant's cable-car line running on East Seventh street, the persons in charge of it negligently attempted to cross, and did cross, the cable line in front of a then near and rapidly approaching cable train thereon; that a collision seemed so imminent and was so nearly caused, that the incident and attending confusion of ringing alarm-bells and passengers rushing out of the car caused to plaintiff sudden fright and reasonable fear of immediate death or great bodily injury, and that the shock thus caused threw her into violent convulsions, and caused to her she being then pregnant, a miscarriage, and subsequent illness. The complaint shows a duty on the part of the defendant to exercise the highest degree of care to carry the plaintiff safely. It also shows negligence in respect to that duty, and, if the negligence caused what the law regards as actionable injury, the action is well brought. Of course, negligence without injury gives no right of action. On the argument there was much discussion of the question whether fright and mental distress alone constitute such injury that the law will allow a recovery for it. The question is not involved in the case. So it may be conceded that any effect of a wrongful act or neglect on the mind alone will not furnish ground of action. Here is a physical injury, as serious, certainly, as would be the breaking of an arm or a leg. Does the complaint show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of that injury? If so, the action will, of course, lie. What is in law a proximate cause is well expressed in the definition, often quoted with approval, given in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256, as follows: "The primary cause may be the proximate cause of a disaster, though it operate through successive instruments; as, an article at the end of a chain may be moved by a force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement; or, as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market place. Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892. The question always is, Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury,—a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? There may be a succession of intermediate causes, each produced by the one preceding, and producing the one following it. It must appear that the injury was the natural consequence of the wrongful act or omission. The new, independent, intervening cause must be one not produced by the wrongful act or omission, but independent of it, and adequate to bring about the injurious result. Whether the natural connection of events was maintained, or was broken by such new, independent cause, is generally a question for the jury. In this case the only cause that can be suggested as intervening between the negligence and the injury is plaintiff's condition of mind, to-wit, her fright. Could that be a natural, adequate cause of the nervous convulsions? The mind and body operate reciprocally on each other. Physical injury or illness sometimes causes mental disease, a mental shock or disturbance sometimes causes injury or illness of body especially of the nervous system. Now, if the fright was the natural consequence of—was brought about, caused by—the circumstances of peril and alarm in which defendants negligence placed plaintiff, and the fright caused the nervous shock and convulsions and consequent illness, the negligence was the proximate cause of those injuries. That a mental condition or operation on the part of the one injured comes between the negligence and injury does not necessarily break the required sequence of intermediate causes. If a passenger be placed, by the carrier's negligence, in apparent, imminent peril, and, obeying the natural instinct of self-preservation, endeavor to escape it by leaping from the car or coach, and in doing so is injured, he may, if there be no contributory negligence on his part, recover for the injury, although, had he remained in the car or coach he would not have been injured. The endeavor to escape is not of itself contributory negligence. Wilson v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 28 Minn. 278. In such case though, there comes, as an intermediate cause between the negligence and injury, a condition or operation of mind on the part of the injured passenger, the negligence is nevertheless the proximate cause of the injury. The defendant suggested that plaintiff's pregnancy rendered her more susceptible to groundless alarm, and accounts more naturally and fairly than defendants negligence for the injurious consequences. Certainly a woman in her condition has as good a right to be carried as anyone, and is entitled to at least as high a degree of care on the part of the carrier. It may be that, where a passenger, without the knowledge of the carrier is sick, feeble, or disabled, the latter does not owe to him a higher degree of care than he owes to passengers generally and that the carrier would not be liable to him for an injury caused by an act or omission not negligent as to an ordinary passenger. But when the act or omission is negligence as to any and all passengers, well or ill, anyone injured by the negligence must be entitled to recover to the full extent of the injury so caused, without regard to whether, owing to his previous condition of health, he is more or less liable to injury. If the recovery of a passenger in feeble health were to be limited to what he would have been entitled to had he been sound, then, in case of a destruction by fire or wrecking of a railroad car through the negligence of those in charge of it, if all the passengers but one were able to leave it in time to escape injury, and that one could not, because sick or lame, he could not recover at all. The suggestion mentioned would, if carried to its logical consequences, lead to such a conclusion.

Order affirmed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUPREME COURT, GENERAL TERM.

John A. BUTLER

v.

Richard J. JOYCE.

(.....D. C.)

An action at law on a lost negotiable note cannot be maintained although the loss happened after maturity.

(October 23, 1891.)

MOTION by plaintiff for new trial upon a bill of exceptions taken at the Trial Term during the trial of an action upon a promissory note. New trial refused.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. J. Darlington for plaintiff, in support of the motion.

Mr. H. E. Davis for defendant, contra.

NOTE.—Right of action at law on lost negotiable paper.

In several states as well as in England statutes now provide expressly for bringing actions on lost bills and notes or other instruments, but in some jurisdictions the question is still one to be determined by the decisions.

Non-negotiable paper.

If a note is not negotiable, an action at law will lie upon it after it is lost, Wain v. Bailey, 10 Ad. & El. 610.
16 L. R. A.

Where the negotiability of a promissory note is restrained by statute, a recovery on a lost note may be had in an action at law. Reynolds v. French, 8 Vt. 85, 30 Am. Dec. 456; Clark v. Reed, 13 Smedes & M. 554; Wofford v. Holmes County Board of Police, 44 Miss. 579.

So a sealed note not being negotiable, a suit at law may be brought upon it after its loss. Whiteside v. Wallace, 2 Speer, L. 128.

See also 24 L. R. A. 444; 38 L. R. A. 843; 40 L. R. A. 244.

James, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The papers in this cause having been mislaid or lost, it is heard upon stipulation of the attorneys of the parties that the state of the record was as follows:

"The action was upon an alleged promissory note of the defendant, dated Washington, D. C. September 26, 1876, promising to pay to Ann Joyce, or order, twelve months after date $512.85, for value received, with interest until paid, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable at the National Metropolitan Bank, and indorsed by the said Ann Joyce to the plaintiff. The declaration contained a special count, in the usual form, upon the said promissory note, together with the common counts, and was accompanied by an attachment in the usual form, of certain property interests of the defendant, based upon his nonresidence in the District of Columbia. The pleas were, that the defendant was not indebted as alleged; that he never was indebted as alleged; that he did not promise as alleged; that the cause of action did not accrue within three years; and that the said promissory note was not indorsed by the payee, on which pleas there was the usual joinder of issue.

At the trial below, the plaintiff testified that the note was executed and indorsed as alleged, that the consideration for the note was money loaned by him to the defendant, the payee being merely as accommodation indorser; that the plaintiff continued the holder of said note from the time he received it until the time of trial; that it was duly presented, and dishonored; that the defendant acknowledged his liability and promised payment within three years before action brought; that, the said note not being paid, the plaintiff placed it for collection in the hands of John F. Riley, Esq., then a member of the bar of this court; that the said Riley subsequently left the jurisdiction without having collected the note, or returned it to the plaintiff, that the plaintiff made diligent efforts to obtain the said note, both by correspondence with the said Riley, and by having search made among his legal papers which remained in the city, but that the said note could not be found and was hopelessly lost and remained wholly unpaid. Thereupon, upon the motion of the defend-Presumptions.

A lost note will not be presumed to be negotiable so as to defeat an action thereon at law. Blade v. Noland, 12 Wend. 173, 27 Am. Dec. 128; Lazell v. Lazell, 12 Vt. 443, 36 Am. Dec. 352.

The same rule applies on an objection that no bond or indemnity was given which is necessary by statute only in case the lost note was negotiable. Wright v. Wright, 54 N. Y. 437.

It will not be presumed that a lost note was payable to bearer or had been in fact negotiated by the payee prior to its loss if it was payable to order. Lazell v. Lazell, supra; Chaudron v. Hunt, 8 Stew. (Ala.) 31, 20 Am. Dec. 60.

Negotiable paper.

The fair deduction from the decisions is that an action at law will not lie upon a lost negotiable instrument which had not when lost become subject in the hands of any holder to such equities as might exist in favor of the maker.

In early English cases in, which the question of jurisdiction between law and equity was not discussed it was held that there could be no recovery on a lost note without showing that defendant would not be again subject to pay it. Dangerfield v. Wilby, 4 Esp. 159; Davis v. Dodd, 4 Taunt. 602.

In Hart v. King, 12 Mod. 310, an action on a protested bill that was lost held good on defendant's admission that he drew it.

No action at law lies on a lost negotiable bill which has been accepted. Ramuz v. Crowe, 1 Exch. 187.

One who loses a bill indorsed in blank which was given for a debt cannot sue either on the bill or for the debt. Champion v. Terry, 2 Brod. & B. 295.

So held also without any showing as to the indorsement of the lost bill. Crowe v. Clay, 9 Exch. 604.

If a lost bill was indorsed no action at law will lie upon it even by giving indemnity. Pierson v. Hutchinson, 2 Campb. 211.

But it is otherwise if the indorsement was special. Long v. Bailie, 2 Campb. 214, note.

The assignee of a note which is lost with a blank indorsement upon it cannot sue thereon at law. Willis v. Cressy, 17 Me. 9.

An action at law will not lie on a lost negotiable 16 L. R. A.

note transferable by delivery. Moses v. Trice, 23 Gratt. 553, 8 Am. Rep. 619.

The fact that the sum involved is too small for a suit in equity, will not give a right to sue at law on a lost note and establish the loss by plaintiff's own oath. Chancy v. Baldwin, 46 N.C. 78; Grant v. Reid, Id. 512.

But in several early American cases an action at law was maintained on a lost negotiable bill or note without any discussion of the question of jurisdiction. Robinson v. Bank of Darien, 18 Ga. 65; Meeker v. Jackson, 3 Yeates, 442; Aborn v. Bosworth, 1 R. L. 401; Anderson v. Robeson, 2 Bay, 495.

In the Pennsylvania and Rhode Island cases plaintiff's own testimony was allowed to establish the loss.

In Massachusetts it is held that an action may be maintained at law upon a lost note on giving suitable indemnity and that the objection against the jurisdiction of a court of law to order or judge of the sufficiency of an indemnity is rather ideal than solid. Fales v. Russell, 16 Pick. 315.

In Connecticut also it is said that an action at law will lie on a lost negotiable note by giving indemnity. Bridgeport v. Masonville Mfg. Co. 34 Conn. 546, 91 Am. Dec. 744.

In this case, however, the note was payable to order and was not indorsed.

In an early Connecticut case it was held that plaintiff in an action upon a note which was not produced must show that if not destroyed at least it could not be again collected of the defendant by a bona fide holder, the question of jurisdiction was not raised. Swift v. Stevens, 8 Conn. 431.

In Louisiana, where the civil law prevails, the question of jurisdiction as between law and equity on a lost note does not arise, and a suit will lie upon it by indemnifying the defendant. Nagel v. Magnot, 8 Mart. 438; Lewis v. Petayvin, 4 Mart. N. S. 4.

Paper overdue or otherwise subject to equities.

On notes or bills lost after they were due, an action at law may be maintained. Thayer v. King, 15 Ohio, 242, 45 Am. Dec. 571; Mowery v. Mast, 14 Neb. 510; Sloo v. Roberts, 7 Ind. 123; Elliott v. Woodward, 18 Ind. 183.

Other decisions like the main case hold, on the contrary, that although a note payable to bearer was due at the time it was lost, an action at law ant's counsel the justice presiding at the trial struck out all the testimony of the plaintiff concerning the said note, against the objection of the plaintiff, who then and there excepted to said action of the court.

"Thereupon the plaintiff further offered to prove by testimony of William G. Moore, Esq., notary public, that the said notary presented the said promissory note at its maturity, at the bank at which it was made payable, and demanded payment thereof, but was answered by the discount clerk, "no funds;" that he thereupon protested the said note, and made a true copy thereof, which he produced at the trial; but the justice presiding, upon the objection of the counsel for the defendant, refused to receive any portion of the testimony of said William G. Moore, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff then and there excepted.

"Thereupon, the plaintiff offering no further testimony, the attorney for the defendant moved the court to direct a verdict for the defendant, which motion the justice presiding, against the objection of the plaintiff, granted, and the plaintiff then and there excepted thereto.

"A bill of exception, presenting the foregoing facts, the rulings of the presiding justice and the exceptions thereto of the plaintiff, was thereupon duly settled and signed and sealed by said justice."

The question to be considered is, whether an action at law may be maintained against the maker on a lost negotiable promissory note, and, if it may be, whether such an action may be maintained in the circumstances of this case.

The plaintiff refers to the case of Boteler v. Dexter, decided by this court at a recent term, (19 Wash. L. Rep. 374, March 9, 1891,) as an authority showing that an action at law on a lost promissory note was sustained even against one whom was held to have placed cannot be brought by the owner as the holder could make out prima facie a cause of action and the maker would be exposed to the hazard of showing the facts by legal evidence. Rowley v. Ball, 3 Cow. 303, 15 Am. Dec. 236; Moses v. Trice, 21 Gratt. 556, 8 Am. Rep. 609.

So chancery has jurisdiction of a suit on a lost note although it was due when lost. Chewning v. Singleton, 2 Hill, Ch. 371.

So in England the indorsee of a bill who has lost it cannot recover at law against the acceptor although it was overdue when lost and he offers indemnity, as by the custom of merchants, the acceptor is entitled for his own security to the possession of the bill when he pays it. Hansard v. Robinson, 7 Barn. & C. 90; Poole v. Smith, Holt, N. P. 144.

If a note although negotiable was payable to order and was not indorsed at the time when it was lost an action may be maintained upon it. Chaudron v. Hunt, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 31, 20 Am. Dec. 60.

In many cases it is said that if a note was not negotiable or if negotiable had not in fact been negotiated before its loss, an action may be maintained upon it after its loss. This statement is apparently intended to apply only to negotiable notes payable to order and by the phrase "had not been negotiated" it is evidently meant had not been indorsed in blank or in such manner as to be collectible in the hands of a wrongful holder. Ibid; Moore v. Fall, 42 Me. 450, 68 Am. Dec. 297; Pintard v. Tackington, 10 Johns. 104; McNair v. Gilbert, 3 Wend. 344.

If a note pass into the hands of the holder charged with all the equities which exist against the original holder, the action upon it may be at law, although it is lost. Thayer v. King, 15 Ohio, 242, 45 Am. Dec. 371.

A note payable to order lost without any indorsement or with a restricted indorsement upon it will sustain an action at law. Posey v. Decatur Bank, 12 Ala. 402; Branch Bank at Mobile v. Tillman, Id. 214; Depew v. Wheelan, 3 Blackf. 455; Bean v. Keen, 7 Blackf. 152; Dean v. Speakman, Id. 317; Templin v. Krahn, 3 Ind. 373.

If a bill payable to order is lost without any indorsement, this will not defeat an action against the acceptor for the debt on account of which the bill was drawn. Rolt v. Watson, 12 Moore, 510, 4 Bing. 273.

If the Statute of Limitations will be a good defense against a bona fide holder of a lost note an action at law may be brought upon it without any indemnity. Torrey v. Foss, 40 Me. 74.

16 L. R. A.

Action against indorser.

An action at law against an indorser cannot be maintained upon a lost note where a bond to indemnify him against being called on a second time to pay the note, will not afford him adequate protection. Tuttle v. Standish, 4 Allen, 481, 31 Am. Dec. 712.

This distinction between an action against an indorser and the maker of a lost note is based on the difference in their relations to it, as the indorser after payment has a property interest in the note and may need it to use in various ways as the evidence of his own right therein. Ibid.

Loss pending action.

The destruction of a note pending an action at law upon it is not fatal to such action. Bilas v. Covington & L. Turnp. Co. 9 Dana, 295; Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 23 U. S. 9 Wheat. 551, 6 L. ed. 166; Boteler v. Dexter, 19 Wash. L. Rep. 374; Moore v. Fall, 42 Me. 450, 68 Am. Dec. 297; Jones v. Fales, 5 Mass. 101.

But an action at law cannot be maintained on a lost note payable to bearer, even if it was lost after the commencement of the suit. Kirby v. Sigson, 2 Wend. 550.

The loss of a note pending an action upon it does not require the plaintiff to proceed as is required by statute in an action upon a lost note. German Sav. Bank v. Kerlin, 53 Mo. 382.

Destroyed bill or note.

If a bill or note is totally destroyed an action may be brought thereon at law. Branch Bank at Mobile v. Tillman, 12 Ala. 214; Bank of Mobile v. Meagher, 33 Ala. 622; Thayer v. King, 15 Ohio, 242, 45 Am. Dec. 371; Moses v. Trice, 21 Gratt. 556, 8 Am. Rep. 609.

So it has been expressly decided that equity never had jurisdiction of a suit on a bill of exchange that was destroyed and not merely lost. Wright v. Maidstone, 1 Kay & J. 701.

In Edwards v. McKee, 1 Mo. 123, 13 Am. Dec. 474, a count in a declaration declaring on a lost promissory note was held bad on demurrer, but the decision seems to be based on the fact that the note had been destroyed by time and accident, which appeared in other counts and the decision does not directly touch the question of a lost note, while on the question of a destroyed note it stands utterly at variance with other decisions. B. A. R.

his name on the note in the character of indorser. It appears in the report of that case that a prior suit had been brought against the same defendant, that the case came on for trial, that the note was presented and proven at the trial, that then, for some reason, the case was dismissed "without prejudice," and that thereafter the suit in question was brought on June 15, 1887. It further appeared that on or about February 28, 1888, after the suit had been pending for some time, the plaintiff lost the note and never had been able since to find it, although he had searched for it diligently. As to the objection that no recovery could be had at law upon a lost note, the court said: "If the first of these questions (namely, the questions just stated), were an open one, it would be worthy of the utmost consideration, and many potent reasons might be arrayed in support of, as well as against it, and there are many eminent authorities on either side. But we regard it as settled in this jurisdiction by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 581, 6 L. ed. 166, where the question was treated as one of evidence, and it was held that where the original note, having been in court but a short time before, and introduced in evidence in another trial, was thereafter lost by accident, and upon thorough search could not be found, there being nothing to indicate a suspicion that it was purposely withheld, and no doubt existing as to its real contents, parol evidence as to such contents might be given and a recovery had upon it. That case was in all material respects like the one under consideration, and must, we think, govern it."

It appears that in the case referred to as binding on this court, the action was against an indorser. Mr. Justice Thompson, speaking for the majority of the court, there said: "The only remaining question arises out of a bill of exceptions, taken upon the trial, to the decision of the court below, admitting secondary evidence of the contents of the note. And it has been contended that no such evidence was admissible, unless it appears that the note was destroyed. The rule with respect to the admission of secondary evidence, we think, is not so restricted. If the original is lost by accident, and no fault is imputable to the party, it is sufficient. In the present case, it appeared that the note was in court a few days before, and introduced in evidence in the trial against Foyles, the maker, but had been mislaid, and upon thorough search could not be found. Every case of this kind must depend, in a great measure, upon its own circumstances. This rule of evidence must be so applied as to promote the ends of justice, and guard against fraud or imposition. If the circumstances will justify a well-grounded belief that the original paper is kept back by design no secondary evidence ought to be admitted; but when no such suspicion attaches, and the paper is of that description that no doubt can arise as to the proof of its contents, there can be no danger in admitting the secondary evidence. In this case, the note having been in court a few days before, and proved, upon a trial against the maker, there could be no possible inducement to withhold it, and it was, no doubt, mislaid by accident."

16 L. R. A.

It is to be observed that in Renner v. Bank of Columbia, and the case decided by this court, the note was lost after the suit on it was brought; in other words, that there was no doubt of the jurisdiction and complete competency of a court of law to entertain an action on the note at the time when the suit was brought. It was assumed by the Supreme Court, though the point was not mentioned, that jurisdiction is not lost by a loss of the proofs on which it would found its judgment. It was for that reason, we must suppose, that the court treated the question as one simply of evidence, and held, notwithstanding the peculiarities of negotiable paper, that the ordinary principles relating to secondary evidence applied.

It was suggested at the argument that, although we might be bound by the decision in Renner v. Bank of Columbia, in a strictly analogous case, we should limit its application on the ground that it was opposed to the prevailing doctrine as to lost negotiable instruments. We are not compelled to consider that question in this case. It is enough to say that Renner v. Bank of Columbia is not an authority which pretends to govern the case where an action at law is brought on a negotiable instrument already lost at the time of bringing the action. In that case the question is not whether the evidence of contents is admissible in support of an action at law properly brought, but whether a right to bring such an action existed at the time when it was brought. On this question we have an unembarrassed opinion. The prevailing doctrine, to which nothing in Renner v. Bank of Columbia, or in our own former decision is opposed, is that a court of law is not competent to entertain an action upon a lost negotiable instrument, inasmuch as such a court must, in doing so, alter one of its terms annexed by usage, being unable to supply the place of possession by providing indemnity.

Mercantile custom, in other words, the law of such transactions, constitutes a part of the contract just as much as does the obligation to pay at all; and according to that custom it is a right of an obligor on a negotiable instrument to have, on paying it, the protection afforded by possession, or, in case possession cannot be given him, by an indemnity. If the instrument cannot be surrendered by reason of its loss, it is nothing to the purpose that the loss happened after maturity, and that the promisor can therefore successfully defend himself against a new holder by proving payment. That is precisely what promisee has no legal right, according to mercantile custom, the law of the contract, to call upon him to do at his own expense. It is immaterial whether the loss occurred by the negligence of the promisee; as between him and the promisor the burden is on him, and when he is unable to surrender possession, and thus to comply with his customary obligation, he is not in a position to enforce payment, unless he secures the promisor against risks which do not belong to him. The promisee simply has no right to enforce payment in departure from the custom of such transactions. It follows that a court which cannot place the promisor on the same footing of safety which a surrender of the instrument would give him—that is to say, by providing an indemnity—is incompetent to enforce payment, because it has no power to provide such indemnity and must therefore enforce the contract in departure from its terms.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the other exceptions.

Judgment is affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Herman WRONKOW, Appt.,

v.

Hobart OAKLEY et al.

Charles WOLFF, Purchaser Applying for Relief, Resp't.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. A wife's inchoate right of dower may be released by her husband on his conveyance of the land where under Laws 1878, chap. 300, empowering her to give a power of attorney as if single, she has given him a power of attorney to convey for her and in her name and as her act and to sign, sell, execute, acknowledge and deliver all necessary releases of dower and thirds.
2. The suspension of a judgment pending an appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 1236 by entry of the words "lien suspended on appeal" suspends the lien of the judgment pending the appeal not only as to the property then subject to the lien of the judgment, but as to after-acquired property.
3. The liability of sureties on an appeal bond is wholly discharged when the judgment is paid by sureties upon a bond for further appeal to a higher court after affirmance by it.

NOTE.—Release of inchoate right of dower by attorney under power given by married woman.

The common-law disability of a married woman plainly prevented her from giving a valid power of attorney to release her inchoate right of dower. So in Steele v. Lewis, 1 T. B. Mon. 43, it was held that in the absence of statutory authority she could not make a conveyance by an attorney.

And even under statutes which authorize a conveyance by a married woman, but which required a private examination as to her execution of the instrument, several cases have held that she could not bar or convey her own land by giving a power of attorney, as the attorney could not be examined in her stead. Lewis v. Cox, 5 Harr. (Del.) 401; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 583; Dawson v. Shirley, 6 Blackf. 531; Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9.

So a power of attorney was held not to be within either the letter or spirit of a statute relating to acknowledgments of conveyances by married women. Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110, 50 Am. Dec. 103.

But in Munger v. Baldrige, 41 Kan. 236, it was decided that a wife might by power of attorney, appoint her husband her agent to convey her inchoate interest in his lands which she had been given by statute in lieu of dower, where the statutes gave married women the same rights as married men in respect to contracts with reference to their property and also provided that a "conveyance of land or of any other estate or interest therein may be made by deed, executed by any person having authority to convey the same or by his agent or attorney."

16 L. R. A.

and the latter cannot, by taking an assignment of the judgment, raise any liability on the part of the former which will give them an interest in the judgment debtor's property and make them necessary parties to foreclosure proceedings against him.

(June 17, 1892.)

A PPEAL by complainant from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of a Special Term for New York County refusing to relieve the purchaser at a sale in foreclosure proceedings from his bid on the alleged ground of defective title. Reversed.

ANDREWS, J., delivered the following opinion at General Term:

"The action was brought to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage for $5,000, dated September 2, 1890. The action was commenced October 22, 1891, and judgment of foreclosure and sale was entered December 22, 1891. By the terms of the judgment the premises were directed to be sold subject to a lease expiring May 1, 1893, and to a first mortgage for $17,019.22. The property was sold at auction on January 21, 1892, and the

This decision was followed in Wilkinson v. Elliott, 43 Kan. 530.

So a conveyance by attorney under power from husband and wife was held good under a statute providing that the wife joining her husband in a deed, mortgage, conveyance, power of attorney or other writing of or relating to the sale, conveyance, or other disposition of land or real estate shall be bound and concluded by the same in respect of her right, title, claim, interest or dower. Hull v. Glover, 126 Ill. 123.

A power to sell, mortgage or otherwise dispose of lands given by a nonresident married woman who is given by statute the authority to convey real estate by power of attorney is broad enough to include her dower right without express mention of it. Parker v. Baker, 12 N. Y. S. R. 563.

In Holladay v. Dally, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 609, 23 L. ed. 188, a deed given by an attorney in the name of the husband alone under a power from both husband and wife was held good. But in this case the wife's joinder was immaterial as by statute she was entitled to dower only in lands of which her husband died seised.

In the progress of removing the disabilities of married women which has been constantly going on in recent years the right of a married woman to give a power of attorney has been expressly conferred by statute in several states, but the main case is the first one of which we have knowledge to apply the general grant of authority to give a power of attorney to the subject of a release of an inchoate right of dower.

B. A. R.

petitioner, Charles Wolff, was the purchaser, for the price of $5,600, over and above the incumbrances above mentioned; and said petitioner paid to the referee $560, 10 per cent on the amount of his bid, together with the auctioneer's and exchange fee, and signed the usual terms of sale. Subsequently a motion was made by the petitioner to be relieved from his purchase, and from the order denying such motion this appeal is taken.

"It appears that one Moritz Bauer became the owner of the equity of redemption of the mortgaged premises, by deed from Hobart Oakley, dated October 4, 1890. By deed dated October 20, 1890, executed by said Moritz Bauer in his own behalf, and also executed by said Bauer in the name of his wife, Cecilia Bauer, as her attorney in fact, such equity of redemption was conveyed to one Randolph Guggenheimer. The power of attorney, under which said Bauer acted as the attorney of his wife, was executed and acknowledged by her, and recorded in the year 1881. It describes both the parties thereto as being of the city of New York, and so likewise does the deed to Guggenheimer. Said power authorizes said attorney, 'to contract for the sale of, and to grant, bargain, sell, and convey, all or any lands, tenements, or hereditaments or real estate to me belonging, situate, lying, and being within the United States of America whether belonging to me individually or jointly with another or others, at public or private sale, for cash or upon credit, or partly for cash and partly upon credit; and for such price or prices, and upon such other terms and conditions, as to my said attorney may seem meet and proper; and for the purpose aforesaid, and in my name, place, and stead, as my act and deed, to sign, seal, execute, and acknowledge and deliver all necessary or proper contracts, deeds, conveyances, releases, releases of dower and thirds, and right of dower and thirds, or other instruments for the conveying, surrendering, and relinquishing all or any part of my estate, right, title, and interest, whether vested or contingent, choate or inchoate therein.' Mrs. Bauer was not made a party to this action. It also appeared that certain persons had obtained judgments against Moritz Bauer prior to the time that he acquired title to the property in question, and which, by orders of court, made also prior to Bauer's acquisition of title, had been marked, 'Lien suspended,' or 'Partially suspended upon appeal,' and that such persons were not made parties to this action.

"The objection to the title based upon the failure to make the wife of Moritz Bauer a party to the action presents the questions (a) of the power of a resident married woman to release her dower by attorney; (b) of her right, if she has such power, to make her husband her attorney for such purpose; and (c) whether the power of attorney, if otherwise valid, authorized the release of the wife's dower in after-acquired property and for a nominal consideration. These questions are important, because the decision of them not only affects the title of the property in question, but may affect many other titles.

16 L. R. A.

The Revised Statutes of this state contain the following provision: 'No act, deed, or conveyance, executed or performed by the husband, without the assent of his wife, evidenced by the acknowledgment thereof, in the manner required by law to pass the estates of married women, and no judgment or decree confessed by or recovered against him, and no laches, default, covin, or crime of the husband, shall prejudice the right of his wife to her dower or jointure, or preclude her from the recovery thereof, if otherwise entitled thereto.' 4 Rev. Stat. 8th ed. p. 2456. It has been decided by the courts of this state that the only way in which a wife can release her dower during the life of her husband is by joining with him in a conveyance to a third person. Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige, 488, 8 L. ed. 241; Elmendorf v. Lockwood, 57 N. Y. 322; People v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 66 How. Pr. 115; Ford v. Knapp, 51 Hun, 522. It has also been held by the courts of other states, under statutes similar to our own, that the wife must execute the release herself, and that she cannot release by power of attorney. See 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 914, and cases there cited.

"In 1873, however, the Legislature of this state passed the following statute: 'Any married woman, being a resident of this state and of the age of twenty-one years or more, may execute, acknowledge, and deliver her power of attorney, with like force and effect, and in the same manner, as if she were a single woman.' The question presented for decision, is whether, assuming that prior to the passage of this statute a married woman could not release her dower through an attorney in fact, this statute has authorized her to do so. It is suggested that the statute does not authorize a married woman to release her dower through an attorney, because the Act provides that she may execute, acknowledge, and deliver her power of attorney, with like force and effect, and in the same manner, as if she were a single woman; and that the Legislature in assimilating the case of the wife to that of the single woman could not have intended to authorize the former to act through an attorney in any manner in which the latter could not do so; and that a single woman cannot, of course, ever be vested with such an estate, and cannot, therefore, appoint an attorney for the purpose of releasing dower, therefore a married woman cannot do so. We think this is too narrow an interpretation of the statute. It is a general maxim of the law that whatever a man sui juris may do of himself he may do by another, and the same maxim applies of course to a single woman. We think that the true interpretation of the statute is that just as a single woman can appoint an attorney to perform any act which she herself can do, so any act which can be done by a married woman of herself can be done by her duly appointed attorney; and, as a married woman can release her dower by joining with her husband in a conveyance of the property to a third party, she may perform that act through an attorney. It may be said that, as the Legislature originally prescribed a particular way in which a married woman could release her dower, such special provision of the Revised Statutes should not be considered as modified or affected by the general provisions of the above-quoted Act of 1878, which does not in terms refer to the release of dower, and which authorizes a power of attorney to be acknowledged in the same manner as if the woman executing the power were single. There would be force in this objection if the law in relation to acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments by married women had remained as it was when the Revised Statutes were adopted. It was provided in those statutes that the acknowledgment of a married woman residing within this state to a conveyance purporting to be executed by her should not be taken unless, in addition to the requisites required in the case of other persons, she acknowledged, on a private examination apart from her husband, that she executed such conveyance freely, and without any fear or compulsion of her husband. And the provision of the Revised Statutes above quoted, in regard to conveyances releasing the right of the wife to her dower, provided that the assent of the wife must be evidenced by the acknowledgment thereof, in the manner required by law to pass the estates of married women. It appears to have been considered by the Legislature that these provisions, in reference to the manner in which conveyances executed by married women should be acknowledged, afforded great protection to them, but, whether such opinion was or was not well founded, such provisions have been entirely swept away by later legislation; for, in 1879, the Legislature passed the following statute: 'The acknowledgment by married women, or the proof of the execution by married women, of deeds, or other written instruments, may be made, taken, and certified in the same manner as if they were sole; and all acts and parts of acts which require for them any other or different acknowledgments, proofs, or certificates thereof are hereby repealed.' 4 Rev. Stat. 8th ed. p. 2487. As above stated, under the said Act of 1878, acknowledgments of powers of attorney could be made by married women as if they were single; but, under said Act of 1879, all acknowledgments of married women of the execution of deeds and other written instruments can now be made, taken, and certified in the same manner as if they are single, and the protection—if it was any protection—of married women, in regard to their dower rights, and other rights in real property, afforded by the provisions as to private examination, has been entirely taken away; and, so far as the protection of such rights is concerned, it can make no possible difference whether the married woman releases her dower by joining with her husband in a conveyance, or whether she releases the same through an attorney appointed by her for that purpose. Nor do we perceive any good reason whatever why a married woman may not as well appoint an attorney to execute a deed, which releases her dower rights, as to execute such deed herself. The reason of the rule ceasing, the rule itself fails, and we think that the objection is not well taken.

"The second question raised is whether, if a married woman has the power to appoint an attorney to release her dower, she can make her husband her attorney for such purpose. We do not think this objection is well founded. It has been held that husbands and wives may legally contract with each other in reference to their separate estates, (Owen v. Cawley, 36 N. Y. 600, Bodine v. Killeen, 53 N. Y. 98); that they may become agents for each other, (Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y. 277); that a husband may assign to his wife a chose in action, (Seymour v. Fellows, 77 N. Y. 178); and it has very recently been held that the common-law disability of a married woman to engage in a business as a copartner or jointly with her husband, was removed by chapter 90 of the Laws of 1860. Suau v. Caffé, 123 N. Y. 308, 9 L. R. A. 598. Under these decisions if a married woman can release her dower rights through an attorney as we think she can, we are of the opinion that she can appoint her husband such attorney.

"The third question raised is as to whether the power of attorney given by Mrs. Bauer to her husband gave him the right to convey property acquired after the execution of such power. The power in question authorized Mr. Bauer to sell and convey all or any lands belonging to Mrs. Bauer situate within the United States. There is nothing whatever in the power which restricted it to lands belonging to Mrs. Bauer at the time the power was executed, and we think that it covers lands subsequently acquired.

"Another objection to the title is that certain judgment creditors should have been made parties to the action. On April 10, 1889, one King recovered a judgment in the court of common pleas for $2,299.54. On June 12, 1889, an appeal was taken from said judgment to the general term, and, upon the consent of the plaintiff and the sureties upon the appeal bond, the judgment was marked, 'Lien suspended on appeal;' and upon the record in the county clerk's office, where the judgment had been docketed, a similar entry was made. On February 5, 1890, the judgment of the general term was entered, affirming the above-named judgment, and for $117.67 costs. 8 N. Y. Supp. 466. Subsequently an appeal was taken from said last-mentioned judgment to the Court of Appeals. On July 2, 1890, an order was entered, suspending the lien of both judgments as to property on which said judgments were or might become liens. This order was entered by consent of American Surety Company. On December 3, 1891, the lien was restored by proper entries in the judgment book, and on December 4, 1891, both judgments were assigned to the American Surety Company. Moritz Bauer took title to the property in question on October 4, 1890, and conveyed the same on October 20, 1890. The order entered on July 12, 1889, directing that the lien be suspended on appeal, did not, in terms, apply to after-acquired property. It is not necessary for the purposes of this appeal to decide, and we do not now decide, whether, under the various provisions of the Code in reference to the suspension of the lien of judgments on appeal, this order suspended the lien of the judgment as to property acquired by Bauer after it was entered. It is not disputed that the order entered suspending the lien upon the original judgment, and upon the judgment for costs, at the general term, was entered upon the consent of the American Surety Company that such lien should be suspended, not only as to property upon which the judgments were then liens, but as to after-acquired property. It is also undisputed that on February 4, 1891, both judgments were assigned to the American Surety Company, and that that company only can raise an objection as to the regularity of the foreclosure, so far as relates to said judgments; and that company is estopped from raising such question by reason of the consent above mentioned.

"Some question is also raised in regard to judgments recovered by one Healy; but, by an order of this court, entered on consent of the plaintiff, all the real property of Moritz Bauer (with an exception which does not include the property in suit) upon which said judgments were or might thereafter become a lien was exempted from the liens of said judgments; and such exemption remained in full force at the time of the recording of plaintiff's mortgage, and at the time of filing the notice of lis pendens herein. We are of the opinion that it was not necessary that either of the judgment creditors above mentioned should have been made parties to the action, and that the order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs."

Messrs. Henry A. Forster and D. Solis Ritterband, for appellant:

Chapter 300 of the Laws of 1878 completely extinguishes all the disabilities, whether statutory or common-law, upon the power of married women to execute a power of attorney, and gives them complete freedom to execute a power of attorney to do any lawful act whatever.

The construction which the courts have given to the Acts of 1860 and 1862, which are not as broad as the Act of 1878, shows clearly that the Act of 1878 permits a married woman to do any act by attorney which she could do herself.

See Blaechnska v. Howard Mission & Home for L. W. 15 L. R. A. 315, 180 N. Y. 497; Noel v. Kinney, 8 Cent. Rep. 58, 106 N. Y. 78; Suau v. Caffé, 9 L. R. A. 593, 122 N. Y. 812.

The chief disabilities of a married woman existing after the Acts of 1860 and 1862, other than her inability to sue her husband or to release her dower except to a person in privity to her husband's title, were her inability to make a contract with her husband, except as to her separate estate, Blaechnska v. Howard Mission & Home for L. W. and Noel v. Kinney, supra, or to make a conveyance to her husband which would be enforced at law.

As the disability to contract and the disability to convey to the husband have been since 16 L. R. A.

removed or recognized by statute it is evident that the Act of 1878 was not aimed at them.

Laws 1887, chap. 587; Laws 1884, chap. 381.

A statute authorizing a resident married woman to execute a power of attorney to release her dower is not contrary to public policy.

Ever since 1835 a nonresident married woman could execute a power of attorney to release her inchoate right of dower in lands within this state.

Parker v. Baker, 12 N. Y. S. R. 598, 599; Laws 1885, chap. 275, p. 815.

An ante-nuptial agreement between husband and wife relinquishing all inchoate rights of dower is valid.

Pierce v. Pierce, 71 N. Y. 154, 157, 27 Am. Rep. 22; Spencer v. Boardman, 6 West. Rep. 700, 118 Ill. 554; Barth v. Lines, 7 West. Rep. 217, 118 Ill. 874; Freeland v. Freeland, 128 Mass. 509; Smith's App. 115 Pa. 819; West v. Walker, 77 Wis. 557; Forwood v. Forwood, 86 Ky. 114, 118.

A post-nuptial agreement between husband and wife relinquishing all inchoate rights of dower is valid.

Strayer v. Long, 86 Va. 557, 559; Garbut v. Bowling, 81 Mo. 214.

The fact that the power of attorney was executed by Mrs. Bauer alone does not invalidate it.

Savage v. Orill, 19 Hun, 4-6, aff'd 90 N. Y. 630; Merchants Bank v. Thomson, 55 N. Y. 12; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14.

A married woman need not join with her husband in an instrument conveying her interest in real estate.

Jooss v. Fey, 129 N. Y. 17; Albany F. Ins. Co. v. Bay, 4 N. Y. 9.

A married woman may execute a power of attorney to her husband.

Warner v. Warren, 46 N. Y. 228, 233, 234; Freiberg v. Branigan, 18 Hun, 844, 845, aff'd 82 N. Y. 627; Wicks v. Hatch, 6 Jones & S. 95, 110, 62 N. Y. 535, 539-544; Nash v. Mitchell, 71 N. Y. 199, 202, 908, 27 Am. Rep. 88.

Under the Married Women's Acts of 1860 and 1862 [chap. 90, Laws 1860; chap. 172, Laws 1862] a married woman can:

Make her husband her agent.

Third Nat. Bank of Buffalo v. Guenther, 123 N. Y. 568, 575; Noel v. Kinney, 8 Cent. Rep. 58, 106 N. Y. 74, 78; Foster v. Perach, 68 N. Y. 400; Adams v. Mills, 60 N. Y. 533; Bodine v. Killeen, 58 N. Y. 98; Bank of Albion v. Burns, 46 N. Y. 171; Abbey v. Dejo, 44 N. Y. 848; Merchant v. Bunnell, 8 Keyes, 539, 541; Voorhees v. Bonesteel, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 16, 31, 21 L. ed. 268, 271.

Hold real estate as a joint tenant with her husband and convey it without his joining in the deed.

Jooss v. Fey, supra.

Enter into a partnership with her husband. Suau v. Caffé, 9 L. R. A. 593, 122 N. Y. 808. Take an assignment of a chose in action from her husband.

Fruhauv v. Bendheim, 127 N. Y. 587; Seymour v. Yellows, 77 N. Y. 178, 179.

Contract with her husband in relation to her separate estate, for as to that she stood at law on the same footing as if unmarried.

Blaechnska v. Howard Mission & Home for

L. W. 15 L. R. A. 215, 180 N. Y. 497; Noel v. Kinney, 106 N. Y. 78; Suau v. Caffé, supra.
Receive a valid gift from her husband.

Armitage v. Mace, 96 N. Y. 538; Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299.

Maintain an action for alienating her husband's affections.

Bennett v. Bennett, 6 L. R. A. 558, 116 N. Y. 584.

A married woman can make her husband her trustee.

Walker v. Walker, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 744, 19 L. ed. 814.

Even under the Acts of 1848 and 1849 a married woman could make her husband her agent.

Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y. 277; Buckley v. Wells, 38 N. Y. 518; Owen v. Cawley, 36 N. Y. 600.

The power to appoint an agent carries with it by necessary implication the power to execute a power of attorney.

Story, Ag. 9th ed. §§ 24, 25; Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 619.

Outside of this state the general rule in the absence of a clear restrictive statute is that a wife may execute a power of attorney to her husband.

Gridley v. Westbrook, 64 U. S. 23 How. 508, 16 L. ed. 412; Munger v. Baldridge, 41 Kan. 286; Wilkinson v. Elliott, 43 Kan. 590; Hull v. Gloer, 128 Ill. 123; Dawson v. Shirley, 6 Blackf. 531; Steele v. Lewis, 1 T. B. Mon. 48; Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 111, 50 Am. Dec. 108; Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9; Holladay v. Daily, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 609, 22 L. ed. 188; Lewis v. Coze, 5 Harr. (Del.) 401.

An instrument authorizing the sale of all of the grantor's real estate and any interest therein of whatsoever kind or nature, constitutes the agent therein appointed a general agent as distinguished from a special agent.

Wharton, Ag. § 116-118; Mechem, Ag. § 6; Story, Ag. §§ 21, 22; Butler v. Maples, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 773, 19 L. ed. 824, 825; Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. 279; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 18 Wend. 519, 28 Am. Dec. 476.

The powers of a general agent are liberally construed within the general scope of his agency.

Martin v. Farnsworth, 49 N. Y. 558.

Where a person is a general agent special authority to do acts within the general scope of his agency need not be specially conferred but is presumed.

Wharton, Ag. § 121; Story, Ag. § 126; Colten v. Gardner, 21 Beav. 540; Munn v. Commission Co. 15 Johns. 44; Tradesman's Bank v. Astor, 11 Wend. 87; Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. 354; Anderson v. Coonley, and Butler v. Maples, supra; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. of Maine v. Wilkinson, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 285, 20 L. ed. 628.

The same rule applies to a general power of attorney.

Parker v. Baker, 12 N. Y. S. R. 599; Wicks v. Hatch, 62 N. Y. 541.

Messrs. Glover, Sweezy & Glover, for respondent:

Dower is a peculiar interest jealously guarded by the law, and as to which great strictness is maintained by the courts.

1 Washb. Real Prop. *201, 202.

16 L. R. A.

At common law it could not be released.

1 Washb. Real Prop. *199.

A wife can defeat her dower only by strictly pursuing a mode prescribed by some statute.

Stisk v. Smith, 6 Ill. 563.

At common law a married woman could not make an attorney for any purpose.

Hardenburgh v. Lakin, 47 N. Y. 118.

In the present state of the law a married woman, cannot without express statutory authority, release her dower by power of attorney.

Lewis v. Cox, 5 Harr. (Del.) 401; Dawson v. Shirley, 6 Blackf. 531; Steele v. Lewis, 1 T. B. Mon. 48; Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108; Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9; Holladay v. Daily, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 609, 22 L. ed. 188.

She must execute the release herself.

Frost v. Deering, 21 Me. 156; Eslava v. Lepetre, 20 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 266.

Inchoate dower is not an estate in lands; it cannot be conveyed, but can only be released. A release takes effect by way of estoppel merely, and not by way of conveyance.

1 Washb. Real Prop. *250; Marcin v. Smith, 46 N. Y. 571; Linchliffe v. Shea, 4 Cent. Rep. 214, 108 N. Y. 153; Witthaus v. Schack, 7 Cent. Rep. 257, 105 N. Y. 832.

Our Married Women's Acts have not removed the disabilities of a wife under the common law respecting her inchoate right of dower; she cannot release it to him or contract to release it to him; nor can she release it to a stranger; but can only unite with him in releasing to his grantee.

Guidet v. Brown, 8 Abb. N. C. 295; Mercantile Bank v. Thomson, 55 N. Y. 7.

If she has power to release her inchoate dower by attorney she cannot make her husband her attorney for such purpose.

The common-law identity of husband and wife continues except in those particular matters as to which the wife has been specifically authorized by the married women's statutes to act as a feme sole.

Hendricks v. Isaacs, 6 L. R. A. 559, 117 N. Y. 411.

A power of attorney is to be strictly construed.

Craighead v. Peterson, 72 N. Y. 279, 26 Am. Rep. 150.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In relation to the question arising upon this application of the purchaser, Wolff, to be relieved from his bid at the judicial sale on the ground that the interest of the wife of Bauer had not been duly conveyed by virtue of her power of attorney to her husband, we are of the opinion that the order of the general term is erroneous, and for the reasons stated in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Andrews at the general term. The limitation sought to be imposed upon such power of attorney, that it only authorized Mrs. Bauer's husband to sign his name to conveyances of lands belonging to her is not we think sustained by the language of the instrument. Indeed, the learned judge who so held in his opinion at the general term in order to arrive at his conclusion rejects as surplusage the language of the power which authorizes the husband to convey for her, and in her name and as her act and deed to sign, seal, execute, acknowledge, and deliver all necessary releases of dower and thirds. He construes the language used in the first part of the power as confining its application to the execution of a conveyance of any and all lands belonging to Mrs. Bauer, and he says the words "releases of dower," subsequently used, have no relation to the power actually granted, and hence are surplusage. We think, however, that the language as to "releases of dower" was used for the very purpose of authorizing the husband to do as he has done, and that the language of the first part of the power, when speaking of lands, etc., belonging to the wife, does not limit, and was not intended to limit, the operation of the words "releases of dower and thirds," so as to make them of no meaning or importance, but, on the contrary, it was intended by their use to confer authority on the husband to release her inchoate right of dower in lands belonging to him. Indeed, she continues the statement of her purpose by inserting in the instrument a power to execute other instruments for the conveyance, surrendering and relinquishing all or any part of her estate, right, title, and interest, whether vested or contingent, choate or inchoate therein. The language used in the first part of the power should not be held to operate all through it, and limit the otherwise plain meaning of the paper. We think there is no objection to the title arising out of the power of attorney given by the wife to the husband. She had the right to execute a power of attorney under the Act, chapter 300 of the Laws of 1878, and in executing such power she could appoint her husband her agent or attorney in fact.

As to the objection that certain creditors by judgment against Bauer were not made parties, nor the sureties on certain appeal bonds, we think a sufficient answer is made by the fact of the entry of the memorandum by virtue of section 1256 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "Lien suspended on appeal." We think the meaning and purpose of the Legislature in the enactment of that and the succeeding sections were to release the lien of the judgment so suspended on appeal in regard to all property upon which it otherwise would become a lien until the court orders that it be restored by a redocket. The sureties upon the first appeal to the general term consented to the entry of the order, which did not in terms provide as to subsequently acquired property, but, if we are right in our construction of the statute, it was not necessary to so state it in the order. The law itself provided for the fact. The sureties, upon a further appeal taken to the Court of Appeals, consented, in terms, to the order suspending the lien, including after-acquired property. Upon the affirmance of the judgment by the latter court, the sureties on the last appeal bond took an assignment of the judgments, and in their hands there was no longer any liability on the sureties on the first appeal. Such sureties became on the giving of the second undertaking to pay the judgments, sureties for the second sureties; and when the second sureties paid or discharged their obligation to the owner of such judgments, and took an assignment of them, they could not enforce them against the first sureties. Under these circumstances, there is no reason on this ground for releasing the purchaser from his bid. The respondent here does not insist upon an objection that these questions were doubtful, and a purchaser ought not to be required to take such a title; but as we understand, if the questions above discussed should be decided in favor of the title, he is willing to take it, although those who are not parties here would not be legally barred by our decision from hereafter raising the question. As our decision depends upon the construction of statutes, the rule of stare decisis would be effectual as an answer to any further claim, and we think the purchaser entirely justified in his waiver.

Our conclusion is that the order of the General Term should be reversed, and that of the Special Term affirmed, with costs in all courts.

All concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Washington, ex rel.
V. P. WIESENTHAL, App't.
v.

D. T. DENNY, et al.

(.....Wash.....)

1. A proposed amendment to a city charter may be amended at its second consideration by the city council and then submitted to a vote of the people without further consideration by the council after another publication period of ten days under a

NOTE.—For note on the subject of what constitutes a majority sufficient to carry an election, see Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 308.
16 L. R. A.

charter which provides that amendments to itself may be proposed in either house and if agreed to they shall be entered on the journals and published for ten consecutive days and shall then be resubmitted to each house and pursue the same course as is pursued by any ordinance, and if then agreed to and not vetoed, or if passed over a veto, shall be submitted to the voters for ratification.

2. The existence of confusion on the part of the voters and inability to decide which way to vote upon proposed amendments to a city charter, which are caused by the submission of so many at once, will not invalidate the election although it is increased by splitting up the original propositions as adopted by the council and published into more than twice as many for submission to the voters if the notice of election accurately numbered and described the final subdivisions and the ballots referred to the numbers so given.

3. Needless separation in submitting them to the voters of two proposed amendments to a city charter which are indispensable to each other will not cause the rejection of either or both if each has received a majority of the vote and such separation is justified by the law.

4. A city charter cannot require for its amendment a majority of all the voters voting at the election at which a proposed amendment is submitted, if the state Constitution provides for the ratification of such a proposed amendment by a majority of the qualified voters voting thereon.

(April 8, 1892.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of respondents in a proceeding by mandamus to compel them to declare him elected as one of the delegates from the third ward of the City of Seattle. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edgar Lemman and Junius Rochester for appellant.

Messrs. George Donworth and Battle & Shipley, for respondents:

The tendency of the courts seems to be to give a liberal construction to laws doubtful as to the majority required so as to sustain the same when a majority of the voters voting have voted in favor thereof.

Metcalf v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 297; Armour Bros. Bkg. Co. v. Finney County Comrs. 41 Fed. Rep. 321; Holcomb v. Davis, 56 Ill. 413.

The rule that when an election is held at which the subject-matter is to be determined by a majority of the voters entitled to cast ballots thereat, those absenting themselves and those being present and abstaining from voting, are considered as acquiescing in the result declared by those actually voting, applies equally where at a general election the measure so receiving a majority of the votes cast on the subject failed to receive a majority of the votes cast upon some other subject.

Walker v. Oswald, 11 Cent. Rep. 123, 68 Md. 146.

Even though the proper meaning to be attached to the word "thereat" should be as contended for by appellant the same is wholly nugatory and is not to govern in determining the question of the validity of said proposed amendments, but section 10, art. 11, of the Constitution in the use of the word "thereon" must govern.

A constitutional provision is self-executing if it supplies a sufficient rule by means of which the right given may be enjoyed, or the duty imposed may be enforced.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. p. 90.

Section 10, art. 11, of the Constitution of Washington is, with slight modifications, the same as section 8, art. 11, of the Constitution of California, which the Supreme Court of that state in a number of decisions has held is self-executing.

People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 618.

Where the means for exercise of the granted power are prescribed no other or different means can be impliedly authorized as being more effectual.

16 L. R. A.

Field v. People, 3 Ill. 83.

This section 10, art. 11, of the Constitution not only furnishes a sufficient guide and procedure to adopt amendments to charters, but it is mandatory, and is a limitation upon the power of cities to enact any other rule or procedure to govern in adopting amendments to their charters.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 93. See also Sutherland, Stat. Const. § 66; People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238; State v. Rogers, 10 Nev. 253, 21 Am. Rep. 738; Varney v. Justice, 86 Ky. 596; Westport v. Kansas (City), 103 Mo. 141; McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245.

The purpose of the first introduction into the council is to obtain the consent of the council that the same should be proposed as an amendment, and the power of the council to take any action thereon in the particular of amending the same in any wise, is suspended until the resubmission. Anything evidencing the intention of the city council to approve the proposed amendments is sufficient.

Brooks v. Fischer, 4 L. R. A. 429, 79 Cal. 178.

Independent of these provisions of the charter and the rules of the city council, the power to make these amendments existed.

People v. Wallace, 70 Ill. 680. See also Sutherland, Stat. Const. § 49.

Statutes concerning the manner of conducting elections are directory unless the non-compliance is expressly declared to be fatal to the validity of the election or will change or make doubtful the result.

Sutherland, Stat. Const. § 452.

Stiles, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Constitution, art. 11, § 10, provides that the freeholders' charter of any city of the first class may be amended "by proposals therefor submitted by the legislative authority of such city to the electors thereof that any general election, after notice of said submission published as above specified [Wade v. Tacoma (Wash.) 29 Pac. Rep. 983,] and ratified by a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon." Subdivision 88, § 520, Gen. Stat., contains the only legislative reference to such amendment, by enumerating as among the express powers of such cities the power "to provide in their respective charters for a method to propose and adopt amendments thereto." Section 1, of article 20 of the charter of the city of Seattle is as follows: "Section 1. Any amendment or amendments to this charter may be proposed in either house of the city council, and, if the same shall be agreed to by not less than three fifths of the members of each house, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered upon the journal of each house, with the yeas and nays of each house thereon, and shall for ten consecutive days, excluding Sundays, beginning with five days next after the passage thereof, be published in the city official newspapers and shall, not less than sixty nor more than ninety days after the first publication, be again submitted to each house of the city council for passage, and pursue the same course before the council and mayor as is pursued by any ordinance; and if upon such resubmission the same be agreed to again in each house by not less than three fifths of the members thereof, and not returned by the mayor with his objections, or be passed notwithstanding his objections, by not less than two thirds of such members, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the city for their ratification at the next general election, or at a special election to be called for the purpose by the city council before such general election; and if at said election a majority of the lawful voters, voting thereat, shall by their votes ratify any amendment so submitted the same shall become a part of the city charter, and shall, five days after such election, be by the mayor, in proclamation published in the city official newspapers, proclaimed a part thereof: provided, that if more than one amendment be submitted the same shall be submitted to the voters at said election in such manner that they may vote for or against each amendment separately, and that the city council shall cause every amendment that is to be submitted to be published for at least thirty days (excluding Sundays) next preceding such election in the city official newspapers." Section 1, art. 4, of the charter provides: "That the legislative power of the city of Seattle shall be vested in a mayor and a city council, which shall consist of two houses, namely, the board of aldermen and a house of delegates."* Section 18 of said article 4 provides among other things: "Every legislative Act of said city shall be by ordinance. . . . Any ordinance may originate in either house, and, when it shall have passed one house, it may be passed, amended, or rejected in the other."

In August, 1891, the said city council appointed a commission, composed of citizens and business men of said city, to frame and submit to it propositions for amending the city charter in such particulars as they might suggest; and, in accordance with such request, said propositions were framed and submitted to the council. On October 30, 1891, the said proposed amendments, numbered 1 to 19, were first proposed in the house of delegates, and proceedings were thereupon had, resulting in the passage of the same by said house of delegates. Thereafter the board of aldermen duly passed the same. Proposed amendment No. 2 is the principal subject-matter of this suit, and the same, as proposed to the city council, and as passed and published, is as follows: "Proposed amendment No. 2. A proposition to amendment sections three (3), five (5), and seven (7) of article 4 of the freeholders' charter, adopted October 1, 1890: Resolved, that section 3 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 3. At the general election in 1892, there shall be elected in each ward in the city one of the board of aldermen and one member of the house of delegates. At the general election of 1892 the five members of the board of aldermen receiving the greatest number of votes shall hold office for four years, and the other four for two years, and in the case of a tie vote the length of the terms shall, at the first session, and before transacting any other business, be determined by lot. At each subsequent general municipal election, enough aldermen shall be elected from the respective wards to succeed those whose terms are about to expire, and the aldermen so elected shall hold office for four years. The members elected to the house of delegates shall each hold office two years. Each member of either house shall further hold office until his successor is elected and qualified. Each member of the city council shall have an annual salary of three hundred dollars, to be paid monthly: provided, that after the population of the city shall have reached the number of seventy-five thousand, as determined by any official census, such salary shall be the sum of six hundred dollars per

*The remaining material portions of the charter before its amendment are as follows:

Sec. 2. The board of aldermen shall consist of nine members elected from the city at large, and the house of delegates shall be composed of two members elected from each ward.

Sec. 3. At the first election under this charter nine members of the board of aldermen shall be elected. At the general election of eighteen hundred and ninety-two, nine members shall be elected, and the five then receiving the greatest number of votes shall hold office for four years, and the other four for two years, and in case of a tie vote the length of the term shall, at the first session, and before transacting any other business, be determined by lot. At each subsequent general municipal election enough aldermen shall be elected to succeed those whose terms are about to expire, and the aldermen so elected shall each hold office for four years. At said first election, and at each general municipal election thereafter, two members of the house of delegates shall be elected in each ward, and the delegates so elected shall each hold office two years. Each member of either house shall further hold office until his successor is elected and qualified.

Sec. 4. No person shall be eligible for alderman unless he be a freeholder, a citizen of the United States and have been a resident and elector of the city for at least two years next prior to his election; and no person shall be eligible for delegate unless he be a citizen of the United States and have been an elector of the city and a resident of the ward for which he is selected for at least one year next prior to his election. No person not a resident or not a citizen or who holds any other place in the city government shall be a member of either house.

Sec. 5. No member of either house shall hold any other office, federal, state, county or municipal, except in the National Guard or as a notary public, or be an employé of the city or either of said houses, or be directly or indirectly interested in any contract with the city, or with or for any department, institution, board, officer, agent or employé thereof, or advance money or furnish material or supplies, or become surety for the performance of any such contract, or directly or indirectly recommend, solicit, advise, request or in any manner use his influence to obtain the appointment of any person to any office, position, place or employment under the city government or under any department, board, officer, agent or employé thereof: Provided, that nothing contained in this section shall impair the right of a member to nominate and recommend any person for any position or office to be filled by the city council or by the house of which he is a member. Each member, upon taking office, shall make and file in the office of the city clerk an affidavit that he will faithfully comply with and abide by all the requirements of this section, and the violation of any of the provisions of this section shall work a forfeiture of his membership and warrant his expulsion from the house to which he belongs.

annum, payable annually. A deduction of five dollars shall be made from each members' salary, who shall be absent from any meeting of his respective house, unless said member shall certify on his honor that said absence was caused by illness or unavoidable absence from the city at the time of the meeting.' Resolved, that section 5 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 5. No member of either house shall hold any other municipal office, or be an employé of the city or either of said houses, or be interested in any contract with the city, or with or for any department, institution, board, officer, agent, or employé thereof. Each member, upon taking office, shall make and file in the office of the city clerk an oath that he will faithfully comply with and abide by all the requirements of this section; and the violation of any of the provisions of this section shall work a forfeiture of his membership, and warrant his expulsion from the house to which he belongs.' Resolved, that section 7 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 7. The house shall meet in separate chamber. A majority of either house shall constitute a quorum, but a less number may adjourn from day to day, or till the time of the next regular meeting, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house shall prescribe for itself. A quorum of each of the two houses of the city council, assembled in joint convention, shall be a quorum of a joint convention of the city council.'" There were nineteen of these proposed amendments, of which Nos. 4 and 17 failed to pass the second consideration of the council, and were not submitted in any form. A part of the others, without any amendment or alteration thereof being made, passed each house upon such reconsideration, while several of them, including No. 2, upon such reconsideration were amended by the council, and as amended they passed each house, and all the requirements of section 1, art. 20, were complied with in passing the same, as amended.

The fact that amendment No. 2 was amended upon such reconsideration without again having been published as is required upon the original introduction or proposal of the same in the city council, constitutes the first objection to the validity thereof, raised by the relator. Proposed amendment No. 2, as passed as amended upon such reconsideration, is as follows: "Proposed amendment No. 2. A proposition to amend sections 2, 3, 5, and 7 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter, adopted October 1, A. D. 1890. Resolved, that section 2 of article 4 be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 2. The board of aldermen and the house of delegates shall each consist of as many members as there are wards in the city; one member of each house to be elected from each ward.' Resolved, that section 3 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 3. At the general election in 1892, there shall be elected nine members of the board of aldermen and there shall be elected in each ward one member of the house of delegates: provided, that in case of the adoption of this proposed amendment the person receiving the highest number of votes for delegate at said general election in March, 1892, shall be entitled to qualify as said delegate. At the general election in 1892 the five members of the board of aldermen receiving the greatest number of votes shall hold office for four years, and the others for two years, and in case of a tie vote the length of the terms shall at the first session, and before transacting any other business, be determined by lot. At each subsequent general municipal election, one delegate shall be elected from each ward, and enough aldermen shall be elected from the respective wards to succeed those whose terms are about to expire, and the aldermen so elected shall each hold office for four years. The members elected to the house of delegates shall each hold office two years. Each member of either house shall further hold office until his successor is elected and qualified. Each member of the city council shall have an annual salary of three hundred dollars, to be paid monthly: provided, that after the population of the city shall have reached the number of seventy-five thousand, as determined by any official census, such salary shall be the sum of six hundred dollars per annum, payable monthly. A deduction of five dollars shall be made from each member's salary who shall be absent from any meeting of his respective house, unless said member shall certify on his honor that said absence was caused by illness or unavoidable absence from the city at the time of the meeting.' Resolved, that section 5 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 5. No member of either house shall hold any federal, state, or other municipal office, or be an employé of the city or either of said houses, or be interested in any contract with the city or with or for any department, institution, board, officer, agent, or employé thereof. Each member on taking office shall make and file in the office of the city clerk an oath that he will faithfully comply with and abide by all the requirements of this section; and the violation of any of the provisions of this section shall work a forfeiture of his membership, and warrant his expulsion from the house to which he belongs.' Resolved, that section 7 of article 4 of the freeholders' charter be amended so as to read as follows: 'Sec. 7. The house shall meet in separate chamber. A majority of either house shall constitute a quorum, but a less number may adjourn from day to day, or till the time of the next regular meeting, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house shall prescribe for itself. A quorum of each of the two houses of the city council, assembled in joint convention, shall be a quorum of a joint convention of the city council.'" The relator was a candidate in the third ward for the office of delegate to the house of delegates, at the annual election held March 8, 1892; and under section 8, art. 4, of the existing charter, he would have been entitled to be declared elected, as he received the second highest number of votes cast for that office in his ward. But he has been refused the declaration of his election, because it has been ascertained and declared that the proposed amendments of sections 2 and 8 of article 4 were carried at the same election, whereby, the number of delegates being reduced to one only from each ward, only the candidate receiving the highest number of votes was to be declared elected. Of this action he complains, and sought by mandamus in the superior court to compel the declaration of his election at the hands of the canvassing officers, for the reason, as he alleged, that the said amendments were not lawfully adopted. The mandamus was refused, and he appeals.

The first objection taken by relator is that after the first passage of the proposed amendment as "Proposed Amendment No. 2" by the council, and its publication for ten days, upon its reconsideration it was amended, and then submitted to the popular vote without a second ten days' publication and reconsideration, and adoption without amendment. In short, the contention is that to comply with section 1, art. 20, the same identical proposition must pass both houses, once before and once after ten days' publication, without change or amendment, in order to give it a valid existence as subject for the vote of the electors. We take it, however, that the first vote in council is intended by the charter to be one rather of acquiescence than of anything final in its character, and that the ten days publication is merely one of warning to the public that the subject-matter is to be considered with a view to its amendment. Reading closely, we should say that amendments were barred upon the first consideration, rather than at the second since it is only in connection with the second that it is provided that the proposition shall "pursue the same course before the council and mayor as is pursued by any ordinance," and it is only after the second passage that the mayor is called upon to consider it. It would certainly be a great taking of chances for a proposition to go through three such ordeals, with the possibility of meeting the mayors' disapproval at the end, and die beyond resuscitation, when some slight change might overcome the mayor's objection. We conclude, rather, that the proposition is after its first publication, to all intents and purposes, an ordinance, as the charter says it shall be, and comes up for passage, amendment, or other parliamentary treatment, as the case may be.

The next point made against these amendments is that whereas the final thirty days publication of the proposed amendments was made in the form of seventy consolidated propositions, as they passed the council, the notice of election and the ballots purported to split up the proposition so as to require thirty-seven expressions by the voter to reach them all. The notice was to the effect that whereas proper action had been taken by the legislative authority of the city, providing therefor, certain propositions to amend the 16 L. R. A.

charter were then in course of publication in the city official newspapers, and whereas, by ordinance No. 1974, each of the amendments intended to be submitted was briefly described and numbered for the purpose of reference thereto in the ballots to be cast for and against the ratification of the same, "as follows, to wit," etc. That the notice followed the exact language of the ordinance, and among the thirty-seven proposed amendments we find, in its proper order, this one: "(7) Proposed amendment to section 2 of article 4 of said charter, fixing the number of members of the board of aldermen and house of delegates of said city, respectively; being the first proposed amendment in course of publication, as aforesaid, under the heading, 'Proposed Amendment No. 2.'" The others followed in regular sequence. Upon the ballot, under the head of "Charter Amendments." We find, "For amendments No. 7 to the city charter," and "Against amendment No. 7 to the city charter," and the others are provided for in like manner.

Recurring to ordinance 1974, we find it prescribing in this manner: "Sec. 6. Said several proposed amendments, specified and numbered in section 2 of this ordinance, shall be voted upon by the qualified voters of said city at said general election mentioned in said section 2, for the purpose of ratification or rejection, by a majority of all lawful voters voting thereon at said election, of each of said amendments, in the manner following, to wit. Every voter electing to vote in favor of the ratification of said proposed amendment in said section 2, numbered 7, shall vote a ballot containing the words, 'For amendment No. 7 to the city charter,'" and the contrary; and so on clear through the whole number of amendments. The relator claims that the effect of breaking up the original seventeen propositions into thirty-seven had the effect to confuse the voter, and deprive him of a fair chance to express his wishes; but here again, we cannot agree with him. We do not doubt that there was confusion and inability to decide which way to vote upon the amendments, but it grew out of the necessities of the case, through there being so many subjects to be voted upon, rather than through the method of presenting them. Indeed, it is difficult to see how so many different propositions could have been submitted in any other way than the one adopted, which has the additional merit of having closely followed the general election statutes, (and especially Gen. Stat. § 518,) and the last clause of section 1, art. 20, of the charter. The amendments to sections 2 and 8, art. 4, were indispensable to each other, and might properly have been submitted together as one proposition; but, each having received majority of the vote, their separate submission, in strict accordance with the law, is no ground for defeating either or both.

Lastly, there were 8,294 ballots cast at the election in question. Of these, 1,461 were cast in favor and 1,107 against amendment No. 7, and 1,807 were cast in favor and 693 against No. 8. Thus 5,726 persons failed to vote upon No. 7, and 5,794 failed to vote upon No. 8. Nos. 7 and 8 were the amendments to sections 2 and 3 of article 4, the adoption of which, as declared deprived the relator of his office. He claims that inasmuch as the language of the charter (sec. 1, art. 20) is, "If at said election a majority of the lawful voters voting thereat shall, by their votes, ratify any amendment so submitted, the same shall become a part of the city charter," these amendments were not adopted, since not less than 4,148 was "a majority of the lawful voters voting thereat." Section 10, art. 11, of the Constitution, quoted above says that such a charter may be amended by proposals therefor submitted by the legislative authority of a city "at a general election, and ratified by a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon." The position of the relator is that this constitutional provision is a limitation upon the powers of the municipality in amending its charter; that the framers of the Constitution intended to surround freeholders, charters of cities of the first class with safeguards; and that, as one of these safeguards, this provision was placed in the Constitution as a limitation upon the power of the city in relation to the amendment of its charter. He maintains that it was not intended to prohibit the people constituting the municipality from requiring and placing upon themselves further limitations and restrictions in the matter of amendments. Therefore, while the Constitution adopts a liberal method of procuring amendments, it is entirely within the power of the city itself, by its original charter, to adopt a strict method, such as is supposed to be involved in the word "thereat." Just how far this proposition could be carried without crossing over the line where amendments would become practically impossible at once occurs for reflection. We have already seen how, before a proposition is submitted, it must pass by a three-fifths vote of the council, be published, passed again by three fifths, face the mayors' objections, be published again, and then be voted upon at an election where two thirds of the voters treat it with indifference: and, looking upon this as a precedent, it will be safe to say that the freeholders' charter of Seattle bids fair to take rank among the famed oriental laws, that never could be changed. But we differ with the relator in this matter. The framers of the Constitution went out of the usual way of making such instruments to insert a provision therein, looking to the possible solution of a perplexing modern problem,—the government of large cities. It granted to certain cities the right to govern themselves, subject only to general laws of the state. The grant was made in the shape of power to enact a charter law, and to amend it afterwards. Just how far this grant was independent of legislation, we are not called upon to say; but it may be safely said that wherever in this grant it is declared that a thing may be done in a certain way, when it comes to be done, the doing it in that way will be sufficient. "Wherever the language contains a grant of power, it was intended as a mandate. Wherever the language gives a direction as to the manner of exercising power, it was intended that the power should be exercised in the manner directed and in no other manner." Varney v. Justice, 86 Ky. 596. "When the Constitution defines the circumstances under which a right may be exercised, or a penalty imposed, the specification is an implied prohibition against legislative interference to add to the condition, or to extend the penalty to other cases." Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 78. The power to amend is in this instance as important as the power to enact. The system is new and untried. The labor of the freeholders is likely to be accepted somewhat in trust. Trial alone can develop to the general view the imperfections of their work. The Constitution sought to provide for this. No previous city council can propose a charter. Fifteen freeholders must be elected for that sole purpose. But when the charter has been adopted, put into service, and tried, it is left to those whose experience is most intimate with it to point out, in propositions, to the people, wherein they think it needs change. The Constitution requires and contemplates but little of pomps or forms; a recommendation by the legislative authority, a publication so that all may have knowledge of the proposition, and a vote, is all. General elections were selected as the time for submission, because there ought to be a certain stability about such instruments and the vice of nonattention to special elections is well known. We presume it would not be contended that if, following Gen. Stat. §§ 518, 519, a charter election, were held on the same day as a general election, the language of section 519 should be construed as controlling the Constitution, and requiring a majority of all votes cast on that day to adopt the proposed charter, because the Constitution plainly declares that, if a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon ratify the proposed charter, it shall become the charter of the city. To our minds the language concerning amendments is no less vigorous and controlling, and must receive like construction. It is the right of the people to have their charter amended by the majority vote of those who vote thereon, and, having so amended it, the relator is without cause of action.

Judgment affirmed.

Anders, Ch. J., and Hoyt and Scott, JJ., concur.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

Herman A. HAEUSSLER, Appt.,
v.
MISSOURI IRON CO. et al., Respts.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Possession of land under a mining lease is not adverse to the interests of the owners of the fee so as to prevent a partition between them.
2. A stipulation against the institution of partition proceedings made by co-tenants who undertake to bind themselves, their heirs and assigns forever not to institute such proceedings without the written consent of all the parties, is void because it is an unreasonable restraint upon the enjoyment and use of the property.

(March 2, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dent County in favor of NOTE.—Validity of agreement against right to partition.

The right of co-tenants to bind themselves not to exercise the right of partition, contrary to the doctrine of the main case, has been upheld in several cases.

Thus a condition in a deed of premises to members of a hotel association that the premises shall be held in common without partition or division, is not invalid as repugnant to the estate granted or as against public policy. Hunt v. Wright, 47 N. H. 366, 68 Am. Dec. 451.

So an agreement to exempt certain ore banks or mine hills from a partition made by co-tenants because such property could not be divided without injustice to some of the parties is valid. Coleman v. Coleman, 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641.

In Conant v. Smith, 1 Aiken, 67, 15 Am. Dec. 668, both partition and sale of an ore bed were denied because neither could be made without injury to the rights of the parties, and it was said that chancery could regulate the enjoyment between the owners.

In Eberts v. Fisher, 64 Mich. 294, the court says that a party may enter into such an agreement with his co-tenants as to estop him from enforcing the right of partition, and cites Avery v. Payne, 12 Mich. 540, in support of the doctrine.

In the latter case it held that a statute providing that all co-tenants "may have partition" in the manner therein provided does not give a right to partition as against an agreement of the parties inconsistent with such right. Avery v. Payne, supra.

But in Eberts v. Fisher, supra, the question of a perpetual bar to partition was not actually involved. The point decided in the case was that the lease of property held in common to part of the co-tenants for a certain number of years will prevent a partition of the property while the lease remains in force without mutual consent.

So the right of partition is defeated by an agreement of the parties to hold the premises together for the purpose of selling. Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 187.

And very similar to the above English case is a New York decision that a valid power to sell vested by an agreement of the parties which is made irrevocable, will defeat the right to partition. Selden v. Vermilya, 2 Sandf. 568.

The doctrine that the right of partition may be defendants in an action brought for the partition of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Broadhead & Hesel, with Messrs. J. Morchard & E. A. Seay, for appellant:

The lease forbidding sale and trade of land is against public policy, and plaintiff under the finding would be powerless to enjoy his property.

Reichard v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 81 Mo. 518; Alger v. Thacher, 19 Pick. 51; Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. pp. 502, 503; Taylor, Land. & T. 2d ed. §§ 283, 284, and references; Long v. Towl, 42 Mo. 545, 97 Am. Dec. 355.

If the respondent ever intended to use the land for mining they had to do so in a reasonable time, and not having done so for twenty years, the contract is at end, at least as to that parcel. To forever prevent the law of this state in relation to partitions from being enforced is like a covenant not to sue on a policy in this state void and against the public good.

waived is recognized also in a case which decides that the clause, "to remain in common and undivided," between the description and habendum of a deed, does not amount to a condition or covenant against partition. Spaulding v. Woodward, 53 N. H. 673, 16 Am. Rep. 362.

Also in a decision that partition is not barred by a condition in a deed of an undivided half interest that the grantees shall not alienate without the grantor's permission as the condition would be as effective after partition as before. Whitney v. Kendall, 63 N. H. 200.

An agreement which is not sealed in consideration of a deed of an undivided portion of land that the grantees will hold it in common with a co-tenant during the latter's life, was held not a bar to partition because it was not under seal. The right of the parties to bind themselves against partition was not decided. Black v. Tyler, 1 Pick. 150.

Neither was this passed upon in a decision that a conveyance for occupation, "in common as a yard" forever does not defeat a partition in favor of one who has purchased the share of one of the co-tenants in legal proceedings as such occupation in common would not be defeated by a partition. Fisher v. Dewerson, 3 Met. 544.

In Mitchell v. Starbuck, 10 Mass. 11, the court said: "It is essential to an estate in common to be subject to partition." This was said in respect to an objection against the right of partition on the ground that the land was held by a peculiar tenure unknown to the common law, but the court held it to be in fact a tenancy in common.

No question of any express agreement against partition was involved in the case.

So in Moore v. Darby (Del.) Nov. 13, 1890, it was said that partition is a necessary incident of an estate held in common, but the validity of an agreement against partition was not involved in this case.

In Kean v. Tilford, 81 Ky. 600, it was held that a tenant in common cannot defeat the right of his co-tenants to a sale of the property by a provision in a deed or will disposing of his share that the property shall not be sold; but this clearly does not decide that the co-tenants could not bind themselves by an agreement to which all were parties, so as to defeat the right of partition.

The main case is the only decision which we have found that directly denies the power of co-tenants thus to bind themselves.

B. A. R.

Reichard v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. supra;
Sawyer v. Hammatt, 15 Me. 40.

The covenant in lease and deed must of course be taken as one contract.

Adams v. Hill, 16 Me. 215; Whitehurst v. Boyd, 8 Ala. 375.

The condition is unreasonable and against public policy, the restriction goes far beyond what is necessary for the protection of the lessees and their assigns.

Long v. Towel, supra.

Mr. L. B. Woodside for respondents.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding for the partition of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 24, township 34, range 6 W., situated in Dent county, containing 280 acres. This record discloses the following facts: On the 4th day of June, 1870, C. C. Simmons and W. P. Billings, being seised of said lands in fee, by separate conveyances conveyed two undivided fourths thereof in fee to Alexander L. Crawford and William L. Scott, each of which conveyances contained this stipulation: "And it is also further mutually covenanted and agreed by and between the parties to this conveyance that neither they nor their heirs or assigns, nor any or either of them, shall or will ever institute or commence, or cause to be instituted or commenced, any proceedings, in partition or otherwise, in law or equity, to obtain or procure a partition, allotment, or division, or sale of so much or of such parts or portion of said lands as have been leased for mining purposes to said parties of the second part by deed of lease bearing even date herewith, and made and executed by said Walter P. Billings and Cyrenius C. Simmons, and duly recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of said Dent county, without the written consent of all parties interested in said property at the time of the commencement of such proceedings, and made a part of the record thereof." The "deed of lease" mentioned in the foregoing stipulation was an indenture which witnessed that the said Simmons and Billings, as parties of the first part, granted, bargained, sold, and conveyed perpetually and forever to said Crawford and Scott, as parties of the second part, their heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, "the sole and exclusive right and privilege to enter upon and into said lands for the purpose of searching for, digging, mining, quarrying, and taking away all the iron ore which may be upon or in said lands; and also for the purpose of smelting and manufacturing of iron on said lands, to any extent that the parties of the second part, their heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, may deem advisable," with the proviso that "such parts or portions of said pieces or parcels of land as do not contain iron ore, and such as shall not be needed or used by said parties of the second part for mining storing waste material, railroad tracks and switches, manufacturing purposes, or for the erection of buildings, machinery, and fixtures required or needful for the use of said parties of the second part in carrying on their business aforesaid, shall be and remain in the joint possession, and for the mutual use, benefit, and enjoyment, of all the aforesaid parties hereto, according to their respective interests and shares therein." It was provided by this deed of lease that said Crawford and Scott, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, should pay to said Simmons and Billings, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, the sum of 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per ton gross of 2,240 pounds for the one half of all the iron ore that should be mined, dug, or quarried and taken way, used or sold from said lands; the payments to be made quarterly, on the 15th day of January, April, July, and October in each year. Crawford and Scott agreed to organize a corporation under the laws of Missouri for the purpose of carrying on mining operations on said lands, which was done, the name of the corporation being "Missouri Iron Company," to which said Crawford and Scott in due time conveyed the interests in said lands acquired by them by virtue of the said conveyances and deed of lease. This corporation took from these lands from 1873 to the time of the trial of this cause in October, 1889, 200,000 tons of iron ore. The record shows the interests of the parties other than the Missouri Iron Company in said lands to be as follows: Plaintiff, one fourth; defendant Cook or his representative, one eighth; and Walter and Maud Billings, one sixteenth each; all subject to the terms and conditions of the conveyances and deed of lease executed by Simmons and Billings to Crawford and Scott, as above set forth. Defendant the Missouri Iron Company resisted the partition of the lands on two grounds: (1) It claimed to be in the adverse possession of them; (2) it had not consented in writing to such partition as provided by the conveyances of Simmons and Billings to Crawford and Scott, dated June 4, 1870. Defendants Maud and Walter Billings were minors, and appeared by guardian ad litem, and Cook's representative made default. Upon these facts the court refused partition of the lands, and the plaintiff appealed. No instructions were asked or given.

1. One tenant in common cannot maintain an action for partition against his co-tenant where he has been disseised. Wommack v. Whitmore, 58 Mo. 448. While it is conceded that the Missouri Iron Company is in the actual possession of the lands partition of which is sought in this case, we do not think such possession is adverse to plaintiff's interest in them; nor does it amount to an ouster of plaintiff. Three distinct interests in the lands are created by the conveyances and deed of lease: (1) All the parties are seised of the lands in fee as tenants in common, subject to the mining right of the Missouri Iron Company; (2) the Missouri Iron Company owns in severalty the right to mine the iron ore on and in said lands, and this right is sole and perpetual; (3) plaintiff Cook's representatives and Maud and Walter Billings are owners in common in perpetuity of the royalties to be paid under the provisions of the deed of lease.

The possession of this property held by the Missouri Iron Company is under the deed of lease and is not, therefore, antagonistic or adverse to but consistent with the interests of the other parties therein.

2. The real controversy here turns upon the construction and effect to be given the stipulation against the institution of partition proceedings without the written consent of all the parties, contained in the conveyances of Simmons and Billings to Crawford and Scott, dated June 4, 1870. The iron company insists that it is valid and binding, while plaintiff, on the other hand, claims that it is an unreasonable restraint upon the alienation of the property, and upon the right of each party to have partition, and the use and enjoyment of his interest in severalty, and therefore void. Plaintiff concedes in his argument in this court that the mining right is not joint property, but is held in severalty by said company, and hence is not the subject of partition; and this seems to be the theory of his petition. We will therefore take it for granted that plaintiff seeks partition or sale of the lands, subject to such mining right. This brings us to the discussion of the question, Does the stipulation against the institution of proceedings for the partition of these lands without the written consent of all the parties preclude plaintiff from maintaining this action? It must be noted at the threshold of this inquiry that the stipulation in question is not a restraint upon the alienation of lands. The several owners are left free to dispose of their interests in any manner they see proper. The only restraint is upon the right of severing the interest of one owner from the others by a proceeding in invitum. Is this restraint unreasonable, and void because unreasonable? This stipulation is a perpetual inhibition of partition, the language being that neither the parties nor their heirs or assigns shall ever institute proceedings for partition without the written consent of all the parties. The civil law refused to enforce agreement perpetually waiving the right of partition. Domat says: "It is always free for every one of those who have anything in common among them to divide it, and, although they may agree to put off the partition to a certain time, yet they can make no such agreement as never to come to a partition; for it would be contrary to good manners that the proprietors should be forced to have always an occasion of falling out by reason of the undivided possession of a common thing." Domat's Civil Law by Strahan, pt. 1, bk. 2, title, 5, § 2, art. 11. And Mr. Freeman, in his work on Co-Tenancy & Partition, (§ 442,) maintains that this is the rule in England and the United States. Restraints and fetters upon the alienation and enjoyment of property are opposed to the common law, 16 L. R. A.

and especially to the jurisprudence of to-day, which, in the United States, at least, has almost wholly lost the spirit and genius of the feudal system and feudal tenures. 9Am. L. Reg. N. S. 393, 457. Primogeniture and estates tail, with all their incidents, find but little favor in the laws of this century. The right of partition is an absolute right, which yields to no consideration of hardship or inconvenience. Freeman, Co-Ten. § 443. Anything that militates against this right is repugnant to the essential characteristics of co-tenancy. Mitchell v. Starbuck, 10 Mass. 11. And the tendency of our times is to greater freedom of sale and transfer of property, unfettered by conditions or limitation of the right of alienation. In the case at bar, if the right of involuntary partition of these lands does not exist now, it will not exist 500 or 1,000 years hence. In time, by the sale and descent of undivided interests, the owners would become so numerous, and the interests so small, that the estate would be almost, if not wholly, valueless. Here is a tract of land containing 280 acres, which may be suited to agricultural and various other purposes, and the joint owners may want to have their interest set off, so that they can utilize them for such purposes. The partition in kind or sale under partition proceedings of these lands subject to the mining right, instead of being detrimental, would be beneficial, to the owner of that right, for it is more difficult and unsatisfactory to deal with many than one. The many can exercise control over the lands subject to the mining right, and that is all one owner could do. Hence there is no reason why the title to the property subject to this right should not be vested in one person, but many reasons why it should be so vested, and we hold that the stipulation in question, as applied to the title to these lands, subject to said mining right, is an unreasonable restraint of their enjoyment and use, and therefore void.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the circuit court to decree that partition of the lands be made subject to said mining right, and, if this interest in the lands cannot be divided in kind without great prejudice to the owners, that it be sold as provided by statute. The decree of partition must also specifically reserve the right to the royalties on the iron ore to be paid under the provisions of the deed of lease to plaintiff Cook's representatives and Maud and Walter Billings, their heirs and assigns, forever. This right is also subject of partition, but said company having no interest in it, it cannot be disposed of in this proceeding except by consent of all parties, and then only by a separate sale. Rehearing denied. All concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. B. NICHOLSON et al., Appl.,
v.
NATIONAL BANK OF NEW CASTLE.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Absence of an assignment or an assignment without recourse and the nonaccountability of the assignor for the value of the note are necessary to make a transfer of a note to a bank for value, before maturity, in the usual course of discounting and without notice of any infirmity, a barter and sale as distinguished from a discount.
2. The purchase by a bank of a note by a lumping trade which results in a greater discount than would be produced by an exact calculation at the usual rate does not deprive the paper of its standing as a bill of exchange if the circumstances attending the transaction show a discount and not a bargain and sale.
3. A usurious discount of a note by a national bank affects neither the negotiability of the note nor the bank's title to it.

(November 14, 1891.)

NOTE.—Purchase of notes and bills by bank as distinguished from discounting; What is discounting?

There is a lack of harmony in the cases as to the exact meaning of the word "discounting" as applied to bank transactions.

In several cases it has been said that the discounting of paper is only a mode of loaning money. Wagazara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 87; Smith v. Exchange Bank of Pittsburg, 28 Ohio St. 141; Tracy v. Talmadge, 18 Barb. 456; New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Ely, 2 Cow. 678.

So it has been held that an attempted distinction between loans and discounts is unsubstantial as regards the charter restrictions upon the right of a bank to reserve interest. State v. Boatmen's Sav. Inst. 48 Mo. 129.

The power to "discount upon banking principles and usages" means to take interest in advance. McLean v. Lafayette Bank, 3 McLean, 597.

Deducting interest in advance from the face of a loan is authorized by a charter provision for discounting at a specified rate. Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, 1 Cranch, C. C. 552.

The ordinary meaning of the term "to discount" is to take interest in advance, and in banking is a mode of loaning money. It is the advance of money not due until some future period less the interest which would be due thereon when payable. Weckler v. Hagerstown First Nat. Bank, 42 Md. 522; Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Townor, 13 Conn. 242.

A discount by a bank means a deduction or drawback made upon its advances or loans of money upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt payable at a future day which are transferred to the bank. Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. ed. 631.

The prohibition in the charter of a corporation against discounting notes applies to the taking and renewal of a note on which the interest is paid or secured in advance. Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Townor, 13 Conn. 242.

The right of a bank to "discount bills, notes and other evidences of debt" includes the taking of concurrent bills of other banks at less than their face value. People v. Metropolitan Bank, 7 How. Fr. 144.

16 L. R. A.

See also 17 L. R. A. 622.

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Henry County in favor of plaintiff in an action upon a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. W. Croan, Farleigh & Straus and John T. Bashaw, for appellants.

Mr. William Carroll for appellee.

Bennett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, as its name indicates, is a bank doing business in the state under and by authority of the Banking Act of the Congress of the United States, and, as such bank, it purchased the following note before it was due:

$260. March 30th, 1887.

Nine months after date we promise to pay to the order of B. F. Smith two hundred and sixty dollars at German Insurance Bank, Louisville, Ky., value received. J. W. Ridgway. J. B. Nicholson."

This note, on the 26th of December, 1887, four days before its maturity, was, as is alleged,

The word "discount" in a statute providing for an allowance against the assignee of an instrument of "all payments, discounts, and set-offs" means every equity against the claim. Ferguson v. Hill, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 465, 21 Am. Dec. 641.

Whether discounting includes buying and selling.

On this question the cases are much divided, especially those concerning national banks.

Discounting in most cases is but another name for buying at a discount. Tracy v. Talmadge, 18 Barb. 456.

To discount a bill is to buy it for a less sum than that which upon its face is payable. Saltmarsh v. Planters & M. Bank, 14 Ala. 688.

So a plea that a note acquired by a bank after forfeiture of its charter while it still had power to take the note in payment, was acquired by discounting is good in an action by the representatives of the bank upon the note. Ibid.

A national bank has no authority to engage in the business of selling railroad bonds on commission under its power to carry on the business of banking "by discounting and negotiating promissory notes," etc. Weckler v. Hagerstown First Nat. Bank, 42 Md. 522.

The purchase of state or other stocks for the purpose of profit, except in payment for a debt, is beyond the authority of a bank under its power to carry on banking by discounting bills, notes, and other evidences of debt. Talmadge v. Pell, 7 N. Y. 323.

This case decided by the Court of Appeals in 1832, but reported in 1854, is not referred to in the subsequent case of Tracy v. Talmadge, 18 Barb. 456, which was decided September 25, 1854, and which is in conflict with the decision of the Court of Appeals.

The purchaser of a promissory note from one bank by another which has power to discount notes is not in excess of its powers, although it is forbidden to "deal or trade in anything except bills of exchange, gold, or silver bullion or in the sale of goods" pledged for loans. Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. ed. 631.

The term "discounting" includes a purchase as "assigned, transferred, and discounted for value to the appellee by B. F. Smith and at the time the note was discounted, B. F. Smith and J. J. Smith indorsed the same, etc. Only the makers of the note made defense. It is insisted by them that the note was not purchased by discounting it in the regular course of banking business, but by mere barter and sale, which purchase was, under the National Banking Law, ultra vires. Consequently the appellee acquired no title to the note by the purchase; or, if the purchase was not void in consequence of its being ultra vires, the purchase was not of that character that gave the note in the hands of the appellee, as an innocent holder for value, the immunity of a foreign bill of exchange, but was of that character, to wit, a mere purchase by barter and sale, that entitled the appellants, as makers, to rely on any defenses to the note in hands of the appellee that they could have relied on against the payee. The lower court instructed the jury that if they believed that the appellee discounted the note before its maturity, etc., in the usual course of business, and without notice of any infirmity in the note, they should find for the appellee. The court refused to submit the question as to whether or not the purchase of the note was by mere barter and sale. Therefore it must be construed that the court was of the opinion that there was not sufficient evidence of that fact to entitle the question to go to the jury; or that, if the purchase was by barter and sale, it was not, in consequence of it, ultra vires, or that it did not reduce the note from the footing of a foreign bill of exchange to the level of an ordinary promissory note. If the court was in error as to these propositions, the case must be reversed; if not, it must be affirmed. The Act of Congress relating to the powers of appellee, among other things, provides: "To exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes," etc. Section 21, chap. 22, Gen. Stat., provides, in substance, that promissory notes payable to any persons or corporation, and payable and negotiable at any bank incorporated under any law of this state, or organized in this state under any law of the United States, which notes shall be indorsed to and discounted by the bank at which they are made payable, or by any of the banks specified, shall be placed upon the same footing as foreign bills of exchange. There is no dispute about well as a loan. Pape v. Capitol Bank of Topeka, 20 Kan. 450, 27 Am. Rep. 183.

A savings bank with the power of "discounting" as distinguished from a commercial bank with the power of "carrying on banking business by discounting," has power to purchase a promissory note. Ibid.

A national bank may purchase from the holder notes of third parties under its power to discount and negotiate such notes. Smith v. Exchange Bank of Pittsburg, 25 Ohio St. 141.

The purchase by a bank from the holder of a note of a third person, although not indorsed by the holder is a discount of the note, within the meaning of a statute allowing loans or discounts by a bank and the title of the bank is not defeated by taking an excessive discount although a penalty may be thereby incurred. Atlantic State Bank of Brooklyn v. Savery, 83 N. Y. 251.

The purchase of the note of a third person from an indorser by way of loan to him, is within the power of a national bank. First Nat. Bank of Greenville v. Sherburne, 14 Ill. App. 566.

If the party dealing with the bank assumes a responsibility in connection with the transaction, it is a loan. Ibid.

On the contrary it has been decided that the purchase of a note for speculation is not included within the power given to a national bank to "carry on the business of banking by discounting and negotiating promissory notes," etc. Also that the fact of indorsement by the seller does not necessarily show that the transaction was a loan or discount, instead of the purchase of the note. First Nat. Bank of Rochester v. Pierson, 24 Minn. 141. See Federal cases, infra.

An earlier decision in the same state held that the purchase of a note from the holder who does not indorse or expressly assume any obligations in connection with the transfer is not within the power "to carry on the business of banking by discounting bills, notes, and other evidences of debt." Farmers & M. Bank v. Baldwin, 23 Minn. 126, 23 Am. Rep. 663.

And again in Maryland it was decided that a national bank has no authority to use such surplus funds as remain on hand from day to day for the purpose of buying notes, even if it may invest its surplus capital in notes. Lazar v. National Union Bank, 52 Md. 124, 36 Am. Rep. 855.

Application of usury laws.

This question whether or not purchasing is included in discounting arises also in respect to the rates of discount that may be taken, and here again the question is not yet entirely settled.

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the purchase by a national bank of business paper transferred to it by indorsement, imposing the ordinary liability upon the indorser, is a discounting of the paper, within U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5197, 5198, limiting the rate of interest which may be taken. National Bank of Gloversville v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 271, 20 L. ed. 742.

The court in this case says it may perhaps be distinguished from cases where the title to the paper is transferred by an indorsement without recourse or by mere delivery.

But a recent decision of the Federal court of appeals holds that those sections apply also to a purchase of drafts by a national bank before their maturity although they are transferred by mere delivery without indorsement. Danforth v. National State Bank, 48 Fed. Rep. 271.

In harmony with this is an Ohio decision the power "to carry on the business of banking by discounting bills, notes, and other evidences of debt" where a rate of discount is fixed, is not a power to buy promissory notes at unrestricted rates. The power to buy, if included in the power to loan, must be subject to the restriction. Niagara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 87.

On the contrary in the Missouri it is held that the purchase of bills of exchange by a bank is not within a statute restricting the rate of interest, unless the purchase was only a loan in disguise. State v. Boatmen's Sav. Inst. 48 Mo. 129.

So where express power is given to a bank to buy bills and notes it is not subject to the restriction as to rates of discount but authorizes the bank to take the note of a third person from the holder in payment of a precedent debt at any price agreed upon. Dunkle v. Renick, 6 Ohio St. 537.

B. A. R.

the fact that the note was made payable and negotiable at a bank organized in this state under the law of the United States, and that it was purchased before its maturity, and without notice of any infirmity in it, and that the appellee was organized in this state under the law of the United States; but the contention is, as said, that the purchase was not by discounting the note in the usual course of banking business, but by barter and sale; hence the purchase was either ultra vires and void, or that the note, by reason of such purchase, was not placed upon the footing of a foreign bill of exchange, but it was subject to any defenses that the appellants were entitled to as against the payee. If the purchase of the note was by discounting it in the usual course of business,—the business of discounting,—and not by barter and sale, all controversy as to the right of the appellee to recover its value as upon a foreign bill of exchange is at an end. What, then, is a purchase by discount and a purchase by barter and sale? The first named is defined as follows: "By language of the commercial world, and the settled practice of banks, a discount by a bank means, ex vi termini, a deduction or draw-back made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt, payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank." See 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 678. The discounting indicated is a purchase by discounting, as distinguished from a purchase by barter and sale. The latter is defined by Bouvier and this court to mean that the seller does not indorse the note at all, except, perhaps, without recourse, and is not accountable upon the contract for the value of it. He is only responsible, in such sale, for fraud, and upon his implied warranty that the note is genuine. In all else the purchaser takes the note for better or worse; hence he gives as a general thing, less for it. See 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. title, Discount; Triplett v. Holly, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 181. Which category is the purchase in? Let us see. The substance of the uncontradicted evidence of the appellee's cashier is that the appellee's usual discount is 8 per cent, that four days before the maturity of the note he purchased it in the usual course of trade, the time being short, at a lumping discount of one dollar. The appellant contends that this lumping discount, or "lumping trade," as the witness calls it, was not discounting in the usual course of trade. Therefore the purchase of the note was either ultra vires and void, or it was deprived of its footing as a foreign bill of exchange, and stood in the attitude of having been purchased by barter and sale, which let in the antecedent equities between the makers and payee as against the note in the hands of the appellee. But the purchase of the note was not, in effect, by barter and sale; for, as seen, the elements of a sale, without an assignment, or an assignment without recourse, and the non-accountability for the value of the note, are wanting to make such sale in a case like this. Here the seller of the note and another did indorse it, and thereby bound themselves to be accountable for its value, and the note was purchased before its maturity for value, and in the usual course of discounting, and without notice of any infirmity in it. All the elements requisite to put the paper in the hands of the appellee, upon the footing of a foreign bill of exchange were complied with, save, as is contended, it was discounted by a lumping trade, and not according to the rule of 8 per cent, ascertained by exact calculation. But it seems to us that the taking a greater sum as discount than 8 per cent, and by a lumping trade, does not deprive the paper of its footing as a bill of exchange. The law of Congress does not prescribe the per cent that shall be charged as discount in order to make the purchase by discount not ultra vires, or to make it have the character of negotiable paper. The per centum of discount is left optional with the bank, except, if such per centum amounts to usury, the bank forfeits its entire interest etc.; but the purchase, so far as the title of the note and its negotiability is concerned, is not affected by the usurious discount. Nor does the Act of Congress require the bank to adopt any uniform per centum of discount; that matter is left optional with the bank. It may adopt a general rule upon the subject, which it may disregard and change as often as it pleases; or it may not adopt any general rule at all on the subject, but make the per centum of discount a subject of bargain upon the occasion of each purchase, controlled by the ability and punctuality of the parties, etc. The pivotal question is not whether the bank purchased the note by discounting at a regularly established per centum, or by a lumping trade, but whether the note was purchased by discounting it in the usual course of trade, that of bank discounting, at any price the parties might agree on, before the maturity of the note, and without notice of any infirmity in it. These conditions being answered in the affirmative, the paper is entitled to the immunities of negotiable paper. It is true the discount might be so great as to be strong evidence, in connection with other circumstances tending to prove notice of the infirmity of the paper, that the bank had notice at the time it bought the paper of its infirmity. But such is not the case here. There is no error in the instructions prejudicial to the appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

John L. SHIDELER, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Indiana.

(..... Ind.)

That an acquittal was procured by

NOTE.—The above case is without precedent for or against so far as we have discovered.

16 L. R. A.

See also 45 L. R. A. 216.

bribery of the prosecuting attorney will not destroy the effect of a plea of former jeopardy where the state was a party to the former prosecution and was represented throughout by its proper officer while the proceedings up to and including the submission, were regular.

(October 6, 1891.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Madison County, convicting him of bigamy after his setting up a plea of former acquittal. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank P. Foster, William A. Kittinger and L. M. Schwinn, for appellant:

No person shall be put in jeopardy twice for the same offense.

Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 59.

The doctrine is also laid down in Gillette, Crim. Law, § 519; Smith v. State, 85 Ind. 566, 557; State v. Elder, 65 Ind. 262, 83 Am. Rep. 69.

It is true as claimed by the state in this case that if one fraudulently procures his own trial and acquittal without a representation of the state, such will be held void. But we do not believe that such, in legal contemplation at least, was the fact in this case and that therefore Watkins v. State, 68 Ind. 427, 84 Am. Rep. 273; Halloran v. State, 80 Ind. 586, and other cases cited by the prosecution do not go far enough to uphold the judgment of the lower court in the case at bar.

We think there is a distinction between the facts in those cases and the one at bar which must not be overlooked. In those cases it seems that the state was not represented. There was such fraud that she was not held to be a party, but here the state of Indiana was a party because it was represented regularly, through all the steps in the trial, by its duly elected and acting prosecuting attorney.

Messrs. A. C. Carver and A. G. Smith for the State.

McBride, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 18th day of April, 1890, an affidavit was made before the clerk of Madison county charging the appellant with the crime of bigamy. The prosecuting attorney for that judicial circuit on the same day filed the affidavit in the clerk's office of that county, together with an information based thereon. The records of the Madison circuit court show that on the 19th day of May, 1890, the appellant was arraigned and entered a plea of not guilty, was tried by the court and acquitted, and that throughout the state was represented by the prosecuting attorney. September 22, 1890, he was indicted by the grand jury of that county for the same offense, and on being arraigned he filed a plea of former acquittal. A reply was filed alleging that the former acquittal was procured by fraud. A demurrer to the reply was overruled. There was a plea of not guilty, and a trial, which resulted in the conviction of the appellant, and he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the state prison.

The judgment of conviction can only be sustained by treating the judgment of acquittal in the first proceeding as absolutely void, and ignoring it. Can this be done? Waiving any question as to the technical sufficiency of the reply, the facts, as the state claims to have established them by evidence on the trial, and which are relied upon as sufficient to justify the collateral attack on the judgment of acquittal, are substantially as follows:

That, after the commencement of the first prosecution, persons acting in the interest of the appellant corrupted the prosecuting attorney by paying him a bribe of $500 to connive at appellant's escape from punishment; that although the fact of appellant's guilt was beyond controversy, and the evidence ample to secure a conviction, the witnesses for the state, who had arranged with the prosecutor to come, and who would have come at any time on notice, were not subpoenaed or in any other way notified of the time of the trial, and were none of them present; that the prosecutor and the appellant went into court together without witnesses, a plea of not guilty was entered, and the case submitted to the court for trial without a jury; that the only evidence adduced was the statement of the accused, and two ex parte affidavits produced by him; that this was all in accordance with said corrupt arrangement to secure the appellant's escape from punishment; and that it was upon such presentation of the case alone that the finding and judgment of acquittal were based. It has many times decided, and may be regarded as settled law, that if one procures himself to be prosecuted for an offense which he has committed, thinking to get off with slight punishment or none, and to thus bar a prosecution in good faith by the state for the same offense, if the proceeding is really managed by himself, either directly or through the agency of another, and the state, while a party in name, is not so in fact, and has no actual agency in the matter, the judgment thus procured is void, and affords no protection. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 1010; Archb. Crim. Proc. 352, note by the American editor; Watkins v. State, 68 Ind. 427, 84 Am. Rep. 273; Halloran v. State, 80 Ind. 586; Ice v. State, 128 Ind. 590; Gresley v. State, 128 Ind. 72; State v. Lowry, 1 Swan, 84; State v. Oleny, 1 Head, 270; State v. Colvin, 11 Humph. 599, 54 Am. Dec. 58; State v. Yarbrough, 8 N. C. 78; Com. v. Dascom, 111 Mass. 404; Com. v. Alderman, 4 Mass. 477; State v. Little, 1 N. H. 257; State v. Wakefield, 60 Vt. 618; Com. v. Jackson, 2 Va. Cas. 501; State v. Epps, 4 Sneed, 552; State v. Green, 16 Iowa, 289; State v. Atkinson, 9 Humph. 877; State v. Brown, 16 Conn. 54; State v. Simpson, 28 Minn. 66, 41 Am. Rep. 269; McFarland v. State, 68 Wis. 400, 60 Am. Rep. 867; State v. Cole, 48 Mo. 70.

While the judgments in such cases as these above cited are fraudulently procured, and are frequently said to be void because of the fraud practiced, it is apparent that a better reason for holding them void and not binding upon the state is that the state is not a party to them. The state can no more be bound by a judgment to which it is not a party to than a citizen of a state can. If A and B engage in litigation, and during its pendency B corrupts A's attorney, and through him procures the rendition of a judgment unjust to A, and inuring to B's advantage, although the judgment is thus tainted by fraud, if the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the proceedings are apparently fair and regular on their face, the judgment is not void, and cannot be attacked collaterally. A judgment rendered under such circumstances is voidable, and the court rendering it will promptly set it aside on the fraud being shown. Freem. Judgm. 99.

A court of equity will also give relief from a judgment thus procured. Black, Judgm. 919; Freem. Judgm. 486, et seq.; Pom. Eq. Jur. 919. The attack, however, must be direct, and not collateral. Black, Judgm. 290 et seq., and cases cited. If, however, B, without the knowledge or consent of A, and wholly without authority, personates him, or procures another to personate him, and prosecutes a suit in A's name, but actually in the interest of B, whereby a judgment is rendered to the disadvantage of A and advantage of B, it would be contrary to all principles of justice to hold that A was in any manner or to any extent bound by such judgment. Never having been a party to it, or having any notice or knowledge of the proceeding, he may treat it as a nullity, and may attack it collaterally, as the state was allowed to do in each of the several cases cited. In speaking of such cases, Bishop well says: "He [the defendant] is, while thus holding his fate in his own hands in no jeopardy. The plaintiff state is no party in fact, but only such in name. The judge is imposed upon, indeed, yet in point of law adjudicates nothing. All is a mere puppet show, and every wire moved by the defendant himself." 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 1010.

The Supreme Court of New Hampshire in State v. Little, supra, suggests a query whether a judgment can ever be regarded as fraudulent and void when the state has been actually represented by its proper prosecuting officer. We have been unable to find any case in the books, presenting the peculiar features of the case at bar, where the courts have considered the sufficiency of a judgment thus procured as a defense to another prosecution for crime. Here the first prosecution was commenced regularly and in good faith, and the state was represented throughout by its regularly authorized officer and agent, the prosecuting attorney. The charge is that pending the prosecution the prosecuting attorney was corrupted, and paid to secure an acquittal instead of a conviction. So far as disclosed by the record, the prosecution proceeds with regularity throughout. The arraignment, plea, and submission are regular, but the trial is a farce. The distinction between such a case and those cited is at once apparent, and is very broad. While the baseness of an officer who will thus prostitute his office cannot be too severely condemned, and while he should receive prompt and severe punishment, our indignation should not be allowed to blind us to the principle involved. Our anxiety to rectify the wrong done, and punish the wrong-doer, should not lead us to violate established principles of law in our efforts to do so. In the first prosecution the court had jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and of the parties. As above stated, the proceedings were regular up to and including the submission, and are not void. The steps taken were the usual, proper, and necessary steps in such a case, except that the defendant has a right to a jury trial, instead of a trial by the court. It is not pretended, however, that the judge was corrupt, or that his action was not characterized throughout by the highest and purest motives, and most sincere devotion to duty. When the cause was submitted for trial, jeopardy attached; so that, even if the extreme position were taken, and the trial regarded as a nullity, and the judgment absolutely void, we could expunge both from the record, and there would still remain a valid prosecution pending, awaiting trial. Upon the other hand, if the former judgment, while voidable because of the fraud, is not void, (which is our opinion,) it is not open to collateral attack. In either view of the case, it follows that the court erred in ignoring the first prosecution, and in allowing a new and independent prosecution to be maintained. Whatever rights the state has, must be marked out in the original proceeding. The views we have expressed necessarily lead to a reversal. It is unnecessary, and would be premature, for us to decide at this time and in this case what will be proper procedure for the state in the future conduct of this matter. We will only say that the question is not free from difficulty. It has, however, received consideration from those learned in the law, and some interesting and valuable suggestions will be found in 1 Bishop, on Criminal Law, §§ 1008, 1009. See also Re v. Bear, 2 Salk. 646; State v. Tyghman, 88 N. C. 518; State v. Swope, 79 N. C. 632.

Judgment reversed.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed in response to which, on November 21, 1891, McBride, J., on behalf of the court delivered the following opinion:

A petition for a rehearing by the state is based on an evident misapprehension of the scope and effect of the original opinion. While it is true that a prosecution which is in fact instituted and carried on to final judgment by or in the interest of a guilty person to enable him to defeat justice and escape merited punishment (he in person or by his instruments managing both sides) may be treated as void by the state and ignored, on the ground that the state is not in fact in any sense a party to it, and therefore not bound by it, this is not true where the state is in fact a party to the proceeding. Where a prosecution is in fact regularly commenced by the prosecuting attorney, and is thereafter carried to final judgment, the state being represented throughout by its sworn officer, the prosecuting attorney, such judgment is not void because the prosecutor was corrupted during the pendency of the proceeding. The state is a party to such judgment. The conduct of its unworthy representative, conspiring with the guilty party, may render it voidable, but it cannot be ignored.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

COMMISSIONERS OF VERMILLION COUNTY, Appt.,

James CHIPPS, Admr., etc., of Robert Baker, Deceased.

(.....Ind.....)

1. County officers are not negligent in accepting a bridge containing defective timbers which an expert, employed by them to determine that question, honestly believes sufficient.
2. A mistake in respect to the safety of a bridge made by a competent person employed by the proper county officers to examine it and put it in good repair, will not make the county liable if it remains unsafe.
3. One who subjects a bridge to an unusual and extraordinary load or strain cannot recover damages for an injury which he receives in consequence.
4. On the question whether or not the running of traction engines over a bridge which had been built for many years was usual and ordinary where there is proof of the passage of only one engine over it, evidence as to the passage of such engines over other bridges is inadmissible.

(January 15, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fountain County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Davidson, Baker & Yount and
M. G. Rhoads for appellant.

Messrs. Conley & Sawyer for appellee.

Coffey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint in this case alleges that the appellee is the duly appointed and qualified administrator of the estate of Robert Baker, deceased; that on the 20th day of July, 1887, there was a bridge in Vermillion county which had prior thereto been constructed by said county and which it was bound to maintain; that it had negligently constructed said bridge by placing therein weak, knotty, and defective timbers, leaving it in an unsafe condition, and that it had negligently accepted said bridge from the contractor who built the same, in an unsafe condition for passengers, by reason of the weak, knotty, and defective pine timbers placed therein, while the contract and specifications for said bridge provided that the same should be constructed in a good, substantial, workmanlike manner, of poplar timber; that it had negligently suffered said bridge to remain in such unsafe condition and to become out of repair, so that on the 20th day of July, 1887, the joists and other timbers upon which the floor of said bridge was laid were defective, weak, brittle, knotty, old, decayed and rotten, so that it was dangerous for persons to pass over the same in the ordinary use of said highway, of which the county had notice that on that day the deceased, Robert Baker not knowing the defective, decayed, and dangerous condition of the bridge, but having reason to believe it was in good repair and in safe condition, attempted to pass over the same with portable traction engine used for threshing grain, and by reason of the defective, decayed, and dangerous condition of the bridge caused by the failure and neglect of the board of commissioners of the county to properly construct and keep the same in repair, and without any fault on the part of the deceased, the bridge gave way and precipitated the deceased and said engine into the stream below, a distance of sixteen feet, whereby he was, without any fault on his part, stunned, bruised and scalded, from the effects of which he died; that he left a widow and two children, who were dependent upon him for support.

To this complaint the appellant filed an answer in two paragraphs, first, the general denial; second, alleging contributory negligence. The court sustained a demurrer to the second paragraph of the answer, to which appellant excepted. A trial by jury resulted in a general verdict for the appellee. The jury also returned answers to interrogatories with their general verdict. Over a motion for new trial the court rendered judgment on the general verdict for the appellee. Several reasons for a reversal of the judgment of the circuit court are urged here, which will be considered in the order in which they are presented by counsel for appellant.

First. It is contended that the complaint above referred to does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The sufficiency of the complaint is questioned for the first time in this court by an assignment of error. It is settled that where the sufficiency of a complaint is questioned for the first time in this court by assignment of error it will withstand such attack if it be sufficient to bar another action for the same cause and would be good after verdict. De Souchet v. Dutcher, 118 Ind. 249, 12 West. Rep. 892; Orton v. Tilden, 110 Ind. 181, 8 West. Rep. 905; Hornady v. Shields, 119 Ind. 201.

In the case of Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 69, 6 West. Rep. 917, it was said by this court: "The liability of counties for negligence in constructing or maintaining bridges is no longer an open question in this state, for there are many cases declaring that they are liable."

The complaint before us sufficiently alleges the negligence of the county, both in constructing and maintaining the bridge therein described, and contains the necessary allegation that the deceased was without fault.

It is contended by the appellant's counsel that ordinarily this would be sufficient; but it is insisted that it is not sufficient under the rule announced in the case of Carver v. Wabash (Ind.) 13 L. R. A. 851. In that case

NOTE.—For negligence in construction and care of highway bridges including the matter of extraordinary use of such bridges, see note to Wabash v. Carver (Ind.) 13 L. R. A. 851.

16 L. R. A.

See also 26 L. R. A. 254; 48 L. R. A. 455.

a rehearing was granted and upon a reconsideration of the question it was held that the complaint in that case stated a cause of action. We think the complaint in this case is also sufficient.

The court committed no available error in sustaining a demurrer to the second paragraph of the appellant's answer, as all the matters therein averred were admissible in evidence under the general denial which was pleaded. Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 479, 9 West. Rep. 212; Haywood v. Hedrick, 94 Ind. 340; Becknell v. Becknell, 110 Ind. 42, 7 West. Rep. 922.

The facts in this case as they are disclosed by the evidence are, that the bridge mentioned in the complaint is a covered bridge, about thirty feet in length, and was constructed in the year 1869. For at least ten years after its construction traction engines were not used in Vermillion county, where the bridge is situated, but for the period of four or five years prior to July, 1887, they had been in general use. On the 20th day of July, 1887, the appellees' intestate attempted to cross the bridge with a traction engine weighing eight thousand six hundred pounds, when the bridge gave way and he was thereby killed.

The evidence tends to show that six thousand pounds was the heaviest load to which bridges in that neighborhood were subject at the time this one was constructed. The bridge in question was constructed by one Daniels, an expert bridge builder, under plans and specifications furnished by the county. The evidence tended to prove that some of the timbers which gave way were knotty and brittle, and had begun to decay. One Britton, an expert called as a witness by the appellee, testified that the defects in these timbers were original defects, the timbers being unfit for use as bridge timber by reason of its knotty and brash condition, while Daniels, an expert called by the appellant and the person who constructed the bridge, testified that the timber was good and was suitable for the construction of a good and safe bridge, and were such as were put in all bridges at the time this was constructed, and that he inspected and accepted the timber believing it to be suitable for the purpose intended.

Two or three weeks before the accident above mentioned, the trustees of the township in which the bridge is situated employed a carpenter of twenty-four years' experience, to examine the bridge and make a careful inspection of its timbers and put the same in good repair which he, in connection with the supervisor, proceeded to do. He put in some new timbers and, after inspection, pronounced the others sound and safe and supplied the bridge with a new floor.

On the trial of the cause the court, over the objection and exception of the appellant, permitted the appellee to prove that in other parts of the county, and on other highways than the one in controversy, traction engines were common, and that it was customary for them to cross the bridges on such highways.

16 L. R. A.

The decided weight of authority is, that in the absence of a statute upon the subject, a county is not liable for a failure to keep its bridges in repair. Elliott, Roads and Streets, p. 42.

The reason given in most of the adjudicated cases for holding that counties are not liable in such cases is, that as the state would not be liable, it is unreasonable to hold that a public corporation, such as a county, which is a mere governmental instrumentality, should be held liable. But whether this reason is valid or otherwise we need not stop to inquire, for it is now firmly settled in this state that a county is liable for a failure to exercise reasonable care in the construction of its bridges, or to exercise reasonable care in keeping such bridges in repair.

Counties are not insurers, however, of the safety of their bridges; nor are they bound, when constructing them, to anticipate uses not then known, and necessities which are not within ordinary experience. So in repairing they have performed their whole legal duty when they have put them in as good a condition of strength and soundness as will make them as secure as new bridges of the same kind and plan. Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Kimball Twp. 52 Mich. 146; Medina Twp. v. Perkins, 48 Mich. 67; McCormick v. Washington Twp. 112 Pa. 185, 2 Cent. Rep. 584; Wabash County Comrs. v. Pearson, 120 Ind. 428.

In the case of Wabash County Comrs. v. Pearson, supra, it was said by this court: "A corporation charged with the duty of keeping a bridge in repair must select the proper means and persons to do the work, if by the exercise of ordinary care such selection can be made. If, however, after ordinary care is used in selecting suitable persons, and requiring the persons selected to exercise their skill with reasonable prudence and diligence, the bridge still remains unsafe, there will be no liability."

The first question presented for our consideration under the facts above stated is this, Was the board of commissioners guilty of negligence in accepting the bridge, mentioned in the complaint, at the time of its construction?

If the question as to whether some of the timbers used in the bridge were defective was the only question involved, we could not disturb the verdict on the evidence, for we will not weigh conflicting testimony; but the question in the case is not alone as to whether the timber was defective, but the further question exists as to whether the defect was of such a character as to charge the county with negligence in accepting a bridge containing such timber. In the construction of bridges the county is not liable for latent defects which could not have been discovered by the use of reasonable diligence, in the material used, and is only bound to use ordinary or reasonable care to make the structure safe for the uses for which it was intended. McCormick v. Washington Twp. supra.

The case cited was a case where a bridge gave way by reason of defective timber, under the weight of a traction engine, and the court instructed the jury as follows: "If the jury believe that the supervisors, or those in their employment, when building the bridge in July or August of 1888, tested the alleged defective chords or stringers by cutting into it with an axe, or in any other manner, as an ordinarily prudent man would do under the circumstances, they performed their duty and negligence cannot be inferred because of a mistake made in the performance of such duty."

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania held this instruction to be a correct exposition of the law.

In the case of Medina Twp. v. Perkins, supra, where a bridge gave way by reason of defective timber, under the weight of a portable engine, the Supreme Court of Michigan, in discussing the question as to the duty of township officers in relation to bridges said: "The law will not impose an impracticable rule of duty. Township officers are not expected to be experts, nor learned engineers, nor persons liberally instructed in mechanics, nor individuals equipped with the resources of experienced specialists, and nothing more can be demanded of them than reasonable intelligence and ordinary care and prudence. And no duty is enjoined on the township to keep informed of the condition of its bridges that they may be taken as being above the capacity of its own officers."

In this case no complaint is made of the plan of the bridge. The county employed a skilled and competent person to construct it according to the plans and specifications. Such skilled person inspected and received the timber which entered into its construction, and testifies that in his opinion they were suitable for the purpose for which they were used. He further testified that such timbers were used at the time the bridge was built by all persons of competent skill. It is not denied or disputed that the expert employed by the county to construct this bridge honestly believed the timber used by him, after inspection to be suitable bridge timbers. Is it to be said that the officers of the county, who are not presumed to be experts, are guilty of negligence in accepting a bridge containing timbers which an expert did honestly believe sufficient?

The timbers of which complaint is now made did in fact prove to be sufficient to bear up all ordinary loads to which they were subjected for a period of eighteen years. In view of these facts we are of the opinion that the evidence in the cause does not make a case of negligence against the county in accepting the bridge in question from the contractor. To hold otherwise would require of the board of commissioners something more than ordinary diligence, and would in fact make it the insurers of the safety of the county bridges.

Where the facts are undisputed and can lead to but one conclusion, the question of negligence is a question of law for the court. Mann v. Bolt R. & S. Y. Co. 128 Ind. 188.

Nor do we think the evidence sustains the charge that the county was guilty of negligence in failing to keep the bridge in repair.

About two or three weeks prior to the accident we are now considering, the proper legal authority employed a competent person to examine the bridge and put the same in good repair. He proceeded to do so and gave the timbers such examination as he deemed necessary to test their soundness, and did such other things as he thought necessary to make the bridge safe. If he made a mistake the county cannot be charged with negligence by reason of such mistake. The duty of the county was to exercise reasonable care in selecting a proper person to examine and repair the bridge, and to require of him the exercise of his skill, and if it did so and the bridge still remained unsafe, the county was not liable. Wabash County Comrs. v. Pearson, supra.

As the legislative department of the state has determined that the removal of traction engines upon the public highways is a subject calling for the exercise of the police power, it may fairly be considered as a question as to whether we are not bound to know that the use of the highways for that purpose is not usual and ordinary. Elliott's Supp. § 847.

But without stopping to inquire whether we are or are not bound to take such notice, we think the court erred in permitting the appellee to prove, on the trial of the cause, that it was usual and ordinary for traction engines to pass over other highways and bridges than the one in controversy. It did not tend to prove that the deceased in using the bridge mentioned in the complaint was using it in the usual and ordinary way.

In the case of McCormick v. Washington Twp. supra, it was held that in order to recover, the plaintiff must show that at the time of the accident he was using the highway in the ordinary and usual manner in which that highway was, had been, and was intended to be used, and if he was not traveling in the usual and ordinary way in that vicinity he was not entitled to recover. As we have seen, this bridge was constructed at least ten years before traction engine's came into use. In the case of Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Kimball Twp. supra, in speaking of the subject of repairs the Supreme Court of Michigan said: "When it [the statute] requires repairs it may fairly be construed as requiring bridges to be put in as good a condition of strength and soundness as would make them as secure as new bridges of the same kind and plan. But it does not require different structure." The rule that one who uses a bridge in a manner not usual or ordinary, or subjects it to an unusual or extraordinary load or strain, and is thereby injured, cannot recover damages for such injury, is well settled.

That the proof that traction engines had passed over other highways and bridges in the county was considered by the jury in this case as proof that the deceased was using the bridge in controversy in the ordinary and usual way is made to appear by their answers to interrogatories for they so find, whereas there is no proof in the record that more than one engine had, prior to the injury complained of, passed over this bridge. The fact that one engine passed over the bridge shortly before this accident does not make that the usual and ordinary mode of travel over it. The admission, therefore, of evidence that traction engines had passed over other highways and bridges in the county was not only error, but it was an error which resulted in an injury to the appellant. For the errors above indicated the circuit court should have granted a new trial.

Judgment reversed, with directions to sustain the appellant's motion for a new trial in this cause.

McBride, J., dissents.

Petition for rehearing overruled April 1, 1893.

INDIANA APPELLATE COURT.

Monroe MOYER, Guardian of Dennis Moyer,
App.,

Amanda M. BUCKS.

(.....Ind.:.....)

Service by publication alone which is shown by the record to be the only service does not give jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against the defendant in a bastardy proceeding in the absence of a statute providing for such service.

(October 22, 1891.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Tippecanoe County

NOTE.—Validity of personal judgments rendered upon constructive service of process.

Against nonresidents.

1. In other states than where rendered.

The authorities all concur in denying jurisdiction in actions in personam over nonresident foreigners, upon anything short of actual notice given within the territorial limits of the forum, or voluntary appearance there. Latimer v. Union Pac. R. Co. 43 Mo. 105, 97 Am. Dec. 373.

In Borden v. Fitch, 15 Johns. 121, 8 Am. Dec. 225, Thompson, Ch. J., says: "It must then be taken, I think, as the settled law of this state, that a judgment obtained in a sister state against a person not being within the jurisdiction of the court, nor having been served with process to appear, nor having appeared to defend the suit, will be absolutely void."

A court has no extraterritorial jurisdiction, and a person not domiciled in the state or country cannot be charged in personam by adjudication there, unless he is personally served with notice of process within it or voluntarily submits himself to the jurisdiction of its court. DeMell v. DeMell, 120 N. Y. 485.

A nonresident of the state is not concluded by a decree in personam based upon constructive service of process upon him. Dearing v. Bank of Charleston, 5 Ga. 497, 48 Am. Dec. 300. In this case it is said: "We believe that there is no law of force in this state authorizing the making of a citizen of a foreign state a party to a suit in our courts, so as to conclude such citizen, by a judgment or decree in personam, unless he voluntarily appears and defends. And that, by the general law, and by the comity of states, the citizen of a foreign state cannot be made a party to a suit in Georgia, so as to be estopped by a judgment against him, without his consent."

Emmett, Ch. J., in Stone v. Myers, 9 Minn. 303, 38 Am. Dec. 104, says of a judgment against a nonresident based on service by publication and attachment of defendant's property within the state: "But such a judgment, though in form in personam, is in effect only a judgment in rem. It is a judgment for no other purpose than to reach the property which a nonresident may have in the state, but who is not personally served with process therein. It is confined exclusively to such property, and is of no further force when that is exhausted."

16 L. R. A.

Beyond this it is evidence of nothing nor does it bind or conclude the defendant in anything. An action could not be maintained on it in any other court here or elsewhere, nor, in my opinion, would the party in whose favor it was rendered be precluded thereby from still bringing another action on the original consideration for any balance that might be due to him after exhausting the property which was in the state at the time jurisdiction attached." See too, language of Miller, J., in Cooper v. Reynolds, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. ed. 931.

A court cannot acquire jurisdiction to render a valid personal judgment against a nonresident by actual service of its process upon him outside the state. York v. State, 73 Tex. 651; Kimmarle v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 76 Tex. 686; Ewer v. Coffin, 1 Cush. 23, 48 Am. Dec. 587; Kelly v. Norwloh Union F. Ins. Co. (Iowa) Feb. 4, 1891; Ford v. Adams (Ark.) Jan. 17, 1891; Cross v. Armstrong, 7 West. Rep. 771, 44 Ohio St. 613.

A personal judgment rendered against a nonresident upon constructive service is void. Miller v. Miller, 1 Ball. L. 242; Aldrich v. Kinney, 4 Conn. 380, 10 Am. Dec. 151; Scott v. Streepy, 73 Tex. 547; Denny v. Ashley, 12 Colo. 165; Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65; Fowler v. Lewis (W. Va.) Feb. 12, 1892; Quari v. Abbott, 102 Ind. 238; Renier v. Hurlburt (Wis.) 14 L. R. A. 532; Abbott v. Sheppard, 44 Mo. 273; Martin v. Cobb, 77 Tex. 544; Kimball v. Merrick, 20 Ark. 12; Silver v. Luck, 42 Ark. 268; Holt v. Alloway, 2 Blackf. 106.

A judgment rendered in one state against a nonresident upon a service of process other than personal service therein will not support an action in another state. Downer v. Shaw, 22 N. H. 277; Arndt v. Arndt, 15 Ohio, 33; Scott v. Noble, 72 Pa. 115, 18 Am. Rep. 663; Price v. Hickok, 39 Vt. 232; Steel v. Smith, 7 Watts & S. 447; Jones v. Spencer, 15 Wis. 583; Earthman v. Jones, 2 Yerg. 484; Chamberlain v. Faris, 1 Mo. 517, 14 Am. Dec. 304; Hogers v. Coleman, Hardin (Ky.) 418; Lincoln v. Tower, 2 McLean, 473; McVicker v. Beedy, 81 Me. 314, 50 Am. Dec. 666.

The only modes in which a court can acquire authority to render a personal judgment against one residing without the state are either by service of process upon him while temporarily within the state or by a voluntary submission of his person to the jurisdiction of the court. Welch v. Sykes, 8 Ill. 197, 44 Am. Dec. 699; Williams v. Preston, 3 J. J. Marsh. 600, 20 Am. Dec. 179; Shumway v. Stillman, 6 Wend. 447.

in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce a judgment against Dennis Moyer out of property in the hands of his guardian. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John D. Gougar and R. P. Davidson, for appellant:

The judgment against Dennis Moyer, in the circuit court, was a personal one, upon constructive notice only. Such a judgment is absolutely void.

Section 390, Rev. Stat. 1881, expressly declares that no personal judgment shall be rendered against a defendant upon constructive notice, who has not appeared to the action. This section, however, was wholly unnecessary. The principle is fundamental, and is thoroughly settled in reason and by countless adjudications that a personal judgment against a nonresident defendant upon constructive notice merely, is an utter nullity.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 80 L. ed. 372; Flint River S. B. Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194, 45 Am. Dec. 248; McEwan v. Zimmer, 38

Mich. 765, 31 Am. Rep. 332; Barber v. Morris, 37 Minn. 194; National Bank v. Peabody, 55 Vt. 492, 45 Am. Rep. 632, note; Gilchrist v. West Virginia Oil & O. L. Co. 21 W. Va. 115, 45 Am. Rep. 553; Elliott v. McCormick, 3 New Eng. Rep. 871, 144 Mass. 10; Smith v. Grady, 68 Wis. 215; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 6 Cent. Rep. 679, 66 Md. 511; Paxton v. Daniell, 1 Wash. 19; Freeman, Judgm. § 567, note; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 449, et seq.; Wade, Notice, § 1084; 4 Walt, Act. & Def. 188, 189, 196; Sturgis v. Fay, 16 Ind. 429, 79 Am. Dec. 440, note; Mitchell v. Gray, 18 Ind. 124; Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321; Nicholson v. Stephens, 47 Ind. 186; Middleworth v. McDowell, 49 Ind. 387; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 270, 26 Am. Rep. 21; State v. Engis, 74 Ind. 20; Sowers v. Edmunds, 76 Ind. 123; Cavanaugh v. Smith, 84 Ind. 382; Cicero v. Williamson, 91 Ind. 541; Paulus v. Lattn, 93 Ind. 41; Quarl v. Abbott, 102 Ind. 233; Dobbins v. McNamara, 12 West. Rep. 680, 113 Ind. 54.

It is a universally acknowledged principle that jurisdiction cannot be acquired or exercised over persons or property without the

Under a Missouri statute providing for establishing the personal liability of stockholders on a judgment against their corporation to the amount of unpaid balances on stock "after sufficient notice in writing to the persons sought to be charged," a judgment of a court in that state adjudging such personal liability against a nonresident who was not personally served with notice within that state is void, where he has not agreed in advance to accept, or does not in fact accept, some other form of service as sufficient. Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. ed. 333; Wilson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) Dec. 22, 1891.

A judgment rendered without personal service in a state court against a nonresident on a warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in a bond as authorized by the statute of the state where it was rendered will not be enforced in the courts of another state. Grover & B. Sewing Machine Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 237, 34 L. ed. 670; Iglehart v. Moore, 16 Ark. 44.

Such statutes can bind only citizens of the state where they exist. Sim v. Frank, 25 Ill. 125.

A personal judgment rendered in a Canadian court against a resident of Wisconsin upon service of process in the latter state as authorized by the laws of Canada has no validity in Wisconsin. Smith v. Grady, 68 Wis. 213. To the same effect are McEwan v. Zimmer, 38 Mich. 765, 31 Am. Rep. 332, and Shepard v. Wright, 113 N. Y. 582.

A judgment against a nonresident rendered without personal service of process within the state or appearance is no bar to an action in another state on the original cause of action. Whittier v. Wendell, 7 N. H. 267; Rangely v. Webster, 11 N. H. 299.

A decree of a state court for the removal of a cloud upon the title of land within the state, rendered against a nonresident cited by publication only, in accordance with the local statutes, being a decree in personam merely, is no bar to an action by such nonresident in a Federal court to recover such land. Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101.

2. In state where rendered.

In some states personal judgments upon constructive service are prohibited by statute.

Where the defendants are served without the state, no personal judgment can be properly entered. Hakes v. Shupe, 27 Iowa, 465; Weil v. Lowenthal, 10 Iowa, 575; Johnson v. Dodge, 19 Iowa, 16 L. R. A.

106; Maddox v. Craig, 80 Tex. 600; Paxton v. Daniell, 1 Wash. 19; Stewart v. Anderson, 70 Tex. 568; Cloyd v. Trotter, 7 West. Rep. 425, 118 Ill. 391.

An action is not maintainable on a judgment rendered against a nonresident who was only constructively summoned either in the courts of the state where the judgment was rendered or of any other state. Needham v. Thayer, 147 Mass. 536, overruling Graves v. Cushman, 181 Mass. 359; McCormick v. Flake, 138 Mass. 379; Cook v. Darling, 18 Pick. 393.

A judgment against a nonresident rendered without personal service within the state will not support an action of debt in the state where rendered. Eastman v. Dearborn, 1 New Eng. Rep. 186, 63 N. H. 364; Sowers v. Edmunds, 76 Ind. 123; Mitchell v. Gray, 18 Ind. 123; Lutz v. Kelly, 47 Iowa, 307. Contra, Granger v. Clark, 22 Me. 123.

It was held in Kendrick v. Kimball, 33 N. H. 453, that an action of debt could be maintained in the New Hampshire courts on a judgment rendered there upon constructive service of process upon one who left the state after the attachment of his property but before personal service could be had. This decision rendered in 1856 is held unsustainable by Eastman v. Dearborn, supra, since the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution and under the latter decisions.

A purely personal judgment rendered upon citation by publication, is good against a collateral attack unless it affirmatively appears from the record that the defendant was a nonresident. Martin v. Burns, 80 Tex. 676.

A personal judgment against a nonresident based upon service by publication will not support garnishment proceedings. Smith v. McCutchen, 38 Mo. 415.

A judgment for a tort against a nonresident based upon publication of the summons, gives the judgment creditor no right to proceed in personam against the defendant, or for the purpose of compelling him to submit to an examination in respect to his property. Bartlett v. McNeil, 60 N. Y. 63.

Against residents.

In Knowles v. Logansport Gas Light & C. Co. 36 U. S. 19 Wall. 53, 22 L. ed. 70, it is said: "We do not mean to say that personal service is in all cases necessary to enable a court to acquire jurisdiction of the person. Where the defendant resides in the state in which the proceedings are had, service at territorial limits of the government where the court sits, and that the Legislature possesses no power to grant it.

Jarvis v. Barrett, 14 Wis. 591. See also Clark v. Hammett, 27 Fed. Rep. 339.

Bastardy proceedings are unknown at common law, and are purely statutory.

Simmons v. Bull, 21 Ala. 501, 56 Am. Dec. 257.

The remedy can go no further than the terms of the statute.

Mariett v. Wilson, 80 Ind. 240; Baker v. State, 56 Wis. 568; Baker v. State, 65 Wis. 50.

The proceeding is governed by the rules of civil practice, but the only process provided for is a warrant.

Morris v. State, 115 Ind. 282.

The defendant in a bastardy case can only be brought in, in the mode provided by statute. It will certainly not be controverted that a process unauthorized by statute is a nullity. So also a publication unless authorized by statute is void.

Brenner v. Quick, 88 Ind. 546; Dowell v. Lahr, 97 Ind. 151; Brown v. Goble, Id. 86;

Vizzard v. Taylor, Id. 93; Fontaine v. Houston, 58 Ind. 316; Freeman, Judgm. § 127.

Notice by publication can only be given in proceedings in rem. In proceedings in rem, the res is under control of the court and it alone is subject to its judgment. If there be neither jurisdiction of person nor in rem the whole proceeding is a nullity.

Stone v. Myers, 9 Minn. 308, 86 Am. Dec. 104. See also note to Molyneux v. Seymour, 76 Am. Dec. 662-670.

Where the record shows one kind of notice there can be no presumption that there was any other.

Ely v. Tallman, 14 Wis. 32, cited in note to Rape v. Heaton, 76 Am. Dec. 280; Barber v. Morris, 37 Minn. 194.

Mr. J. B. Milner for appellee.

Reinhard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant is the guardian of his son, Dennis, a minor, who, until the fall of 1887, was a resident of Tippecanoe county, when it is claimed he left the state and became a non-resident. It appears that after Dennis left the his residence, and perhaps other modes of constructive service, may be authorized by the laws of the state. But in the case of nonresidents . . . personal service cannot be dispensed with unless the defendant voluntarily appears." To the same effect is Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321.

A statute providing for service of process in actions in personam of a strictly judicial character and proceeding according to the course of the common law, by publication, upon residents who can be found within the state is unconstitutional, because such service is not "due process of law." Bardwell v. Collins, 9 L. R. A. 152, 44 Minn. 97.

A judgment rendered against a resident of the state where rendered upon constructive service of process authorized by its laws will be held as valid by its courts as though rendered upon personal service. Thouvenin v. Rodriguez, 24 Tex. 468, 477.

A personal judgment against a resident of the state where it is rendered upon constructive service of process in accordance with local statutes will be enforced in the courts of another state. Budford v. Kirkpatrick, 13 Ark. 33; Nunn v. Sturges, 22 Ark. 389; Mitchell v. Ferris, 5 Houst. (Del.) 84; Cassidy v. Seitch, 2 Abb. N. C. 315.

A personal judgment rendered against a resident of the state upon service of process upon him in accordance with the statute by leaving the same at his usual place of abode is valid until set aside by some direct proceeding taken for that purpose. Hurlbut v. Thomas, 55 Conn. 181; Biesenthal v. Williams, 1 Duv. 329, 55 Am. Dec. 629.

In Huntley v. Baker, 33 Hun. 573, a personal judgment was held valid when sued upon in New York, although rendered in Wisconsin upon service of the summons by leaving it at the defendant's domicile, in accordance with the laws of the latter state, he having left the state without intending to return but not having yet acquired another domicile. The court said, page 560: "Without stating the principle more at length, it may be assumed that by reason of the relation between the state and its citizen, which affords protection to him and his property and imposes upon him duties as such, he may be charged by judgment in personam binding on him everywhere as the result of legal proceedings instituted and carried on in conformity to the statute of the state, prescribing a method of service which is not personal and which in fact may not become actual notice to him."

In Fernandez v. Casey, (Tex.) May 27, 1890, a judgment 16 L. R. A.

ment against one who had left the state intending to seek a home elsewhere, but who afterward returned to the state to live without acquiring a domicile elsewhere, was rendered upon service by publication during his absence and execution thereon levied upon his lands after his return. An injunction against the sale thereunder was refused on the ground that the judgment was valid. It does not appear whether the lands were acquired after his return or not. This is an extreme extension of the doctrine of the right of a state to bind her citizens by any mode of serving process and while it may be distinguished from the decisions in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565, and analogous cases by the citizenship of the defendant, it is in conflict with the language used in the opinions in those cases.

See Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. ed. 338.

If process be served upon a defendant according to the laws of the state of which he is at the time a resident, the judgment rendered there is valid as a bar to an action in another state on the same cause of action. Harryman v. Roberts, 52 Md. 64.

A judgment against a resident of the state rendered upon attachment of his land and service of process by leaving it at his place of abode, will support an action in another state for the balance remaining unsatisfied after a sale of the attached land. Fullerton v. Horton, 11 Vt. 425.

A personal judgment against one who had left the state intending not to return, rendered upon service of process by leaving it with his wife at his recent place of abode, will not sustain an action in another state. Amsbaugh v. Exchange Bank of Maquoketa, 33 Kan. 100.

An action is not maintainable in New York on a judgment rendered in Massachusetts where jurisdiction was obtained by attaching defendant's property and by substituted service of process, he having at the time removed into and become a resident of New York, notwithstanding the judgment was valid under the laws of Massachusetts. Kilburn v. Woodworth, 5 Johns. 37, 4 Am. Dec. 321. To the same effect is Robinson v. Ward, 8 Johns. 88, 5 Am. Dec. 327.

In Elliot v. McCormick, 3 New Eng. Rep. 871, 144 Mass. 10, it is said that Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565, and Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, "modify the application and effect of our statutes, and overrule the adjudications of this court, so far as they hold that a judg-state, on January 10, 1888, the appellee instituted bastardy proceedings against him before a justice of the peace. The warrant that was issued for his arrest was returned "Not found," and the justice proceeded with the trial under the statute. He found that Dennis was the father of the appellee's bastard child, and certified the record to the circuit court, where, on the 18th of May following, an affidavit was filed that the defendant was a resident of the state, but had departed therefrom with the intention of avoiding the service of the process, and that his whereabouts was unknown. Notice by publication having been made, the defendant was defaulted, and a personal judgment rendered against him for $500 on the 5th day of October, 1888. This action is a suit upon that judgment, and was brought against the appellant, as guardian of said Dennis, to obtain satisfaction of the judgment out of the assets in his hands for said ward. The complaint is in one paragraph. The appellant demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled, and the appellant answered in four paragraphs, the third and fourth of which set up the facts above stated at length, and with the additional averments that the ward owned no property in the state of Indiana other than that in the hands of the guardian, which consisted of money, and that no attachment or other proceedings had been instituted against said ward except the bastardy proceedings referred to. A demurrer was sustained to each of these paragraphs. The cause was sub-ment in personam can be rendered against a nonresident defendant without any other service than attaching his property, or leaving a summons at his last and usual place of abode within the state, followed by such publication of notice as is ordered by the court."

What property subject to.

A strictly personal judgment rendered in a state court in an action upon a money demand against a nonresident of the state, without personal service of process upon him within the state or appearance in the action in response to substituted or constructive service is void and cannot be enforced against property of such nonresident located within such state. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 555; McKinney v. Collins, 88 N. Y. 216; Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 636; Cudabao v. Strong, 67 Miss. 705.

In Pelton v. Platner, 13 Ohio, 309, 42 Am. Dec. 197, the court says: "In Ohio we are of the opinion that a judgment before a justice of the peace against property, and no service on the person, appropriates the property only. That execution cannot issue on such judgment against the other property or person of the defendant for any implied balance, nor could an action be sustained upon it as being prima facie evidence of debt. When it has converted the property it is functus officio, and vitality remains to it no longer for any purpose."

A judgment against a nonresident, based upon service by publication and attachment of his property, is effectual only against the particular property attached and will not support an action of debt. Eastman v. Wadleigh, 65 Me. 251, 20 Am. Rep. 695; Gilman v. Gilman, 126 Mass. 26; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 83.

Such judgment cannot bind property not proceeded against in rem in satisfaction of this claim. Bartlett v. Spicer, 75 N. Y. 528; Fleke v. Anderson, 53 Barb. 71.

A judgment in a "foreign attachment" action against a nonresident without personal service on the defendant is not a lien upon lands not attached in such action. Stanley v. Stanley (S. C.) Nov. 30, 1891.

No valid title is acquired by a purchaser at a sale on a general execution under a personal judgment in the same form that would have been proper if defendant had been personally served, where no appearance was made and service was by publication only, although the land had been attached in the suit. Cassidy v. Woodward, 77 Iowa, 354.

"While a personal judgment against a nonresident debtor who is only served with process by publication is void and of no effect, yet in a case where the debtor has property within the state, which is seized under a writ of attachment issued in the cause at the time the suit is brought, a judgment therein, which, though general in its terms, has the effect of perpetuating the attachment lien, and of subjecting the attached property to the payment of a debt due from the nonresident, is so far in the nature of a proceeding in rem as to uphold a sale of the attached property, and considered for that purpose, and to that extent, is not void." State v. Eddy, 10 Mont. 311.

A personal judgment for deficiency in an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage against a nonresident upon whom process was served by publication is unauthorized and void and will not uphold a sale on execution of other land of the defendant within the state than the mortgaged premises. Schwinger v. Hickok, 53 N. Y. 280. In this case Andrews, J., said: "The Legislature could, perhaps, have declared that judgment obtained against a nonresident, upon service by publication, might be enforced against all property of the defendant within the state. Thomas v. Emmert, 4 McLean, 97; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 83; Boaswell v. Otis, 50 U. S. 9 How. 336, 13 L. ed. 184. Such a judgment would be in rem, and would impose no personal liability upon the defendant."

Since the decision in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 555, this dictum could not be adhered to unless limited to property taken by mesne process.

For alimony or costs.

A judgment for alimony and costs is not binding on a nonresident defendant who was not served with process within the state or did not appear in the divorce proceedings. Rigney v. Rigney, 40 N. Y. S. R. 210, citing Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321; Lytle v. Lytle, 43 Ind. 200; Middleworth v. McDowell, 49 Ind. 386; Proesser v. Warner, 47 Vt. 667, 19 Am. Rep. 132; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Garner v. Garner, 56 Md. 127; Van Storch v. Griffin, 71 Pa. 240; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 73, 87; Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 13, 40 Am. Rep. 505; De Mell v. De Mell, 120 N. Y. 435.

No extensive examination of the topic as connected with divorce decrees has been here attempted.

Jurisdiction in partition suits may be acquired over nonresidents by publication merely of process, but not so as to authorize the rendition of personal judgments against them for the costs. Tallaferro v. Butler, 77 Tex. 573; Foote v. Sewall, 81 Tex. 659.

A judgment for costs in a partition suit rendered against a nonresident joint-tenant, summoned by publication only, cannot be enforced as a personal judgment by sale on execution of the land partitioned to him, and such a sale confers no title on the purchaser. Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372. J. G. G.

mitted for trial to the court, and there was a finding in favor of the appellee, upon which, over appellant's motion for a new trial, judgment was rendered. Errors are assigned (1) for overruling the demurrers to the complaint; (2) for sustaining the demurrer to the third paragraph of the answer; (3) for sustaining the demurrer to the fourth paragraph of the answer; (4) for overruling the motion for a new trial. The motion for a new trial challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding.

The principal question thus presented by the record is whether a personal judgment in a bastardy proceeding is or is not void where the record shows on its face that the only service had upon the defendant was notice by publication. The appellee's counsel in their brief says: "As we conceive it, the question is, Can a personal judgment be rendered against a citizen of this state who has left the state to avoid the service of process? The affidavit for publication states that Dennis Moyer, the ward, is a resident of the state. The notice treats him as a nonresident; so does the order of court.

We submit that the affidavit characterizes the proceeding and is the basis of it, and under the statute, though the subsequent proceedings are irregular, some notice was given, and it is sufficient." Looking at the case, then, from the view most favorable to the appellee, the question still remains, May a personal judgment be rendered in a bastardy proceeding against a defendant who has not been arrested or in custody, and upon whom no process has been served, except notice by publication, even though he be a resident of the state, but temporarily absent therefrom? This question, we do not hesitate to say, must be decided adversely to the claims of the appellee. We are not unaware of the rule that, where notice is given by publication, the judgment of the court that the publication and affidavit upon which it is based are sufficient to give it jurisdiction is conclusive upon all the parties as against a collateral attack. Essig v. Lower, 120 Ind. 239; Goodell v. Starr, 127 Ind. 198. But it must be evident that this rule by no means keeps a personal judgment from being void which has been rendered upon no other notice than by publication. In Jackson v. State, 104 Ind. 516, 1 West. Rep. 840, the rule was expressed as follows: "If there be a notice of publication, or whatever of this nature the law requires in reference to persons or other matters, its sufficiency cannot be questioned collaterally;" and further on the court says: "It has long been the rule in this state that, where a court is required to determine whether facts essential to jurisdiction exist, a judgment that they do exist will be conclusive as against collateral attack."

But what was it the law required the court to determine in those cases with reference to the notice? By an examination of those cases, it will be found that the proceedings there were in rem, and no other kind of judgments were sought or obtained. The only fact essential for the court to determine in reference to its jurisdiction was whether the notice and affidavit were sufficient in order to make valid a judgment in rem. There was no occasion to decide whether such notice and affidavit would have been sufficient to warrant a personal judgment. The point was decided, however, in Quarl v. Abbott, 103 Ind. 288. Where there is no statute authorizing notice by publication, it is doubtful whether it is good, even for a basis of a judgment in rem; and certainly it could not be claimed successfully that it will authorize a personal judgment, in the absence of a special statute to that effect. Where a personal judgment is sought it devolves upon the court, as preliminary to the hearing, to determine whether personal service has been had. If it determines this question in the affirmative, and it appears that some personal service was in fact had, the judgment may be ever so irregular or voidable, but it is not void, and will be sufficient to withstand any collateral attack. As a general rule, a personal judgment is absolutely void where it appears upon its face that the court had no jurisdiction either of the person or the subject-matter. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Hubbard, 116 Ind. 198; Kingman v. Paulson, 126 Ind. 607; Quarl v. Abbott, 103 Ind. 288. Ordinarily, in civil actions, where there is no appearance for the defendant, a summons and service thereof is necessary in order to give the court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, so that it may render a personal judgment. While a bastardy proceeding is in some sense a civil action, the process required there is a capias or warrant. Morris v. State, 115 Ind. 282, 14 West. Rep. 87. Where a defendant in such a proceeding has been once arrested on a warrant and escapes, and then the cause is certified to the circuit court under the statute, it seems that the trial may proceed in his absence, and he may thereafter be arrested again, and be compelled to comply with the court's orders. Patterson v. State, 91 Ind. 364; Lucas v. Hawkins, 103 Ind. 64, overruling Patterson v. Pressley, 70 Ind. 94. But we know no law authorizing any kind of legal proceedings against anyone without some process, and, upon every principle underlying our system of jurisprudence, such a proceeding would be a nullity. In this state the process required is usually prescribed by the statute. The pertinent inquiry for us to make, therefore, is, What sort of process has the statute provided in such cases, and has the statutory provision been complied with? We have already seen that the kind of process which the statute requires is a warrant or capias. Morris v. State, supra. The statute nowhere provides for notice by publication in bastardy cases. Freeman says that "a publication, in the absence of any law authorizing it, is the same in effect as no publication. A judgment based upon it is void." Freeman, Judgm. 127. But even if this is not so, and even if there were a statute expressly authorizing notice by publication in bastardy cases, as was once the case, we apprehend such statute would be applicable only to such portion of the proceedings as might be considered strictly in rem. Such notice might be sufficient to authorize the court, in the absence of the defendant, to fix the status of the parties, determine the paternity of the child, etc.; but as to that we of course decide nothing. The action of the court goes no further than that. No personal judgment could be rendered on such notice, even if the defendant were a resident of the state and temporarily absent. The statute itself forbids it. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 890; Mitchell v. Gray, 18 Ind. 123; Sowers v. Edmunds, 76 Ind. 123; Middleworth v. McDowell, 49 Ind. 386; Lytle v. Lytle, 48 Ind. 200. And it has been repeatedly decided that a judgment in rem cannot become the foundation of another action. Henrie v. Sweasey, 5 Blackf. 385; Roose v. McDonald, 23 Ind. 157; Lippard v. Edwards, 39 Ind. 165.

We are referred to the case of Davidson v. State, 62 Ind. 276, as relied upon by the court below to support its decision. In that case, however, the question of the validity of a personal judgment rendered upon constructive service was not before the court. There the proceeding had been instituted before a justice of the peace. A warrant had been issued for the defendant and returned "Not found." The justice proceeded to hear the case in the absence of the defendant, and found that he was the father of the bastard child. He certified the case to the circuit court. At the next term of the court an affidavit of nonresidence was filed, and notice by publication had. At a succeeding term of the court the cause was tried on default of the defendant, and a finding was made that he was the father of the child, and the cause was continued without fixing the amount the defendant was to pay, or rendering any judgment against said defendant whatever. Shortly afterwards a warrant was issued upon which the defendant was arrested, and gave bail for his appearance at the next term of court, when he appeared and moved to set aside the default, which motion the court overruled. After a motion in arrest had been made and overruled, the court rendered final judgment on the default and finding previously entered. The only question was whether the default was legal, for up to that time no judgment had been rendered. The court held that it was, but it was not called upon to decide, and did not decide, that a personal judgment upon such finding alone was valid, because no judgment had been rendered prior to the appearance of the defendant. Possibly the notice of publication might have been sufficient under the statute to authorize the court to proceed in the defendant's absence, and determine the status of the parties, but it did not authorize the rendition of any personal judgment, nor did the court so decide. The case is therefore no authority by which we feel bound. A few other cases of an earlier date would seem to intimate that a defendant in a bastardy proceeding might be properly served with notice by publication. Milton v. State, 9 Ind. 452; Hunter v. State, 6 Blackf. 882. However, what validity should be given to a personal judgment which has been rendered upon such notice only is not determined by any of those cases, as they turned upon other questions not here involved. The appellee cites Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321, as an authority that a personal judgment on a notice by publication may be rendered against a resident of the state who is temporarily absent. But we do not regard that case as determinative of the question before us, and, if counsel will examine it carefully, they will find that the court even there declare that, in the absence of a statute, a constructive service upon a resident of the state while absent is void, and that he should be served by copy of the summons at his last usual place of residence. Whatever the court intimates there as to the power of the Legislature to make a law which would make notice by publication effective is without controlling force here, as it has not been attempted to make such a law for such cases as the one we are now considering. From what has been said it will be apparent that we regard the rulings of the court as erroneous. There was no legal evidence to sustain its finding and judgment, and the motion for a new trial should have been sustained. The court erred also, we think, in sustaining the demurrer to the third and fourth paragraphs of the answer.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the court below to proceed in accordance with this decision.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS. (2d Div.)

Maria L. DALY, Respt.,

v.

John S. WISE, Appt.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. A covenant that a dwelling is fit for residence is not implied on the lease of the whole of an unfurnished dwelling for a definite term under a single contract which contains no covenant that the premises are in good repair or that the lessor will put or keep them so.
2. A representation that the plumbing is in good order, made on the lease of NOTE.—The authorities on the question of an implied covenant that premises leased for a dwelling are fit for habitation are well presented in the report of the above case.

For an exception in case of a lease of furnished rooms at a summer resort, see Ingalls v. Hobbs (Mass.) ante, 51.

16 L. R. A.

a dwelling, although false, does not affect the liability of the lessee for rent if the statement was made in the belief that it was true.

(April 19, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York, affirming a judgment of the Special Term in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the balance of rent due under the terms of a written lease. Affirmed.

Statement by Follett, Ch. J.:

September 27, 1888, the litigants entered into a written lease by which the plaintiff let to the defendant an unfurnished dwelling, known as "334 West Fifty-eighth Street," in the city of New York, for one year from October 15, 1888, for $1,800, payable $150 October 15, 1888, and a like sum on the 15th day of each succeeding month. The lease contained no covenant in respect to the then condition of the house, nor that the lessor should put or keep it in repair. November 15, 1888, the defendant began to occupy the premises, paid the rent for four months, until January 15, 1889, and continued in occupation until February 2, 1889, when he abandoned them because of their unsanitary condition, arising from defective plumbing. February 1, 1890, this action was begun to recover the sums due by the terms of the lease on the 15th day of February, March, April and May, 1889, $600 in all, with interest. The defendant answered that he was induced to enter into the lease by the oral representation of the plaintiff's agent; that the building on said premises was properly constructed and in thorough repair, the more especially in the matter of plumbing and sanitary arrangements; and that this defendant signed said lease, relying upon the faith of said representation so made as aforesaid." It was also alleged: "That, when defendant entered into possession of said premises, it was discovered that said representations were untrue, and that said premises were unfit for the purposes of a residence, in that there existed hidden defects in the plumbing and construction of the sewer and other pipes, and the sanitarian arrangements in the buildings thereon. That such defects were concealed from view, and were not discovered until the effect thereof became apparent in the health of the defendant's family. That by reason of said defects the said building became charged with sewer gas and other foul and poisonous odors, thereby causing the defendant, his wife, children, and servants, to become sick, and in great danger of death; and they so continued sick and in danger until the defendant was evicted from said premises, as hereinafter set out." At the close of the evidence, neither party asked to have any question of fact submitted to the jury, but each moved that a verdict be directed in his or her favor. The defendant's motion was refused, and he excepted; but the plaintiff's motion was granted, and the defendant again excepted. No other exceptions are contained in the record, and the only questions reviewable in this court are those presented by the two exceptions mentioned. A judgment was entered on the verdict for the plaintiff, which was affirmed at general term. No opinion was written, but the case was decided upon the opinion of the same court in another action, arising over the same lease. 7 N. Y. Supp. 902.

Mr. Robert L. Harrison, for appellant: The false representation by the plaintiff's agent that the plumbing was in good repair was fraudulent.

The defect was a latent one to which the rule of caveat emptor does not apply, for the lessee from the necessity of the case must rely upon the representation of the lessor.

Smith v. Marable, 11 Mees. & W. 5; Cesar v. Karuts, 60 N. Y. 229; Rhinclander v. Sea- 16 L. R. A.

man, cited in note to Chadwick v. Woodward, 13 Abb. N. C. 455; Wallace v. Lent, 1 Daly, 481. See also McAdam, Land. & T. p. 125, and cases there cited.

The agent must have stated what he knew to be false, or represented as a fact what he did not know to be true; either of which would constitute fraud. The rule that there must be an intent to deceive does not permit one to state as a fact what he does not know to be true.

Havkins v. Palmer, 57 N. Y. 664; Hammond v. Pennock, 61 N. Y. 145; Jolliffe v. Hittie, 1 Call, 807.

The false representation, being upon a material point, vitiated the lease.

McAdam, Land. & T. p. 120.

Even if the representation of the agent be held not to be fraudulent, and even in the absence of a covenant to repair in the lease, there was a constructive eviction of the defendant.

Tallman v. Murphy, 120 N. Y. 345; Thomas v. Nelson, 69 N. Y. 118; Bradley v. DeGottocouria, 12 Daly, 393; Lawrence v. Burrell, 17 Abb. N. C. 312.

Mr. Robert Sturgis, with Messrs. Daly, Hoyt & Mason, for respondent:

Under the common law, the landlord was not bound, in the absence of an express covenant in the lease, to make repairs.

No covenant can be implied in the absence of such express agreement.

McGlashan v. Tallmadge, 37 Barb. 313; Franklin v. Brown, 6 L. R. A. 770, 118 N. Y. 110; Witty v. Matthews, 52 N. Y. 512; Edwards v. New York & H. R. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 249; Edwards v. McLean, 123 N. Y. 302; Moffatt v. Smith, 4 N. Y. 126; Howard v. Doolittle, 3 Duer, 464; O'Brien v. Capwell, 59 Barb. 504.

In the absence of such an express warranty or covenant to repair there is no implied covenant that the demised premises are suitable or fit for occupation.

McGlashan v. Tallmadge, Edwards v. New York & H. R. R. Co., Franklin v. Brown, O'Brien v. Capwell, Howard v. Doolittle, and Edwards v. McLean, supra; Lynch v. Speed, 15 Daly, 207; Mayer v. Molter, 1 Hilt. 491.

It is no defense to an action for the rent, that the premises were and continued to be unhealthy, noisome, and offensive, and unsuitable for a dwelling.

McGlashan v. Tallmadge, and Moffatt v. Smith, Franklin v. Brown, Edwards v. McLean, and Howard v. Doolittle, supra; Chadwick v. Woodward 13 Abb. N. C. 441; Coulson v. Whiting, 12 Daly, 413; Jaffe v. Harteau, 56 N. Y. 398, 15 Am. Rep. 438.

Under such circumstances, even a statement that the plumbing is in good condition is to be regarded merely as an expression of opinion and not as an assertion of the fact.

1892 Sup. McAdam, Land. & T. pp. 150, 155; Fowler v. Stevens, 17 Jones & S. 479, and cases cited.

The defendant cannot claim to be relieved from payment of rent under the covenant of quiet enjoyment. The only cases where this can be urged being where the landlord intentionally and under claim of right does some act inconsistent with the title and rights and quiet enjoyment of his tenant.

McAdam, Land. & T. 2d ed. 481 et seq.;

Edgerton v. Page, 20 N. Y. 281; Howard v. Doolittle, 3 Duer, 464.

This case must be distinguished from those where the tenant hires an apartment in a building where the landlord has control of the general system of pipes, etc., which supply the tenant's rooms.

Bradley v. DeGoicouria, 12 Daly, 398; Vann v. Rouse, 94 N. Y. 401; Tallman v. Murphy, 120 N. Y. 345.

Follett, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In case neither party requests to have any question of fact submitted to the jury, but each asks that a verdict be directed in his favor, the court is authorized to determine the fact in issue; and upon appeal the disputed facts are deemed to have been determined in favor of the party for whom the verdict is directed. Kirtz v. Peck, 118 N. Y. 222; Dillon v. Cockcroft, 90 N. Y. 649; Provost v. McEneroe, 102 N. Y. 650, 2 Cent. Rep. 898. This case must be determined upon the theory that all the disputed facts have been found in favor of the plaintiff.

In case the whole of an unfurnished dwelling is leased for a definite term, under a single contract, which contains no covenant that the premises are in good repair, or that the lessor will put or keep them so, the law does not imply a covenant on the part of the lessor that the dwelling is without inherent defects, rendering it unfit for a residence. Franklin v. Brown, 118 N. Y. 110, 6 L. R. A. 770. In Smith v. Marrable, 11 Mees. & W. 5, a contrary rule was laid down by Baron Parke. That case arose out of a contract to let a furnished dwelling for six weeks at eight guineas per week. The tenant moved in, but found the house so infested with bugs that it was uninhabitable, and at the end of the first week left, paying the rent for that week. In an action brought, it was held, in the opinion delivered by Baron Parke, concurred in by Barons Alderson and Gurney, "that if the demised premises are incumbered with a nuisance of so serious a nature that no person can reasonably be expected to live in them the tenant is at liberty to throw them up. This is not the case of a contract on the part of the landlord that the premises were free from this nuisance. It rather rests in an implied condition of law, that he undertakes to let them in a habitable state." Chief Baron Abinger concurred upon the ground that "a man who lets a ready-furnished house surely does so under the implied condition or obligation—call it which you will—that the house is in a fit state to be inhabited." The opinion of Baron Parke was rested on the authority of Edwards v. Etherington, Ryan & M. 268, 7 Dowl. & R. 117, and Collins v. Barrow, 1 Mood. & R. 112, both of which cases, together with Salisbury v. Marshall, 4 Car. & P. 65, are expressly overruled by Hart v. Windsor, 12 Mees. & W. 68, in which Parke, B., said: "We are under no necessity of deciding in the present case whether that of Smith v. Marrable be law or not. It is distinguishable from the present case on the ground on which it was put by Lord Abinger, both on the argument of the case itself, but more fully in that of Sutton v. Temple, 13 Mees. & W. 52, for it was the case of a demise of a ready-furnished house for a temporary residence at a watering place. It was not a lease of real estate merely. But that case certainly cannot be supported on the ground on which I rested my judgment." Smith v. Marrable, as decided at Hilary Term, 1848, and Hart v. Windsor, and Sutton v. Temple, at Michaelmas Term of the same year. The rule laid down in Smith v. Marrable, by Abinger, C. B., as applicable to furnished houses, has been followed in Campbell v. Wenlock, 4 Fost. & F. 716, and Wilson v. Hatton, 2 Exch. Div. 386; but the rule as stated by Parke, B., has not been followed in England or in this state. Franklin v. Brown, 118 N. Y. 110, 6 L. R. A. 770. The defendant cannot escape liability for rent on the ground that the law implied a covenant that the dwelling was fit for habitation.

Is the evidence contained in the record sufficient to have required the trial court to have held, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff fraudulently represented that the dwelling and its fixtures were in good condition, or that she fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff the fact that it was in an unsanitary condition? In case the owner of a dwelling knows that it has secret defects and conditions rendering it unfit for a residence, and fraudulently represents to one who becomes a tenant that the defects and conditions do not exist, or if he fraudulently conceals their existence from him, the lessee, if he abandons the house for such cause, will not be liable for subsequently accruing rent. Wallace v. Lent, 1 Daly, 481; Jackson v. Odell, 12 Daly, 845; Rhineland v. Seaman, cited in note to Chadwick v. Woodward, 18 Abb. N. C. 455; Cesar v. Karuts, 60 N. Y. 229. In the case at bar the defendant testified, and in this he was not contradicted, that, when he first went to the house with the plaintiff's agent, he said: "I complained to him [the agent] at the time that I thought some of the plumbing looked old. He said that Mrs. Daly was very stiff,—determined not to put in any new; that it was all in good condition; that they had fixed it as they thought it ought to be." This is the only representation which was made by the plaintiff or her agent in respect to the sanitary condition of the dwelling. It was not shown that the plaintiff or the agent knew that the representations were false, or that the plumbing was out of order, and fraudulently concealed the fact. This takes the case out of the rule above referred to, in respect to the owner's liability in case he fraudulently misrepresents the condition of the dwelling, or, knowing that it is in bad condition, fraudulently conceals the fact from the person who becomes the lessee. Is the plaintiff liable for having stated that a material fact existed which did not exist, i. e., that the plumbing was in good order, upon the theory that she was bound to know whether or not the statement was true. In case a party, for the purpose of inducing another to contract with him, states, on his personal knowledge, that a material fact does or does not exist, without having knowledge whether the statement is true or false, and without having reasonable grounds to believe it to be true, he is liable in fraud if the statement is relied on, and is subsequently found to be false, although he had no actual knowledge of the untruth of the statement. Bennett v. Judson, 21 N. Y. 238; Marsh v. Falker, 40 N. Y. 562; Oberlander v. Spiess, 45 N. Y. 175; Wakeman v. Dalley, 51 N. Y. 27, 10 Am. Rep. 551; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 887, 888; Story, Eq. Jur. § 193. It does not appear that the plumbing had not been fixed as stated, nor that the statement that "it was all in good condition" was made without actual or supposed knowledge of its condition, nor that it was made in bad faith; and we think the case does not fall within the principle of the authorities last cited. The defendant cannot escape liability on the ground that the statement of the agent amounted to a warranty, because it is not so pleaded in the answer.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

George W. HOYT, Piff. in Err.,
v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(.....Ill.....)

1. An indictment charging an agreement to burn a building and that in pursuance of such agreement the building was burned is not bad for duplicity as charging both conspiracy to commit arson and arson, since the conspiracy was merged in the consummated act of burning.
2. Denying a continuance on an admission by the prosecuting attorney that an absent witness would testify as alleged in the defendant's affidavit for continuance without requiring an admission of the facts which such testimony would prove if true does not violate a constitutional right of the accused to "meet the witnesses face to face" and to have "process to compel their attendance" if a reasonable time for that purpose has already elapsed.

3. Discretion may be vested in the court to deny a continuance to the accused because of the absence of a witness upon admission by the prosecution that he will testify to the facts set out in the affidavit for continuance, without requiring an admission of their truth in the absence of a constitutional provision prohibiting it.

NOTE.—Denial of continuance upon admissions by the prosecution as affected by right of accused to meet witnesses.

An admission by the prosecution that witnesses for whom a continuance is desired would testify as alleged if they were present has been held sufficient in the following cases without any discussion of constitutional questions: Comerford v. State, 23 Ohio St. 599; State v. Hatfield, 72 Mo. 518 (see later Missouri cases, infra); Hamilton v. State, 8 Ind. 562; Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 294.

So in State v. Mooney, 10 Iowa. 506, a refusal of continuance was held proper on an admission that if the witnesses were present defendant could "prove by them his previous good character."

In Montana an admission by the state that the witnesses if present would testify to the facts stated in an affidavit for a continuance, is sufficient to justify a denial of the continuance. State v. Gibbs, 10 L. R. A. 749, 10 Mont. 213; Territory v. Harding, 6 Mont. 323; Territory v. Perkins, 2 Mont. 467.

This is true even if the admission expressly reserves the right to impeach the testimony. State v. Gibbs, supra.

In Illinois a statute providing that the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to admit the absolute truth of the matter set up in an affidavit for a continuance in order to prevent the continuance for a material witness, but only that such witness if present would testify as alleged in the affidavit, was in question in Hickam v. People (Ill.) March 31, 1891, and it was held that the denial of a continuance under this statute on an application made at the second term was in the discretion of the court. The constitutionality of the statute was not discussed.

But in People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. 360, Chief Justice Savage said: "The practice of requiring concessions in such cases is novel and I apprehend not 16 L. R. A.

well calculated to advance justice. But if to be encouraged it seems to me that the prosecutor should admit all that the defendant can possibly obtain by the witness which is the truth of the facts proposed to be proved."

This decision was not based on the right of the accused to meet witnesses but on the insufficiency of the admission as a substitute for the testimony.

The latter Indiana cases overruled the decision in Hamilton v. State, 32 Ind. 552, and required an unconditional admission of the truth of the facts which the witness is desired to prove as a condition of denying a continuance basing this decision on the constitutional right of the accused to "meet the witnesses face to face and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor." McLaughlin v. State, 8 Ind. 231; Miller v. State, 9 Ind. 340; Wassels v. State, 26 Ind. 35.

In Missouri also a series of decisions have established the doctrine that an admission by the prosecuting attorney that an absent witness, if present, would testify as set forth in an affidavit for a continuance cannot be made by statute a sufficient ground for refusing the continuance under a constitutional provision that the accused shall have the right "to have process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf." State v. Berkley, 10 West. Rep. 67, 32 Mo. 41; State v. Dawson, 6 West. Rep. 461, 90 Mo. 149; State v. Neider, 13 West. Rep. 123, 94 Mo. 79; State v. Warden, 14 West. Rep. 493, 94 Mo. 648; State v. Dyke, 96 Mo. 298; State v. Loe, 98 Mo. 609. Although in the first of these cases the decision was made by a bare majority of the judges against vigorous dissent.

So in Arkansas a statute making an admission by the prosecution that an absent witness would testify as alleged in an affidavit for a continuance a substitute for the witness which shall prevent postponement of the cause for his testimony, is held unconstitutional as against the right of an

4. Where testimony of accomplices is the principal evidence against an accused he is entitled as a matter of right to have an instruction given to the jury as to the legal character of such evidence and a refusal of it will constitute reversible error unless the evidence of his guilt is so conclusive that such an instruction could have no effect on the result reached by the jury.

(March 24, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Iroquois County to review a judgment convicting defendant of arson. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Free P. Morris, R. W. Hilscher and C. H. Payson, for plaintiff in error:

If the jury believes an accomplice then his testimony may be sufficient to warrant a conviction; but in determining whether they will believe him, the fact that he is a convict or an accomplice—like the interest of a witness in a suit, should be considered.

Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 38 Am. Rep. 105; Friedberg v. People, 102 Ill. 160; 1 Greenl. Ev. 808; 2 Starkie, Ev. 12; People v. Spies, 5 Am. Crim. L. Rep. 649.

When a witness is undoubtedly an accomplice, it is error for the court not to instruct the jury on the subject of accomplice testimony.

Stone v. State, 22 Tex. App. 185.

The court erred in refusing to compel the prosecution to admit the absolute truth of the statement in the affidavit for continuance, which it was shown the absent witness would testify to if present.

Ill. Const. art. 13, § 9; Willis v. People, 2 Ill. 400; Vanmeter v. People, 60 Ill. 169.

accused "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor." Graham v. State, 50 Ark. 161.

So in Louisiana, it is held that the admission must be of the facts which it is alleged that the desired witnesses would testify to and that an admission merely that the witnesses would swear as alleged reserving a right to impeach them is insufficient. State v. Brette, 6 La. Ann. 653.

So in Texas the admission must be of the facts which the absent witnesses are desired to give evidence upon. Hyde v. State, 18 Tex. 457; De Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 484.

In Kentucky an admission by the prosecution that the "facts are true" which an affidavit for a continuance alleges that an absent witness would testify to if present, is made necessary by a statute in order to prevent a continuance for a material witness; and a denial of the continuance upon such an admission is held not to be in violation of the constitutional right of the accused to "compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor." Pace v. Com. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 407; O'Brien v. Com. Id. 634.

Going still beyond any of the above cases, it was held in Goodman v. State, 1 Meigs (Tenn.), 185, that an accused has a constitutional right to have his witnesses present even if there is an admission of the facts which they are wanted to prove as well as of the fact that they would testify to such facts. But in this case the offer was in fact only to admit that they would have so testified.

In a California case the refusal to postpone a trial for an absent witness was held not error where the district attorney admitted the fact and the witness was actually produced on the trial and 16 L. R. A.

In order to avoid a postponement on motion of defendant to procure the testimony of an absent witness, the absolute truth of the affidavit must be admitted, and evidence to rebut or impeach it is incompetent and inadmissible.

Powers v. State, 80 Ind. 77; Brent v. Heard, 40 Miss. 370; Pool v. Devora, 30 Ala. 672; Murphy v. Murphy, 31 Mo. 332.

A defendant could not be compelled to go to trial by even admitting the truth of what the absent witness would swear if present.

Dominges v. State, 7 Smedes & M. 475, 45 Am. Dec. 815; Goodman v. State, 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 195; De Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 464; People v. Dodge, 23 Cal. 445.

The court should have quashed the third count of the indictment.

It charges two separate felonies under the statute: 1st, a conspiracy to commit arson with one penalty (Crim. Code, § 46); 2d, the completed crime of arson, with still another and different penalty (Crim. Code, § 18).

See People v. Wright, 9 Wend. 198; McGahagin v. State, 17 Fla. 685.

A count in an indictment containing a joinder of two or more distinct offenses, is bad for duplicity.

State v. Ripley, 31 Me. 386; State v. Fidment, 35 Iowa, 541; State v. Palmer, 32 La. Ann. 565; State v. Johns, 32 La. Ann. 812; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 13th ed. § 432; Moore, Crim. Law, 805.

Messrs. George Hunt, Atty. Gen., and A. F. Goodyear, State's Atty., for the People.

Schofield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error was indicted jointly with Asa Sapp and Gustave S. Traub, but he was no exception was taken. People v. Brown, 59 Cal. 345.

Also that a defendant is not obliged to take the testimony by commission of a witness who is temporarily ill or go to trial without him, but may have a continuance if the witness is material. People v. Dodge, 23 Cal. 445.

Impeaching a contradicting affidavit.

An admission that an absent witness would testify to certain facts if present, does not prevent the state from giving evidence to contradict such alleged facts. Olds v. Com. 3 A. K. Marsh. 465; State v. Miller, 67 Mo. 604.

In Powers v. State, 80 Ind. 77, it is held that a statute requiring an admission of the fact to be proved by absent witnesses as a condition of denying a continuance for them, prevents the impeachment of their credibility.

On the other hand it has been decided that the credibility of absent witnesses cannot be impeached where there has been an admission that if present they would testify to certain alleged facts. Dominges v. State, 7 Smedes & M. 475, 45 Am. Dec. 815.

But in Mississippi this rule was altered by statute so as to give the affidavit only the effect that the witness' testimony would have if he was present. Brent v. Heard, 40 Miss. 370.

In Kansas it is also held that an affidavit for a continuance read by consent cannot be impeached for want of diligence in obtaining the testimony, or on the ground that the testimony of the witness would be untrue or that the alleged witnesses are non-existent. State v. Boark, 23 Kan. 147.

R. A. R.

tried alone, and the jury found him guilty as charged in the third count of the indictment. The sufficiency of that count was questioned on the alleged ground of duplicity by a motion to quash, which was overruled by the court, and it is now insisted that the court erred in thus ruling. The substance of the allegations of the count, which are in apt technical language, is that the parties indicted agreed to burn an elevator of one Peter Hoyt, and in pursuance of that agreement did burn it. The conspiracy to burn is merged in the consummated act of burning, and so the offense charged is that of arson only, and not the independent offenses of a conspiracy to commit arson and arson. 2 Whart. Prec. Ind. pp. 94-97; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 786, 790, 804-815; 8 Greenl. Ev. § 90; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 648. There was, therefore, no error in refusing to quash the count.

Another contention in the court below, and renewed here, is that the Act in relation to conspiracy, approved June 16, 1887, is repealed by an Act entitled to that effect, approved May 28, 1891, and that there can, therefore, now be no conviction under the first-named Act for conspiracy. But since the third count is for arson, and cannot, therefore, be for an offense created only by the first-named Act, it is impossible that the case can be affected by the last-named Act.

Before entering upon the trial, plaintiff in error made and presented to the court his motion, supported by his affidavit, for a continuance of the case, on account of the absence of a witness on his behalf,—one Oppy,—stating what he expected to prove by Oppy. The state's attorney thereupon admitted, for the purposes of the trial of the case at that term, that Oppy would, if present, testify to the facts recited in the affidavit, and that on the trial of the case those facts might be read to the jury as the testimony of Oppy; and the court thereupon overruled the motion for continuance. The facts which it was stated in the affidavit could be proved by Oppy were read to the jury upon the trial of the case, and the court refused to instruct the jury that they must accept these facts as true, but on the contrary instructed the jury that such facts should be subjected to "the same rules of consideration, the same scrutiny, and the same rules of criticism as is any other evidence in the case, and the jury should give such evidence only such weight as, from all the evidence in the case, they may think it deserves." Each of these rulings is assigned for error; but obviously they present but a single question, namely, whether the matters stated in the affidavit as those of which Oppy would, if present at the trial, testify, were to be taken by the jury as absolutely true, or simply as are matters testified to by other witnesses who appear and testify at the trial, subject to like impairment and contradiction by other evidence in the case.

It is enacted by section 1 of "An Act to Regulate the Granting of Continuances in Criminal Cases," approved June 26, 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 73), "that, when affidavit is made for a continuance in behalf of the people or any defendant in a criminal case on the ground of the absence of a material witness, the state's attorney or the defendant, as the case may be, shall not be required to admit the absolute truth of the matter set up in the affidavit for continuance, but only that such absent witness, if present, would testify as alleged in the affidavit; and, if it is so admitted, no continuance shall be granted, but the case shall go to trial, and the party admitting the same shall be permitted to controvert the statements contained in such affidavit by other evidence, or to impeach such absent witness, the same as if he had testified in person; provided, that the court may, in its discretion, require the opposite party to admit the truth, absolutely, of any such affidavit, when from the nature of the case he may be of the opinion that the ends of justice require it: provided, further, that this Act shall not apply to applications for continuances at the same term of court at which the indictment was found or information filed." Rev. Stat. 1891, chap. 38, § 428a. The indictment here was found at the March Term, and the application for continuance was made at the following October Term, of the court, and the ruling of the court below is thus within the letter of the statute. This is not denied by counsel for plaintiff in error, but they contend that this statute is within the inhibition of so much of section 9, art. 2, of our Constitution, as guarantees that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to . . . meet the witnesses face to face, and to have process to compel the attendance of witnesses." Surely, this statute does not deny to the accused the right to meet the witnesses testifying against him face to face. He is not compelled to admit the facts stated in the affidavit on behalf of the people; and if he shall not do so the state's attorney cannot read them in evidence to the jury, but must produce the witness, so that the accused can meet him face to face. If, however, the accused shall prefer to have the facts read in evidence to the jury, rather than that the trial shall be postponed, he may do so; for he may by a plea of guilty, or by a confession in open court, waive the production of all evidence of his guilt. He is entitled to process to compel the attendance of witnesses on his behalf, but this statute denies him nothing in that regard. He is, of course, entitled to reasonable time for the execution of process to compel the attendance of witnesses, but neither is that done away with or abridged by this statute. The Constitution makes no provision for the continuance of causes for trial; and at common law, and until the passage of our statute allowing exceptions to be taken to decisions of courts in overruling motions for continuance in criminal cases, approved February 18, 1857 (Pub. Laws 1857, p. 103), applications for continuances in criminal cases were addressed purely to the discretion of the court, and its decision thereon could not be assigned for error. Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. 368; Holmes v. People, 10 Ill. 478.

The ruling in Willis v. People, 2 Ill. 399, that the admission in evidence of an affidavit for a continuance in a criminal case on the ground of the absence of a material witness is an admission of the truth of the facts which the affidavit states can be proved by such witness, which cannot be controverted, was based upon no constitutional provision nor common-law principle, but purely upon the language of the agreement of the state's attorney and the defendant, in analogy to like ruling upon affidavits for continuance in civil cases; and the statute then in force in regard to applications for continuances in civil cases required the party who wished to avoid a continuance to admit, not that the absent witnesses would testify to the facts stated in the affidavit, but to admit the facts stated in the affidavit, thus leaving no room for controversy. Rev. Stat. 1888, p. 489, § 11.

The decision in Van Meter v. People, 60 Ill. 168, is only that the Act of 1867 (Sess. Laws 1867, p. 157) is merely an amendment of the Practice Act, and does not apply to criminal cases. Since there is no constitutional provision giving the accused the absolute right, unaffected by any discretion in the court, to a continuance of his case for any definite time beyond what may be reasonable within which to execute the process of the court for obtaining the attendance of witnesses, it is impossible that this Act can be unconstitutional; for if the statute may vest the power of granting continuances entirely in the discretion of the court, without any right of review, the statute surely cannot be unconstitutional which restricts the exercise of that discretion, as this statute does, in favor of the accused. Ample time is given by this statute within which to procure the attendance of witnesses by means of process of the courts, and there is no pretense that there is any constitutional guaranty that their attendance shall be obtained through other means, when they are beyond the jurisdiction of process of our courts.

The principal evidence tending to prove the guilt of plaintiff in error is found in the testimony of his co-defendants,—accomplices,—who admit that they committed the arson, but say that plaintiff in error hired them to do it. It has often been questioned in England and in this country, by courts of the highest respectability, whether convictions on such testimony alone should be allowed to stand; but it is held by this court, in conformity with the prevailing ruling elsewhere, that convictions may be sustained on such testimony alone, although the court may in its discretion, in such cases, advise the jury not to convict. Gray v. People, 26 Ill. 847; Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 158; Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 38 Am. Rep. 105; and Friedberg v. People, 102 Ill. 160. But the authorities agree, and common sense teaches, that such evidence is liable to grave suspicion, and should be acted upon with the utmost caution; for otherwise the life or liberty of the best citizen might be taken away on the accusation of the real criminal, made either to shield himself from punishment or to gratify his malice. And thus it is said in 1 Phil. Ev. (Cow. & H. & Edw. notes), p. 111: "Accomplices, upon their own confession, stand contaminated with guilt. They admit a participation in the very crime which they endeavor by their evidence to fix upon other persons. They are sometimes entitled to earn a reward upon obtaining a conviction, and always expect to earn a pardon. Accomplices are therefore of a tainted character, giving their testimony under the strongest motives to deceive. . . ." And it is said in Best on Evidence, p. 266, § 170, in speaking of approv-

16 L. R. A.

ers and accomplices: No doubt, if it was not absolutely necessary for the execution of the law against notorious offenders that accomplices should be received as witnesses, the practice is liable to many objections; and though, under this practice, they are clearly competent witnesses, their single testimony alone is seldom of sufficient weight with the jury to convict the offenders; it being so strong a temptation to a man to commit perjury if by accusing another he can escape himself. Let us see what has come in lieu of the practice of approvement: A kind of hope that accomplices who behave fairly, and disclose the whole truth, and bring others to justice, should themselves escape punishment. This is in the nature of a recommendation to mercy. The accomplice is not assured of his pardon, but gives his evidence in vinculis,—in custody; and it depends on the title he has from his behavior whether he shall be pardoned. . . ." See, also, to like effect, 1 Greenl. Ev. § 879; 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, 7th ed. 785.

The plaintiff in error asked the court, but the court refused, to instruct the jury as follows: "The jury are instructed that the witnesses Asa Sapp and George Traub are what is known in law as accomplices, and that, while it is a rule of law that a person accused of crime may be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice still a jury should always act upon such testimony with great care and caution, and subject it to careful examination, in the light of all other evidence in the case; and the jury ought not to convict upon such testimony alone, unless, after a careful examination of such testimony, they are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of its truth, and that they can safely rely upon it." No other instruction was given, calling the attention of the jury to the character of the evidence of accomplices, and cautioning them in acting upon it or otherwise embodying the idea expressed in this instruction. It cannot be said that this is an instruction on the facts only; for although the jury are the sole judges of the credibility of the evidence, and may convict on the evidence of accomplices alone, still the law is they shall not do so arbitrarily, and they must act on the testimony of accomplices with great caution, and only when they are satisfied from it, and all the circumstances in evidence in the case, that it is true. Such evidence is not, in legal estimation, as satisfactory in its nature as is the testimony of unimpeached and disinterested witnesses. Nor can it be said that the evidence of the guilt of the plaintiff in error is so conclusive that we can say this instruction could have had no effect upon the result reached by the jury. There were sufficient reasons why it should be given, and we think its refusal was the denial of a substantial right to appellant, and we therefore hold that it is reversible error.

Numerous other questions are discussed in the arguments before us, but they are such as are not likely to arise on another trial of the case, and therefore demand no discussion now. For the error in refusing to give the instruction supra, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (1st. Div.).

Samuel E. FLINT et al., Appts.,
v.
HUTCHINSON SMOKE BURNER CO.,
Resp't.

(.....Mo.....)

An injunction against the slander of title of letters-patent by falsely and maliciously charging infringement and notifying plaintiff's prospective customers that they will be held responsible for using plaintiff's device thereby injuring plaintiff's business by unfair competition, will not be granted until the question of slander has been determined in an action at law.

(June 6, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis in favor of defendant in a suit brought to enjoin the publication of alleged false notices the tendency of which was to injure plaintiffs' business. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Paul Bakewell, with Mr. R. A. Bakewell, for appellants:

False statements made by an individual in regard to articles manufactured by another for the purpose of preventing sales by him of such articles, and which do in fact prevent such sales, or injure the manufacturer in his business, constitute a cause of action.

Snow v. Judson, 88 Barb. 216; Benton v. Pratt, 2 Wend. 885, 20 Am. Dec. 628; White v. Merritt, 7 N. Y. 852, 57 Am. Dec. 527; Galagher v. Brunel, 6 Cow. 346.

A patentee is not entitled to publish statements of his intention to institute legal proceedings, in order to deter persons from purchasing alleged infringements of the patent, if he has no bona fide intention to follow up his threats by taking such proceedings; and the court will, in such case, restrain him from making such publication.

Azmann v. Lund, L. R. 18 Eq. 880; Bollins v. Hinks, L. R. 18 Eq. 855; Emack v. Kane, 84 Fed. Rep. 46.

It is no defense to an action for such false representations to allege that defendant holds a patent giving him the exclusive right to use the particular article which he claims the plaintiffs' article resembles, and that the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of all causes of action for any violation of that exclusive right. No question of patent or no patent, or in respect to any right the defendant may have under his patent, or to any violation of such right, can arise in such an action, so as to deprive the state court of jurisdiction.

Benton v. Pratt; Snow v. Judson and White v. Merritt, supra; Hovey v. Rubber Typ Pencil Co. 57 N. Y. 124; Townshend, Slander & Libel, § 206, and cases cited.

Language concerning a thing, published without lawful excuse, is actionable if pecu-

NOTE.—Injunction against false statements as to plaintiff's property or business.

The power to grant an injunction against false statements injurious to business is denied in Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 142. But see later English cases infra.

And in several cases the power to grant an injunction against threats to prosecute infringement of a patent has been denied in general terms without reference to the question of malice. Baltimore Car Wheel Co. v. Bemis, 20 Fed. Rep. 95; Boston Distate Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co. 114 Mass. 60, 19 Am. Rep. 310; Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484.

The same decision has been made in trade-mark cases. Mauger v. Dick, 55 How. Pr. 122; Wolfe v. Burke, 66 N. Y. 115.

And one case held expressly that even if malice existed an injunction could not be granted against such threats. Kidd v. Horry, 23 Fed. Rep. 773.

But the weight of authority as shown by the later cases is to the effect that such an injunction may be granted, if the threats to prosecute for infringement are not made in good faith, and only in such cases. Emack v. Kane, 84 Fed. Rep. 46; Croft v. Richardson, 50 How. Pr. 358; Halsey v. Brotherhood, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 326; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. 13 Blatchf. 375; Hovey v. Rubber Typ Pencil Co. 57 N. Y. 119; Kelley v. Ypsilanti Dress Stay Mfg. Co. 10 L. R. A. 686, 44 Fed. Rep. 19; Andrews v. Deshler, 45 N. J. L. 167; Chase v. Tuttle, 37 Fed. Rep. 110; Tuttle v. Matthews, 23 Fed. Rep. 98; Burnett v. Tak, 45 L. T. N. 8, 743.

The commencement of proceedings to assert the validity of a patent has also been required in some cases as a condition of denying an injunction to restrain circulars threatening infringers. Azmann v. Lund, L. R. 18 Eq. Cas. 830; Bollins v. Hinks, L. R. 18 Eq. Cas. 354.

16 L. R. A.

In the recent English case of Colley v. Hart, L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 179, which was an action under the English Statute of 1883, the court recognized the rule as above stated to be the law in the absence of any statute, and said that there being no evidence that the circular in question, which threatened infringement, was published maliciously, there was no right of action unless it was given by the statute, and as there was no malice shown and the defendant had followed up his circular by commencing an infringement action with due diligence, there was no right of action under the statute.

The English Patents, Designs, and Trade-marks Act of 1883, § 32, expressly provides for an injunction as well as damages where threats are made by circulars or otherwise to bring legal proceedings in respect of the manufacture, use, or sale of an invention. Among the various decisions under this Act it has been held that a notice saying that information had been received of extensive violations of plaintiff's rights as a patentee, and that "all parties are warned not to infringe," was a threat. Johnson v. Edge (1892) 2 Ch. 1.

When we turn from libelous charges of infringement of patents or trade-marks to other libelous charges injurious to business there is less preponderance of authority in favor of either side.

In the case of secret unpatented formulas, circulars, etc., falsely stating that plaintiffs were offering to the public a spurious imitation of defendant's goods may be restrained by injunction. In such cases it may be presumed that defendants knew the statements were untrue. James v. James, L. R. 13 Eq. 421; Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 763.

So in other cases on false representations that plaintiff's goods are imitations. Thomas v. Williams, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 864.

In Thomas v. Williams, supra, and in several niary damage is a natural and proximate consequence of the publication. No special damage need be proved. And an action will lie for a false and malicious statement disparaging the article that another sells.

Townshend, Slander & Libel, 4th ed. §§ 146-150, pp. 157-789; 8d ed. p. 386; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 2d ed. pp. 114, 223; Thomas v. Williams, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 504; Newell, Defamation, p. 181.

A court of equity will in some cases interpose by injunction to prevent the perpetuation of a wrong, where the wrong consists in the publication of a statement injurious to the business of another, the false and fraudulent statement being an attack on the business of a rival in business.

20 Cent. L. J. 18, note and review of cases; Townshend, Slander & Libel, 3d ed. pp. 95, 836; 4th ed. 278, 280, 295; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 2d ed. p. 2. 274; High, Inj. § 1015; Emack v. Kane, 84 Fed. Rep. 46; Palmer v. Train, 18 Reporter, 99; Riding v. Smith, L. R. 1 Exch. Div. 91; Routh v. Webster, 10 Beav. 561; Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112; Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, L. R. 6 Eq. Cas. 551; James v. James, L. R. 18 Eq. 421; Maxwell v. Hogg, L. R. 2 Ch. 307, 810; Quarts Hill C. G. Min. Co. v. Beall, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 501; Hills v. Hart-Davies, L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 798; Gaskin v. Ball, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 824; Beddou v. Beddou, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 89; Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 763; Thomas v. Williams, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 864; Dixon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. 488;

other English cases the power to grant an injunction against a libel injurious to trade is declared in general terms without any express limitation as to cases where malice is shown; but in these cases the libelous publications were false and perhaps it was fairly assumed in most if not all of them that the defendant was not acting in good faith.

The doctrine is extended in Loog v. Bean, L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 806, to a case of oral slander which was calculated to injure the business of another, so a libel likely to injure a friendly society by false statements as to its credit and financial condition after the publisher knows that it is false, may be restrained by injunction. Hill v. Hart-Davies, L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 798.

The publication of placards and advertisements for the purpose of intimidating workmen from entering the service of a certain employer, although amounting to a crime, may be prevented by injunction on the ground that such acts destroy property. Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, L. R. 6 Eq. Cas. 551.

In Dixon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. 488, an injunction was granted against the publication of a notice falsely stating that the plaintiff was a partner in a bankrupt firm, although it did not appear that the publisher did not believe it to be true. The vice-chancellor who decided the case put it on the broad ground of jurisdiction to stop the publication of a libel which would have the effect to destroy property whether tangible or intangible, whether money or reputation.

In Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112, an injunction in favor of a physician to prevent the sale of a quack medicine as his was refused by the master of the rolls on the ground that it was a mere libel as to which the court had no jurisdiction.

But in Maxwell v. Hogg, L. R. 2 Ch. 307, Lord Cairns said it always appeared to him that Clark v. 16 L. R. A.

Loog v. Bean, L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 806; Hayward v. Hayward, L. R. 84 Ch. Div. 198.

Messrs. Seddon & Blair, for respondent: The offense charged is a libel, and falls within the generic title of "slander or libel of title."

Meyvoss v. Adams, 12 Mo. App. 329; Hastings v. Giles Lithographic Co. 51 Hun, 864; John W. Lovell Co. v. Houghton, 22 Jones & S. 60. Courts of equity will not restrain the publication of either libels or slanders.

American Life Assn. v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 177; Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112; Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 142; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. 49 Ga. 73; Boston Diatite Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co. 114 Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 310; Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484; Raymond v. Russell, 3 New Eng. Rep. 813, 143 Mass. 295, 58 Am. Rep. 137; Baltimore Car Wheel Co. v. Bemis, 29 Fed. Rep. 95; Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. Rep. 774; Consumers Gas Co. v. Kansas City Gas Light & C. Co. 100 Mo. 501.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is now before us on the plaintiffs' appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition. The petition discloses the following facts: The plaintiffs, Samuel E. Flint and William F. Mills, are the owners of letters-patent issued by the United States in 1888 for a smoke-preventing device. The defendant corporation is the owner of three letters-patent issued in 1877 and 1878 for a device for aiding com-

Freeman might have been decided in favor of the plaintiff on the ground that he had a property in his own name.

In Singer Mfg. Co. v. Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. 49 Ga. 73, the court stating the general rule to be that to get an injunction, an infringement of a property right must be shown, refused to give an injunction to prevent a defeated competitor from publishing that he and not the successful party had received the premium from a state agricultural society for the best sewing machine.

In Greene v. United States Dealers Protective Assn. & M. A. 39 Hun, 300, an injunction against the publication of plaintiff's name as a delinquent debtor was denied where the charge that he could, but would not, pay was not shown to be false. The court did not decide whether or not it could be granted if such proof were made.

In Raymond v. Russell, 3 New Eng. Rep. 813, 143 Mass. 295, 58 Am. Rep. 137, the court declared that there could be no injunction against the publication, in the books and records of a mercantile agency, of representation as to plaintiff's character and standing or property even if the representations were false, but in that case they were not shown to be false.

In Consumers Gas Co. v. Kansas City Gas Light & C. Co., 100 Mo. 501, it was decided that no injunction could be granted against the assertion of an exclusive privilege in the manufacture and sale of a commodity without further interference with property of another.

An advertisement merely disparaging a rival publication will not be restrained by injunction. Seeley v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 561.

For the kindred subject of slander of title, see Burkett v. Griffith, 13 L. R. A. 707, note, 90 Cal. 532. D. A. R.

bustion in steam boiler and other furnaces, and an air-feeding attachment for locomotives, all issued to William S. Hutchinson. It is alleged that the inventions described in the Hutchinson patents are restricted and most narrow in their scope. Plaintiffs state further that they were negotiating with the Mermod & Jaccard Jewelry Company of St. Louis for the erection of a smoke-preventing device, to be constructed in accordance with their patent; that the defendant willfully and maliciously, and with the intent to injure the plaintiffs in the manufacture and sale of their smoke preventer, served upon the jewelry company a written notice, thereby notifying that company that the smoke-consuming device attached to its furnace by Flint, one of the plaintiffs, was an infringement upon the Hutchinson patents, and that the jewelry company would be held responsible for royalty, costs, and damages; that defendant served the notice and made the statements therein set forth, knowing that they were false, with the malicious intent and purpose of injuring the plaintiffs in their business of manufacturing and selling their device; that the jewelry company, fearing suit in consequence of the notice, refused to allow plaintiffs to put up their device until they gave the jewelry company an indemnifying bond which they were obliged to do. It is then averred that defendant gave other like notices to plaintiffs' customers and to other persons about to use their device; that these persons, fearing lawsuits, have refused to deal with the plaintiffs; that before the issuing of these notices the plaintiffs were doing a large and lucrative business in smoke consumers; and that the loss in their trade in consequence of the notices is very great, but difficult to estimate. The plaintiffs allege further that they are peculiarly responsible; that their device is no infringement whatever upon the Hutchinson patents; that they notified the defendant that they would defend any suit or suits brought by defendant for infringement; that they believe defendant does not intend to sue them or their customers, but intends maliciously to continue to serve such false notices, thereby intending to injure their business. They pray for an injunction restraining defendant from making, stating or publishing, by notice, circular, or otherwise, that their device infringes any of the three Hutchinson patents, and for damages in the sum of $10,000.

There is no doubt but a court of equity has inherent power to restrain the wrongful use of a trade-mark, or the unauthorized use of a man's name, or the use of his letters, against his will; but it is evident that this case does not fall within either of these classes. Here the complaint is that defendant falsely and maliciously notified persons to whom the plaintiffs were about to sell the their device that it infringed the defendant's patents. Though these notices do not defame the reputation of plaintiffs as individuals or as men of business, they do deny the right of plaintiffs to make and sell the particular smoke-preventing device. "Where the plaintiff possesses an estate or interest in any real or personal property, an action lies against any one who maliciously comes forward and falsely denies or impugns the plaintiff's title thereto, if thereby damage follows to the plaintiff." Odgers, Libel Slander, 2d ed. p. 188. To the same effect is Townshend, Slander & Libel, § 206. Such an action is denominated "slander of title," and this, too, whether the slander is published through the medium of words spoken, written, or printed. It was held by the court of appeals, and properly held, that an action at law would lie for slander of title of letters-patent. Meyrose v. Adams, 12 Mo. App. 380.

There is no doubt but the petition in this case states a cause of action at law; but the important question is whether a court of equity has power to enjoin the slander before a trial at law. The circuit court held that it had no such power, and hence dismissed the bill, and it is this ruling which is now before us for review. Mr. Odgers, in the first edition of his book, laid it down in clear and emphatic terms that a court of equity possessed no such power. He said: "No injunction can be obtained to prohibit the publication or republication of any libel or to restrain its sale. The matter must go before a jury, who are to decide whether the words complained of are libelous or not. The crown has no authority to restrain the press; and the courts, whether of law or equity, cannot, till after verdict, issue any injunction in respect of any libel save such as are contempt of court." Odgers, Libel & Slander, *13. Vice Chancellor Malins asserted a contrary doctrine in Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, L. R. 6 Eq. Cas. 551, and in Dixon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. Cas. 488. In the latter case he says: "In the decision I arrive at I beg to be understood as laying down that this court has jurisdiction to prevent the publication of any letter, advertisement, or other document, which, if permitted to go on, would have the effect of destroying the property of another person, whether that consists of tangible or intangible property, whether it consists of money or reputation." In the subsequent case of Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 142, the plaintiff was a life assurance company, having a large income. The defendant published a pamphlet, in which he commented on the business of several companies. The pamphlet contained statements to the effect that the affairs of the plaintiff were managed with reckless extravagance, and that it was insolvent. The bill alleged that the statements were false, that they would be injurious to the plaintiff, and diminish its profits. Vice Chancellor Hall, refused an injunction, and the plaintiff appealed. Lord Cairns considered the bill as based on a libel only, and then proceeded to say, if "these comments do amount to libel, then, as I have always understood, it is clearly settled that the court of chancery has no jurisdiction to restrain the publication merely because it is a libel." He refers to the opinions of Vice Chancellor Malins before mentioned, and of them says: "I am unable to accede to these general propositions. They appear to me to be at variance with the settled practice and principles of this court, and I cannot accept them as authority for the present application." The chancery division in subsequent cases recognized the binding force of Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, but that division seems to have adhered to the former opinions of Vice Chancellor Malins, placing at first stress upon certain provisions of the Judicature Act. It seems to be now conceded that that Act in no way enlarged the principles on which a court of equity would act in granting injunctions. Mr. Odgers makes a full review of the many English cases, and says it must be taken as the present settled practice in the chancery division to restrain libels and slanders on an interlocutory application; but he gives it as his opinion that the practice is an innovation, and violative of the liberty of the press and free speech, and that the rulings will not stand the test in the House of Lords. Odgers, Libel & Slander, 2d ed. pp. 351, 364.

It must, we think, be conceded that the law on this subject in that country is, at this time, in a most unsatisfactory state; and it is quite clear that those prior decisions there, which we are in the habit of looking to as the foundation of our law, deny the right of a court of equity to enjoin a libel or slander. There are exceptions in star chamber times, but such exceptions serve to make firm the general rule that a court of equity possessed no such power. The great weight of American authority is to the same effect. The plaintiff in Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige, 24, 4 L. ed. 880, sought to restrain the publication of a pamphlet which purported to be a literary work, but was an intended libel on the plaintiff. As the publication could not be regarded an evasion of the literary or medical property rights of the plaintiff, an injunction was denied, though the publication was a gross libel upon the plaintiff personally. A court of equity, it was held, had no jurisdiction to restrain a libel. The remedy was an action at law. In Boston Diastils Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co., 114 Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 310, Gray, Ch. J., speaking for the court, said: "The jurisdiction of a court of chancery does not extend to cases of libel or slander, or of false representations as to the character or quality of the plaintiff's property, or as to his title thereto, which involves no breach of trust or of contract." The court in that case regarded the opinions of Vice-Chancellor Malins, before noted, as inconsistent with well-settled principles of law. Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484, was quite like the present case. There plaintiffs and defendant held letters-patent for inventions. After the plaintiffs had introduced their invention, and spent much time and money in doing so, the defendant falsely represented to persons likely to deal with the plaintiffs that their patent interfered with his patent, and that persons using the patent of plaintiffs would be infringers, and become liable as such. The court held that the case made by the bill was not within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Clark v. Dean, 143 Mass. 295, 3 New Eng. Rep. 333, asserts the same principle. These Massachusetts cases were cited with approval in Consumers' Gas Co. v. Kansas City Gas-light & C. Co. 110 Mo. 501. To the same effect are the following cases: Singer Mfg. Co. v. Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. 49 Ga. 79; Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. Rep. 778; Baltimore Car Wheel Co. v. Bemis, 29 Fed. Rep. 95; American Life Assn. v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 173.

We live under a written Constitution which declares that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; and the question of libel or no libel, slander or no slander, is one for a jury to determine. Such was certainly the settled law when the various constitutions of this state were adopted, and it is all-important that the right thus guarded should not be disturbed. It goes hand in hand with the liberty of the press and free speech. For unbridled use of the tongue or pen the law furnishes a remedy. In view of these considerations, a court of equity has no power to restrain a slander or libel, and it can make no difference whether the words are spoken of a person or his title to property. In either case it is for a jury to first determine the question of slander or libel in an action at law. This we conclude is the result of the better cases in this country and in England. But it is argued in behalf of the appellant that this is a case of libel plus something else. If that something else is sufficient to give a court of equity jurisdiction, then the jurisdiction is not defeated because there is libel or slander added. But what is that something else in this case? It is said to be that unfair competition in business which the courts are prompt to prevent in trade-mark cases; that unfair competition which results in loss of business, owing to the dread men have of law-suits. The answer to all this is that slander of a person in his business or profession or of title to his property is often, if not most generally, accompanied with loss of business. Indeed, it is generally laid down that to sustain an action for slander of title special damage must be shown to have arisen from the defendant's word. But such incidents arising from the wrong do not give a court of equity the right to interfere by injunction. All this is clearly stated in Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, supra. We see nothing in this case save slander of title, and the remedy is at law. After verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, they can have an injunction to restrain any further publication of that which the jury has found to be an actionable libel or slander. Odgers, Libel & Slander, 2d ed. p. 340. As slander of title is all we can see in this case, the judgment will be and it is affirmed.

All concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

James H. SEAGER, Guardian, etc., of James B. Seager et al., Appt.,
v.

Gertrude C. McCABE.

(.....Mich.....)

The right of dower extends to 'a share of the proceeds of mines although not opened until after the husband's death, where they are opened on lands held only for mining purposes and available only for the minerals, and the statutes give to the widow the "use during her natural life of one third of all the lands whereof her husband was seised" during marriage.

(June 10, 1892.)

A PPEAL by petitioner from a decree of the Circuit Court for Ingham County in favor of respondent in a petition filed in a proceeding by the guardian of certain infants seeking power to open mining lands, the purpose of which petition was to determine whether or not the widow of the infants' ancestor had any dower rights in the property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Van Zile & Ostrander for appellant.

Messrs. Cahill & Ostrander, for appellee.

Whatever foundation there is in the decisions of courts for the appellants' contention and theory, seems to begin with the opinion of the judges in Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402.

The judges were of opinion that the widow was dowerable of all the mines of lead and coal, as well those which were in decedent's own landed estates as the mines and strata of lead, lead ore and coal in the lands of other persons, which had in fact been opened and wrought during the coverture.

If we concede the rule to be that mines as such are subject to dower, and that if a vein of ore has once been opened and wrought, the dowress may work it to exhaustion, what is the reason for the doctrine in Stoughton v. Leigh?

I think it was the common-law doctrine of waste, because, under the facts in that case, as to unopened mines leased, the rent or royalty reserved afforded some basis for admeasurement.

"If the tenant digs for gravel, lime, clay, brick-earth, or stone hid in the ground, or for mines of metal or coal, or the like, not being open at the time of lease, it is waste."

Bacon, Abr. title Wasts.

The rule which made it waste to open a mine in demised lands where no mine before existed and none were demised, was not founded entirely, or at all, upon the idea that the removal of ore was what constituted the waste. But it was founded upon the ancient NOTE.—Right to dower in mines.

As is stated in the opinion, the above case seems to be the first one in the United States that directly decides the question of a widow's right to dower in mines which were not opened during her husband's lifetime.

In Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263, which involved the question of dower in mines opened after her husband's death, the court although conceding that the general doctrine denied a dower right in mines not opened during the husband's lifetime, was inclined to the contrary opinion but disposed of the case by holding that an agreement of the owner of the fee for a division of the profits of the mines with the dowress was practically an assignment of dower therein and was binding on the parties.

As far back as in 1883, in the case of Hoby v. Hoby, 1 Vern. 218, dower was allowed in a coal mine, but the case does not show whether or not it was opened during the life of the husband.

A subsequent English case denied the right of dower in mines, unless opened during the life of the husband. Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402.

And this has been stated as the law in subsequent cases, both English and American, in which the question was not involved and has been the generally accepted doctrine of text-writers.

In the more recent English case of Dickim v. Hamer, 1 Drew. & S. 284, a widow was denied dower in mines which were opened by a lessee after her husband's death where as guardian of the heir she joined in the lease under order of the court. The decision was based on the theory that she was precluded from claiming dower by her own action, and the court intimates an uncertainty as to the question if she had done nothing to affect her claim.

16 L. R. A.

The cases are all agreed that a right to dower exists in mines opened during the husband's lifetime. Moore v. Rollins, 45 Me. 496; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 23 Am. Rep. 680; Rockwell v. Morgan, 18 N. J. Eq. 384; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. 460; Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402; Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258; Billings v. Taylor, 10 Pick. 460, 20 Am. Dec. 533.

The same doctrine applies to a widow's share of her husband's estate which is given by statute as a substitute for dower. Hendrix v. McBeth, supra.

The discontinuance of the working of a mine during the husband's life will not defeat the widow's right to dower and to re-open the mines. Stoughton v. Leigh and Coates v. Cheever, supra.

And a coal mine opened during the husband's life may be worked by sinking new pits and shafts into the same vein or into veins which are so connected as to form one mine. Crouch v. Puryear, supra.

But in Coates v. Cheever, supra, it was said that a widow was not entitled to dower in an extension of a mine and the order made was that she should have dower in "all such ore beds . . . as were in fact opened and wrought before the death of her said husband," but not in "any part or portion of said ore bed opened" after his death.

In Billings v. Taylor, supra, a four-acre tract worked for slate was held to be wholly included in the claim of dower, and not merely the part which had been dug during the husband's life, where it had been worked by taking a small section at a time and going down the usual depth, then beginning again at the surface.

The reasonableness of the decision in the main case will be likely to make it the leading, as it is the earliest, authority on the subject in this country notwithstanding the numerous dicta and unauthorized statements showing a general understanding that the law was otherwise. B. A. R.

doctrine that it changed the character of the estate or holding.

In this idea is to be found the true and logical reason for the rule laid down in Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402, in regard to unopened mines.

See Park, Dower, 99; cited in 1 Scribner, Dower, 2d ed. p. 202, par. 6; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263.

This reason for the rule does not exist in this state; nor does any reason for the rule exist in such case as the present one.

To cut and sell timber is not necessarily waste. A widow may have dower in wild and uncultivated lands and may clear and improve such lands as tenant in dower.

Campbell, Appellant, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 141. There is no presumption of law that the taking of iron ore from an open mine is waste in a party having rightful possession.

Ward v. Carp River Iron Co. 47 Mich. 65, 50 Mich. 522.

The widow is entitled to dower in land improved by the heir, and thus enhanced in value without allowance to the heir, on account of his expenditures and labor.

2 Scribner, Dower, 2d ed. p. 595.

In the following states, at least, the common-law doctrine of waste is modified or held not to obtain:

Ohio:—Allen v. McCoy, 8 Ohio, 418; Michigan:—Campbell, Appellant, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 141; Kentucky:—Lickman v. Irvine, 3 Dana, 121; Illinois:—Schnebly v. Schnebly, 26 Ill. 116; Georgia:—Chapman v. Schroeder, 10 Ga. 321; New Jersey:—Brown v. Richards, 17 N. J. Eq. 32; Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co. 93 N. J. Eq. 603; Arkansas:—Pike v. Underhill, 24 Ark. 124; New York:—Russell v. Rogers, 10 Wend. 480, 25 Am. Dec. 574; New York:—Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; New York:—Cumming v. Hackley, 8 Johns. 202; Rhode Island:—by express statute; Pennsylvania:—Hastings v. Crunkleton, 3 Yeates, 261.

The following are cases in which the general subject is mentioned or discussed:

Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. 460; Billings v. Taylor, 10 Pick. 460, 20 Am. Dec. 533; Vindlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 134; Carr v. Carr, 20 N. C. 179; Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 28 Am. Rep. 680; Rockwell v. Morgan, 13 N. J. Eq. 384; Reed v. Reed, 16 N. J. Eq. 248. See also 1 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. 165; 1 Scribner, Dower, 2d ed. chap. 10, par. 4.

McGrath, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Schuyler F. Seager died intestate in 1888, leaving surviving him his widow, Gertrude B. Seager, now Gertrude B. McCabe, and as his sole heirs James B. Seager, Harry R. Seager, Schuyler F. Seager, and Richard B. Seager. Administration was had upon the estate, and the estate fully administered upon, and the administrators discharged, and dower has never been assigned to the widow. Seager died possessed of an undivided five-twelfths interest in 40 acres of wild land in the Upper Peninsula, which was not improved, and was wholly valueless for agricultural purposes or lumbering. Its principal value, and practically its sole value, is in the deposits of iron ore contained in it. In his lifetime he had sold an undivided five-twelfths interest in 80 acres adjoining the 40 above mentioned, expressly excepting and reserving in the conveyance "all mines and minerals whatsoever, unopened as well as opened, in and under the hereditaments hereby assured, with full liberty to enter upon said premises to search for, work, mine, and carry away any and all of said minerals: provided, that reasonable compensation be made for all injuries which may be sustained by the owners or occupants for the time being of said premises, by reason of the prosecution of the mining and works aforesaid." At the time of the death of Schuyler F. Seager no mine of iron or other mineral deposit of any kind had ever been discovered opened, or worked on either parcel of said lands. In March, 1888, the minors, through James H. Seager and the widow, their general guardians, upon petition to the circuit court, obtained permission to lease, and did lease, the said lands, premises, and mineral rights for the purpose of mining iron ore; and the general guardian of certain of said infants has in his hands, undistributed, the sum of $2,300, arising from royalties paid by the lessee under the aforesaid lease, which sum is derived wholly from the developments upon the 80 acres last named. James H. Seager, the general guardian of certain of said minors, files a petition to determine whether the widow is entitled to any portion of said sum by way of dower. Our Statute (How. Stat. § 5733) gives to the widow of every deceased person the use during her natural life of one third of all the lands whereof her husband was seised of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage, unless she is lawfully barred thereof. Other sections of the statute provide that, in case of mortgaged lands, the widow shall be entitled to the interest or income of one third of the surplus; that the widow shall be entitled to dower in aliened lands; that when the estate consists of a mill or other tenement which cannot be divided without damage to the whole, and in all cases where the estate cannot be divided by metes and bounds, dower may be assigned of rent, issue, and profits thereof, to be had and received by the widow as a tenant in common with the other owners of the estate. These are the only permanent provisions made by the statute for the widow in case decedent shall leave issue. The naked question raised is whether, under these statutory provisions, a widow is excluded from all interest in the minerals in lands which, at the time of the death of her husband, were unimproved and unproductive, although such lands may be rich in minerals, and were owned, held, and known as mining lands, and were chiefly and solely valuable for the minerals contained in them. From my examination I have been unable to discover that this precise question has ever been passed upon by any court in this country. Text-writers generally, and in some of the following cases, none of which involve the question of an unopened deposit, the courts, lay down the rule that a widow is dowerable of mines which had been opened at the death of the husband, but that she may not open new mines, even upon the lands set apart to her as dower; in other words, that a widow is not dowerable of mineral deposits where there is no opened mine. Washb. Real Prop. 166; 2 Kent, Com. 41; 1 Bishop, Married Women, § 264; 1 Scribner, Dower, 189-195; Freer v. Stotenbur, 36 Barb. 641; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 28 Am. Rep. 680; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 603; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. 460; Reed v. Reed, 16 N. J. Eq. 248; Moore v. Rollins, 45 Me. 493; Billings v. Taylor, 10 Pick. 460, 20 Am. Dec. 533; Neel v. Neel, 19 Pa. 323; Irvine v. Conode, 24 Pa. 162; Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Cent. Rep. 347; Pindlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 134; Crouch v. Puryear 1 Rand. (Va.) 258; Clift v. Clift, 87 Tenn. 17.

Sayers v. Hoskinson holds that it is the right of a life tenant to work an opened mine to exhaustion. Moore v. Rollins is to the same effect. In Freer v. Stotenbur, which was a case of a tenant for years under a lease, the court says: "A tenant for life or for years, or for a single year, has the right to work a mine to quarry that has been worked and is open at the commencement of his tenancy, for it has become the mere annual profit of the land." The English rule respecting an unopened mine is recited, but the court expressly refrains from determining the case upon that ground, but instead finds that the right to quarry and take away stone was granted by the lease. In Irvine v. Conode it was held that a court might restrain unskillful mining and wanton injury to the inheritance by a tenant for life, but not such mining as is subject to no other objection than its liability to exhaust the mine. The court says: "It is said that on the western slope of the Alleghenies the seams of bituminous coal are so few and thin that tenants for life, if permitted to introduce modern facilities for mining, would exhaust the lands so held, and leave them ruined on the hands of those in succession. Should this happen, it would be no more than occurs in every life estate in chattels which perish with the using. So long as the estate is used according to its nature, it is no valid objection that use is consumption." In Coates v. Cheever the tract of land in question embraced 430 acres, and the pits had been opened by the husband, but the mining had been abandoned, and the pits had filled in by a caving in of earth and stone, and after the death of the husband a new pit had been sunk, extending the opening and operations; and the court held that the wife was "entitled to one third of the whole estimated value of the property, deducting the value of the improvements made since the sale by her husband. If practicable, they should have given her a proportion of the ore bed, assigning to the tenant his own improvements. If such division was impracticable, then they should have directed an alternate occupancy of the whole or a share of the profits, also securing to the tenant under our statute his own improvements, and a suitable allowance for the use of them." In Neel v. Neel the wife had a life estate under a will, and the only question was whether a tenant for life of land having coal mines open upon it may mine the coal, not only for his own use but for sale. The court says: "It seems in this case that the author of the gift at some time sold coal out of these pits, but I do not conceive this to be material. It is sufficient that he opened them, and derived any profit from them, even if it were only fire bote. The fact of his opening the pits made them an actual part of the profits of the land, and the right of them passed as such by a devise of the life estate. If he meant otherwise, he should have said so; not having said so, this is a legal inference of his intention. . . .

The most obvious inference would seem to be that when a man devises land with an open mine upon it, to a person for life, he intended the devisee to derive profits from the mine as well as from the surface of the land. He may not have supposed that the devisee would exhaust the mine, and this might seem unreasonable; but, when a donor did not see proper to restrain the gift, how shall it be done? Surely the courts have no control over the arrangements which people choose to make of their affairs. Usually an enterprising tenant for life may be of advantage to the remainder-man, but, in the case of mines, it may be the reverse. And I cannot see how the enterprise of the citizen is to be restrained by judicial process. If we could get ourselves freer from the notions derived from feudal subordination, we should perhaps think that the privileges of tenants for life should be enlarged, rather than restrained, and that the cultivation of the country would be thereby improved." In Billings v. Taylor the husband died seized of a tract of land four acres in extent, consisting of a slate quarry, mostly below the surface of the ground. One quarter of an acre of the quarry had been dug over, and the practice was to take a section of ten or twelve feet square on the surface, and go down to a certain depth, and then begin on the surface again. The court says: "It would be too narrow a construction to say that no part of this quarry was open except that portion which had actually been dug, but it must be considered that the whole, lying together as one tract, belonging to one estate, and wrought in the manner above described, was open, and that the wife was entitled to dower in that as well as in the other estate of her husband." In Crouch v. Puryear it was held that it was not waste in tenant in dower of coal lands to take coal to any extent, from a mine already opened, or to sink new shafts into the same veins of coal. In Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co., held, that a life tenant has a right to use a mine for his own profit, when the owner of the fee in his lifetime had opened it, even though he may have discontinued work upon it for a long period of years. In Reed v. Reed, held, that the operating of an opened mine was a mode of enjoyment of the land to which a tenant for life was entitled. In Hindlay v. Smith, held, that a devisee for life was entitled to unlimited use of the salt mineral, and of the wood upon the premises for fuel, used in the production of salt from the brine. It has been held that, if the mode of using the land consisted in cutting the growth upon it as the customary source of profit, the widow may continue to do so. Thus to cut and sell staves and shingles or hoops or poles under the circumstances supposed would not be waste. Ballentine v. Poyner, 8 N. C. 110; Clemence v. Store, 1 R. I. 272, 58 Am. Dec. 621.

The doctrine that a widow is not dowerable of mining lands, unless at the time of the death of her husband mines had been opened, is traceable to Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402. There decedent left a large estate, upon which there was a lead and a coal mine, neither of which had been opened; two other lead and two coal mines, which he had leased to tenants, reserving certain rents, which were to be paid whether the tenant did or did not open the mines. One of each class of mines had been opened at the time of his death,—a lead and a coal mine,—which he had leased reserving royalties payable in ore and coal. The coal mine had been opened at the time of his death, but the lead mine had not. Two other lead mines and two other coal mines had been opened. Deceased was also entitled to minerals lying under lands not his own, and had operated certain mines thereon, and others were unopened. The court held that the wife was dowerable of all the open mines, but was not dowerable of the mines or strata which had not been opened, whether owned by lease or not. The decision may not be without reason, but certainly no reasons are given in the opinion. Clearly, as to those lands which had been leased, they had been by the decedent devoted to mining purposes, and the mode of enjoyment and source of profit, under all the authorities had been fixed and determined by the decedent; and as to the rents which were to be paid whether the mines were opened or not, under all the authorities on the subject of dower, the widow was entitled to participate in them. The rule laid down in that case undoubtedly had its origin in cases where the relation of landlord and tenant existed. A tenant who rents a farm cannot cut and sell the timber therefrom, convert the farm into a brickyard, open a stone quarry or sand pit, bore for oil or mine for ore thereon, unless authority so to do is expressly given or arises by implication from the situation; but one who rents a piece of ground upon which there is an open quarry or sand pit or brickyard, or open mine may quarry, take out sand, make brick, or operate the mine, unless there is either an express reservation, or some condition or circumstances which would operate as an implied restriction. One who leases a copper mine may mine for copper, but, if he should strike a pocket of silver, the same rule would prohibit him from appropriating the silver. The Salt Well Case, where the vein of petroleum was tapped, is an illustration of the principle underlying this class of cases. Kier v. Peterson, 41 Pa. 361. The question in that class of cases is one of interpretation of the contract,—of what was the use granted,—and, as bearing upon that question, the condition of premises, the use to which the premises had been devoted, and the source of profit are important considerations; but there is room for but one construction, where there is but one mode of enjoyment, one source of revenue or profit, one use. Suppose that a lease were given by A. of all his mining lands, or a devise was made for life of a gravel bank, although no mine or pit had been opened, and the lands were available for no other purpose, or were adapted to no other use, from which any considerable revenue could be derived, and suppose such grant was made to a wife or child, could it be contended for a moment that the ordinary methods of use or enjoyment of such land were not to be adopted; that the usual mode of deriving revenue from such lands was not to be resorted to; that such land was not to be used "according to its nature."

In 7 Bacon, Abridgments, 262, it is said that where a man grants all his mines of coal, when none are open, the tenant may open new mines. Mr. Parks in his work on Dower, cited in 1 Scribner on Dower, 191, says: "Mines in a man's own lands are clearly so far from being a distinct inheritance that they are merely a source of enjoyment. The right to soil is a right to the profits of it, subject only to such restrictions as the law has imposed upon the owners of particular estates with respect to the mode of enjoying those profits." Blackstone says, (2 Bl. Com. § 17): "If a man grants all his lands, he grants thereby all his mines of metal and the fossils, his woods, his waters, and his houses as well as his fields and meadows." As is said in Leifers v. Henke, supra: "Land comprehends all things of a substantial nature, which includes any ground, soil, or earth whatever, and bath in its legal signification an indefinite extent upwards as well as downwards. Minerals are a part of the land itself, and, if not susceptible of division, the wife is entitled to be endowed of the profits or rents." In Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co., supra, the court says: "In a country like this, where there are such vast bodies of unimproved lands, which would otherwise lie dormant in the hands of the life tenant, public policy requires that the doctrine of waste should be liberalized, and the decisions have uniformly been in that direction. The present case illustrates the hardship of a close rule in favor of the fee. The life estate vested in 1860, and there is an expectancy of twenty years or more of this life. A construction of the law which locks up the land from all beneficial use for so long a period, and gives the life owner only the privilege of paying the land tax, should not be favored. When the property is unimproved land, not adaptable to any other beneficial use than that of mining, the right of the life tenant to use it reasonably for such purpose has some support in the adjudications in this country, and is certainly not without reason to uphold it." In Hickman v. Irvine, 3 Dana, 121, the court says: "We cannot say that a widow is entitled to dower in the improved lands only of her deceased husband. She is, by the general provision of the common and statute law, to be endowed of one equal third part of all lands of which he was seised during the coverture; and, to whatever extent the doctrine of forfeiture for waste may apply to the case of a dowress who reduces forest lands to a state of cultivation, we cannot view this doctrine, and the possibility that its application may render a portion of the dower lands useless to the widow, as a limitation either upon the quantity or quality of the land to be assigned as a dower. When a case shall occur in which the lands assigned for dower cannot be made available for the reasonable support of the widow without converting a portion of the woodland to the purpose of cultivation, and in which, upon an attempt being made thus to render it available, the reversioner shall insist upon a forfeiture, it must be decided upon consideration of the object of the law in establishing the right of dower, upon a comparison of its regard for the present comfortable sustenance of the widow with its care for the preservation of the inheritance, and upon a view of the actual condition of the estate and of the surrounding country with regard to improvement and population, whether the change of timbered into arable land is in the particular case such an act of waste as would be just cause of forfeiture."

The strict rules of the common law of England respecting waste and the rights of tenants for life do not obtain here. With us the change in the mode of use is not waste. It is not use, but abuse, that is waste. Waste must be consumption, nor is consumption always waste. The owner of a life estate has some rights in common with the owner of the fee. There is no substantial reason why, so far as the use of premises is concerned, there should not be a community of right between the owner of the life estate and the owner of the reversion. Our statute respecting "dower" defines it as the use for life of one third of all the lands of which the husband was seised during the marriage relation. "Dower" is defined by the English authorities as the provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of her husband for her support and the nurture of her children. Co. Litt. 30a; 2 Bl. Com. 180. The rules applicable to a country where landed estates are large and diversified, where the laws of inheritance are exclusive, where the theory of dower is subsistence merely, and where there is a strong disposition to free estates from even that charge, do not obtain in a commonwealth like ours, where estates are small, and the policy of our laws is to distribute them with each generation, where dower is one of the positive institutions of the state, founded in policy, and the provision of the widow is a part of the law of distribution, and the aim of the statute is not subsistence alone, but provision commensurate with the estate. In the present case the grant is by operation of the statute giving the use of all the lands of which the husband was seised. The grant must be held to include the use of these lands, irrespective of whether mines were opened upon them before or after the husband's death. The question here is not the impairment of one mode of enjoyment or source of profit to reach another. There is but one mode of enjoyment of the land in question; but one source of revenue or profit. The land is susceptible of but one use. The widow is therefore entitled to one third of the amount in the hands of the petitioner, and the decrees of the court below is affirmed.

The other Justices concurred.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS
R. CO., Appt.,

v.

J. A. JORDAN, Guardian, etc., of W. W.
Blythe et al.

(.....Miss.....)

1. Authority given to a resident general guardian of an infant to agree with a railroad company upon the amount of damages for taking lands of the infant or to release the claim or right to damages does not require any condemnation of the property and ascertainment of the value before the guardian is authorized to make such agreement or release.

2. Legislative authority to a general guardian of an infant to agree with a railroad company as to the amount of dam-

NOTE.—Constitutionality of private statutes to authorize disposal of property.

The inherent power of the Legislature to provide by special Act for the disposal of private property seems to have been assumed in many early instances without question, and was less carefully defined and restricted in the early decisions than in more recent ones.
16 L. R. A.

In Livingston v. Moore, 33 U. S. 7 Pet. 403, 8 L. ed. 751, it is said that in the early legislation of ages for a right of way across the infant's lands or to release the claim or right to such damages, is not unconstitutional as a legislative usurpation of judicial power.

3. A conveyance of a right of way across an infant's lands to a railroad company is not a dedication to public use without compensation because there was no money consideration, where it was made on a condition subsequent that a depot, station-house and tank should be maintained upon the land.

4. No notice to an infant is necessary in order to make valid the act of his general guardian under statutory authority in transferring a right of way across his lands to a railroad company.

(May 23, 1882.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for DeSoto County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate over which defendant's tracks were laid. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mayes & Harris for appellant.

Messrs. Morgan & Buchanan for appellees.

Johnston, Sp. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 15th day of May, 1884, Mrs. Blythe, as the guardian of her two minor children, conveyed by deed the right of way through the lands of her wards to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company, the consideration expressed in the deed being for the sum of one dollar, and the further condition that the grantee, the railroad company, should establish and maintain a depot and section house and tank on the land. The minors owned the land in common with Mrs. Blythe, their mother, and three other adult tenants in common, all of whom joined in the conveyance to the railroad company. The second section of the charter of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company, after providing that the company could own a right of way acquired by purchase, grant, or devise, and also the mode and manner by which the right of way could be taken by condemnation proceedings, concludes with the following provision:

"When any land to be taken for the purposes aforesaid shall belong to any infant, non compos, or insane person, having a resident general guardian, such guardian may agree with said company upon the amount of damages to be paid for taking such lands, or release to said company his claim or right to damages in the premises." This charter was granted on March 9, 1882. In 1870, the Memphis & Vicksburg Railroad Company was incorporated. By an Act of March 3, 1882, the Memphis & Vicksburg Railroad Company was authorized to consolidate with the Mississippi Valley & Ship Island Railroad Company, and that these two consolidate with any other companies; the consolidated company to enjoy all the rights and franchises conceded to the different companies entering into the consolidation. This Act was amended by the Act of South Carolina before the establishment of a court of equity, statutes were frequently passed to authorize administrators or others to sell lands for the payment of debts and for similar purposes, and that it was admitted in argument in that case that similar laws were of frequent occurrence in Pennsylvania.

Chief Justice Gibson said in Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 277: "It is not above the mark to say that 10,000 titles depend upon legislation of this stamp."

A private Act may authorize a trustee of a legal estate to convert it into money. Kerr v. Kitchen, 17 Pa. 433.

In this case the conveyance was by a trustee of a married woman to whom she had conveyed the property in contemplation of marriage and was made to perfect the title of a person who purchased from her after her marriage without knowledge of the trust deed which was unrecorded.

A private statute giving trustees power to pass complete title to land which was unproductive and unsalable by reason of entailment, and to convert it into personal property, is not unconstitutional. Carroll v. Olmsted, 16 Ohio, 251.

A private Act authorizing partition because of controversies among the heirs and devisees of a deceased co-tenant is not unconstitutional. Biddle v. Starr, 9 Pa. 462.

Where land was devised in trust for life, with contingent remainders in tail, with power in the tenant for life to sell on irredeemable ground rents, an act authorizing a sale on redeemable ground rents payable to a trustee was held constitutional. Sergeant v. Kuhn, 2 Pa. 383.

Limitations of the power.

A private Act declaring that the children of a certain bastard should be capable of inheriting from her, cannot divest the title of her brothers to 16 L. R. A.

whom it has already descended. Norman v. Heist, 5 Watts & S. 171, 40 Am. Dec. 493.

It is plain that many acts might be passed which, like the one above involved, would violate specific constitutional provisions or well-established principles of ownership, as, for instance, an Act attempting to take away one man's property without reason or compensation and bestow it on another. But fortunately such Acts are not passed, and those private Acts which do come in question usually relate to a mere change of the investment of property.

A private Act cannot authorize a woman who has made a deed in trust for herself during life with power of appointment and in default of exercising the power to her heirs to convey a good title as against her children. Rogers v. Smith, 4 Pa. 93.

This would seem to be an attempt, like the last one above to destroy a vested right.

So a private Act authorizing husband and wife to sell and convey the fee simple of land, devised to the wife with remainder in fee to her children, does not make such conveyance a good title, such that a purchaser can be compelled to accept it. Bumberger v. Clippinger, 5 Watts & S. 311.

Somewhat similar in principle is the recent decision that a statute aimed at a particular case, although general in form providing that the personal estate of which a lunatic or non compos mentis diseased should go to the next of kin of the person from whom it was derived, if this person was the husband or wife of the intestate, was held unconstitutional on the ground that it was arbitrary and did not constitute a "law of the land." Dibrell v. Lanier, 12 L. R. A. 70, 89 Tenn. 497.

A private Act of the Legislature empowering another person, instead of a guardian, to dispose of an infant's estate, was held unconstitutional in March 15, 1884, so as to permit the Memphis & Vicksburg Railroad Company to consolidate with any other companies whether the Mississippi Valley & Ship Island Railroad Company became a party to the consolidation or not. In August, 1884, under the authority of these statutes, the Memphis & Vicksburg Railroad Company, the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company, the New Orleans & Mississippi Railroad Company, and the Tennessee Southern Railroad Company were consolidated under the name of the Louisville, New Orleans & Texas Railway Company, this appellant. The grantee in the deed of May 15, 1884, took possession of the land conveyed as the right of way, fenced the line, constructed its road, and established the depot, section house, and tank, which have since the consolidation been maintained by the appellant. In a word, up to the present time the conditions of the deed have been performed. Some time after the execution of the deed Mrs. Blythe died, and J. A. Jordan, the appellee, was appointed guardian of the two minors, and brought the present ejectment suit against the appellant for the recovery of the two-fifths undivided interests of his wards in the land conveyed by their former guardian. The plaintiffs, as well as the defendant in the suit, claim through G. L. Blythe, deceased, the father of these minors, as the common source of title, and the question of title involved in the controversy depends alone upon the validity of the deed made for the minors, by their former guardian, on May 15, 1884. The circuit court refused to grant a peremp-tory instruction directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, and, upon a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, the court rendered a judgment for the property and $250 damages by way of mesne profits, and thereupon this appeal was taken by the railroad company.

It is contended by counsel for the appellees that the appellant did not acquire the privilege or right conferred by the second section of the Act of March 9, 1882, upon the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company, for the reason that the statute authorizing the consolidation of the Memphis & Vicksburg Railroad Company with other companies was passed on March 3, 1882, six days prior to the incorporation of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company; and that the consolidating Act, in so far as it gave the consolidated company the charter rights and franchises of the different consolidating companies, applied only to then existing companies. The question whether the special franchise or privilege granted by the Act of March 9, 1882, has been acquired by the appellant by its consolidation with the railroad company incorporated by this statute, and has thus become part of its own charter, is not presented in this case, and is not necessary or proper to be decided, and upon which no opinion is expressed. The appellant does not so claim the property in controversy, but upon an entirely different theory. The New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company during its corporate existence, acquired this right of way, under the deed made by Mrs. Blythe, the former guar-

California on the ground that the guardian had an authority coupled with an interest. Lincoln v. Alexander, 52 Cal. 432, 28 Am. Rep. 699.

Distinction between those sui juris and those who are not.

A private Act authorizing executors to sell the real estate of one who is not sui juris, such as an infant, and invest the proceeds upon trusts declared by will, is constitutional but it is otherwise as to those who are sui juris. Kneass's App. 81 Pa. 87.

This is clearly stated also in the later New York cases.

The Legislature may by special Act authorize the sale of the lands of infants including the future contingent interests of those not in being. Brevvoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245; Leggett v. Hunter, 19 N. Y. 445.

But this power does not extend to the sale of lands in which adults competent to act for themselves have an interest vested or contingent unless the sale is necessary for the payment of taxes and assessments. Brevvoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245; Powers v. Bergen, 6 N. Y. 368.

A private Act authorizing trustees to sell and give absolute title to an estate held in trust for life tenants with remainder to their children according to appointment and in default of appointment with cross remainders, is not unconstitutional. Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 277.

This decision is said in Schoenberger v. School Directors, 32 Pa. 84, to be founded on the necessities or interests of the parties under disability to convey.

The latter case holds that where premises were devised to a widow for life with the right to dispose of them by will by appointment among children or grandchildren and with remainder over in default of appointment to testator's surviving 16 L. R. A.

children and their issue per stirpes that a statute appointing trustees with authority to sell the property was unconstitutional as the trustees were strangers to the will, so that the question is merely one of the power to appoint men to sell property belonging to other persons.

The Legislature cannot without the owner's consent confer on a stranger the power to sell his property and hold the proceeds as trustee for him. Hegarty's App. 75 Pa. 505; Ervine's App. 16 Pa. 256.

A private statute authorizing an executor to sell all the real estate of his decedent and convey it free from any trust or condition under the will and hold the proceeds in trust to carry out the provisions of the will, is unconstitutional where the estate is vested in parties who are sui juris. Hegarty's App. supra.

A private Act authorizing a sale of an estate given to a father for life with remainder to his children if the sale is necessary for the support and maintenance of the tenant for life and his infant children and for their education, and for the payment of debts incurred for those purposes, is not unconstitutional. Clarke v. Van Surlay, 15 Wend. 436, affirmed Cochran v. Van Surlay, 20 Wend. 365; Towle v. Forney, 14 N. Y. 423, affirming 4 Duer, 164; Suydam v. Williamson, 65 U. S. 24 How. 427, 16 L. ed. 742; Williamson v. Suydam, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 723, 18 L. ed. 997. These two decisions of the United States Supreme Court were based on the decisions of the state court and overruled its own prior decision in Williamson v. Barry, 49 U. S. 8 How. 496, 12 L. ed. 1170.

But a private statute authorizing trustees for the use of a life tenant under a will with remainders to her issue living at her decease and for want of such issue to all the grandchildren of the testator then living and out of the proceeds of the dian, and in which it was the grantee; and the appellant claims this title derivatively, and by reason of its consolidation with that company, and as part of its property and assets. There can be no doubt that the consolidation under the Act of March 8, 1882, and the amendatory Act of March 15, 1884, vested in the new company the property and assets of all the consolidating companies, of which the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Vicksburg & Memphis Railroad Company was one, and whatever title vested in the grantee by this deed passed to this appellant.

It is argued in behalf of the appellees that the guardian could convey under the authority of the last clause of the second section of the Act of March 9, 1883, only after there had been a condemnation of the property and an ascertainment of its value as provided in the preceding clauses of the section. This view is not a correct construction of the statute, which authorized the guardian to agree with the company upon the amount of damages, or release all claim to damages. Evidently this was intended as a distinct mode by which the company could acquire the right of way, and its purpose and effect were to dispense with the necessity for condemnation proceedings in this class of cases. The discretionary power was confided to the guardian, of adjusting the damages with the railroad company, as was also the authority to decide whether it would be sale to pay the commissions, costs, and expenses of the trustees with all assessments and liens on the land and invest the surplus in securities to be held in lieu of the lands under the trust, is not within the power of the Legislature, in the absence of infancy or other incapacity of the persons interested. Powers v. Bergen, 6 N. Y. 383.

The Legislature has power to pass an Act licensing the sale of infants' real estate although the same power exists in the courts. Rice v. Parkman, 16 Mass. 333.

Giving power to guardian of infants.

In an early opinion by the justices of the New Hampshire court, given in response to an inquiry, they declared that the Legislature could not by special law authorize the guardian of an infant to make a conveyance of real estate. Opinion of the Justices, 4 N. H. 572.

So in Tennessee a special Act authorizing guardians to sell lands of infant wards to pay their ancestor's debts is held unconstitutional because judicial in its character. Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430.

But the weight of authority is very greatly against these cases. The Legislature may authorize a guardian appointed in another state to sell the property of infant wards within the state. Boon v. Bowers, 30 Miss. 246, 64 Am. Dec. 159.

So it may authorize a guardian to be appointed for that purpose and to sell an infant's land. McComb v. Gilkey, 29 Miss. 146.

And it may pass a law authorizing a guardian of infants to convey all their interests in the property, real, personal, and mixed, held by a firm in which they are interested, to a corporation to be organized as a successor to the firm and to take stock in such corporation. Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. ed. 535.

So a private Act authorizing a guardian having a title to real estate of his wards to convey it in pursuance of a contract made by their ancestor, is valid. Estep v. Hutcheon, 14 Serg. & R. 485.

But a private Act authorizing the guardian of infants to mortgage their lands to pay for buildings erected by her direction before she was appointed guardian, was held unconstitutional in Rhode Island on that ground that as the buildings became theirs as soon as they were built upon their lands they were under no legal obligation to pay for them. Burke v. Mechanics Sav. Bank, 12 R. I. 512.

Non compos mentis.

The Legislature may authorize the guardian of a non compos mentis to sell a part of the latter's real estate and apply the proceeds to discharging incumbrances on another part. Davison v. Johnston, 7 Met. 383, 41 Am. Dec. 443.

16 L. R. A.

As to decedent's estates.

A private Act authorizing administrators to sell lands descended to infants to satisfy decedent's debts to which his estate might be subjected by judicial proceedings, is unconstitutional. Kibby v. Chitwood, 4 T. B. Mon. 91, 16 Am. Dec. 143.

So is a private Act authorizing commissioners to make a sale under similar conditions. Sheehan v. Barnett, 6 T. B. Mon. 562.

So the Legislature of a state may by a special Act authorize an administratrix appointed in another state to sell the real property of a decedent within the state for the payment of his debts and make a valid conveyance thereof. Holman v. Bank of Norfolk, 12 Ala. 359; Watkins v. Holman, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 35, 10 L. ed. 573.

In the above Alabama case the court said that there was an implied reservation of the right of the heirs to contest the validity of the sale if there were no debts to authorize it.

So a private Act confirming an administrator's sale under order of the probate court of lands of a decedent for debts, is not unconstitutional as an exercise of judicial power. Wilkinson v. Leland, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542.

A private Act authorizing an administrator to sell lands of his decedent at private sale upon an order of the proper court instead of at public auction, as by the general law, is not unconstitutional. Florientine v. Barton, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 210, 17 L. ed. 783.

And a private statute authorizing commissioners to sell so much of the lands of a decedent as were necessary to satisfy a lien of the state thereon is not unconstitutional. Livingston v. Moore, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 459, 8 L. ed. 751.

The Legislature may authorize an administrator to sell land of his intestate and make an investment of the proceeds. Williamson v. Williamson, 3 Smedes & M. 715.

But a private Act authorizing a trustee to sell the real estate of a decedent before the time prescribed in his will, is unconstitutional where the parties interested are of full age and under no disability. Ervine's App. 16 Pa. 265.

A private Act authorizing the creditor of a decedent's estate to sell at public sale so much of decedent's lands as will raise a specified sum and apply it upon claims held by himself and another for moneys advanced and liabilities incurred on account of the estate is unconstitutional. Lane v. Dorman, 4 Ill. 233.

The court said such power was clearly judicial, and also that there was a sufficient remedy in the courts for the enforcement of the claims. So far as the decision is based on the theory that the power was judicial it is clearly against the weight of authority unless distinguished from the other cases on the ground that the Act assumed to decide the amount of the claims to be enforced against the estate.

B. A. R.

beneficial to the ward's estate to convey the right of way, without any pecuniary or direct compensation or consideration. This, precisely, as in case of a person sui juris, obviated the necessity for any condemnation proceedings. The more important question presented in this case is whether it was beyond the limits of legislative power for the Legislature to confer upon guardians the authority to convey the right of way in the lands of their wards, as provided in the section of the Act of March 9, 1882. The objections urged against the validity of this statute are that it is a legislative usurpation of judicial power, full jurisdiction in minors' business having been confided by the Constitution to the courts of chancery; that it provides no notice to the minor, who is the owner of the land, and therefore the method provided by this statute, for taking private property for public use, is not "due process of law;" and, finally, that it dedicates private property to public use without due compensation first being made to the minor. These objections will be examined in the order stated.

The doctrine is firmly established by the great weight of American decisions, and sustained by the most cogent and unanswerable reasoning, that special Acts of the Legislature, authorizing or confirming the sale of lands by guardians, are constitutional when their object is simply to provide a change of investment, and not to divest the beneficiary of property rights, in the absence of special or exceptional constitutional limitation, and that such acts are not judicial, but the proper exercise of legislative power.

Such a power necessarily resides in the legislative department of the government, as parens patriæ, to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be proper for the management, superintendence, and disposition of the property of infants, lunatics, and persons who are incapable of managing their own affairs. This principle was announced by Judge Story, who delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Wilkinson v. Leland, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 660, 7 L. ed. 554, a decision that was followed in the case of Watkins v. Holman, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 25, 10 L. ed. 873, and also in Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 618, 26 L. ed. 585.

In Hoyt v. Sprague, Mr. Justice Bradley delivering the opinion of the court, speaking of this class of statutes, said: "The passage of such laws is not the exercise of judicial power, although by general laws the discretion to pass upon such cases might be confided to the courts. But, when it is not confided to the courts, the power exercised is of a legislative character, the Legislature making a law for the particular case." Such has been the uniform course of decisions in this state. Williamson v. Williamson, 8 Smedes & M. 715, 747, was followed and affirmed in McComb v. Gilkey, 29 Miss. 146, and again in Boon v. Bowers, 80 Miss. 246. 64 Am. Dec. 159. The three cases cited by counsel for the appellees do not controvert the correctness of the principle as we have stated it. The statute involved in the Illinois case of Lane v. Dorman, 4 Ill. 238, expressly adjudicated a debt in favor of a particular creditor, and directed a sale of the minor's lands for its payment. The court characterized the statute for this reason as in the nature of a judicial decree. In the Pennsylvania case of Schoenderger v. School Directors, 82 Pa. 84, the statute before the court directed the sale, by two strangers, of land that had been devised to the testator's widow for life, with power of appointment by last will and testament to such persons as she might appoint, with remainder over to various specified persons, some of whom were minors. The court said the statute "was simply an authority to strangers to seize and sell an estate under no obligation or necessity to be sold. It was a legislative repeal of a private citizen's will."

Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. 59, 30 Am. Dec. 80, a Tennessee decision, proceeded on the construction of a special statute which the court interpreted to adjudicate and determine the question of the debts for which the land was directed to be sold, and accordingly held the statute unconstitutional on the ground that it was in this respect the exercise of judicial power. It will be seen that Jones v. Perry stands apart from the general constitutional doctrine, and rests alone upon the construction of the particular statute then being considered. An opinion given by the judges of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire to the Legislature of that state, reported in the fourth volume of New Hampshire Reports, page 564, stands alone and unsupported in its broad and unconditional denial of power in the Legislature in this class of cases. The Constitution of Mississippi, it is true, invests the chancery courts with full jurisdiction in minors' business; but, having ascertained that the special power exercised in that class of statutes is legislative and not judicial, it is evident that the Legislature has not usurped in any respect the powers or functions of the judicial department of the government. So the former Constitution of 1882 gave the probate courts jurisdiction in all matters testamentary and of administration and in orphans' business, but by a long line of decisions it was held that the power of these courts over the lands of decedents and infants was derived from legislative grant, and was therefore purely statutory, and not constitutional.

The power of determining controversies, of adjudicating debts, and deciding questions of property and personal rights is purely judicial, but the delegation of the power of selling lands for the payment of debts that are to be ascertained and adjudicated by the courts is not, in any sense, a judicial act, but the exercise of legislative power. The statute now under consideration contains two distinct features. It confers upon the guardian authority to agree upon the compensation for the ward's lands to be taken as the right of way, and also the authority to release all claim to damages and compensation. In this case the deed was made upon an independent and valuable consideration, contained in the condition subsequent in the deed and running with the grant, that the railroad company should erect and maintain a depot and station on the land, a condition which has been performed. The deed is not voluntary and without consideration, but, on the contrary, its consideration may be of greater value than a money compensation for the strip of land taken as a right of way. The adult co-tenants evidently regarded it as of equal value to the land conveyed to the railroad company, and it can readily be perceived that such a consideration may not only be ample compensation for the right of way granted, but in many instances might far exceed the money value of the land granted to the railroad company as a roadway. A conveyance on such a consideration is in no just or proper sense the dedication of private property to public use without compensation. The railroad company has stipulated to maintain this depot on the land conveyed by these owners, partly for their profit and convenience in receiving their supplies and shipping their crops, a full equivalent for the right of way. This condition is not only a valuable, but a continuing one, and, upon its failure, the land granted will revert to the grantors at their option, according to their original title.

If the Legislature has the power to authorize a guardian to sell lands of his ward for the payment of debts or the reinvestment of the proceeds, the power must exist to authorize a guardian to sell a part of his ward's plantation as a right of way for the consideration of the erection and maintenance of a railroad station on the land, which in actual value is a fair compensation for the land conveyed, and which will be to the benefit, and not to the injury, of the infant owner. There is no deprivation of property in such a case, but the conversion of its value from one form into another. Such an arrangement amounts to direct compensation, not in money, but its equivalent, and the power wisely exercised, as it seems to have been in this case, would be to the interest of the minor.

The objection that no notice to the minor is provided by the statute cannot be sustained. It is settled in this state that notice to minors is not necessary in proceedings in the chancery court for the sale of the lands of their ancestor. Burrus v. Burrus, 56 Miss. 92; Bailey v. Fitts Gerald, Id. 578; Johnson v. Cooper, Id. 608. And the same was announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Florentine v. Barton, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 210, 17 L. ed. 783. The question is simply one of the power of the Legislature to authorize the guardian to convey the land, and in none of the numerous cases of the class to which this belongs has notice to the minor been regarded as essential in any respect. We are of the opinion that the deed executed by the guardian in this case is legal and valid; and the statute, in so far as it authorizes a conveyance of the minor's land for a distinct and direct consideration which is a fair and just compensation, whether for money or its equivalent, is within the limits of legislative power. Whether the provision of the statute permitting a guardian to release the damages and convey the right of way for no independent consideration, but solely in expectation of indirect and remote benefits flowing or resulting from the construction of the road as an improvement, is not involved in the case now under consideration, and upon which it is unnecessary to intimate an opinion.

From these views it follows that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts

v.

Eugene GRAVES, alias Maximillian E. A. LAFOSSE.

(.....Mass.....)

A statute designating one who is convicted of a felony after having been convicted of two others, an habitual criminal and subjecting him to long imprisonment as such, is not ex post facto, although by its terms it may be enforced against one whose former convictions occurred before its passage.

(January 5, 1891.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County, made during the trial of an indictment charging him with procuring an abortion, and with being an habitual criminal, as defined by Act of June 16, 1887. Overruled.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mr. P. Henry Hutchinson for defendant.

Messrs. A. E. Pillsbury, Atty-Gen., and Charles N. Harris, Asst Atty-Gen., for the Commonwealth:

The Statute of 1887, chap. 485, providing for the punishment of habitual criminals, is not unconstitutional and ex post facto when applied to a case in which the third offense was committed after the passage of the Act.

Ross's Case, 2 Pick. 165; Riley's Case, Id. 172; Com. v. Phillips, 11 Pick. 27; Plumbly v. Com. 2 Met. 418.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under Stat. 1887, chap. 495, "whoever has been twice convicted of crime, sentenced and committed to prison, in this or any other state, or once in this and once at least in any other state, for terms of not less than three years each, shall, upon conviction of a felony committed in this state after the passage of this Act, be deemed to be an habitual criminal, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the state-prison for twenty-five years," etc. The defendant contends that this statute can only clearly established by the earlier Massachusetts cases cited in the opinion as well as by Rand v. Com. 9 Gratt. 738; People v. Butler, 8 Cow. 347; Es parte Gutierrez, 45 Cal. 430.

NOTE.—The above decision has interest as relating to one of the modern statutes about habitual criminals, although the principle of the decision on the objection that the statute is ex post facto is 16 L. R. A.

be applied to cases in which the former convictions on which sentences were imposed were subsequent to the passage of the Act, and that, if it included cases in which the former convictions were before, it would be unconstitutional. The statute relates to the judgment to be rendered and the sentence to be imposed in cases arising after it goes into effect. It is prospective, and not retrospective. It deals with offenders for offenses committed after its passage, but it provides that, in considering the nature of an offense and the condition into which the offender is brought by it, his previous conduct may be regarded. The meaning of the statute in this particular seems clear, and we have no doubt that it is applicable to the case before us. With this construction it is not unconstitutional as an ex post facto law. In punishing offences committed after its passage, it punishes the offenders for a criminal habit whose existence cannot be proved without showing their voluntary criminal act done after they are presumed to have had knowledge of the statute. Such an act is a manifestation of the habit, which tends to establish and confirm it, and for which the wrong-doer may well be held responsible. That statutes of this kind are constitutional is settled by well-considered adjudications of this court. Ross's Case, 2 Pick. 165; Com. v. Phillips, 11 Pick. 28; Plumbly v. Com. 2 Met. 413; Com. v. Hughes, 183 Mass. 496; Com. v. Marchand, (Bristol county, 1891), 29 N. E. Rep. 578.

Exceptions overruled.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Alvah SHELDEN

B. H. FOX et al., Commissioners of Butler County et al.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. The boards of county commissioners of the several counties of the state have exclusive control of the expenditures accruing either in the publication of delinquent tax lists, treasurers' notices, or other county printing, and, in pursuance of this power, have authority to designate the official newspapers of their respective counties, but such designation cannot continue for a longer period than one year, or so as to bind or tie the hands of their successors in office.

*Head notes by HORTON, Ch. J.

2. On the second Monday of January

NOTE.—Power of public officers to make contracts binding on their successors, or for a term of years.

Reference must be had in every case to the statute or to the fundamental law to ascertain the power of public officers to contract, or indeed to do any act. Except in the construction of such written laws the decisions of courts afford no guidance or test.

For services of teachers, attorneys, depositaries.

Where there is no express limitation on the power of a school trustee to hire teachers, he may hire a teacher for a period extending beyond his term of office, and his successor is bound by the contract if made in good faith and without fraudulent collusion. Wait v. Ray, 87 N. Y. 36. It is said in this case that "a hiring for an unusual time would be strong evidence of fraud and collusion."

In Illinois the statute gives the voters, at the annual election of school trustees, power to prescribe the subjects to be taught. In view of this and other statutes which seem to confine the authority of the board to the current year, it is held that a contract for the services of a teacher which are not to commence till a time subsequent to the annual election is invalid. Stevenson v. School Directors, 37 Ill. 255; Davis v. School Directors, 92 Ill. 238.

Under a statute providing that "the school trustees or incorporated towns and cities shall have power to employ a superintendent for their schools," such trustees are authorized to contract for the services of a superintendent to commence at a date subsequent to the time fixed by law for the election of a new trustee and the reorganization of the board of trustees. Reubelt v. School Town of Noblesville, 4 West. Rep. 509, 106 Ind. 478. In this case the employment was only for one year. It is said of this case in Jay County Comrs. v. Taylor, infra: "We apprehend that if the board of trustees had undertaken to employ the superintendent for three years a different conclusion would have been reached." In both cases the boards consisted of three members, holding for three years each, one being elected each year.

16 L. R. A.

A contract by which a board of county commissioners attempts to employ a legal adviser for a period of three years, to commence three months in the future and after the time for the election of a person to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of office of one member of the board, the term of employment extending over a period during which all the members of the board as constituted at the time of the contract will retire therefrom unless re-elected,—is against public policy and void. Jay County Comrs. v. Taylor, 7 L. R. A. 160, 128 Ind. 148.

Under a statute authorizing county commissioners to designate a bank in which to deposit public moneys, which gives no express authority to make such designation to continue for any particular length of time, a designation for such a definite period, during which the bank agrees to pay a given rate of interest, is not binding on the commissioners. First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Peck, 43 Kan. 643; First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Barber County Comrs. Id. 648. In the last case but one, Johnston, J., said: "If it had been the purpose of the Legislature that county commissioners might tie their hands and those of their successors and bind the county to retain the funds in a certain bank through several changes in the membership of the board, or for any stated time, it would surely have made it clear in the statute enacted. The public interest will be best subserved by leaving the board free to change the depository whenever in the judgment of the commissioners the safety of the public moneys and the good of the county require such change."

Under a Michigan statute, the exact terms of which are not disclosed by the report, "it is not competent for a county treasurer and board of auditors to contract for depositing the public funds beyond the expiration of the term of office of county treasurer for the time being, but a designation of a depository by the treasurer and board is good and valid until the expiration of the term of his office, and until a new designation is made by the newly elected county treasurer and board." City Sav. Bank of Detroit v. Huebner, 84 Mich. 301.

17

after each general election at which a commissioner has been elected, the board of county commissioners, as an organized body, is dissolved, and the office of chairman is vacant, and, before the commissioners can transact any county business other than to elect a chairman, or fill a vacancy in the office of a commissioner, the board must be again organized, and the hands of such new board or organization, as to the designation of the official newspaper of the county, are not tied by a prior order of the preceding board of county commissioners.

(April 2, 1892.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to allow plaintiff to do the county printing for Butler County in accordance with a contract which he had made with defendants' predecessors in office. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Aikman & Brooks and Redden & Schumacher, for petitioner:

This contract was not ultra vires, but a legitimate and proper contract, entirely within the power of the board of county commissioners and such as was very proper for the county commissioners to make. Moreover, this contract is an executed contract.

The rule ultra vires prevails in full force only when the contracts of corporations of this character remain wholly executory.

Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 289; Brown

Under a statute prohibiting any contract on behalf of the United States unless it is "authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment," a valid lease of a building for a post-office cannot be made by the postmaster general for more than one year by virtue of an appropriation for such year only. Chase v. United States, 44 Fed. Rep. 732. In this case Gresham, J., said: "The executive officers of the government have no power to bind it by contract, unless there be statutes expressly or by clear implication authorizing them to do so. The annual appropriations which are made by Congress to defray the expenses of the executive departments do not authorize heads of those departments to bind the government by contract beyond the time for which such appropriations are made applicable."

Contracts of municipalities for water, gas, etc.

Municipal corporations have no power to make contracts continuous in character, by which they will be, in effect, precluded from exercising from time to time any power legislative in character conferred upon them by law. Brenham v. Brenham Water Co. 67 Tex. 542.

The reasonableness of the duration and extent of a grant of privileges by a city which it has legislative authority to make, is for the exclusive determination of the city council, provided they do not create a perpetuity or absolutely surrender their control over the subject-matter. Houston v. Houston City Street R. Co. (Tex.) March 1, 1892.

The time for which the council of a city may bind by contract their successors in the matter of supplying water cannot exceed what is reasonable under all the circumstances. Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 502.

A city authorized to provide for a water supply may make a contract therefor which is not invalid because without limit of time other than the city can fix by purchasing the plant of the water company. Atlantic City Water Works Co. v. Atlantic City, 4 Cent. Rep. 841, 48 N. J. L. 378.

16 L. R. A.

v. Atchison, 39 Kan. 53. See Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62.

If the commissioners had the power to make a contract for county printing then the contract is binding on the company. There is no such thing as the board of county commissioners of 1891, or the board of county commissioners of 1892; but it was the board of county commissioners at the beginning, and the board of county commissioners at the ending.

First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Peck, 43 Kan. 646.

Even the Legislature is bound by its contracts as much as an individual.

Speer v. Baker, 4 Kan. 379.

This contract was absolutely binding on Shelden. He could not at any time he saw fit ignore it and recover upon a quantum meruit but was bound to carry it out.

Quigley v. Sumner County Comrs. 24 Kan. 293.

Then if binding upon the citizen why not binding upon the county.

If the board could not make a binding contract for a reasonable length of time, and to them as might appear proper under existing circumstances, then the interests of the county might be jeopardized. The county commissioners may authorize any person or corporation to construct, maintain, and operate a street railway across any state or county road or highway. Would such business permit of a week or a year contract? Not at all.

A city authorized to contract for a supply of water may contract for it for twenty years. Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416.

A contract for a water supply for a township for ten years as authorized by N. J. Act, March 15 1881, p. 118, may be made for ten years, to commence after the lapse of a reasonable time. State v. Bloomfield, 1 Cent. Rep. 422, 47 N. J. L. 442.

A contract by a city for a water supply, which exceeds its authority by attempting to bind the city for twenty-one years, will not be held void for that reason, where water-works have been erected by the other party on the faith of the contract, at great expense, and the contract recognized and acquiesced in by the city for several years; but it will be upheld for a reasonable time. Columbus Water Co. v. Columbus (Kan.) 15 L. R. A. 364.

In Garrison v. Chicago, 7 Ill. 458, a contract made by a city for a supply of gas for ten years was held invalid, in the absence of express authority to the municipal authorities to bind it by contract for a series of years. It is there said, "In all cases of contracts to run for years, the authority to make them should be clear; because they involve pecuniary liability, and it is a tax upon future property owners of the city." The court was of the opinion that there was, under the circumstances, no reasonable necessity for a contract for so long a time.

In Brenham v. Brenham Water Co., 67 Tex. 542, a contract made by a city for a supply of water for public purposes for twenty-five years was held invalid, principally on the ground that it created a monopoly, although the court also considered the long term obnoxious. It is there said, "We do not wish to be understood to hold that a municipal corporation has no power, in any event, to contract for such things as are consumed in their daily use, for a period longer than the official term of the officers who make the contract, but we do intend to be understood to hold that such corporations have no power to make contracts continuous in character, in reference to such things or any

See Columbus Water Co. v. Columbus (Kan.), 15 L. R. A. 354.

Messrs. Shinn & Knowles and George Gardner, for respondents:

Under the constitutional and statutory provisions, on the second Monday in January after each general election at which a commissioner has been elected, the board, as a body corporate, is dissolved, and the office of chairman is vacant; and before the commissioners can transact any county business, other than to elect a chairman or fill a vacancy in the office of commissioner, the board must be again organized, and such organization is effected and the board an organized body for the purpose of its creation, as soon as the commissioners elect a chairman.

Fuller v. Miller, 32 Kan. 180.

A legitimate result of that decision is that the Legislature intended to give the power to each separate board of county commissioners to have the exclusive control of all expenditures accruing, either in the publication of the delinquent tax lists, treasurer's notices, or county printing.

The designating of an official paper and contracting for the county printing is analogous to the designating by the board, of a bank or banks for the deposit of the public moneys, and this court held in the case of the First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Peck, 48 Kan. 643, and again in the case of the same plaintiff, First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Barber County Comrs. 48 Kan. 648, that the public interests will best be subserved by leaving the board free to charge the depository whenever in the judgment of the commissioners the safety of the public moneys and the good of the county requires such change.

Horton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On and prior to the 9th day of January, 1889, and at this time, Alvah Shelden was and is the publisher of the Walnut Valley Times, a weekly newspaper printed and published in El Dorado, in Butler county, in this state, and having general circulation therein. On the 9th day of January, 1889, the board of county commissioners of Butler county, then composed of J. K. Skinner, B. H. Fox and A. O. Rathburn,—the last named being the chairman of the board,—at a regular session designated the Walnut Valley Times as the official paper of Butler county, and directed that the county printing for the next two years be given to that paper, commencing on the 10th day of January, 1891, and ending on the 1st day of January, 1893. Subsequently a written contract was entered into between the board and Alvah Shelden, the publisher of the Walnut Valley Times. At the time of the execution of the contract Shelden made to the state of Kansas a bond in the sum of $500, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, devolving upon him as county printer, which was approved and accepted by the board, and filed with the county clerk. Shelden continued to do the county printing, under the terms of the contract, until the 26th of Janu-others, by which they will be, in effect, precluded from exercising from time to time any power, legislative in character, conferred upon them by law."

A municipal corporation is not empowered to grant an exclusive franchise disabling it from itself establishing water-works for thirty years, by a statute empowering it to contract with a private corporation for the establishment of a system of water-works, although the statute also provides that the right of the city to purchase the works shall be part of such contract. Long v. Duluth (Minn.) April 8, 1892.

In the absence of any express power conferred by the charter of a municipal corporation, it cannot enter into a valid contract giving a monopoly for a long series of years to supply water to the municipality; and such authority cannot be implied from the mere general delegation of the usual power over the subject. Greenville Water-works Co. v. Greenville (Miss.) April 21, 1890.

It is not made clear in this case whether the contract was objectionable because running for "a long series of years" or only as giving a monopoly. For this latter feature of such contracts see note to Altgelt v. San Antonio (Tex.) 18 L. R. A. 383.

In Ohio a municipal corporation is, by statute, authorized to contract for ten years, as to the price to be paid for gas supplied to it, but is prohibited from granting the exclusive right to use streets for pipes or to deprive its council by contract of the right to regulate the quality or mode of measurement. Cincinnati Gas Light & C. Co. v. Avondale, 1 West. Rep. 91, 43 Ohio St. 257.

A contract between a city and a gas company providing that the price of gas may be fixed from time to time by agreement has a continuing force for ten years from its date, but no longer, under a statute providing that the city may fix the prices at intervals of ten years, and until that period has 16 L. R. A.

expired the city cannot fix the rate without agreement with the company. Toledo v. Northwestern Ohio Nat. Gas Co. 5 Ohio C. C. 557.

A contract for a term of years made under a statute empowering the board of auditors of a town to contract for the lighting of its streets, is annulled by the repeal of such statute. Richmond County Gas Light Co. v. Middletown, 59 N. Y. 223. Grover, J., who wrote the opinion, also thought the contract was void because it deprived the succeeding officers of control over the subject but in this the rest of the court did not concur.

A city which has, by valid contract, granted to an individual the exclusive right, for a stated period, of removing dead animals from its streets, cannot, upon mere caprice or to gain a pecuniary advantage, recall the contract and sell the privilege to the highest bidder. Louisville v. Wible, 84 Ky. 290.

A resolution and ordinance constituting a contract giving a person named or his assigns the exclusive right for a term of years to remove carcasses of animals not slain for food from the city limits, so that the same may not become a nuisance, where the owner or his direct servants or employes do not remove them within twelve hours, is a valid exercise of the police power, and is not invalid as constituting a monopoly, depriving persons of property without due process of law, or as in restraint of trade. National Fertilizer Co. v. Lambert, 48 Fed. Rep. 453.

The power of public officers to make contracts calling for payment of an aggregate amount payable in installments each year, when they are prohibited by law or charter from incurring an indebtedness over a certain amount, presents a different question depending upon whether such a contract is construed to create an indebtedness within such prohibition or otherwise. J. G. G.

ary, 1892, when the board of county commissioners, then composed of B. H. Fox, John Ellis and H. M. Brewer,—the first named being the chairman,—designated by a majority vote the Industrial Advocate as the official newspaper of Butler county. On February 8, 1892, the order of the board was spread upon the journal by the county clerk. The publisher of the Industrial Advocate entered into a contract with the board for the county printing, and executed a bond, which was approved by the board. Since the 8th of February, 1892, the board of county commissioners has refused to recognize the Walnut Valley Times as the official paper of Butler county, and has directed the county clerk to notify Shelden, the publisher of the Walnut Valley Times, that the Industrial Advocate has been designated as the official paper of Butler county until the further order of the board. Shelden objected to this, and demanded that he be permitted to do all the county printing of Butler county. This has been refused. On the 15th of February, 1892, Shelden commenced this proceeding in this court for a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the board of county commissioners of Butler county, and the clerk thereof, to allow him, as the owner and publisher of the Walnut Valley Times, to do all the county printing, job work, etc., until January 1, 1893.

The principal question in the case is whether the board of county commissioners may designate an official newspaper of the county for a term of two or more years. On the part of the plaintiff it is alleged that this may be done, and on the part of the defendants this is denied. Paragraph 1655, Gen. Stat. 1889, provides that "the boards of county commissioners of the several counties of this state shall have exclusive control of all expenditures accruing either in the publication of delinquent tax lists, treasurers' notices, or county printing." Under this section the boards of county commissioners of the several counties have the legal right to designate the paper in which the delinquent tax lists shall appear. Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 1710; Wren v. Nemaha County Comrs. 24 Kan. 301. When a paper is designated by a board of county commissioners, it becomes the official newspaper of the county. In Fuller v. Miller, 33 Kan. 180, it was said: "We think that section 26, construed in connection with amended section 8, means that, on the second Monday of January after each general election at which a commissioner has been elected, the board, as a body corporate, is dissolved, and the office of chairman is vacant; and before the commissioners can transact any county business, other than to elect a chairman, or fill a vacancy in the office of a commissioner, the board must be again organized, and such organization is effected, and the board an organized body for the purposes of its creation, as soon as the commissioners elect a chairman.

"By this construction the sections of the Constitution and statute under consideration 16 L. R. A.

are in harmony. Then it follows that a chairman is to be elected in each year on the second Monday of January, or within thirty days thereafter, and will hold his office until the ensuing second Monday of January, and that the term of office of the chairman of a board of county commissioners is from the day of his election to that office until the next ensuing second Monday of January."

As the Legislature has provided that the boards of county commissioners of the several counties of the state shall have exclusive control to designate a paper, and to control the county printing, this of course means that the board of county commissioners of each county has that power. Therefore, as the board of county commissioners of a county, after one year, is dissolved as an organized body, such board ought not to have the control of the county printing after one year, or for an indefinite term of years. Each board of county commissioners of each county has authority and responsibility in designating the official newspaper of the county, and, as a necessary result, in providing for the county printing. If the board of county commissioners of a county could tie the hands of a subsequent board in designating the official newspaper, and in contracting for county printing, it might tie the hands of subsequent boards for several years,—at least for what would be a reasonable time; and it would be difficult to determine what, under all the circumstances of the case, would be a reasonable time. It follows logically that the board of county commissioners of a county must be limited to one year, or until the body is dissolved, or else its power is unlimited in this respect, and it may designate a paper as the official newspaper of the county for two, three or more years,—at least for a reasonable time, which is almost indefinite. See First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Peck, 43 Kan. 643; First Nat. Bank of Medicine Lodge v. Barber County Comrs. 43 Kan. 648. It appears from the pleadings in this case that it has been the practice in Butler county for a newspaper to be designated by the board of county commissioners of that county as the official paper for the period of two years; and therefore, in this case, the board of county commissioners, in 1891, followed the usual practice in designating an official newspaper. It is the practice, however, in most of the counties of the state, for the boards of county commissioners to designate the official newspapers of the counties for the period of one year only. The latter practice seems to us to conform to the Constitution and statutes of the state. To avoid complications or other troubles, the designation of the official newspaper should be made as early in each January, after the board is organized, as is convenient for action to be had.

The peremptory writ will be denied, with costs.

All the Justices concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Helen HENDRICKSON, Admx., etc., of Michael Hendrickson Deceased, Appt.,
v.

GREAT NORTHERN R. CO.

(.....Minn.....)

1. A railway company must be exonerated where a collision occurs at the crossing of a public highway between a traveler on the way and one of its trains, when the company has used such reasonable care to avoid the collision as ordinary prudence would suggest.
2. A plaintiff administrator is not required, in all cases, to prove affirmatively that his intestate, who has been killed at the intersection of a public road with a railway, looked or listened for approaching trains.
3. When, by reason of an omission or a neglect to sound the whistle or ring the bell of a locomotive as it is approaching a dangerous crossing, the vigilance of a traveler upon the wagon road is delayed, and he is led into a position or situation in which his life is jeopardized and finally lost, his lack of vigilance cannot be held to amount to culpable or concurring negligence as a matter of law.
4. Evidence examined, and held not to have justified the trial court in directing a verdict for defendant railway company.

*Head notes by COLLINS, J.

NOTE.—Presumption as to exercise of due care by persons who is found to have been killed by the alleged negligence of another.

The conflict as to the burden of proof of contributory negligence assumes its most serious aspect when the injured person was killed outright and there were no eye witnesses of the accident. As a rule under those circumstances the party who has the burden of proof will lose his case. In addition to the placing of the burden of proof there has been a strong tendency to raise a presumption of law either of care or of negligence, and now there are three well marked divisions into which the cases fall: (1.) those in which it is held that the law raises a presumption of due care; (2.) those which hold that the law raises a presumption of contributory negligence; (3.) those which admit no presumption whatever. The subdivisions of these three main divisions are almost as numerous as the cases on the subject. The statements of principles are almost infinite but the application of them to facts makes the disposition of the cases quite uniform and for the most part just.

Where there are witnesses to the accident there is no room for presumption either way. State v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 1 New Eng. Rep. 236, 77 Me. 535; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 12 West. Rep. 427, 67 Mich. 677.

a. Presumption of care.

Where there is absolutely no evidence as to how the accident occurred the presumption is that the deceased was in the exercise due care. Schum v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 107 Pa. 8.

The presumption of law is that the person killed at a crossing did stop and look, and listen, and the presumption will prevail in the absence of direct testimony on the subject. Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 424, 64 Mich. 93; McBride v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 19 Or. 64.

16 L. R. A.

See also 22 L. R. A. 33; 23 L. R. A. 715; 26 L. R. A. 406; 33 L. R. A. 492; 40 L. R. A. 364; 43 L. R. A. 487; 45 L. R. A. 261.

(April 7, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Meeker County overruling her motion for new trial after verdict in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Francis Bergstrom, F. D. Larabee and Shaw & Cray, for appellant:

A jury might conclude that the railway company was negligent in not giving a signal of the approach of its train to the crossing in question at the time in question.

Note in 6 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 128; Loucks v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 526.

It was a question for the jury to determine whether or not Michael Hendrickson was guilty of contributory negligence.

Brown v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 23 Minn. 165; Faber v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 29 Minn. 465; Loucks v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. supra; Hutchinson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 32 Minn. 398; Beaustrom v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 46 Minn. 193.

Messrs. M. D. Grover, E. A. Campbell and S. L. Campbell for respondent.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this action defendant corporation was

The court cannot assume that deceased came to his death through his own contributory negligence. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Hall, 61 Pa. 386.

The plaintiff is under no obligation to repel any presumption arising from the mere fact that a collision between a person riding across a railroad track and a train of cars that he did not look or listen, or, if he did, rode heedlessly and purposely to his death. Gugenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 9 West. Rep. 903, 66 Mich. 150.

Where a person driving along a highway was killed by being thrown from his wagon in consequence of becoming entangled with a telephone wire which had become loose and sagged over the street, the presumption is that he did his duty of stopping and loosening the wire as soon as he discovered that he was caught by it. Pennsylvania Teleph. Co. v. Varnau (Pa.) Oct. 1, 1888.

Where one was killed while walking upon a public sidewalk by a car running upon him, there is a presumption that he placed himself upon the walk without any want of ordinary care. Phillips v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 521, 77 Wis. 349.

In the absence of evidence of inattention or recklessness of the deceased, who was killed by falling from a gutter on which he was at work, the presumption is that he was in the exercise of ordinary care. Fugler v. Bothe, 43 Mo. App. 55.

If the plaintiff's own case shows he brought the injury on himself by his own carelessness he may be nonsuited, but if he does not, the case should be submitted to the jury, there being a certain degree of presumption that a person of ordinary intelligence will not purposely expose himself to danger. Cassidy v. Angell, 12 R. L. 447, 34 Am. Rep. 660.

Application of presumption; question for court or jury.

As applied in practice it seems that the only ef-charged with having so carelessly and negligently run and operated one of its trains when crossing public highway as to have brought it in collision with plaintiff's intestate, thereby killing him instantly. The court below ordered and the jury returned a verdict for defendant upon all of the testimony, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The crossing, which seems to have been an exceedingly dangerous one, known as "King's Crossing," was about midway between the stations of Darwin and Dassel, some six miles apart, on defendants' line of road. The highway was the main traveled road between these places, and along the entire distance ran nearly parallel to the railway, crossing it at the scene of the accident. The deceased had resided for several years some eight miles from this crossing, about five miles from defendant's railway at the nearest point, and it was not made to appear that he knew anything of the specially dangerous character of the place, except as knowledge might be imputed to him from the fact that he had previously driven over the road, twice, according to the testimony to his widow, the plaintiff.

On this particular day he was driving easterly from Darwin to Dassel, having a pair of horses attached to an unloaded lumber wagon. The train, also going easterly, was a regular passenger upon time, running thirty miles an hour, and due at the crossing about 8 o'clock P. M. Westerly of the crossing was deep cut, over 1,000 feet long, and, at places, more than twenty-five feet in depth. Beside it, on top of the bank and some forty feet from its edge, was the wagon road, and at various places between the road and the cut were piles of earth and bushes or small trees, which naturally obscured the vision of travelers upon the highway, and rendered it more difficult for them to observe a train approaching from the west. When within less than 300 feet of the crossing, the wagon road entered upon a slight depression in the surface of the ground, and thence, through a small ravine, down hill, and, bearing northerly, to the railway tracks, which were crossed at an angle of about thirty-five degrees between the cut referred to and another on the east. The limited opportunity for observing the coming of a train can best be judged by the testimony of the engineer, who at his post upon the south or right-hand side of the cab, was looking out for the crossing. He saw the horses first, the moment they came in sight, and, an instant after, the wagon, in which Mr. Hendrickson was seated. In his opinion, the locomotive was not over 120 feet from the crossing when the team emerged in view at a point on the wagon road not to exceed fifty feet from the rails. From this testimony it is evident that Mr. H., fully aware of the proximity of a railway crossing, as we must presume him to have been, could not have seen, withfect of this presumption is to send cases to the jury in which in other jurisdictions there would be a nonsuit and in permitting the jury to find for plaintiff unless contributory negligence appears, which is merely placing the burden of proof on defendant. In many cases decided where this presumption obtains it is little more than permission to the jury to infer due care from other facts proved, which is just what the jury is permitted to do in jurisdictions where the presumption is denied. Schultz v. Moon, 33 Mo. App. 338.

So where a person was killed at a road crossing while attempting to drive over in a wagon the presumption in his favor entirely disappeared in the disposition of the case, and the court said there is a presumption of negligence on neither side but the right of recovery is a question of fact for the jury. Richey v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 7 Mo. App. 157.

Where there is nothing to show contributory negligence the presumption is against it and the burden is on defendant. If it conclusively appears a nonsuit will be granted; if the evidence merely tends to show such negligence the question will be for the jury. Hoyt v. Hudson, 41 Wis. 105, 22 Am. Rep. 714.

If the undoubted evidence clearly shows contributory negligence the court should say there can be no recovery, but if the fact relied on to establish negligence is doubtful the case must be submitted to the jury. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Fortney, 90 Pa. 323.

Where one is found killed on a railroad crossing, in the absence of evidence the presumption is that he exercised all the precautions of due regard for his own safety and that of others required. In such cases the circumstances in evidence are sometimes sufficient to warrant the inference of negligence, but such inferences are always for the jury and not for the court. Longenecker v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 105 Pa. 332.

16 L. R. A.

Where plaintiff has given evidence of negligence on the part of defendant and no contributory negligence appears there is a case for the jury. The presumption of law is that deceased has done all that a prudent man would do under the circumstances to preserve his own life. Weiss v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 79 Pa. 390.

Although from the uncontradicted evidence it might have been inferred that if the traveler had stopped and looked and listened he would have seen the approaching train, it was for the jury to determine the facts. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Weber, 76 Pa. 157, 18 Am. Rep. 407.

In Allen v. Willard, 57 Pa. 380, deceased lost his life by falling into an unguarded excavation by the side of the highway. There was no witness of the accident. The court, to the circumstances of the case as they appeared when he was found, added the natural instinct which leads men in their sober senses to avoid injury and preserve life, and held that they could not say that the evidence was insufficient to go to the jury as proof of actual negligence on the part of the defendant.

In Achtenhagen v. Watertown, 18 Wis. 331, 86 Am. Dec. 793, where it appeared that a boy fell through a bridge and was drowned, the court said that the circumstances raised such a presumption of negligence against him that plaintiff was bound by proper proof to negative the presumption and to show that deceased was guilty of no want of care, before the case could have been submitted to the jury; but in the subsequent case of Barstow v. Berlin, 84 Wis. 362, the judge who wrote the opinion in the Achtenhagen Case said that he feared the court was wrong in saying, as matter of law, that the fact that the boy fell through the hole raised an inference of negligence which the plaintiff was required to repel in order to establish a cause of action. He further said that negligence was not to be presumed but must be proved, or, at least, there must be some facts upon which it out getting down from his wagon, and did not see, the locomotive before the moment his horses were discovered by the engineer, as before stated, and who instantly realized that they were uncomfortably close to the track over which the train must pass. By reason of the deep cut, the obstructions to the vision before mentioned, the conformation of the ground over which the wagon road descended to within a few feet of the railway, and the angle of the crossing itself, the risk and hazard to wayfarers upon the road were largely augmented. These facts and circumstances were peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant company, and the engineer in charge of the locomotive admitted, when testifying, that he knew it to be a dangerous crossing.

To sum up the situation, this junction of ways was of such a nature that a person driving on the public road came down a hill in a depression or ravine almost parallel with the track, to a point some fifty feet distant, before he could discover a train coming in his rear, and it would then be but about 120 feet away. Running at the rate of the one in question, it would cover that distance (unless checked by the brakes) within three seconds. The imperative necessity for ample cautionary signals by the trainmen as they approached this place, the vigilance which ought to be exercised by the traveler upon the highway as he came to the track, and the exceedingly dangerous character of such an intersection, need not be enlarged upon. There was a sharp conflict of testimony as to whether the whistle was sounded at the caution post eighty rods west of the crossing, or whether the bell was then rung, or rung at all until a collision with the wagon seemed imminent. The engineer and fireman, and other persons who were on the train, asserted with great positiveness that the whistle was sounded at the post, and that thereafter the bell was rung as the train approached the crossing. Other persons who resided and were at work in the immediate vicinity, some of whom had reason to observe the approach of the train and to notice the signals, if they had been given, were equally as positive that there was no whistle sounded and no bell rung until the engineer discovered the horses within fifty feet of the track.

On this conflicting testimony it stands conceded that the jurors would have been justified in concluding that no cautionary signal was given, and that the defendant's servants were negligent in this respect when driving their ponderous machinery along the track towards the crossing, a place where every traveler upon the public road is expected to listen for, and therefore has a right to rely to some extent upon the sounding of, a warning or cautionary signal,—a signal to be regulated by and commensurate with the necessities of the locality, the risk and hazard at the intersection. More care could be based, and that it seemed to him that it was an inference of fact and not of law, and so one to be drawn by the jury and not by the court.

Weight of presumption.

Although proof of due care is essential to plaintiff's case, it may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be supplied by presumption that persons of mature years in the possession of their senses are ordinarily prudent and will exercise ordinary diligence to avoid danger. Lyman v. Boston & M. R. Co. (N. H.) 11 L. R. A. 364.

The love of life and instinct of preservation will stand for proof of care until the contrary appears. Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Rowan, 66 Pa. 399.

Contributory negligence is a matter of defense and must be pleaded and proved in order to escape liability. Schlereth v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 96 Mo. 514; Huckshold v. St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 764, 90 Mo. 548.

Unless the jury are satisfied by affirmative proof that the deceased did not use ordinary care defendant is liable. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Hagan, 41 Pa. 244.

Overcoming presumption.

The presumption is not overthrown by the fact of injury but the burden is on defendant to rebut it. Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 78 Mo. 211.

There is a presumption of due care which inferences from circumstances, in the absence of direct proof, may overcome. Buesching v. St. Louis Gas Light Co. 78 Mo. 223, 39 Am. Rep. 503.

Where there is no direct testimony on the subject the presumption will prevail, but where there is affirmative, direct, and credible testimony of contributory negligence the presumption is rebutted and displaced. Reading & C. R. Co. v. Ritchie, 102 Pa. 423.

That the plaintiff has the onus of showing affirmative proof that the deceased was guilty of no negligence at the time of the injury, is in one sense the rule; it is true that negligence on his part would defeat the right of recovery, but to call witnesses to declare the absence of such negligence before defendant is bound to answer, is not required. But if negligence appears in plaintiff's testimony the defendant may rest on it as securely as if proved by himself. Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Rowan, 66 Pa. 399.

The absence of any fault upon the part of deceased may be inferred from the circumstances in connection with the ordinary habits and conduct and motives of men. The natural instinct of self-preservation in the case of a sober and prudent man stands in the place of positive evidence. Thomas v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 8 Fed. Rep. 729.

b. Presumption of negligence.

The fact that a person traveling on a highway comes in collision with a train on a railway crossing is of itself sufficient to suggest a presumption of contributory negligence against him. In a suit for such injuries the facts and circumstances illustrating the conduct of the injured person at the time of the accident must be made to appear. If, from those, the inference can be drawn that proper caution was exercised it may be said that the presumption of contributory negligence has been affirmatively removed. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Greene, 3 West. Rep. 838, 106 Ind. 279.

Where deceased fell into a culvert and was killed, and the evidence showed that he knew of the culvert and its surroundings and that a man using due care might easily have passed it in safety, there was nothing that would justify a recovery. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Brannagan, 75 Ind. 494.

It will be seen that these cases are little different from those where there is no presumption and the burden is placed on plaintiff to prove due care.

and vigilance are required at a crossing of extremely dangerous character, as this was, by all parties, trainmen and travelers on the highway, than at a place where there are no obstructions to interfere with sight and hearing, the difference between the parties being that the trainmen are presumed to know all about the peculiarities of the intersection, while the travelers on the highway are not presumed to have the same knowledge. That they are acquainted with the crossing may be shown of course.

As there was testimony which would have justified the finding that defendant was negligent, the real question resolves itself into an inquiry whether the proofs conclusively established defendant's contention that Hendrickson contributed to the negligence which caused his death. This depends wholly upon the testimony of one witness, the only one, aside from the engineer and fireman, who saw the deceased after he came upon defendant's right of way, not far from the point, before mentioned, where he was first discovered by the engineer. This witness was at least thirty rods away, upon the north side of the track, and walking in the direction of the scene of the casualty. He testified that Hendrickson carefully walked his team down the hill, to the point where he could command a view of the track westerly, some fifty feet from the rails, and just at that moment the locomotive emerged in view in the cut about 150 feet away, the short, shrill, danger whistles were at once given, the horses became frightened and unmanageable, reared and plunged forward toward the rail, notwithstanding the driver tried to control them, and man, wagon, and team disappeared from his view in the dust and smoke, the crash of the collision coming instantly to his ears. This witness and the engineer and fireman were greatly at variance as to the manner in which the horses were driven towards the crossing, and as to their behavior when the danger signals were given, but these differences were for the jury to pass upon.

We are of the opinion that a case was made which ought to have been submitted to the jury. Where a railway and a public road intersect, the rights of the traveler and of the railway company are regarded as equal, but, of course, the traveler must yield the right of way to a train drawing near. In other words, if a traveler on the public road, having had an opportunity to learn in any manner of the approach of a railway train, sustains injuries from a collision while attempting to cross the rails when the train is crossing the highway, he has no cause of action. A railway company must be exonerated when a collision occurs at an intersection with a public road, if it has used such reasonable care to avoid the collision as ordinary prudence would sug-

a. Where no presumption is allowed.

In case a person is found killed, the rules of law governing the right of recovery are the same as in other cases, although slighter evidence of compliance with the duty cast upon plaintiff may be deemed sufficient than where the injured person is alive and competent to testify. Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 526.

Negligence cannot be presumed. Palmer v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 245.

Under this rule there are two general subdivisions, 1st, where the burden is on plaintiff; 2d, where it is on defendant.

1. Burden of proof on plaintiff.

Absence of contributory negligence is a part of plaintiff's case and the burden of satisfying the jury upon that point rests upon him. Hart v. Hudson River Bridge Co. 84 N. Y. 62; Brunswick v. Strika, 30 Ill. App. 186; McDermott v. Third Ave. R. Co. 44 Hun, 107; Prather v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 80 Ga. 427.

Method of sustaining burden.

In Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co. 20 N. Y. 65, 75 Am. Dec. 375; Denio, J., said: "It is not a rule of universal application that the plaintiff must prove affirmatively that his own conduct on the occasion of the injury was cautious and prudent. The judge is to determine whether a case is fit for the deliberation of the jury, not by the application of any artificial rule respecting the onus probandi, but by considering the facts and circumstances in evidence in connection with the ordinary habits, conduct, and motives of men. The jury must eventually be satisfied that plaintiff did not by any negligence of his own contribute to the injury. The evidence to establish this may consist in that offered to show the nature or cause of the accident or in any other competent proof. To carry the case to the jury the evidence on the part of plaintiff must be such as, if believed, would authorize them to find that the injury was occasioned solely by the negligence of defendant. It is not absolutely essential that plaintiff should give any affirmative proof touching his own conduct on the occasion of the accident. The character of defendant's delinquency may be such as to prove prima facie the whole issue or the case may be such as to make it necessary for the plaintiff to show by independent evidence that he did not bring the misfortune upon himself.

In Tolman v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co., 98 N. Y. 208, 50 Am. Rep. 649, Finch, J., said: "The burden of establishing affirmatively freedom from contributory negligence may be successfully borne though there was no eye-witnesses at the accident, and even although its precise cause and manner of occurrence are unknown. If, in such case the surrounding facts and circumstances reasonably indicate or tend to establish that the accident might have occurred without negligence of the deceased that inference becomes possible in addition to that which involves a careless or willful disregard of personal safety, and so a question of fact may arise to be solved by a jury and require a choice between possible but divergent inferences. If, on the other hand, those facts and circumstances, coupled with the occurrence of the accident, do not indicate or tend to establish the existence of some cause or occasion of the latter which is consistent with the exercise of proper prudence and care, then the inference of negligence is the only one left to be drawn and nonsuit becomes inevitable.

Although there are many expressions in the New York decisions which do not fully accord with what is said above, those two cases state with a fair degree of accuracy, the rules which have governed the disposition of the cases. Many claims have been made that the Johnson Case, supra, has been overruled. It has never been done directly, and although the right of the court to consider the habits, conduct, and motives of men does not appear in the later cases that statement seems not far difgest. If it has, and a collision ensue, the fault must be with the traveler on the highway, consisting in his failure to exercise ordinary care. In such cases it has been well said that if, as a matter of common knowledge and experience, the trial court sees, upon the undisputed facts in the case, that the injured traveler was not in the exercise of ordinary care, and that the injury was in part attributable to his want of such care, it will, as he has shown no legal cause of action, dismiss the case or direct a verdict against him. But the measure of ordinary care is so variable that the question of negligence becomes usually and peculiarly a function for the jury, and the courts can but rarely declare a particular act to be conclusive evidence of negligence. And that is precisely what was done in this instance, the ruling being the same as if Mr. Hendrickson's view of the railway and the coming train had been wholly unobstructed as he came down the hill towards the crossing. A plaintiff administrator is not required in all cases of this character to prove affirmatively that his intestate looked or listened. It may be inferred, in view of the circumstances, that the deceased, governed by the instinct of self-preservation, did what a prudent man ordinarily would do to save his life. See Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Weber, 76 Pa. 157, 18 Am. Rep. 407.

It was demonstrated that Hendrickson was in a position or situation extremely perilous to him, and which he had not been cautioned to avoid, if we are to believe plaintiff's witnesses, before he had reached a point in the public road where the train was visible, or when looking for it would have availed. This situation or position became dangerous, not by the simple act of Mr. Hendrickson in driving there, but through the neglect of defendants' servants to give the warning signals required by law (sec. 843, Penal Code) in reason to prevent his near approach, and it was made still more perilous by the short, sharp danger whistle made necessary by reason of the neglect before mentioned, blown in such close proximity to the horses as to frighten and cause them to plunge forward upon the tracks directly in front of the destructive force.

As was said in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Ogier, 85 Pa. 71, 78 Am. Dec. 822: "If there was no notice by blowing the whistle, a thing required to be done before reaching the point, and usually done, a traveler accustomed to expect this would not only not be so likely to look out for danger, or be in such preparedness to avoid it, as he otherwise might have been, and this without any culpable negligence on his part; for if by the negligence or omission of those in charge of the train his vigilance was allayed, they are not at liberty to impute the consequences of their acts to his want of vigilance, a ferent from the one in the Tolman Case which permits the case to go to the jury if the surrounding circumstances reasonably indicate that the accident might have occurred without negligence of the deceased.

The editor of the Albany Law Journal after a careful examination of all the cases decided at that time, Vol. 20, p. 380, states his understanding of the New York rule as follows: "If on the plaintiff's affirmative evidence it clearly appears that he himself was materially negligent he may be nonsuited; otherwise the defendant, if negligence on his part has been shown, must give proofs. If on the whole case, it clearly does not appear that the plaintiff was free from negligence he may be nonsuited; but if the evidence is conflicting the case must go to the jury."

Direct evidence to disprove negligence is not required in the first instance. Button v. Hudson River R. Co. 18 N. Y. 248.

Evidence of due care may be given by showing circumstances from which the inference is fairly to be drawn that such fact existed. Hart v. Hudson River Bridge Co. 80 N. Y. 622.

The burden may be sustained by direct testimony or by presumptions arising from facts and circumstances already proved in the case. Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 289, 87 Am. Dec. 391; Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 29 Iowa, 47, 4 Am. Rep. 181.

The burden is on plaintiff of showing that the injury occurred without fault on the part of the person injured or of giving evidence from which the jury may infer that he was without fault and that his act did not contribute to the casualty. Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 122.

In such cases the fact of due care may, and in most instances can, only be established by reasonable inferences from the attending circumstances proved in the case, which inferences are to be 16 L. R. A.

drawn by the jury. Mulligan v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 89 N. Y. S. R. 584.

In Mayo v. Boston & M. R. Co. 104 Mass. 140, in which the injured person was not killed, the court said that the burden of showing due care need not necessarily be borne by affirmative testimony. If the evidence to show defendant's negligence excluded fault on the part of plaintiff the proposition of due care was established.

Failure of suit.

In the absence of evidence of due care the action cannot be maintained. Barstow v. Old Colony R. Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 748, 148 Mass. 535; Wakelin v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 12 App. Cas. 41.

In the absence of proof of due care a nonsuit should be granted. Becht v. Corbin, 92 N. Y. 658.

There can be no recovery where the circumstances of the accident are not sufficiently disclosed to warrant any inference upon the question of care or negligence. Crafts v. Boston, 109 Mass. 519.

An action cannot be maintained for the death of a brakeman by falling from a moving train, if the evidence wholly fails to show how he fell and what he was doing at the time. Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 138 Mass. 507; Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292.

When a person has been killed at a railroad crossing and there are no witnesses of the accident, the circumstances must be such as to show that the deceased exercised proper care for his own safety. When the circumstances point just as much to the negligence of the deceased as to its absence, or point in neither direction, the plaintiff should be nonsuited; the presumption that every person will take of himself from regard to his own life and safety cannot take the place of proof. Cordell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 332.

When plaintiff offers no evidence that he was in the exercise of care, but on the contrary the whole quality of which they deprived him." Assuming, then, as we must, for the jury might have so determined, that no cautionary or warning signals were given, it must be held that if, by reason if this omission or neglect on the part of defendants' servants, Mr. Hendrickson was led to be less vigilant when drawing near to the railway, his view along the tracks being obscured until he reached a place or situation in which his life was jeopardized and finally lost, his want of vigilance cannot be pronounced culpable, or concurring negligence as a matter of law. It is not an absolute answer to the claim for redress made by his legal representative that, notwithstanding the alleged omission of cautionary signals by the persons in charge of the locomotive, he might, by the exercise of greater vigilance, have discovered the approaching train, if he had foreseen a violation of the statute, instead of relying, perhaps, on its observance. Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co. 35 N. Y. 9, 90 Am. Dec. 761.

In respondent's brief, reference has been frequently made to the excellent opportunity there was for observing the line of railway as a person on the public road journeyed easterly from Darwin towards King's crossing. When so journeying, and with a crossing of the track to be made, it would be the duty of the traveler to be watchful, and at all times to exercise ordinary care; but the fact that for two or three miles along the road, and before reaching the point where the view was obstructed, Mr. Hendrickson might have seen the train had he looked to the rear some distance, was, at most, a simple circumstance to be considered by the jury when considering the claim that he ought to have seen the train in ample time to avoid the collision. While the view for some two or three miles west of the cut was not interfered with, it was greatly obstructed for a distance of more than 1,000 feet, just at the point where the opportunities for observation were most needed, and are ordinarily regarded and made useful. Of course, if the train was within range of the traveler's vision, as he looked over or be-evidence on which the case rests shows that he was careless, the court may rightfully instruct the jury as a matter of law that the action cannot be maintained. Gahagan v. Boston & L. R. Co. 1 Allen, 187, 79 Am. Dec. 724.

The case will not be taken from the jury if the facts proved fall short of requiring as the sole inference from them that a want of ordinary care on the part of the intestate contributed to the injury." Palmer v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 245.

Applications of the rule.

Where a person attempting to deliver coal at a court-house was killed by the iron grating covering the area falling upon him, and there was nothing to show how he happened to be so situated as to be caught by it, the jury were permitted to draw the inference that the proper discharge of his duties called him there. Galvin v. New York, 112 N. Y. 223.

Where a woman was killed at a crossing while riding with her husband who was guilty of negligence, and the evidence did not disclose what her actions were previous to and at the time of the injury, the jury were left to infer her probable course of action and whether or not it was negligent. Hoag v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 111 N. Y. 202.

Where a laborer on a railroad was engaged in cleaning snow from a street crossing and an engine backed down upon and killed him, the court ruled that it was for the jury to determine what inferences should be drawn from the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence. Wall v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 54 Hun, 454.

Where a night-watchman was found dead at the bottom of an area, the court said that plaintiff had furnished the jury with nothing from which they could infer the freedom of the intestate from fault. They were simply furnished with food for speculation and that would not do for the basis of a verdict. Bond v. Smith, 113 N. Y. 385.

Where a person going to a railroad station was killed by a car running in on a switch, and the circumstances under which he was struck were not developed, and there was nothing in the evidence which tended to show due care or the want of it on his part, the court said that it is impossible to infer from the evidence offered that he exercised the care and circumspection properly to be demanded from one in his situation and that the action could not be maintained. Hinckley v. Cape Cod R. Co. 120 Mass. 262.

How far jury may draw inference of due care.

In Chase v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 77 Me. 63, 52 Am. Rep. 746, the court said that the fact of a natural instinct of men to preserve themselves from injury was not evidence and was no more than an accompaniment or appurtenance of evidence. It may have some influence on the interpretation of facts affirmatively proved. It pertains to those natural laws in connection with which all evidence may be weighed. Taken singly, it does not constitute proof or shift the burden. It may give character or force to facts already proved. It is a mode of reasoning upon the evidence.

In weighing the circumstances it may be assumed that all creatures are desirous of preserving their lives and keeping their bodies from harm. Morrison v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 643.

In connection with the facts and circumstances of the case it is competent for the jury to infer the absence of fault on the part of the deceased from the general and well known disposition of men to take care of themselves and to keep out of the way of difficulty and danger. Northern Cent. R. Co. v. St. Louis, 29 Md. 420, 96 Am. Dec. 545, 31 Md. 357, 100 Am. Dec. 70.

The inference of care is only warranted when circumstances are shown which fairly indicate care or exclude the idea of negligence. Hinckley v. Cape Cod R. Co. 120 Mass. 262.

The jury cannot be permitted to assume that the deceased had not omitted the precautions which a prudent man would take in the presence of known danger. Riordan v. Ocean S. S. Co. 124 N. Y. 655.

While want of contributory negligence may be established by inference drawn from the circumstances, such an inference may not be drawn simply from a presumption that a person exposed to danger will exercise care and prudence in regard to his own safety. Witrowski v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 420.

Where a person was seen going toward a railroad track, and shortly afterward his body was found in a cattle-guard after having been struck by a train, the court said that there was nothing to show absence of negligence on his part. "Doubtless the jury might infer that the deceased was tween the piles of earth, small trees, and other obstructions between the track and the highway, it would be seen, but it would remain unseen and unobserved unless it was at the exact place commanded by a view from that precise point of observation. The view and the presence of the train would have to concur as to time and place.

Nearly all of plaintiff's witnesses, residents of that immediate locality, testified that, although no signals were sounded for the crossing, they heard the train coming from the time it left Darwin station, some three miles west; and from this it is maintained by respondent that had the deceased listened, as was his duty, when he approached the crossing, he, too, would have heard it coming, and would have been warned in ample time to prevent his driving so near the rails. The fact that the swift coming of the train was clearly manifested to the witnesses by the noise it made when running, conclusively established, it is argued, that the deceased failed to listen, or, listening, neglected to pay attention to the obvious warning of imminent danger. But in this contention respondent's counsel overlooked two conditions, both present, which might have a bearing upon the matter: First, that Mr. Hendrickson was in an empty lumber wagon, which must have made more or less noise as it was driven along; and, second, and of more moment probably, that all of these witnesses were well acquainted with the movements of this particular train, knew when it might be expected at Darwin station, as well as at the crossing, while some of them were paying special attention to its coming on that occasion. A stranger to the neighborhood and to the movements of this train would not be expected to know that a train was approaching King's crossing from the west simply because it whistled and blew off steam at Darwin, or because its approach was apparent to those who knew all about its running time and movements.

Order reversed.

Gillilan, Ch. J., absent, sick, did not sit.

governed by the natural instinct of self-preservation and would not put himself recklessly and consciously in peril of death; but that no presumption exists in the absence of proof that he was exercising due care at the time. Reynolds v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 232.

Special circumstances which relieve from care.

It seems that the evidence of due care may be less strong in cases where the defendant has by his conduct justified the decedent in taking the course which resulted in his death. Newell v. Ryan, 40 Hun. 256; Palmer v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 245.

It is not necessary to show that a passenger was free from negligence. McKimble v. Boston & M. R. Co. 139 Mass. 542.

Evidence of due care on the part of a passenger may be less strong when the injury is caused by the carrier than though there was no relation between them. Parsons v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 3 L. R. A. 653, 118 N. Y. 363.

Where a person in attempting to cross a railroad track after dark was struck and killed by a train running down grade without steam and with no lights or signals as it approached the crossing, defendant insisted that since there was no witness to testify that deceased looked or listened when he approached the crossing it must be assumed that he did not, and that such omission was negligence on his part; but the court ruled that it was only where it appeared from the evidence that he might have seen had he looked, or might have heard had he listened, that the jury was authorized to find that he did not look and did not listen. Smedis v. Brooklyn & R. B. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 19.

Circumstances showing negligence.

The very happening of the accident may negative the existence of due care. Riesman v. Havemeyer, 84 N. Y. 647.

When the only theory upon which the deceased could have been on the track was that either he did not see the train, or did not stop when he should have done so, either of which would have been negligence, a nonsuit should have been granted. Connelly v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 346.

It will be presumed that deceased did not look, if by looking he could have seen the approach of the train and escaped. Wilcox v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 39 N. Y. 368, 100 Am. Dec. 440; Havens v. Erie R. Co. 41 N. Y. 236; Nicholson v. Erie R. Co. Id. 525; Harty v. Central R. Co. of N. J. 42 N. Y. 468; Madden v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 665; Mitchell v. New York Cent. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 655.

Where the only reasonable way of accounting for the collision is, that deceased did not look or listen for the approaching train, it will be presumed that he did not do so and he cannot recover. Brown v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 23 Minn. 165; State v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 76 Me. 337, 49 Am. Rep. 622.

2. Burden on defendant.

Although the general rule is that the burden is on plaintiff to make a case which will leave him blameless, he need not in all cases prove affirmatively that he exercised ordinary care and diligence. In the absence of any direct proof the jury are at liberty to infer ordinary care from all the circumstances of the case. To hold otherwise would be to presume negligence on the part of one in excuse of negligence on the part of another. If the plaintiff makes a case which does not charge him with negligence the case must go to the jury. Gay v. Winter, 34 Cal. 164.

Later California cases have placed the burden of showing contributory negligence on defendant. McQuilken v. Central Pac. R. Co. 50 Cal. 7; MacDougall v. Central R. Co. 68 Cal. 434.

H. P. F.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. CO.

Appl.,
v.

Dora NORTINGTON.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. Showing that loose boxes placed by the foreman of a gang of railroad laborers upon a car to be pushed along the track by a hand-car and remaining in his charge, came in contact with a station platform while the cars were in motion, causing injury to an employe on a hand-car, makes out a prima facie case of negligence for which the company is responsible without showing that the foreman could have prevented the boxes slipping or that the slipping was not caused suddenly by a joint in the rails.
2. A negligent injury to one having an incurable disease followed by his death furnishes a good cause of action if the death was materially hastened by reason of the injury as an efficient cause; but not if death was inevitable in a short time from the disease and the injury was so slight as to simply aggravate the disease which remains the cause of death.

(December 19, 1891.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

NOTE.—Effect of previous disease of person injured on liability for causing the injuries.

The measure of damages for personal injuries caused by negligence is the injury done although it might not have resulted except for a disease or peculiar physical condition of the person injured or may have been aggravated thereby. Lapline v. Morgans' L. & T. R. & S. B. Co. 1 L. R. A. 378, 40 La. Ann. 661; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hecht, 115 Ind. 443; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 7 West. Rep. 33, 108 Ind. 551; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 12 West. Rep. 303, 113 Ind. 544; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 1 West. Rep. 863, 104 Ind. 409; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Snider, 8 L. R. A. 434, 117 Ind. 436; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74; Stewart v. Ripon, 38 Wis. 584; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. McArthur, 43 Miss. 180; Driess v. Friederick, 73 Tex. 490; Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 274.

The same rule has been applied in many cases to a miscarriage caused by personal injuries to a pregnant woman or by frightening her. Hill v. Kimbell, 7 L. R. A. 618, 76 Tex. 210; Barbee v. Reese, 60 Miss. 906; Oliver v. LaVallée, 36 Wis. 586; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 342, 41 Am. Rep. 41; Shurtle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308; Fitzpatrick v. Great Western R. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 645; Powell v. Augusta & S. R. Co. 77 Ga. 179; Campbell v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 484.

By application of the same principle proof of the pregnancy of a woman was allowed to show aggravation of the wrong of a steamboat carrier in failing to stop at a landing for passengers where the woman was waiting to take passage and suffered from exposure. Heirn v. McCaughan, 32 Miss. 17, 66 Am. Dec. 588. But see Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Barker, 4 Colo. 344, 34 Am. Rep. 89, 16 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Meurs. Leech & Savage and T. L. Yancey for appellant.

Meurs. West & Burney for appellee.

Snodgrass, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error sued and obtained a verdict for $5,000 damages of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company for the negligent killing of her husband. Pending a motion for a new trial, $2,000 of this amount was remitted, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for $3,000. The railroad company appealed.

Several errors are assigned, the first being that there was no evidence of negligence. The accident occurred on a hand-car running from a point north of Hampton station, in Montgomery county, to a point south of said station, where the hands using the car were to resume work after dinner, this being just before. The foreman in charge of the work ordered the men (of whom Henderson Northington, husband of plaintiff, was one) to get on the hand-car and go to the place indicated. They did get on and set out for it, pushing before them a truck or push-car containing two dump beds or boxes, as was the custom in such removals from place to place for work. These were empty, and there was no way to fasten them. The foreman stood upon them with a foot in each, thus holding them on. The hands rode on the car, and worked the levers propelling it. In attempting to pass the station platform, one of these boxes struck it, and was

The principle above stated is illustrated also in the following cases:

The fact that a person was suffering from Bright's disease at the time he was injured does not impair his right of recovery against the party in fault for the injury although the injury was aggravated by the disease. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Snider, supra.

The fact that a person injured had a tendency or predisposition to cancer will not defeat the liability of the party causing the injury for a cancer which develops as a result of it. Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Kemp, supra.

The aggravation of damages from an injury to a person's arm by an organic scrofulous tendency is within the damages for which recovery may be had from the person liable for the injury. Stewart v. Ripon, supra.

So a person predisposed to malarial, scrofulous, or rheumatic tendencies, but otherwise in good health, may recover damages for the development of such tendencies in an action for wrongful injuries. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, supra.

A passenger subject to chronic rheumatism may recover for injuries occasioned by a carrier's fault in taking him beyond his destination and compelling him to walk back through the rain. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. McArthur, supra.

The prior fracture of a leg does not affect the measure of damages recoverable for another fracture caused by negligence. Driess v. Friederick, supra.

A previous fracture of a person's arm will not prevent his recovering from a defendant who is in fault for an injury by which his arm is again broken and his shoulder and collar bone permanently in-thrown under the car, stopping it suddenly. This threw deceased against the lever, and injured his right side. Of this injury it is claimed he died. This, of itself, made out a case of negligence. If the foreman allowed the boxes to be so balanced as to strike a platform on the road, and bring about this injury, it devolved upon the company to show that it was unavoidable, or not the result of negligence; but, in addition to this, it is proven that the foreman said, at the time of the accident, that he saw the dump-box had slipped, or was slipping, but did not think it would strike the platform,—thus letting the men, without warning, take the risk of a danger he foresaw and speculated about. The argument for the company is that the proof fails to show that the foreman could have prevented the box slipping, or that it did not slip suddenly, when the car passed over a joint in the rails at the place of the wreck. The car having struck or dump-box thereon having struck, the platform, this was a circumstance showing negligence (as the overturned coach in Stokes v. Saitonstall, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115), and made out a prima facie case, which it devolved upon defendant to meet. This it not only did not do, but predicates its reliance for reversal on weakness of plaintiff's additional affirmative evidence of negligence. It was the duty of the foreman representing the company to see that it was so placed it would not strike the platform naturally, and when it did strike it then devolved upon the company to show that this was not the result of any negligence. The onus was not upon the plaintiff to show why it struck after having shown that it did strike. The reason, if there were any proper one therefor, should have been shown by the defendant to remove the presumption of negligence arising from the fact of collision. The case referred to in 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115, has been often followed in this state.

The remaining error to be noticed in the number assigned is that on the qualification of a proposition submitted by defendant to the court as instruction to the jury. Though the plaintiff's intestate died about a month after the injury, and there was evidence to sustain the theory that his death was the direct result thereof, there was evidence tending to show that he died of galloping consumption, of which he was probably, though not very visibly, affected when injured. In this condition of the evidence the court was asked to charge as follows: "If you find that the company was negligent, and the deceased was injured by such negligence, then did the injury cause his death, or did he die of some disease? If he died of the injury,—and by that is meant the injury produced the death, or produced a disease which resulted in death, or so weakened the powers of deceased as to render him unable to resist a disease of which he might otherwise have recovered, or with which he might have lived an indefinite time,—the plaintiff should recover. But, if deceased already had a fatal disease from which there was no hope of recovery, and his death was inevitable from that disease in a short time, and the injury was slight, and of such a character as to simply aggravate the disease, and he died of the disease, and not of the injury, then plaintiff cannot recover at all, for this is a suit for the death of deceased." The court gave this instruction to the jury, with this addition:

jured, even if the latter injury would not have been received if the arm had been well and sound. Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. supra.

Where an injury to a child was aggravated by a latent, hereditary, hysterical diathesis which had never exhibited itself before the accident and might never have developed but for it, the entire damages were recoverable from the party whose negligence caused the accident. Lapline v. Morgans L. & T. R. & S. B. Co. 1 L. R. A. 378, 40 La. Ann. 661.

In other cases similar to these a party causing an injury has been held liable for a disease developing as the result of the injury, but without anything to show a previous diseased condition or tendency to disease. As for instance in a case where erysipelas develops in a wound or in consequence of an injury. Dickson v. Hollister, 123 Pa. 421; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Leslie, 57 Tex. 83.

So where pneumonia supervened causing the death of a boy who had been seriously injured by a blow on the head. Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co. 50 Mich. 163, 45 Am. Rep. 80.

The same rule was applied to the development of catarrh as a result of an injury to the nose of a person who never had catarrh before. Quackenbush v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 458.

Of course there is no question that a disease which supervenes as the direct result of an injury is to be regarded as part of it, if there was not in fact any prior diseased condition or tendency.

Causing death of diseased person.

The distinction taken in the main case between a slight hastening of death merely by aggravation of the disease itself consequent upon an injury and a material hastening as a result of the injury to a diseased person does not appear to have been made in any prior case.

A statute giving an action for causing death was held in a Missouri case not to extend to a case where the death of a person already mortally wounded was merely hastened but "not caused" by taking him as a passenger on a railroad train. The court said that the statute was in derogation of the common law and must be construed strictly. Jackson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 3 West. Rep. 236, 87 Mo. 422, 25 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 227.

But this case, unless limited strictly to its peculiar facts and so harmonized with the main case, is not in harmony either with other cases as to death or with the principle of the great bulk of the cases concerning lesser injuries as shown above.

In line with that case is the decision that liability for wrongfully causing the death of a person is not defeated by the fact that he had a tendency to insanity or disease and that the injury would not have caused the death of a well person. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 568.

Also that death from a disease may be legally attributable to negligence which causes an injury that renders a person more susceptible to disease and less able to resist it. It is not necessary that the injury should be the sole or direct cause of the death if it concurs in producing death. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 346, 49 Am. Rep. 168.

This accords also with the recognized doctrine in criminal cases. Com. v. Fox, 7 Gray, 585; State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 275.

Limitations and exceptions to the rule.

The fact that a person who is injured was at that time an invalid may be taken into account in de-

"This is the law, but, if the death was hastened or occurred sooner by reason of the injury than it otherwise would, then the injury was the cause of the death." It is objected that the addition of the court to the request submitted is not the law, and a case to the contrary in terms, if not in effect, as to "hastening" the death, is cited in 25 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 327. The case is from Missouri, and is that of Jackson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 87 Mo. 422, 9 West. Rep. 286. There the evidence showed that a mortally wounded man had been suffered to be placed upon a train, and removed from the place where he was injured, under circumstances of, at least, slight negligence on the part of the conductor. The court charged that "if the conductor was informed of the condition of the wounded man, and knew he was being taken against his will and consent of plaintiff (his wife), and that he was so taken and transported from Dexter to Clay county, thereby causing or hastening his death, the jury should find for plaintiff." He further refused, on request of defendant, to charge "that if the wrongful act only hastened the death of Jackson, and was not the cause of same, you must find for defendant." The Supreme Court of Missouri on appeal held that the giving of the first and refusal of second instruction quoted was error.

Under the facts of that case, with the brief and summary propositions standing as they do, the case may be right,—it is not necessary to determine that question,—but the charge we have here is not the same. It presents in the proposition submitted by the circuit judge all the qualification which makes the use of the term "hastened" objectionable in the Missouri case. He had already said that, "if the injury was slight, and of such a character as to simply aggravate the disease, and he died of the disease, and not of the injury, then plaintiff cannot recover." He now adds, "but if the death was hastened or occurred sooner by reason of the injury," in other words, if the death was hastened or occurred by reason of the injury, and sooner than deceased would have died of the disease,—then the injury was the cause of the death,—that is, of the death when it occurred, at another and different time than death would have occurred from the disease. This must be true, or there could be no cause of an earlier death than that, which, nothing else intervening, would have produced a later one. A man might be suffering from an incurable disease, or a mortal wound, with only two days to live, when a negligent wrong-doer inflicted upon him an injury which in his condition of debility took his life, or developed agencies which destroyed him in one day, and yet the latter wrong be in a legal sense the cause of his death, though it only hastened that which on the next day would have inevitably happened. We think the proposition submitted by counsel, and qualified by the wise and judicious view of the court, an admirable statement of the true rule on this very delicate question. The Supreme Court of Missouri said it found no precedent for the decision rendered in the Jackson Case, and there are confessedly few reported cases that touch upon the question. Those supposed to present an antagonistic view are embodied and cited in 1 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. p. 160; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74; Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co. 50 Mich. 163, 45 Am. Rep. 80. It is sufficient, for the purpose of this opinion, to say that, treating it from the standpoint of an original proposition, we were entirely content with the view of it embodied in the instruction submitted as qualified by the court upon the facts of this case. That qualification upon the proposition put, removed here in fact, and will remove hereafter, in precedent, all danger that this case will be authority, or treated as authority, for holding that any slight aggravation of a disease is a cause of death, within the meaning of the termining how much of the subsequent suffering and ill health is to be attributed to the injury. Robinson v. Waupaca, 77 Wis. 544.

This is manifestly just on any theory, as suffering and ill health which would have existed independent of the injury cannot constitute an element of damages for causing it.

So it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether a cancer which developed on a person at a place where she was injured and shortly after the injury was a result of the injury. Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74.

If a person injured was already suffering under permanent disability, his recovery for the injury is only for the additional disability resulting therefrom. Whelan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 15.

The decisions just cited are plainly in harmony with the line of decisions given at the beginning of this note, and merely show the true application of the rule. Evidently the same should be said in regard to the following language of the court in a Georgia case, where it is said: "A tort to health already impaired cannot be redressed except by giving damages for any further impairment and for any obstruction occasioned by the tort, to recovery from existing maladies." Also "Where the subject of a tort is already diseased the question should be how much if any the tort contributed to 16 L. R. A.

aggravate or protract the disorder. This was said in condemnation of an instruction to the jury denying a right to damages so far as prior sickness or disorder contributed to plaintiff's unsound condition after the tort. Bray v. Latham, 81 Ga. 640.

But in conflict with the above current of decisions it is decided in a Colorado case that the increased risk of injury resulting from the fact that she is "unwell" must be taken by a woman who is a passenger on a railroad train and the carrier is not liable for a long sickness which results from her exposure when compelled to leave a burning car only half clad, if the sickness would not have resulted except for her condition at the time of the exposure. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Barker, 4 Colo. 344, 34 Am. Rep. 89.

So an English decision which has been frequently disapproved in this country holds that illness caused by a cold which is caught by a passenger in a drizzling wet night during a walk to her home, which was rendered necessary by the carrier's fault, is not within the damages for which she can recover although recovery is allowed for the inconvenience caused. The court said the action must be regarded as one upon contract and the damages limited to what could have been reasonably within the contemplation of the parties. Hobbs v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 111. B. A. R.

statute. The circuit judge had already charged upon the propriety of reducing damages according to expectation of life, and had justly exercised his judgment and discretion in requiring a remission if the judgment was to stand, there being no grossly negligent or wanton conduct in bringing about the injury.

We are satisfied with the judgment, and it is affirmed, with costs.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

M. A. MANNING, Admr., etc., of A. D. Woolwine, Deceased, Plff. in Err., CHESAPEAKE & OHIO R. CO.

(.....W. Va.....)

1. A person who, without invitation, visits a telegraph office merely for the purpose of paying a friendly call to the operator, which office is owned and occupied by a railroad company for its own purposes and convenience, and which is located on its land and near its track, from which occasional messages are sent and received for outside parties for pay, visits said office as a mere voluntary licensee, subject to the concomitant risks and perils, and no duty is imposed upon the owner or occupant to keep its premises in safe and suitable condition for such visitors, and the owner is only liable for such willful or wanton injury as may be done such licensee by the gross negligence of its agents or employes.
2. Where there is no controversy in regard to the facts or inferences that may be fairly drawn therefrom, the question of negligence is one of law for the court to determine.
3. This is a case in which the facts proven did not tend in any clearly appreciable degree to sustain the plaintiff's claim, and the evidence was properly excluded from the jury by the court.

(April 2, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Summers County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Adams & Miller, for plaintiff in error:

The ruling that a railway company is not responsible for the death of a person who is not in its employ, and who has no special business with said company, if said person is killed on the property of the railway company, and although the accident was caused by its gross negligence, was error.

Stout City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; 2 Rorer, Railroads, p. 1181; Hicks v. Pacific R. Co. 64 Mo. 430, 17

Am. Ry. Rep. 278; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 28 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 418, notes p. 421; Hann v. Wickham, 55 Iowa, 546; Langdon v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 72 Mo. 392; McMillan v. B. & M. R. Co. 46 Iowa, 231; Freer v. Cameron, 4 Rich. L. 228, 55 Am. Dec. 674; State v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 52 N. H. 556; Norris v. Litchfield, 85 N. H. 271, 69 Am. Dec. 549; Kerwacker v. Cleveland, O. & C. R. Co. 8 Ohio St. 172, 62 Am. Dec. 246; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Brown v. European & N. A. R. Co. 58 Me. 384; Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 53, 6 Am. Rep. 188; 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1292.

There is a general principle which governs the cases which decide that a trespasser or licensee cannot recover damage against the owner of land on which the trespasser or licensee goes, in case the licensee be there injured by defects in the premises.

By bearing in mind this general principle, and a general and manifest distinction (sometimes lost sight of) the difficulty vanishes.

That general principle is that trespassers and licensees going upon the premises of another take the premises as they find them, and run such risks as are incident to the existing condition of such premises, and therefore cannot complain of their needing repairs, and cannot recover for injuries resulting from the condition in which they find the premises.

But the distinction is, that they can recover for injuries resulting from the subsequent actual negligence of the defendant, while the licensee is on the premises.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, p. 178, § 187; Gallagher v. Humphrey, 6 L. T. N. S. 684.

Patterson, on p. 179, § 188, says that it is on this principle that railway companies are held liable to licensees for injuries caused by movement of trains by a flying switch.

Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Troutman, 11 W. N. C. 455.

A railway company is held liable for negligence in leaving unattended the boiler of a steam pile-driver, which exploded and injured one passing over a footway, which, without objection from the railway company, had been used for many years by the public.

Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 53 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 667.

Where a railroad company permits persons to cross its lines or its premises, it is bound, as to those persons, to exercise care in the opera-

*Head notes by ENGLISH, J.

NOTE.—In addition to the very full review of the subject of negligence towards licensees which appears in the above opinion, we refer to Redigan v. Boston & M. R. Co. (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 276; Gordon v. Cummings, 9 L. R. A. 640, and note, 152 Mass. 513; Schmidt v. Bauer, 5 L. R. A. 580, and note, 80 Cal. 426.

16 L. R. A.

The above case seems to come fairly within the rule applied; nevertheless, the application of the rule to the facts of this case is not without an appearance of hardship that suggests the question whether the rule has not some limitation.

See also 17 L. R. A. 588; 20 L. R. A. 714; 24 L. R. A. 215.

tion of its line, and cannot treat them as trespassers.

Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 53 Wis. 626; Murphy v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 121; Barrett v. Midland R. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 361; Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877; Goodfellow v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 106 Mass. 461.

In cases of technical trespasser, the trespass is not enough to convict him of contributory negligence.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. pp. 154-156, § 97; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 875; Larmore v. Crown Point Iron Co. 3 Cent. Rep. 409, 101 N. Y. 891, 54 Am. Rep. 718; Seever v. Nickerson, 120 Mass. 806, 21 Am. Rep. 514; Parker v. Portland Pub. Co. 69 Me. 178, 81 Am. Rep. 262; Honnell v. Smyth, 7 C. B. N. S. 781; Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877; Beck v. Carter, 68 N. Y. 288, 28 Am. Rep. 175; Holmes v. North Eastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Exch. 257; Blackmore v. Toronto Street R. Co. 88 U. C. Q. B. 178; Forreth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 108 Mass. 518; Pierce v. Whitcomb, 48 Vt. 127, 21 Am. Rep. 120.

A trespasser on the railway track may recover if hurt by gross negligence of the railroad company.

Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 L. R. A. 865, 84 W. Va. 514.

It will not do to say that the negligence must be directed against that particular person. Gross negligence warrants a recovery, even where the trespass is actual and not merely technical.

Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. v. Smith, 23 Ohio St. 227, 10 Am. Rep. 729; Card v. New York & H. R. Co. 50 Barb. 39; Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 53 Wis. 626; Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 50 Mo. 461, 11 Am. Rep. 420; Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Barrie, 55 Ill. 226; Thomp. Neg. 1155; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cauffman, 88 Ill. 424; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. pp. 163, 164, § 99; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 86 Md. 366; Hicks v. Pac. R. Co. 64 Mo. 439.

Bradley v. Pratt, 23 Vt. 378, says: "A direct liability exists in all cases where injuries are sustained by a neglect of duties which are of a general and public character, and where the observance of those duties is required as a matter of public security and safety."

See also Com. v. Power, 7 Met. 602, 41 Am. Dec. 465; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 485, 14 L. ed. 509; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 418; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; 2 Rorer, Railways, 1180.

Persons at depots to see friends arriving or departing, can recover if injured by want of ordinary care of railroad company.

Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 817; 2 Rorer, Railways, p. 1131, citing Hicks v. Pacific R. Co. 64 Mo. 439, 17 Am. Ry. Rep. 273.

Whether an intruder be an infant or an adult, his being technically a trespasser on the railroad company's premises will not dispense with the duty of ordinary care on the part of the railroad company, to avoid his injury by negligence.

2 Rorer, Railways, p. 1068, citing Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lewis, 79 Pa. 38; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 418; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475, 9 Am. Ry. Rep. 2611. See also 1 Addison, Torts, pp. 202, 205, 228; 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1200; Bryant v. Rich, 106 Mass. 180, 8 Am. Rep. 811.

A person on the track or premises of a railroad company by license is not a trespasser.

Harty v. Central R. Co. of N. J. 43 N. Y. 463; Patterson v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 4 Houst. (Del.) 108; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Hammer, 73 Ill. 847. See Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877; Campbell v. Boyd, 88 N. C. 129, 43 Am. Rep. 740.

If the distinction between active and passive negligence—between leaving the owner's premises as the licensee finds them, and committing some positive act of negligence while the licensee is on the premises,—is borne in mind; and also the requirement that the degree of care exercised must be commensurate with the danger incident to the business engaged in by the defendant; and also the fact that even an actual trespasser on a railroad company's track, where danger is expected always, can recover for injuries resulting from gross negligence of a railroad company, (Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 L. R. A. 865, 84 W. Va. 514),—it would seem incredible that there can be no recovery against a railroad company by the administrator of one who is killed by the grossest negligence of the railroad company, and while he was doing no wrong and in no one's way, and in a place where no danger could be expected, except from gross negligence, and while he was either seeking employment as telegraph operator, or visiting the railroad company's operator, under whom he had formerly worked for that company, in that office.

See Patterson, Railway Law, pp. 176, 178, 179, §§ 187, 188; Gallagher v. Humphrey, 6 L. T. N. S. 684; Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269; Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 667; Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 53 Wis. 626; Murphy v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 121; Barrett v. Midland R. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 361; Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877; Goodfellow v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 106 Mass. 461; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. pp. 154, 163, 164, §§ 97-99; Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. v. Smith, 23 Ohio St. 227, 10 Am. Rep. 729; Card v. New York & H. R. Co. 50 Barb. 39; Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 50 Mo. 461; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Barrie, 55 Ill. 226; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cauffman, 88 Ill. 424; Thomp. Neg. 1155; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 86 Md. 366; Hicks v. Pacific R. Co. 64 Mo. 439; Bradley v. Pratt, 23 Vt. 378; Com. v. Power, 7 Met. 602, 41 Am. Dec. 465; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 485, 14 L. ed. 509; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 418;

2 Rorer, Railways, 1068, 1190, 1191; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lewis, 79 Pa. 38; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475; 1 Addison, Torts, pp. 202, 203, 223; 2 Wood, Railway Law, pp. 1200, 1206, 1270, 1271, 1292; Wharton, Neg. §§ 346, 348, 388; Cooley, Torts, top page, 353; 3 Lawson, Rights & Remedies, § 1194; Nuzum v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 30 W. Va. 229.

Mr. J. E. Chilton, for defendant in error: When all the evidence introduced by the plaintiff is insufficient to sustain a verdict in his favor, should such verdict be rendered the court will on motion of the defendant before he offers any evidence exclude the evidence from the jury.

Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692; Christy v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 117.

Woolwine while in this office was there as a mere trespasser, and in law should be so treated.

The gist of the plaintiff's action is the negligence of the defendant in causing Woolwine's death.

"Negligence in law is a breach of some duty. There can be no negligence where there is no breach of duty."

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 15; Bigelow, Torts, 662.

A trespasser on a railroad company's premises cannot recover for injuries, unless the company was guilty of wanton or gross negligence.

Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 L. R. A. 385, 34 W. Va. 514.

The only duty owing to a trespasser is not to wantonly or willfully injure him.

See Wood, Railway Law, pp. 1270, 1271; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman, 83 Va. 554; Grethen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 609.

A licensee is one who enters premises by permission, either express or implied.

A licensee takes his own risk, and so long as there is no active misconduct towards him no liability is incurred by the occupier of the premises by a visitor on his premises.

Bigelow, Torts, p. 697; Nichols v. Washington, O. & W. R. Co. 88 Va. 102; Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317. See also Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Sanders v. Reister, 1 Dak. 166; Victory v. Baker, 67 N. Y. 368, 870; Lary v. Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. 78 Ind. 328, 41 Am. Rep. 573; Carlton v. Franconia I. S. Co. 99 Mass. 216; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 364; Howland v. Vincent, 10 Met. 371; Larmore v. Crown Point Iron Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 409, 101 N. Y. 891; Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 725, 142 Mass. 296; Hounsell v. Smyth, 7 C. B. N. S. 781; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 100 Ind. 221; Gwynn v. Duffield, 66 Iowa, 708, 718; Parker v. Portland Pub. Co. 69 Me. 173; 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1271; Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, 446, 1054; Cooley, Torts, 358.

English, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of trespass on the case, 16 L. R. A.

instituted on the 18th day of March, 1890, by M. A. Manning, administrator of the estate of A. D. Woolwine, deceased, in the circuit court of Summers county, against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company charging that the death of his intestate was occasioned by the gross carelessness and negligence of the defendant, and claiming $10,000 damages. There was a demurrer interposed to the declaration, which was overruled; the defendant pleaded "not guilty," and the case was submitted to a jury. The plaintiff, having introduced his evidence, rested his case, and the defendant moved the court to strike out all of the plaintiff's evidence, which motion was sustained, and the plaintiff's evidence was stricken out, to which action of the court the plaintiff excepted, and thereupon the jury rendered a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff then moved the court to set aside said verdict, which motion the court overruled, and the plaintiff excepted, and tendered a bill of exceptions, setting out all of the evidence of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff applied for and obtained this writ of error.

The facts shown by the evidence are, in substance, as follows: At the east end of the Big Bend Tunnel, in said county of Summers, and about eighty yards from the eastern portal of said tunnel, the defendant had constructed a switch, which diverged from the main track of the defendant to the right, passing along near the bank of the Greenbrier river; and that immediately on the bank of said river, and between said switch and the river, the defendant had erected a small building, fourteen by sixteen feet in size, for its own convenience as a telegraph office, the front part of which building rested on the bank, and the back rested on perches. Those living in the immediate vicinity of this telegraph office were employes of the defendant, who compose the tunnel hands. The plaintiff's intestate was a telegraph operator on the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and was at home on a visit to his parents who lived about two miles from the tunnel; and on the evening of the 6th day of February, 1890, he paid a visit to this office, being an acquaintance of Bryant, the operator. At the time of this visit the train which was used for working in the tunnel was standing in front of the telegraph office, on the side track, which was seven feet from the front of said office, and had been so standing for one hour and fifteen minutes, and it appears that Joe Towns, one of the employes, whose duty it was to close the switch after the tunnel train came in on the side track, had failed to do so, and a freight train, coming east through the tunnel, ran into this open switch on to the side track, and wrecked the tunnel train, throwing some of its cars against said office, knocking it over the river bank into the river, thereby causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate, who had entered said telegraph office about twenty-five minutes before and at the time of the accident was lying on a table in the said office. It appears that the plaintiff's intestate had, about a year previous to that time, been employed by said Bryant, and worked a week in his place as operator in said office; and the natural inference is that he called on this occasion, as is natural for persons engaged in the same business, to pay Bryant a friendly visit. So far as is disclosed by the evidence, he had no business to transact of any character with the office, although it appears that messages had occasionally been sent and received from this office by parties having no connection with the railroad, but that the office was maintained by the defendant for its own convenience, as is shown by the plaintiff's testimony. No one could presume from anything that appears in the case that any employé of the defendant left this switch open with the intent of injuring the plaintiff's intestate, A. D. Woolwine. On the contrary, it appears that said Woolwine did not come to said telegraph office for more than an hour after the tunnel train ran in on the side track, and said switch was accidentally left open by Joe Towns, whose duty it was to have closed it after said tunnel train came on to the siding. No one appears to have been aware of said Woolwine's intention to visit said telegraph office, and, if they had, it does not appear that any employé of the defendant had any ill feeling or spite against said Woolwine; and we cannot say that any person so employed would intentionally wreck two trains and demolish the telegraph office for the purpose of injuring Woolwine. And again, no one could possibly have foreseen that the freight train, by leaving the main track, and running out on this siding, would have thrown the tunnel cars against the telegraph office, which stood seven feet from the side track, and knocked it down the river bank and into the river. This, however, appears to have been one of the possibilities.

The evidence in the case shows that said Woolwine was fully acquainted with the telegraph office and its surroundings, as he had during the previous year been employed for a week as operator in said office by said Bryant. Counsel for the plaintiff in error, in their brief, assert that "the general principle is that trespassers and licensees going upon the premises of another take the premises as they find them, and run such risks as are incident to the existing condition of such premises, and therefore cannot complain of their needing repairs, and cannot recover for injuries resulting from the condition in which they find the premises; but the distinction is that they can recover for injuries resulting from the subsequent actual negligence of the defendant while the licensee is on the premises." This, we believe, states correctly the law where parties go upon the premises of another under the circumstances that Woolwine did in this case. If we apply this law to the facts of this case, we find that the switch was open when he went to the telegraph office, and so remained for an hour and twenty minutes before the accident happened; and Woolwine had been in the office about twenty-five minutes when the collision occurred. There was no change in the switch after the arrival of said Woolwine, and he took upon himself the risk of the premises in the condition he found them. We may next inquire whether the circumstances of this case are such as to entitle the plaintiff to complain of a breach of duty on the part of the defendant towards his intestate. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 316, under the head of "Who may complain of a breach of duty," says: "The plaintiff must show a breach of some duty owing to him, or which was imposed for his benefit." It is not every one who sustains an injury by reason of some act or omission on the part of an employé of a railroad company that entitles a person injured by reason thereof to demand and recover damages from said company by reason thereof. See Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, § 446; People v. Fairchild, 67 N. Y. 386. We find that 1 Shearm. & Redfield, Negligence, § 97, says: "The injury which a stranger does to the railroad company by entering upon its way is infinitesimal, while the risk to himself is great. The injury which he does to his neighbor by secretly entering his bedroom is great, while the risk to himself, if undiscovered, is infinitesimal. In each case, it is true, the effect upon the trespasser's right to sue for damages may be the same, but this will be for very different reasons. If he walks along the track he knowingly takes the risk of fatal injuries, and should not recover for that reason. If he secretes himself in the bedroom, he knowingly engages in a gross invasion of his neighbor's rights, and should not recover for that reason. Most of the reported cases which appear at first sight inconsistent with this proposition, and all of them which are not inconsistent with other and better considered decisions, will prove upon examination to be cases which turned, not upon contributory negligence, but upon the question whether the defendant owed any duty to persons in the plaintiff's situation, which he had neglected to perform."

Now, let us inquire what duty the defendant owed to this unfortunate young man under the circumstances detailed by the evidence. He went upon the defendant's premises, and into its telegraph office, not for the purpose of sending a message, or transacting any business of any kind whatever with any of the agents or employés of the company, but for the purpose of paying a social visit to the operator, who was an old acquaintance. In the case of Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644, Bigelow, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In order to maintain an action for an injury to person or property by reason of negligence or want of due care, there must be shown to exist some obligation or duty towards the plaintiff, which the defendant has left undischarged or unfulfilled. This is the basis on which the cause of action rests. There can be no fault, or negligence, or breach of duty, where there is no act, or service, or contract, which a party is bound to perform or fulfill. All the cases in the books, in which a party is sought to be charged on the ground that he has caused a way or other place to be incumbered or suffered it to be in a dangerous condition, whereby accident and injury have been occasioned to another, turn on the principle that negligence consists in doing or omitting to do an act by which a legal duty or obligation has been violated. Thus a trespasser who comes on the land of another without right cannot maintain an action if he runs against a barrier or falls into an excavation there situated. The owner of the land is not bound to protect or provide safeguards for wrong-doers. So a licensee, who enters on premises by permission only, without any enticement, allurement, or inducement being held out to him by the owner or occupant, cannot recover damages for injuries caused by obstructions or pitfalls. He goes there at his own risk, and enjoys the license subject to its concomitant perils. No duty is imposed by law on the owner or occupant to keep his premises in a suitable condition for those who come there solely for their own convenience or pleasure." In the case of Diebold v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 478, 12 Cent. Rep. 799, it was held that, "where a railroad company provides offices for the transaction of its business, accessible from the public streets, the presence in the freight yard of the company of a person having business with such offices is not a necessary incident of his business with the company. He is at best a licensee, towards whom the company owes no special duty." There appears to be a marked distinction as to the liability incurred by property owners to persons who go upon their premises as trespassers, or as licensees or volunteers, and those who go there upon business, and we find in a note on page 697 in "Leading Cases on the Law of Torts," by Bigelow, it is said, in commenting upon this distinction that "Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. [10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644] and Indermaur v. Dames [L. R. 1 C. P. 274, L. R. 2 C. P. 811] have settled the distinction between the duty which a man owes to persons who come upon his premises as bare volunteers or licensees, and those who come as customers or otherwise in the course of business, upon the invitation, express or implied, of the occupier. As to the latter, the occupier is bound to exercise reasonable care, to prevent damage from unusual danger, of which the occupier has or ought to have knowledge; and this, though the transaction had already been completed, and the plaintiff had returned only for some incidental (if proper and usual) purpose connected with it. As to the former, the party takes his own risk, and, so long as there is no active misconduct towards him, no liability is incurred by the occupier of the premises by reason of injury sustained by a visitor on his premises."

"Upon careful examination of the above and other cases, however, it will be found that the authorities may be classed under three heads, to wit: (1) Bare licensees or volunteers; (2) those who are expressly invited or induced by active conduct of the owner to go upon his premises; (3) customers and others, who go there on business with the occupier. The general rule will then be that in those cases which fall under the first head the party injured has no right of action against the occupant of the premises, and the contrary in cases falling under the second and third heads." The case of Indermaur v. Dames, above referred to, was a case in which the defendant was a sugar refiner, and there was a hole or hatchway through the floors of the different stories for the purpose of raising and lowering sugar to and from the different stories, which hatchway was level with the floors, and might have been, but was not, fenced. The plaintiff was a gas-fitter, and went upon the premises for the purpose of examining some gas jets, with the view of applying a patent gas regulator, and while on the premises the plaintiff accidentally fell through said hatchway while thus engaged upon an upper floor. "Held that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was upon the premises on lawful business in the course of filling a contract in which he (or his employer) and the defendant both had an interest, said hatchway or hole was, from its nature, unreasonably dangerous to persons not usually employed upon the premises, but, having a right to go there, the defendant was guilty of a breach of duty towards him in suffering the hole to be unfenced." The testimony of Bryant in the case under consideration shows that he had not seen said Woolwine for a month or two; that his business was that of a telegraph operator on the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and when asked what was said Woolwine's business there, (meaning at the time of the accident), answered: "I do not know. I am sure. I supposed he just came in to speak to me;" and, in answer to the question whether said Woolwine had any business there that night, answered: "He did not transact it, if he did;" and he also stated that he left said Woolwine lying on the table where his instruments were placed when he went out of the office, in reply to the question, "Where was Woolwine when the accident occurred?" So far, then, as the presence of said Woolwine at the time of the accident is concerned, it appears that he was not invited there by Bryant, the operator in charge of the office, as he had not seen him for a month or two previous to that evening. He was not there on business, as he had been there for nearly a half hour, and had not intimated that he had any business of any description with the operator, and had produced the impression on Bryant that he had merely called to see him; and his attitude on the table at the time of the accident would not indicate that he was there on business, but rather for the purpose of passing a little idle time with an old acquaintance. If he had been there for the purpose of sending or receiving a telegram, he might properly have been regarded as a licensee, as the evidence shows that telegrams were occasionally sent for persons not in any manner connected with the railroad company, and messages so sent had been charged for; but, under the circumstances, we can but regard him as a mere volunteer, going to this office for his own pleasure.

In the case of Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 817 (section 4 of the syllabus), it was held that "a trespasser may maintain an action for wanton or intentional injury by the owner of the land," and in section 5: "The owner of property is not liable to a trespasser, or to one who is on it by mere permission or sufferance, for negligence of himself or servants, or for that which would be a nuisance in a public street or common." In that case the facts were as follows: A large crowd had congregated on the platform at the depot for the purpose of seeing the president of the United States, who was to pass the depot at a certain hour. The platform fell by reason of the unusual weight, and the plaintiff was thereby injured; and Sharswood, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The platform was open. There was a general license to pass over it, but he was where he had no legal right to be. His presence there was in no way connected with the purposes for which the platform was constructed. Had it been the hour for the arrival or departure of a train, and he had gone there to welcome a coming or speed a parting guest, it might very well be contended that he was there by authority of defendants, as much as if he was actually a passenger; and it would then matter not how unusual might have been the crowd, the defendants would have been responsible. As to all such persons to whom they stood in such a relation as required care on their part, they were bound to have a structure strong enough to bear all who could stand on it; as to all others they were liable only for wanton or intentional injury. The plaintiff was on the spot merely to enjoy himself, to gratify his curiosity, or to give vent to his patriotic feelings. The defendants had nothing to do with that." He further says: "I am bound to have the approach to my house sufficient for all visitors on business or otherwise, but if a crowd gathers upon it, to witness a passing parade, and it breaks down, though it may be shown not to have been sufficient even for its ordinary use, I am not liable to one of the crowd; I owe no duty to him." And in that case the court held that the court below was right in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant. In the case of Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 864, it was held that "a railroad company is not liable for an injury to a person resulting from its failure to exercise ordinary skill and care in the erection or maintenance of its station house, where, at the time of receiving the injury, such person was at such station house by mere permission and sufferance, and not for the purpose of transacting any business with the company or its agents, or any business connected with the operation of the road." While I am disposed to regard the plaintiff in this case as a mere volunteer, going upon the premises of the defendant for the purpose of pleasure or pastime, yet, giving the circumstances the most favorable construction that can be given for the plaintiff, we can consider him as nothing more than a licensee; that is (as defined by Patterson in his Railway Accident Law, p. 176, § 184), "persons who be neither passengers, servants, nor trespassers, and not standing in any contractual relations to the railway, are permitted by the railway to come upon its premises for their own interests, convenience, or gratification." In the case of Sutton v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 243, the railway was held not to be liable to licensees for a failure to set the brakes on the cars stored on a siding, or otherwise block them to prevent their moving by force of the wind or by gravity. So, also, Pierce on Railroads, p. 275, says: "But the duty and liability to keep its premises safe for public use do not arise out of a bare license or permission to use its premises. Still less do they exist in favor of a trespasser, although the company will be liable even to him for a wanton injury." And in the case of Parker v. Portland Pub. Co., 69 Me. 178, the court held that "no duty is owed to a mere licensee, and he has no cause of action for negligence in the place he is permitted to enter." In the case at bar there is no controversy about the facts, the only witnesses introduced being those called by the plaintiff. It was held in the case of Gonzales v. New York

16 L. R. A.

& H. R. Co., 38 N. Y. 440, that "a question of negligence is one of law, where facts are uncontroverted." In the case of Phenix Ins. Co. v. Doster, 106 U. S. 30, 27 L. ed. 65, the court held, in its opinion, delivered by Harlan, J., that, "where a cause fairly depends upon the effect or weight of testimony, it is one for the consideration and determination of the jury under proper directions as to the principles of law involved;" and in section 1 of syllabus: "A case should not be withdrawn from the jury unless the facts are undisputed, or the testimony is of such conclusive character that a verdict in conflict therewith should be set aside." So, also, in the case of Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008, it was held (first point of syllabus) that "when the evidence given at the trial, with all the inferences that the jury could justifiably draw from it, is insufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff, so that such a verdict, if returned, must be set aside, the court may direct a verdict for the defendant." This court, in the case of Johnson v. Baltimore R. Co., 25 W. Va. 571, while it holds, in the third point of the syllabus, that "negligence is in most cases a mixed question of law and fact, and generally what particular facts constitute negligence is a question for the determination of the jury from all the evidence before it bearing on the subject, rather than a question of law for the determination of the court," yet, in the fifth clause of syllabus, in the same case, this court holds that, "if the facts are unambiguous, and there is no room for two honest and apparently reasonable conclusions, the court should not be compelled to submit the question to the jury as one in dispute."

Now, taking the entire evidence that was introduced in this case, there is nothing that indicates that the plaintiff was either directly or indirectly induced by the defendant to visit this office; but, on the contrary, it is clear from all the circumstances that he went there without invitation, either express or implied, and, while no one objected to his visiting the place, yet the law fixes the liability of either a corporation or an individual towards a party who comes upon its premises as the plaintiff did in this case; and, as we have said above, he cannot be regarded in a more favorable light than an ordinary licensee. In the case of Nichols v. Washington, A. & W. R. Co., 83 Va. 102, the court says: "Now, it is agreed on all hands that there is a wide difference between the obligations which a person or a corporation owes to a mere licensee and the duty which the same person or corporation owes to one who comes upon his premises by an invitation, either express or implied. In the first case it is generally admitted that the party comes at his own risk, and enjoys the license subject to its concomitant risks or perils, and that in such case no duty is imposed upon the owner or occupant to keep his premises in safe and suitable condition for his use, and the owner or occupant is only liable for any wanton injury that may be done to the licensee."

Numerous authorities have been cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error seeking to show that the defendant in this case under consideration owed some duty to the plaintiff; but, having arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff in error stood upon the footing of a mere licensee, we are of the opinion that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff other than that it was its duty not to willfully or wantonly injure the plaintiff, and that in going upon said premises under the circumstances of this case he enjoyed the license, subject to the risks and perils attendant thereon, and for these reasons we are of the opinion that there is no error in the judgment complained of, and the same must be affirmed, with costs and damages to the defendant in error.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

GANDOLFO

v.

HARTMAN et al.

(49 Fed. Rep. 181.)

A covenant not to rent property to a Chinaman is void as against public policy, as violating the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution providing for equal protection of the laws, and as an infraction of the treaty with China guaranteeing to Chinamen in the United States all the rights, privileges, and immunities accorded to citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

(January 25, 1892.)

SUIT to enjoin the making of a lease in alleged violation of a covenant in the deed under which the property sought to be leased was held. On demurrer to the bill. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Blackstock & Shepherd and Bicknell & Denis for complainant.

Messrs. J. Marion Brooks, J. Hamer and E. S. Hall for defendants.

Ross, District Judge, delivered the following opinion:

The amended bill in this case shows that on the 22d of March, 1886, one Steward, for a valuable consideration, conveyed to the complainant a portion of lot 2, block 47, fronting on East Main street in the town of San Buena Ventura, Ventura county, of this state, together with a perpetual right of way over an adjoining alley. The deed also contained the following: "It is also understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto, their heirs and assigns, that the party of the first part shall never, without the consent of the party of the second part, his heirs or assigns, rent any of the buildings or ground owned by said party of the first part, and fronting on said East Main street, to a Chinaman or Chinamen. This agreement shall only apply to that part of lot 2, block 47, aforesaid, lying north of the alleyway hereinbefore described, and fronting on said East Main street. And said party of the second part agrees for himself and heirs that he will never rent any of the property hereby conveyed to a Chinaman or Chinamen."

The deed was duly recorded in the county in which the property is situate, and subsequently the portion of the lot retained by Steward was purchased of him by the defendant Hartman, who was thereafter about to lease it to the defendants Fong Yet and Sam Choy, who are Chinamen, when the present suit was commenced to enjoin him from so doing.

The Federal courts have had frequent occasion to declare null and void hostile and discriminating state and municipal legislation aimed at Chinese residents of this country. But it is urged on behalf of the complainant that, as the present does not present a case of legislation at all, it is not reached by the decisions referred to, and that it does not come within any of the inhibitions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, among other things, declares that no state shall "deny to any person the equal protection of the laws." This inhibition upon the state, as said by Mr. Justice Field, in the case of Ah Kow v. Nuan, 5 Sawy. 652, "applies to all the instrumentalities and agencies employed in the administration of its government to its executive, legislative, and judicial departments; and to the subordinate legislative bodies of counties and cities. And the equality of protection thus assured to every one whilst within the United States, from whatever country he may come, or of whatever race or color he may be, implies that not only the courts of the country shall be open to him on the same terms as to all others for the security of his person or property, the prevention or redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts, but that no charges or burdens shall be laid upon him which are not equally borne by others. . . ."

It would be a very narrow construction of NOTE.—Treaty guaranties to aliens.

The guaranty by treaty to aliens of a certain nation of all the "rights, privileges, immunities and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation" is properly construed in the light of the decisions on the constitutional guaranty of equal privileges and immunities to citizens, although this does not itself extend to aliens. Such treaty guaranty would likewise seem to be equally effective as against a denial of such rights, privileges, and immunities by citizens, states or any other party or body except Congress.

As a protection against a denial of rights or a discrimination by Congress it is of no efficacy. 16 L. R. A.

See also 21 L. R. A. 617.

Chae Chan Ping v. United States, 130 U. S. 581, 32 L. ed. 1068; Edye v. Robertson, 112 U. S. 580, 28 L. ed. 798; North German Lloyd S. S. Co. v. Hedden, 43 Fed. Rep. 17; Thingvalla Lane v. United States, 5 L. R. A. 135, 24 Ct. Cl. 265.

But a state law contrary to a treaty is void. Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. ed. 628; Ware v. Hylton, 3 U. S. 8 Dall. 199, 1 L. ed. 568.

That aliens are within the constitutional guaranty of the equal protection of the laws, see note to Louisville, S. V. & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 579, which note includes also the constitutional equality of citizens in respect to equal privileges and immunities.

B. A. R.

the constitutional amendment in question and of the decisions based upon it, and a very restricted application of the broad principles upon which both the amendment and the decisions proceed, to hold that, while state and municipal legislatures are forbidden to discriminate against the Chinese in their legislation, a citizen of the state may lawfully do so by contract, which the courts may enforce. Such a view is, I think, entirely inadmissible. Any result inhibited by the Constitution can no more be accomplished by contract of individual citizens than by legislation, and the courts should no more enforce the one than the other. This would seem to be very clear.

Moreover, it is by the treaty between the United States and China of November 17, 1880, provided that, "Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation." Article 2, Treaty Nov. 1880, (22 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 18.)

"The intercourse of this country with foreign nations and its policy in regard to them," said the Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Taney, in Kennett v. Chambers, 55 U. S. 14 How. 49, 14 L. ed. 321, "are placed by the Constitution of the United States in the hands of the government, and its decisions upon these subjects are obligatory upon every citizen of the Union. He is bound to be at war with the nation against which the war-making power has declared war, and equally bound to commit no act of hostility against a nation with which the government is in amity and friendship. This principle is universally acknowledged by the laws of nations. It lies at the foundation of all governments, as there could be no social order or peaceful relations between the citizens of different countries without it. It is, however, more emphatically true in relation to the citizens of the United States. For, as the sovereignty resides in the people, every citizen is a portion of it, and is himself personally bound by the laws which the representatives of the sovereignty may pass, or the treaties into which they may enter, within the scope of their delegated authority. And, when that authority has pledged its faith to another nation that there shall be peace and friendship between the citizens of the two countries, every citizen of the United States is equally and personally pledged. The compact is made by the department of the government upon which he himself has agreed to confer the power. It is his own personal compact as a portion of the sovereignty in whose behalf it is made. And he can do no act nor enter into any agreement to promote or encourage revolt or hostilities against the territories of a country with which our government is pledged by treaty to be at peace, without the breach of his duty as a citizen, and the breach of the faith pledged to the foreign nation. And, if he does so, he cannot claim the aid of a court of justice to enforce it. The appellants say, in their contract, that they were induced to advance the money by the desire to promote the cause of freedom. But our own freedom cannot be preserved without obedience to our own laws, nor social order preserved if the judicial branch of the government countenanced and sustained contracts made in violation of the duties which the law imposes, or in contravention of the known and established policy of the political department, acting within the limit of its constitutional power."

This was said in a case where it was sought to enforce a contract made in this country after Texas declared itself independent, but before its independence had been acknowledged by the United States, whereby the complainants agreed to furnish, and under which they did furnish, money to a general in the Texan army, to enable him to raise and equip troops to be employed against Mexico. But the principle governing the case is, in my opinion, equally applicable here, where it is sought to enforce an agreement made contrary to the public policy of the government, in contravention of one of its treaties, and in violation of a principle embodied in its Constitution. Such a contract is absolutely void, and should not be enforced in any court,—certainly not in a court of equity of the United States.

For the reasons stated an order will be entered sustaining the demurrer, and dismissing the bill, as amended, at complainant's cost, without reference to other points made and argued by counsel.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Louisiana, ex rel. H. N. MIZE,
v.

J. P. McELROY, Appt.

(.....La.....)

*1. The language of the statute relative to printed ballots expresses the legislative will. It is mandatory.

*Head notes by BREAU, J.

2. The legislative intent must be taken as expressed by the words which the Legislature has used.

3. The name of a candidate written on the face of an election ticket in lieu of the name of another candidate printed in the

NOTE.—The denial of the right of an elector to vote for any person whose name is not on the official ballot may be more or less of a practical disfranchisement of voters according to the liberality of the provisions for allowing names to be placed on the official ballot. What those provisions are in the Louisiana statute does not appear from the above case, but in the nature of things there must ticket should not be counted in ascertaining the result of the election.
16 L. R. A.

See also 17 L. R. A. 364, 382; 19 L. R. A. 171.

4. The Legislature has imposed a positive and absolute duty on the voter to cast a printed ballot.
5. The statute in that respect is not subject to liberal construction.
6. Where the meaning of the statute is clear, those upon whom compliance devolves have no right to ingraft exceptions, or make modifications, or depart from its plain letter.
7. A fair consideration of the statute leads to the conclusion that the Legislature intended compliance with the provisions in relation to printed ballots.

(May 18, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for the Parish of De Soto in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding by mandamus to compel respondent, returning officer of DeSoto Parish, to exclude from his return certain votes cast at an election for relator's opponent as candidate for the office of justice of the peace. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Goss, for appellant:

The purpose of voting is to ascertain the intention of the voter and the will of the majority, and where this is done without violating any prohibitory law, the votes must be counted.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 769, 770.

Statutes being designed to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, and to prevent fraud, intimidation, and bribery, will generally be considered mandatory, and this will be so in all cases where the statutes provide that a ballot varying from the requirements of the law shall not be counted; but if this provision is lacking, they should not be rejected if the variations are but trifling.

6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 848, 849, § 8, note 1; McCrary, Elections, §§ 190-198.

A ballot may be defined as "a paper ticket, upon which the voter expresses his preference upon the question submitted at the election, by printing, writing, or signs, or a combination of these methods of expression."

6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 842, § 12, note 2.

Where the Constitution provides that all ballots should be fairly written, the term "written" means expressed by means of letters, and printed ballots come within this definition.

6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 844, note

1; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 960, 761; McCrary, Elections, § 512.

A ballot cast by an elector, in good faith, should not be rejected for failure to comply with the law in matters over which the elector had no control.

McCrary, Elections, §§ 508-511; Augustin v. Eggleston, 12 La. Ann. 886; Andrews v. Saucier, 18 La. Ann. 801; Burton v. Hicks, 27 La. Ann. 507; Webre v. Wilton, 29 La. Ann. 614.

Messrs E. W. Sutherlin and Charles W. Elan, for appellee:

All the names of persons voted for shall be printed on one ticket of white paper of uniform size and quality.

La. Act 101 of 1852, § 4.

The state has the legislative power to prescribe the mode of its exercise; and when a specific mode is so prescribed, the right must be exercised pursuant to that mode, and not otherwise. Written ballots are without legal effect, and should not be counted.

6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 849, notes, and cases cited.

Breaux, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator sued out a mandamus against the returning officer of the parish of De Soto to compel him to exclude sixty-seven votes cast for his opponent from his return to be made to the secretary of state of the result of the election held on April 19, 1892; also from his count and compilation; and he prays that the said votes be decreed illegal and void. The facts admitted are that the relator, Mize, was a candidate for the office of justice of the peace of ward 8 of De Soto parish at the said election; that his name was printed, as a candidate for said office, on all the ballots cast in said ward, and he received fifty-nine votes; that his name as printed was erased from sixty-seven other ballots cast, and the name of W. R. Crosby was written across the face of these ballots where his (relator's) name was printed; that the relator, at the time, objected to the counting of these written votes for Crosby, and that, notwithstanding his written protest filed with the commissioners, these written votes were counted for Crosby, and count thereof was kept on the tally sheets, and returns thereof were made to the returning officer. It is also admitted that the office of justice of the peace of said ward involved in this suit is worth $2,000.

be some restriction on the right to place names thereon else the size of the ballot might become too great for practical use. It seems doubtful in the light of the above decisions whether or not printed pasters could be regarded as "printed on one ticket or ballot of white paper of uniform size and quality to be furnished by the secretary of state." Unless such pasters are allowable it would seem that some voters are actually denied the right to vote and that the law in Louisiana, while it does not add to the constitutional qualification of the voter, does deny to small minorities the right to vote at all unless they vote for candidates who are not their choice.

In Pennsylvania where an express provision is made for "inserting" names in official ballots, it is held that the name need not be written but that a "sticker" may be used. De Walt v. Bartley (Pa.) 15 L. R. A. 771.

For note as to marks or devices to distinguish ballots, see Rutledge v. Crawford (Cal.) 13 L. R. A. 761.

For other recent cases concerning official ballots, see Re Ballot Act, 6 L. R. A. 773, 16 B. L. 706; Price v. Lush, 9 L. R. A. 487, 10 Mont. 61; Talcott v. Philbrick, 10 L. R. A. 150, 59 Conn. 472; Detroit v. Rush, 10 L. R. A. 171, 82 Mich. 532; Fields v. Osborne, 12 L. R. A. 551, 60 Conn. 544; Fisher v. Dudley (Md.) 12 L. R. A. 588; Cook v. State (Tenn.) 13 L. R. A. 188; Shields v. Jacob, 13 L. R. A. 760, 88 Mich. 184; People v. Onondaga County Canvassers (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 624; State v. Russell (Neb.) 15 L. R. A. 740; Allen v. Glynn (Colo.) 15 L. R. A. 743; Parvin v. Wimberg (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 775.

B. A. R.

The question for our determination is, Should a ballot cast be counted, in ascertaining the result of an election, on the face of which the printed name of a candidate was erased, and the name of another candidate substituted in writing? Under the Act of 1877, to regulate and maintain the freedom and purity of elections, and to punish persons for false, fraudulent, or illegal voting, the names of persons voted for were required to be written or printed on one ticket.

The statute applying: Section 23 of the said Act was amended by Act 101 of 1882, as follows: "That all the names of persons voted for shall be printed on one ticket or ballot of white paper, of uniform size and quality, to be furnished by the secretary of state."

Legislative power over the forms of the ballot and manner of voting: The right of suffrage being a political, and not a natural, right, it is within the power of the state to prescribe how it shall be exercised. The manner of voting provided by statute is one of the reasonable regulations. The limitations imposed for the purpose of guarding against fraud, undue influence, and oppression, and of maintaining a secrecy of the ballot, are within the legislative and police powers. That the ballot shall be printed does not add to the constitutional qualification of the voter, and therefore falls within the general authority of legislative laws.

The legislative intent is clearly expressed. In the first Act, that of 1877, the words were, "the ballot shall be written or printed;" in the amending Act, "it shall be printed." The legislative will cannot be misunderstood. The intention of the Legislature should control absolutely. When that intention is clearly ascertained, those upon whom it devolves to execute the statute have no other duty to perform than to follow the legislative will. While all the minute details of the statutes relating to elections are not mandatory, they are mandatory in requiring that the ballot shall be printed. The positive requirement of the statute does not admit of it being treated as merely directory. By qualifying a statute as directory, its requirement is avoided; the intention of the Legislature, however plain, is defeated. It is desirable that the Legislature should declare in what respect they mean any particular provision to be void, in event of noncompliance with its terms, and what consequence they intend shall result from noncompliance. In the absence of this, great difficulties arise. We are not willing, however, in the absence of such a declaration, to hold a law as directory in cases in which the intention of the Legislature is clearly and emphatically expressed. We prefer a strict construction to the "extensive and comprehensive;" each has able advocates and many authorities in its support. The grounds of objection urged on the part of the respondent, such as that the purpose of voting is to ascertain the intention of the voter and the will of the majority, and that a ballot cast by an elector, in good faith, should not be rejected, for failure to comply with the law in matters over which he had no control, if broadly and liberally applied, would defeat the object of the statute relating to the printing of the tickets on a ballot of white paper furnished by the secretary of state, and would render ineffectual the provisions applying to the throwing out and not counting folded tickets, and even those relative to the required certificate of registration, although the purpose of the law is well defined and clear.

Authorities: Constitutional and statutory provisions for the conduct of elections are either mandatory or directory, and a violation of mandatory provisions will avoid the election, without regard to the nature or the person guilty of the violation and without reference to the result. 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 325. In Rhode Island the law required that each ballot shall be so printed as to give each voter a clear opportunity to designate by cross mark, in a sufficient margin, at the right of the name of each candidate, his choice of candidates, and that each voter shall prepare his ballot by marking in the appropriate margin or place a cross opposite the name of the candidates of his choice, and that no voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may be afterwards identified. The court decided that no mark other than the cross can be used; that it must be placed in the margin opposite the name of the candidate. Am. Dig. 1891, p. 1419. In many of the states there are statutes prescribing the form of the ballots, the kind of paper, and prohibiting any marks, figures or devices by which one can be distinguished from the other. These statutes, being designed to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, and to prevent fraud, intimidation, and bribery, will generally be considered mandatory. 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 349. Directions given by a sovereign in regard to a matter over which his power is conceded would, according to the ordinary use of language, be held to involve, as its correlative, obedience. Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, p. 318, note. These decisions maintain the principle that mandatory provisions, not complied with in an election, will result in its avoidance without reference to motive or person; that in those states in which the ballots must be printed and the name of the candidate designated by a cross mark the required marginal notes must be placed as required by statute; that the voter should readily comply with the legislative will clearly expressed. The voters who cast the sixty-seven ballots did not comply with the statute. In an organized state of society, the majority binds the minority by complying with mandatory laws in expressing the popular will.

Judgment affirmed, at appellant's cost.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Elizabeth L. WILLIS, Resp't.,
v.
ST. PAUL SANITATION CO. et al., and
E. L. MABON, App'ts.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. Article 10, § 3, of the Constitution, providing that "each stockholder in any corporation (excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business) shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him," is self-executing, and creates an individual liability on the part of the stockholder for corporate debts to an amount equal to the amount of stock held or owned by him.
2. The subject of chapter 30, Laws 1889, amending the Insolvent Law of 1881, is sufficiently expressed in its title.
3. The provision in section 1 of this Amending Act, "that the release of any debtor under this Act shall not operate to discharge any other party liable as surety, guarantor, or otherwise for the same debt," includes stockholders who are liable for the debts of the corporation.
4. This provision is not unconstitutional, as applied to cases where the liability of the stockholder was incurred before, but the proceedings under the Insolvent Act were had and the corporation discharged subsequent to, its passage.

(January 18, 1892.)

*Head notes by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—Self-executing constitutional provisions.

A constitutional provision that any city of more than 100,000 inhabitants "may frame a charter for its own government" is self-executing. People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612.

A constitutional provision that the secretary of state and auditor of state shall indorse on bonds issued for railroads or other internal improvements, the words "issued pursuant to law" requires no legislation in order to permit such indorsement in a proper case. State v. Babcock, 19 Neb. 230.

A constitutional provision that a shareholder of a corporation may cast the whole number of his votes for one candidate or distribute them upon two or more candidates as he may prefer" takes effect without the aid of legislation. Pierce v. Com. 104 Pa. 150.

A constitutional provision that the recorder's court of Chicago shall be continued and called the "criminal court of Cook county" defining its jurisdiction and making the judges of another court ex officio its judges, is self-executing. People v. Bradley, 80 Ill. 386.

A constitutional provision that "all other courts of common pleas shall cease to exist at the expiration of the present terms of office of the several judges" virtually repeals an Act attempting to substitute another court in place of a court of common pleas before the expiration of the terms of such judges. Ex parte Snyder, 64 Mo. 58.

In Rothermel v. Ziegler, decided in the Pennsylvania court of common pleas and reported in the statement of the case in Rothermel v. Meyerle, 9 L. R. A. 306, 136 Pa. 260, it is said that the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution is not retrospective and has no self-executing efficacy as against a prior statute and therefore a state statute cannot be held to be repealed by it, but that it simply ceases to have effect.

APPEAL by defendant, Mabon, from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling a motion for a new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce the alleged personal liability of the stockholders in defendant corporation for its debts. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James H. Foote for appellant.

Mr. Horace G. Stone, for appellants in the Meagher Case, made the following contentions:

As to affirmative provisions of a Constitution, i. e., those which say what "shall be" as distinguished from those which say what shall not be, the presumption is that the Legislature, instead of the courts, is to carry them out by proper laws which shall cover the details and which shall change as to such details as the best interests of the people of the state shall, from time to time, require.

I am aware of the fact that this court has, in three cases, assumed that section 3, article 10, of the Constitution, was self-executing.

But it is a universal and a familiar rule in all courts of appeal, that all action of the lower courts will be assumed to be correct, except only as to those points about which the appealing party claims there has been error.

State v. Brachvogel, 38 Minn. 265; Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438; Pond Mach. Tool Co. v. Robinson, 38 Minn. 272; Jordan v. Board of Education of Taylor's Falls, 39 Minn. 298.

established a principle which no state Legislature would thereafter be at liberty to disregard or violate.

The 15th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which prevents discrimination in respect to the right of suffrage between citizens of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one, but does invest citizens with a new constitutional right of exemption from discrimination as to the elective franchise. United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 583. This decision however does not deny that the amendment is self-executing so far as to prevent the prohibited discrimination.

A constitutional provision which enjoins upon the Legislature to "encourage internal improvements by passing liberal general laws of incorporation for that purpose" is a command to the Legislature which cannot be enforced by a court. Gillinwater v. Mississippi & A. R. Co. 13 Ill. 1.

A constitutional provision that "the Legislature shall provide by law for determining contested elections" is addressed solely to the Legislature and the failure of the Legislature to provide for contesting an election, will not make a statute authorizing an election invalid. Schulherr v. Bordeaux, 64 Miss. 59.

A constitutional provision that "suits may be brought against the state in such courts as may by law be provided" does not give a right to sue which cannot be defeated by the Legislature, but gives a mere discretionary power. Ex parte State, 52 Ala. 231.

A constitutional provision that public printing shall be performed under a contract given to the lowest responsible bidder below a maximum price and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law, is not self-executing but requires legisla-

To make section 8, article 10, self-executing it must be shown—

1st. That the constitutional convention put into it all the details of legislation necessary to define its exact limit and extent, through all the various changes and circumstances which might arise in all future time.

2d. That the people who ratified the Constitution understood that all these details were incorporated in this article and that by their votes they were fixing an inflexible rule for all time to come.

3d. That by this article not only the members of the convention but the people who ratified the Constitution understood that they were entirely ignoring the Legislature and that they were giving a direct command to the courts to enforce a double liability in all cases and under all circumstances.

4th. That by this article they were creating de novo a debt from one private individual to another.

5th. That this creation of a private debt was not to take effect until some future time.

Section 36 of the Constitution of California provides that each stockholder of a corporation "shall be liable" for his "proportion" of its debts.

The court, in an elaborate opinion covering the question in nearly all its bearings, decided that the Constitution was not self-executing.

French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 518. See also Fusz v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 256; St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan County Ct., 39 Mo. 485; Jerman v. Benton, 79 Mo. 148; Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 499, 10 L. ed. 819; tion to carry it into effect. Brown v. Seay, 86 Ala. 122.

A constitutional provision that "it shall be a crime the nature and punishment of which shall be prescribed by law" for a bank officer to receive deposits knowing the bank to be insolvent, and that he "shall be individually responsible for such deposits," is not self-enforcing so as to make such officer civilly liable to a depositor in such a case, since legislation is necessary to prescribe the particular details of the crime and of the civil liability. Fusz v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 256.

A constitutional provision that "all lands sold in pursuance of decrees of courts shall be divided into tracts of from ten to fifty acres" is not self-executing and needs legislative action to make it operative. Bowie v. Lott, 24 La. Ann. 214.

A constitutional provision that the general assembly shall not authorize municipal loans or subscriptions to corporations without a two-thirds vote of the inhabitants, does not take effect so as to permit such a vote without further regulations by the Legislature. St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan County Ct., 39 Mo. 485. But this does not decide that the prohibitory part is not self-executing.

The constitutional provision that "every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad" is not self-executing. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Texas & St. L. R. Co. 10 Fed. Rep. 497.

Prohibitions generally.

In Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385, it is said that the doctrine must be regarded as settled that all negative or prohibitory clauses in a Constitution are self-executing. In that case it was decided that a constitutional limitation of the amount of muni-

Fairfield v. Gallatin County, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. ed. 544; Mississippi Mills v. Cook, 56 Miss. 40; Bowie v. Lott, 24 La. Ann. 214; Coatesville Gas Co. v. Chester County, 97 Pa. 476; Lehigh Iron Co. v. Lower Macungie Twp. 81 Pa. 482; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Trout, 82 Ark. 17; Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 167; Chahoon v. Com. 20 Gratt. 738; Doddridge Supra. v. Stout, 9 W. Va. 708; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Texas & St. L. R. Co. 10 Fed. Rep. 508; Steacey v. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. 5 Dill. 848; Morley v. Thayer, 8 Fed. Rep. 789.

The framers of the Constitution did not intend to make section 8, article 10, self-executing.

Minnesota Constitutional Debates; Democratic Wing, pp. 175, 176; Republican Wing, pp. 815, 816.

Double liability did not exist at common law. Johnson v. Fischer, 30 Minn. 175.

The Constitution did not repeal the common law except in certain cases.

Dutcher v. Culver, 24 Minn. 584.

There are few persons who would consent to take stock in such enterprises, if subject to the double liability provision. Although willing to risk the loss of their stock, they would be unwilling to involve their estates beyond it.

Ochiltree v. Iowa R. Contract Co. 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 249, 22 L. ed. 546.

Courts cannot enforce laws which the Legislature ought to make, but does not make.

Gillinwater v. Mississippi & A. R. Co. 13 Ill. 1.

Embodying the details of legislation into a Constitution would defeat the Constitution.

cial indebtedness that may be incurred is self-executing.

A constitutional limitation on the amount of taxation in school districts is self-executing although there is a provision for a larger amount in some cases by vote of the people. St. Joseph Bd. of Public Schools v. Patten, 62 Mo. 444.

A constitutional provision that there shall be no sale of property for taxes except by certain officers upon an order and judgment of a court of record, takes effect immediately and annuls all laws conferring power on other officers to make such sales. Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86.

A provision that no public work or improvement shall be done or made in a city street unless an estimate is made and an assessment levied and collected before the work is commenced or the contract let therefor, is self-executing. Oakland Pav. Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 478; McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245; Donahue v. Graham, 61 Cal. 276.

A constitutional provision that no corporation shall issue stock except for certain purposes is prohibitory, but a provision that stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of a general law, or without consent of the meeting called on sixty days' notice, as may be provided by law, is not self-executing as it does not itself form a complete mode of proceeding. Ewing v. Oroville Min. Co. 56 Cal. 648.

A constitutional prohibition against any officer of the United States holding a state office, is self-operative and may be enforced without legislative aid. DeTurk v. Com. 129 Pa. 151.

A constitutional provision that the Legislature "shall pass laws to prohibit the sale of lottery tickets" is itself a prohibition of lotteries. Bass v. Nashville, Meigs (Tenn.) 421.

So a constitutional declaration that "no lottery shall be authorized nor shall the sale of lottery

The Federalist, Jan. 25, 1788.

A legal right does not exist without a remedy.

Section 3, article 10, either created a right to be enforced under the rules of the common law, or else no right was created at that time.

Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 192; Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 798; United States v. Quinoy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 585, 18 L. ed. 408.

If section 3, article 10, created the right, then we have the startling novelty of a constitutional right without force or life, unless the Legislature subsequently created the remedy. It would be idle to argue any such proposition.

The question at bar is not as to whether this court could guess the meaning of section 3, article 10, if it was a statute, but whether, in the distribution of power, section 3, article 10, directed the Legislature to enforce a double liability, or whether it directed the courts to do so, to the exclusion of the Legislature. Admitting for the sake of argument that the courts could carry out section 3, article 10, if commanded to do so, so could the Legislature. The question is, To whom was this command directed?

St. Joseph Board of Public Schools v. Patten, 62 Mo. 444; Bass v. Nashville, Meigs (Tenn.) 421; People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 890; Miller v. Marr, 55 Ala. 322; Pierce v. Com. 104 Pa. 150; State v. Weston, 4 Neb. 216; Johnson v. Parkersburg, 16 W. Va. 402, 37 Am. Rep. 779; People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612; Rowan v. Runnels, 46 U. S. 5 How. 183, 12 L. ed. 85; Rothermel v. Meyerle, 9 L. R. A. 366, 186 Pa. 250; Oakland

Pav. Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479; French v. Techemaker, 24 Cal. 518.

Messrs. J. C. Michael and W. H. Michael for respondent.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. This was an action brought by a creditor of an insolvent corporation to recover from certain of its stockholders on their individual liability for the corporate debts, under what is commonly called "the double liability clause" of the Constitution, which provides that "each stockholder in any corporation (excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business) shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him." Article 10, § 8. The principal question in the case is whether this provision of the Constitution is self-executing or whether it requires legislation to carry it into effect. The same question is also involved in the cases of McKusick v. Seymour and Meagher (Minn.) 50 N. W. Rep. 1114, (submitted at a later day of the present term,) and has been exhaustively argued in both cases. Some points were made by counsel in one case that were not urged in the other; but as the question is common to both cases, and as there was an understanding among counsel that all arguments presented in either should be considered in both, we shall endeavor to fully determine the question in the present opinion. In addition to this main question, counsel for the appeltickets be allowed" is self-executing so far as to take away any pre-existing right of authority to conduct a lottery or sell lottery tickets. State v. Woodward, 89 Ind. 110, 46 Am. Rep. 160.

The United States Supreme Court in two early cases set it itself against the whole current of authorities on this question of the effect of a prohibitory clause in a Constitution. It decided that a provision in the Constitution of Mississippi that "the introduction of slaves into this state as merchandise or for sale shall be prohibited from and after the 1st day of May, 1853," with a certain exception, does not become operative without legislation but was addressed to the Legislature. Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800; Bowan v. Runnels, 46 U. S. 5 How. 184, 12 L. ed. 85.

The temptation to comment on these decisions is almost irresistible but might seem out of place in this connection. Considering that they stand alone among decisions on constitutional prohibitions, and that they were made in opposition to the decisions of the Supreme Court of Mississippi in interpreting its own Constitution they are at least remarkable. But it must be noticed further that the opinion of the court in the first of the cases did not even refer to one of the Mississippi cases which were cited in argument while it referred to the other at some length in an attempt to show that it had not actually decided the question. The Mississippi cases which had decided that the constitutional prohibitions were self-operative were Green v. Robinson, 5 How. (Miss.) 80; Gildewell v. Hite, Id. 110.

These decisions were re-affirmed in Brien v. Williamson, 7 How. (Miss.) 14, in which the court refused to follow the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee followed these Mississippi decisions as against that of the United States Supreme Court.

States Supreme Court in Yerger v. Raina, 4 Humph. 280.

Cases as to taking property for public use.

A constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation, becomes operative without any further legislation although the Constitution also provides that compensation shall be ascertained in such manner as may be prescribed by general law. Johnson v. Parkersburg, 16 W. Va. 402, 37 Am. Rep. 779; Householder v. Kansas City, 53 Mo. 488; McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 257.

The same rule applies to a provision that property taken for public use shall not be distributed or the proprietary rights of the owner therein divested until compensation shall be paid to the owner or into court for him. Blanchard v. Kansas City, 16 Fed. Rep. 444.

An injunction was based in Chambers v. Cincinnati & G. R. Co. 69 Ga. 320, on a constitutional prohibition against taking private property without compensation. It did not appear that any statute had been enacted in aid of the constitutional provision.

As to jury.

In Ohio it is held that a constitutional requirement that compensation shall be assessed by a jury when private property is taken for public use is not self-executing, but provision must be made by law for a jury before property can be condemned. Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 167; Watson v. Pleasant Twp. 21 Ohio St. 666.

So in West Virginia a constitutional provision that compensation for land condemned for public use shall be ascertained "as may be prescribed by general law provided that when required by either of the parties such compensation shall be ascerlants in the Meagher Case, supra, urged that this constitutional provision is not intended to impose any "double liability" upon stockholders, but simply means that they shall be bound to pay for their stock once its "face amount," any device or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding, and that having once paid for their stock in full they are not further liable. Except for the eminence of the counsel who have advanced this view we would not deem it entitled to serious consideration. While no fixed form of words has been adopted to express the idea, yet provisions couched in more or less similar language have been frequently incorporated into Constitutions and statutes, and have been uniformly understood and construed as providing for an individual liability of stockholders for corporate debts in addition to this risk of losing the amount of their stock. This is the meaning which has been invariably attached to this provision of our Constitution. It is the one attributed to it by this court in numerous cases, although never in the form of a direct and authoritative decision; and we do not believe that the construction now sought to be placed upon it ever occurred to, or was ever advanced by, any one until suggested by counsel in the present case. Any such construction would render the provision meaningless and useless for all that would be accomplished by it was already fully covered by the law. If a person had subscribed for stock and had not paid for it the amount agreed of course he was liable to the corporation and through it to its creditors; and if the stock had been issued to him as paid-up stock when not in fact paid for under such circumstances as to operate as a fraud upon creditors he was upon well-settled principles liable to them as for unpaid stock subscriptions. The construction contended for would give the public no security beyond what they already had under the existing law. Its absurdity is rendered apparent when considered in connection with the amendment of November 5, 1872, inclosed in parentheses; for then the whole section would mean that, while the stockholders in all other corporations should be liable to pay once for their stock at its face amount, yet stockholders in manufacturing corporations need not be required to do so. The obvious intention of the provision was to add to the ordinary liability of a corporation for its debts the individual liability of the stockholders to a limited amount, and that the measure of that liability should be a sum equal to the amount of stock owned or held by them. This stock is not the subject of the liability, but the measure of it; in other words, the stockholders are liable, not for the stock, but, in addition thereto, for a sum measured by the amount of the stock.

2. This brings us to the main question, viz., whether this provision of the Constitution is self-executing. That such has been the general understanding of the bench, bar, and business men in this state is conceded. This court has, in a long line of cases, assumed that such was the fact. Dodge v. Minnesota P. S. Roof Co. 16 Minn. 873, (Gil. 327); Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; State v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 40 Minn. 213; Mohr v. Minnesota Elevator Co. 40 Minn. 348; Arthur v. Willius, 44 Minn. 409; Densmore v. Red Wing L. & S. Co. (Minn.) 48 N.

tained by an impartial jury of twelve freeholders," is held to be inoperative until statutory provisions are made to give it effect, and that until that time the prior statute on the subject must govern. Doddridge Supra. v. Stout, 9 W. Va. 703.

So in Arkansas a constitutional provision that compensation for a right of way "shall be ascertained by a jury of twelve men in a court of record as shall be prescribed by law" is not self-executing and does not repeal a statute providing for a commission of five men. Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Trout, 32 Ark. 17.

But in Illinois, on the other hand, it is decided that a constitutional prohibition against taking or damaging private property for public use without just compensation to be ascertained by a jury "as shall be prescribed by law" is self-executing and annuls a statute providing for commissioners in such cases. People v. McRoberts, 62 Ill. 36; Kine v. Defenbaugh, 64 Ill. 291.

And that it also annuls an act authorizing the entry upon land in such cases before trial by jury. Mitchell v. Illinois & St. L. R. & Coal Co. 68 Ill. 236.

So in Alabama a clause in a Constitution expressly prohibiting the General Assembly from depriving any person of an appeal from any preliminary assessment of damages in condemnation proceedings and declaring that the amount of damages in all cases of appeal "shall on demand of either party be determined by a jury according to law," is so far self-executing as to entitle an appellant on demand to a trial by jury on appeal. Woodward Iron Co. v. Cabanis, 57 Ala. 823.

A constitutional provision that "all persons entitled to vote and hold office and none others shall be eligible to sit as jurors" is not self-executing so 16 L. R. A.

as to prevent a valid jury from being summoned under a prior law making free-holders only eligible in the absence of any new statute. Chahoon v. Com. 20 Gratt. 733.

Exemptions may be regarded as prohibitions.

The constitutional exemption of a homestead not exceeding a certain value is effective without legislation. Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488.

So a constitutional provision that "every homestead not exceeding eighty acres . . . shall be exempted from sale . . . for any debt" is self-executing. Miller v. Marx, 55 Ala. 322.

And a constitutional exemption of merchants from taxation on capital used in the purchase of goods sold to nonresidents and sent out of the state, is self-executing. Friedman v. Mathea, 8 Hesk. 488.

Taxation.

See also St. Joseph Board of Public Schools v. Patten and Hills v. Chicago, supra.

A constitutional provision that "all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects . . . and collected under general laws is not self-executing, but simply mandatory to the Legislature. Erie County v. Erie, 4 Cent. Rep. 305, 113 Pa. 380.

A constitutional requirement that the Legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation is not operative without legislation. Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 561.

So a constitutional provision that all taxes shall be uniform in the same class of subjects is mandatory on the Legislature, but does not itself repeal an inconsistent statute. In this case the conclu-

W. Rep. 528. And, so far as we are aware, the correctness of this view has never been questioned or doubted in any court, until one of the counsel in this case interposed a brief in Arthur v. Willis, supra, in which he took the position for which he now contends. Of course it is true, as counsel suggests, that this court has never before been called on to decide the question, and that mere assumption on the part of either bench or bar does not make a thing law; but, on the other hand, it is also true that a construction which has for a third of a century been accepted by every one as so obviously correct as never to have been questioned or doubted is much more likely to be right than a newly discovered one, suggested at this late day by the emergencies of present litigation. The fact that no such view ever before suggested itself to the minds of court or counsel in the numerous cases where the point might have been made, and where it was to the interest of counsel on one side or the other to make it, certainly raises a strong presumption against it. Moreover, as the generally accepted view has doubtless long been the basis of the credit of corporations, it ought not now to be disturbed, unless clearly wrong. But if the question was entirely one of first impression, we have no doubt as to how it should be determined. A constitution is but a higher form of statutory law, and it is entirely competent for the people, if they so desire, to incorporate into it self-executing enactments. These are much more common than formerly, the object being to put it beyond the power of the Legislature to render them nugatory by refusing to enact legislation to carry them into effect. Prohibitory provisions in a Constitution are usually self-executing to the extent that anything done in violation of them is void. But instances of affirmative self-executing provisions are numerous in almost every modern Constitution. For instances of this, see State v. Weston, 4 Neb. 216; Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 189; Reynolds v. Taylor, 43 Ala. 420; Miller v. Marx, 55 Ala. 822; People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612.

Without stopping to specify, it will be found on examination that our own Constitution abounds in provisions that are unquestionably self-executing, and require no legislation to put them into operation. The question in every case is whether the language of a constitutional provision is addressed to the courts or the Legislature,—does it indicate that it was intended as a present enactment, complete in itself as definitive legislation, or does it contemplate subsequent legislation to carry it into effect? This is to be determined from a consideration both of the language used and of the intrinsic nature of the provision itself. If the nature and extent of the right conferred and of the liability imposed are fixed by the provision itself, so that they can be determined by the examination and construction of its own terms, and there is no language used indicating that the subject is referred to the Legislature for action, then the provision should be construed as self-executing, and its language as addressed to the courts. In almost every case cited by appellants in which a constitutional provision has been held not self-executing, it will be found either that its language indicated an intention that legislation should be had to carry tion was aided by the context in which there was an express declaration that laws exempting property otherwise than as therein provided shall be void. Lehigh Iron Co. v. Lower Macungie Twp. 81 Pa. 482; Coatesville Gas Co. v. Chester County, 97 Pa. 476.

Appropriations.

A constitutional provision that an officer "shall receive" a certain salary is a sufficient appropriation without legislative action. Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 189.

A Constitution fixing the salary of an officer and providing that the "auditor shall draw warrants of the state quarterly therefor" is self-executing. State v. Weston, 4 Neb. 216.

But a constitutional provision that judges shall "severally during their continuance in office receive for their services compensation to be paid out of the treasury" does not dispense with the necessity of a legislative appropriation in order to permit payment. Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 341.

A constitutional provision that no money shall be paid out of the treasury of the state except in pursuance of "an appropriation by law" annuls a statute by which money is "appropriated annually" for the salary of an officer, especially when the schedule of the Constitution provides that "all laws inconsistent with it shall cease at its adoption. Under a provision that the Legislature shall meet once in two years there must be an appropriation at least once in two years in order to permit the payment of the salary. State v. Holladay, 64 Mo. 531; State v. Holladay, 66 Mo. 885.

16 L. R. A.

Stockholders' liability.

The decision in the main case is a departure from other decisions as to the effect of constitutional provisions as to the liability of stockholders. But the provisions construed differ.

A constitutional provision that "dues from a corporation shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder and such other means as shall be provided by law" is not operative without the aid of legislation and statutes passed in fulfillment of it furnish the only basis of judicial action. Morley v. Thayer, 3 Fed. Rep. 737.

So in Jerman v. Benton, 79 Mo. 148, it was held that the double liability clause of a Constitution did not take effect until the enactment of appropriate legislation. That clause was as follows: "Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in all cases each stockholder shall be individually liable over and above the stock by him or her owned and any amount unpaid thereon in a further sum at least equal in amount to such stock."

A constitutional provision that "dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporation and other means as may be prescribed by law," and another that "each stockholder of a corporation or joint-stock association shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities," must be construed together, and the latter cannot be held self-executing, as in that case the former would have no meaning. French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 513.

B. A. R.

it into effect, or that the nature of the provision itself was such as to render such legislation necessary. To the first class may be referred the provision in the Constitution of Missouri (quite different from that in ours) considered in the case of Morley v. Thayer, 8 Fed. Rep. 739, although that case really only decided that the plaintiff could not recover because he had not followed the remedy provided by statute. To the same class belongs the case of Jerman v. Benton, 79 Mo. 148, although it seems to have been assumed, without argument or consideration, that the constitutional provision there considered required legislation to carry it into effect.

To the second class belongs Bowie v. Lott, 24 La. Ann. 214, in which it was held that a constitutional provision that "all lands sold in pursuance of decrees of courts shall be divided into tracts of from ten to fifty acres," required legislation to carry it into effect. This is plain from the very nature of the provision. It furnishes no modus operandi, and does not provide how or by whom the land was to be divided, nor determine the exact size of the tract. It was evidently a mere general direction to the Legislature. To the same class may be referred the case of Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Texas & St. L. R. Co., 10 Fed. Rep. 508, involving a provision in the Constitution of Texas that "every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad," although all that was decided in that case was that the defendant railway company could not, on its own motion, make the crossing without the consent of the defendant, or without resort to legal proceedings in which the conditions and limitations under which such rights should be exercised should be judicially fixed and determined. Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 499, 10 L. ed. 819, cited by appellant, perhaps goes further than any other case in holding a constitutional provision not self-executing; but its weight as an authority is much weakened from the facts that it was not considered by a full bench, and was decided by a divided court, Justice Story being one of the dissenters. Moreover, it seems difficult to reconcile the decision in that case with the rule that prohibitory constitutional provisions are self-executing to the extent that anything done in violation of them is void; or the further rule, which that court has always professed to follow, that it would adopt the construction given to the Constitution and laws of a state, not conflicting with those of the Union, by the highest court of that state.

Of all the cases cited by appellant, the one most relied on is that of French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 518. The Constitution of California provided: "Sec. 32. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law." "Sec. 36. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint-stock association shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities." The court held that section 36 was not self-executing. But the decision was mainly based upon two considerations. The first was that, while this section provided that each stockholder should be liable for his proportion of the corporate debts, yet it did not determine what that proportion should be, nor prescribe any rule by which it should be ascertained. The second was that section 36 was to be read in connection with section 32, which was evidently addressed to the Legislature. No such considerations exist here, and hence we do not think that the case is in point. The language used in our Constitution is positive and mandatory. There is nothing in it indicative of an intention that ancillary legislation should be had to carry it into effect; neither is there anything in the nature of the liability imposed such as to render any such legislation necessary. It is in the form of a present, complete enactment, which, although elliptical in form, definitely fixes the nature and amount of the liability, and to whom the liability is incurred. As remarked in Allen v. Walsh, supra, "it declares the creation of a liability to the extent named in the cases referred to." It is true that a question might arise as to whether it is the person who holds the stock when a debt is contracted, or the one who holds it when the action is brought, or any one who held it at any time while the debt existed, that is liable. But this is a mere question of construction, which would exist if the same or similar language were used in a statute, as has sometimes been the case. But questions of construction, whether of a Constitution or a statute, are for the courts, and not for the Legislature. In fact, all the criticisms of the appellant upon this article of the Constitution refer merely to supposed obscurities in its meaning, or doubts as to its construction; and the logic of their argument is that it is for the Legislature to construe it, and determine its true meaning. According to their view, it means anything or nothing, according as the Legislature see fit to construe it. But the people meant something by this provision, and, when that meaning is judicially determined by legitimate rules of construction, it is as obligatory on the Legislature as on any one else.

Much stress is laid upon the fact that this provision contains no remedy for enforcing the liability, as indicating that it was not intended to be self-executing. We fail to perceive any force whatever in this line of argument. The maxim ubi jus ibi remedium, is as old as the law itself. As was said by Lord Holt: "If a man has a right, he must have a means to vindicate and maintain it, and a remedy if he is injured in the exercise and enjoyment of it; and, indeed, it is a vain thing to imagine a right without a remedy, for want of right and want of remedy are reciprocal." The maxim referred to gave occasion for the invention of that form of action called "an action on the case." The principle adopted by the courts accordingly was that the novelty of the particular complaint in an action on the case was no objection, provided an injury cognizable by law be shown to have been inflicted on the plaintiff. Every statute made against an injury, mischief, or grievance impliedly gives a remedy, for, if no remedy be expressly given, a party has his action upon the statute. For example, "if a penalty be given by statute, but no action for the recovery thereof be named, an action of debt for the penalty will lie." 2 Dwar. Stat. 677. So where a statute requires an act to be done for the benefit of another, or forbids the doing of an act which may be to his injury, though no action be given in express terms by the statute for the omission or commission, the general rule of law is that the party injured shall have an action; for, where a statute gives a right, there, although in express terms it has not given a remedy, the remedy which by law is properly applicable to that right follows as an incident. Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938. Hence in the present case it was not necessary that the Constitution should have expressly given a remedy by which a creditor of the corporation might enforce the liability of a stockholder. If it in fact created such a liability of the latter in favor of the former, there would not be the least trouble in framing a proper complaint in an action to enforce it. Of course, the remedy is always within the control of the Legislature, and may be changed as they see fit, provided only it remains adequate. It is entirely competent for them to provide a new and statutory remedy, and make it exclusive, if they see fit. An inference in favor of appellant's contention is sought to be drawn from the history of this provision in the constitutional convention. In the form in which it is now found, this provision was the one adopted by the Democratic wing of the convention. The provision first adopted was that "provision shall be made making each stockholder individually liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him." Counsel say, and doubtless correctly, that this would not have been self-executing, as its language was directed to the Legislature, and evidently contemplated legislation to carry it into effect. In this form it was adopted by the committee of the whole, and then referred to the committee on phraseology and revision, who reported it back in its present form, ("every stockholder shall be liable," etc.) when it was adopted by the convention. To our minds, the material change which that committee made in the language indicates very strongly that the purpose of the change was to put the provision in the form of a self-executing enactment, and thus place it beyond the power of the Legislature to defeat the object sought to be accomplished.

An argument is also sought to be drawn from subsequent legislative construction. We attach little or no importance to this. An argument either way might be made, for the legislation upon the subject of the individual liability of stockholders has been variable, and not uniformly consistent either with the theory that the Constitution itself created such a liability or that it did not. Upon the theory that it did, it must be confessed that some of this legislation was superfluous, and its repeal unavailing. On the other hand, it may be said that, in passing chapter 56, Laws 1878, making stockholders in manufacturing or mechanical corporations liable for corporate debts to the amount of stock held or owned by them, the Legislature must have assumed that the Constitution itself created such a liability in the case of other corporations, for it is not to be supposed that they would have singled out manufacturing corporations as the only ones where such a liability should exist. Moreover, the Legislature in submitting, and the people in adopting, the amendment of 1872, excepting corporations organized for a manufacturing or mechanical business from the operation of section 8, art. 10, of the Constitution, must have supposed that this section ex propria vigore created an individual liability on the part of stockholders, for otherwise the amendment was useless and unnecessary, unless it was to relieve the Legislature from a sort of moral obligation to legislate on the subject.

3. The answer in this case alleges that in July, 1889, the defendant corporation was, upon petition of creditors under the Insolvent Law of 1881, adjudged insolvent, and a receiver of its property appointed by the court, who had fully administered the corporate assets, and distributed the proceeds among those creditors who executed releases to the corporation as required by statute; that plaintiff in January, 1890, executed and filed such a release, and accepted her dividend from the receiver. It is claimed, under the doctrine of Mohr v. Minnesota Elevator Co., 40 Minn. 343, that this release of the corporation had the effect of also releasing the stockholders. The plaintiff, on the other hand, claims that the rule of that case was changed by chapter 30, Laws 1889, entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act to Prevent Debtors from Giving Preference to Creditors, and to Secure the Equal Distribution of the Property of Debtors among Their Creditors, and for the Release of Debts against Debtors,'" section 2 of the Amendment Act providing "that the release of any debtor under this Act shall not operate to discharge any other party liable as surety, guarantor, or otherwise for the same debt." The point is made that this Amendment Act is invalid, because the subject is not sufficiently expressed in its title. There is nothing in this. It recites verbatim the title of the original Act, which sufficiently expresses the subject of that Act. It is true that the title of the Amendment Act does not refer to the chapter or year when the original Act was passed, but this is unimportant, especially as there was no other Act of the same title. Similar titles have been invariably sustained in this and other jurisdictions having the same constitutional provision. The title of this Act is not materially different from that sustained by this court in Winona v. Winona County School Dist. No. 82, 40 Minn. 13.

It is further claimed that the amendment is inapplicable because its terms will not include the liability of stockholders for corporate debts; the argument being that, where words of specific import are followed by a general term, the general term is to be taken to apply only to persons or things ejusdem generis with the specific terms; that the words "or otherwise" must therefore be limited to those whose liability for the debt is of the same kind as that of surety or guarantor; and that the liability of a stockholder for the debts of a corporation is different from that of either a surety or a guarantor, and therefore not within the terms of the Act. The Act of 1889 was passed about two weeks after the decision of the Mohr Case, and the proviso referred to was doubtless enacted for the very purpose of changing the rule laid down in that case. That it had that effect was assumed in Tripp v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 41 Minn. 400, (decided August 12, 1889). Even under the strict doctrine of ejusdem generis, we have no doubt that the term "or otherwise" would embrace those liable as stockholders for corporate debts; for, while that liability is sui generis, yet it is in many respects sufficiently analogous to that of surety or guarantor to fall within the same general class. But the doctrine of ejusdem generis is but a rule of construction to aid in ascertaining the meaning of the Legislature, and does not warrant a court in confining the operation of a statute within narrower limits than intended by the law-makers. The general object of an Act sometimes requires that the final general term shall not be restricted in meaning by its more specific predecessors. Thus the expression, "any bond or other specialty," has been held to comprehend every kind of specialty including a statute. The evident intention was that this amendment should embrace all cases where some one else was liable, in whatever capacity, for the same debt with the insolvent debtor.

The insolvency proceedings against the corporation were instituted and its discharge granted after the passage of the Act of 1889, but the debt for which plaintiff sues was contracted prior to that date; and it is claimed that the Act is, as to stockholders whose liability had been already incurred, unconstitutional, because impairing the obligation of contracts. We confess our inability to appreciate the force of this argument. The liability of a stockholder is fixed and measured by the Constitution alone. The Insolvent Law neither increases nor affects that liability, but has reference solely to the remedy of the creditor against the insolvent debtor. An existing creditor would have as much right to object to the passage of a Bankrupt Act, or a debtor to its subsequent repeal, as would this appellant to object to the amendment of this Insolvent Law. Bankrupt laws, either by express provision or by construction, generally provide that the discharge of the bankrupt shall not release another person who is liable for the same debt. This has been held indiscriminately in cases where the debt was contracted before, as well as where it was contracted after, the passage of the Bankrupt Act, and it was never suggested that as to such other person the Act was invalid, as impairing the obligation of his contract. The discharge of the insolvent or bankrupt in such cases, as we have repeatedly held, is not the voluntary act of the creditor, but purely by operation of law, which, like the act of God, hurts nobody.

Order affirmed.

William MILLER et al., Repts.,

v.

James STODDARD et al., Defts.,

and

Henry M. LITTLE & Wife, Appts.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. The owner of a lot which was subject to an unrecorded mortgage contracted for the construction of a building upon the premises. After materials had been furnished for the construction of the building, but before the claims for liens therefor had been filed, the mortgage was placed on record. Held, that the Recording Act (Gen. Stat. chap. 40, § 21), imposes no obligation upon a mortgagee to record his mortgage, as against mechanics' liens.

2. But even if that statute could be held to apply to such cases, the lien claimants in this case would not come within the protection of its provisions, because—First, their liens were not filed until after the mortgage was recorded; and, second, there was no evidence that they did not have actual notice of the mortgage when they furnished the material. Held, also, that, in the absence of any provision to that effect in the Lien Law, a mechanics' lien cannot be preferred to a prior unrecorded mortgage, unless in cases where, upon general equitable principles, the mortgagee would be estopped by his conduct from asserting the lien of his mortgage, as against the other lien claimants.

(June 22, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants, Henry M. Little and wife, from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County overruling a motion for new trial in an action brought to foreclose a mechanics' lien, in which the order of priority of several claims against the same property was determined, and a mortgage held by the female appellant postponed to certain mechanics' liens. Reversed.

The material portions of Miller v. Shepard, referred to in the opinion are as follows:

Defendant Shepard and one Little were severally the owners of contiguous lots. Each contracted with one Stoddard for the erection of a dwelling-house on his lot, and about the same time the two agreed to jointly erect a barn on the line between the lots, so that part of it would be on each lot, and appurtenant to the dwelling-house being erected thereon. Pursuant to this arrangement, they contracted with Stoddard for the erection of the barn. Stoddard built the two houses, and also the barn, the latter being so located that five feet more of it was on one lot than on the other, and one end of it better finished inside than the other; but on which lot the larger part of the barn was situated, or which end was the better finished, does not appear. Neither does it appear what the dimensions of the barn were. The defendants Smith & Co. furnished to Stoddard material for the construction of each house, and also of the barn. Shepard and Little paid Stoddard in full, but the latter failed to pay Smith & Co. Thereupon Smith & Co. filed separate claims for liens on the two houses, and also a claim for a lien on the barn and both lots jointly for the material furnished for the barn. The plaintiffs, who had furnished material to Stoddard for Shepard's house, having commenced this action to enforce their lien on his house and lot, and having made Smith & Co. defendants, the latter interposed an answer alleging the foregoing facts, and also that the amount due them for material for Shepard's house was $559.42, and for material for the whole barn $424.02. They further alleged that the matter as to the material for the barn was set up "so as to protect their rights in the premises on the said claim, and that they intended to bring a separate action to enforce said lien if the same cannot be fully enforced herein." They then asked for judgment against Stoddard for $559.42, and that said judgment be declared a lien on Shepard's house and lot, and that, if the court could not give full relief upon the last claim, (material for the barn), it may make such order and decree as may protect their rights in the premises, and that they might have such other and further relief as to the court might seem proper. Shepard appeared and answered, but Stoddard, the original contractor, failed to appear. The court ordered personal judgment in favor of Smith & Co. against Stoddard for the full amount due for material furnished for Shepard's house, and one half of the amount due for material furnished for the barn, and adjudged the same to be a lien on Shepard's house and lot, and directed the premises to be sold to satisfy the same. Shepard, the appellant, concedes the correctness of this decision, so far as it relates to the material for his house, but contests it in so far as it allows a lien on his premises for half ($212) the material for the barn. . . . Smith & Co. had a right to file a single claim for a lien on the barn and both lots. But we are also of opinion that, notwithstanding their having done so, they might sever their claim so as to obtain judgment against each lot for the amount of material which went into the part of the barn situated thereon, provided they were able to show, and did show, what part or proportion of the material entered into the construction of each part of the building, and provided the rights of third parties are not thereby prejudiced. . . . But while Smith & Co. had the right to sever the lien for material for the barn, yet, if they did so, it was incumbent on them to show affirmatively what part or proportion of the material entered into Shepard's part of the building; that is, the part which stood on his lot. Had it appeared that both parts of the barn were built and finished alike, and that half stood on each lot, then the court would have been fully justified in adjudging one half the amount of Smith & Co's claim to be a lien on Shepard's premises. But it appears not only that the two parts were finished differently, but also that five feet more of the building (which for anything that appears might have been a very considerable part of it) stood on one lot than on the other, and there is no evidence as to what part or portion of the material went into either. Consequently there was no basis whatever furnished by the evidence for the court's apportionment. It was mere guess work.

*Head notes by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE—For note on the question of superiority between mechanic's liens and earlier mortgages, see Wimberly v. Mayberry (Ala.) 14 L. R. A. 305.

Mr. C. J. Cahaley, for appellants:

Charging the property owned by one individual, for the improvements made on the property of another, when he receives no benefit from it, is so unjust that nothing less than very clear expressions would warrant it.

Gorgas v. Douglas, 6 Serg. & R. 512; Kerbaugh v. Henderson, 8 Phila. 17; Davis v. Farr, 13 Pa. 167; Skyrms v. Occidental Mill & Min. Co. 8 Nev. 219; Butler v. Rivers, 4 R. I. 38; Edwards v. Edwards, 24 Ohio St. 402; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, 702.

The Mechanics' Lien Act only gives a lien to the extent of the interest of the owner at the time the materials were furnished. At that time the property was subject to the purchase-money mortgage of this appellant. It was in effect the continuation of her vendors' lien. The principle that an unrecorded purchase-money mortgage is a lien prior to that of a mechanic or judgment creditor is so well established that it may be said to be elementary.

Oliver v. Davy, 34 Minn. 292; Rees v. Ludington, 18 Wis. 308; Spring v. Short, 90 N. Y. 588; Guy v. Carriere, 5 Cal. 511; Campbell's App. 86 Pa. 247; Ross v. Munie, 4 Cal. 178; Banning v. Edes, 6 Minn. 402; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Kountze, 30 Neb. 719.

Mr. Willis McDowell, for respondents, Miller et al.:

Conceding that mechanics' liens are not within the Recording Act and that an unrecorded purchase-money mortgage has precedence over a lien, of what avail would it be to these appellants, as against these respondents. She has voluntarily allowed another mortgage to be placed upon the property, which is a lien ahead of her mortgage and the lien of these respondents is ahead of this other mortgage. She has selected her place in the procession and cannot now hope to change it.

Reilly v. Williams (Minn.), Dec. 28, 1891.

Messrs. Reed & Kerr, for respondents, Frazer & Shepard:

Time was, perhaps, when under certain circumstances, as, for instance, those which exist in the case of Oliver v. Davy, 34 Minn. 292, the claims of laborers and materialmen would be postponed to the right of the holder of an unrecorded purchase-money mortgage, but the facts in this case, taken in connection with the Lien Law of 1889, do not lead to such a conclusion.

By allowing the intervention of the mortgage of the North Side Building & Loan Association she has brought herself clearly within the rule established in Reilly v. Williams (Minn.) Dec. 28, 1891. She has taken her place in the procession and must abide by her choice.

Messrs. Ueland & Holt for respondents,
C. A. Smith & Co.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This may be termed the companion case of that of the same plaintiffs against Shepard and others (just decided), to the statement of facts in which, as far as it goes, reference may be made for the facts in this case. This action was brought to enforce a lien for labor and material performed and furnished to the contractor, Stoddard, for the erection of the Little house. The defendants Esther B. Little and the North Side Building & Loan Association were mortgagees of the premises. The other defendants, Frazer & Shepard and Smith & Co., were lien claimants for material also furnished to Stoddard,—the former for the house, and the latter for both the house and the barn. As the building and loan association took no appeal, and is not made a party to this appeal, the correctness of the decision of the trial court as to the rank or position of the lien of its mortgage is not before us, and cannot be considered. The answer of Smith & Co., and the evidence in support of their claims, is substantially the same as in the Shepard Case, and what was said there is equally applicable here. There is the same failure to show what part or proportion of the material furnished for the barn entered into the construction of that part of it situated on the Little lot.

2. The principal question in the case is as to the rights of Esther B. Little under her mortgage. The lot on which the buildings are situated formerly belonged to her. On May 18, 1890, before any contract was made with Stoddard, and before any work had been done or materials furnished for the buildings, and consequently before any of the liens of the respondents had attached, she conveyed the lot to Henry B. Little, and at the same time took back a mortgage from him on the premises. It does not appear whether the deed to Henry B. Little has ever been recorded, but it does appear, and is so found, that the mortgage to Esther B. Little was not recorded until November 22, 1890, which was after all of the respondents had furnished the material for the buildings, but before any of them had filed their claims for liens. The trial court held that the liens of the respondents were superior to that of Mrs. Little's mortgage, on the ground, as we presume, that it was not recorded until after respondents had furnished the material, and consequently after their liens therefor had attached.

Appellants' counsel rests the claim of priority for the mortgage mainly on the ground that as appears, or at least as they offered to prove, it was given for the purchase money of the lot. Under the facts, we do not see that this, even if true, is at all material. What counsel has in mind, and all that the cases cited by him hold, is that where the interest of a vendee, in possession under an executory contract of sale, has become subject to a lien for material or labor furnished or performed for him for the construction of a building thereon, and subsequently the vendor, in performance of the executory contract, executes a conveyance to the vendee, and at the same time takes back a mortgage for the unpaid purchase money, the mechanics' lien will not displace or take precedence of the mortgage, which is but a continuation in another form of the vendors' lien. But in the present case Mrs. Little's mortgage, in point of time, in fact antedated the liens of the respondents. Hence the only question is whether, notwithstanding that mortgage was first in time, the liens of the materialmen should be given precedence, because at the time they attached the mortgage had not been recorded. We have approached this question with a desire, in the interests of apparent justice, to give the mechanics' liens the precedence, if it could be done consistently with legal principles; but we have been unable to find anything, in the Lien Law or elsewhere, that would justify us in doing so. It cannot be done by virtue of the statute relating to the registration of conveyances, for two reasons: First, under that statute (Gen. Stat. chap. 40, § 21) there is no obligation resting on a mortgagee to record his mortgage as against mechanics' liens. Its provisions do not apply to or extend to such liens. In the absence of any statute on the subject, we are relegated to the common law, by which a registry was not required, and would be unavailing for any purpose; the law imposing upon every one the burden of ascertaining, at his peril, the actual condition of the title. Oliver v. Davy, 34 Minn. 293; Rose v. Munie, 4 Cal. 173. But even if the Recording Act could be held to apply to mechanics' liens, the facts of this case would not bring the respondents within the protection of its provisions—first, because their claims for liens were not filed until after the recording of Mrs. Little's mortgage; and, second, because there is neither evidence nor finding that the respondents did not have notice of the mortgage when they furnished the material for the buildings. The Lien Law is equally defective in not making any provision for such cases. Had the statute contained the provisions, found in many of the lien laws of other states, to the effect that mechanics' liens shall be preferred to any mortgage or other incumbrance, of which the lien-holder had no notice, and which was unrecorded at the time such liens attached, all difficulty would have been avoided. But our statute contains no such provision. It merely provides that the claim of the laborer or materialman shall be a lien "on the right, title, and interest of the owner in the land." There is no chance for giving respondents' liens a preference, under section 5 of the Act, for that section expressly excepts bona fide prior mortgages. Under this state of the law, we see no way by which the decision of the trial court can be sustained giving the respondents' liens a preference over the Little mortgage. Of course, there may be cases where the holder of the unrecorded mortgage might be estopped by his conduct from asserting it as against lien claimants, but no such state of facts appears here. It is surprising, in view of all that has been said by the real or pretended friends of labor as to the importance of a lien law, that a carefully prepared statute on the subject has never been gotten up. Most of the enactments have been crude and imperfect affairs, often including some drastic provisions in utter disregard of the rights of owners and mortgagees, but at the same time lacking some very important provisions necessary for the proper protection of mechanics and materialmen. Many of their provisions have also often been so obscure and ambiguous that their construction involved much litigation, the cost of which usually falls on the very class for whose benefit such statutes are designed. The result has been that the courts have been often blamed for not doing what they have no power to do, but what the Legislature ought to have done, viz., to enact a better law. Inasmuch as the case was evidently tried and decided upon a wrong theory of the law, we shall merely order a new trial of the issues between respondents and Esther B. Little, instead of directing judgment in her favor upon the present findings.

3. The court below held that plaintiffs' lien was superior, and the liens of the other respondents inferior, to the mortgage of the building and loan association, and ordered two sales of the property,—one subject to the lien of that mortgage, and the other free of all incumbrances, including that mortgage. This is assigned as error. As the building and loan association is not a party to this appeal, of course nothing can be done that would affect its rights under the decision of the trial court; but inasmuch as in any event there has to be a sale of the entire property free of the lien of the mortgage, its rights will not be affected by a modification of the order of the court directing two sales. Two sales of the property are wholly unnecessary, and will only lead to confusion worse confounded. There should be but one sale, and that of the entire property, and the proceeds distributed among all lienholders, including the building and loan association, according to their priority. For the reason already suggested, the correctness of the decision of the district court as to order of priority of respondents' liens, either as between themselves or as to the building and loan association, is not involved in this appeal. It may be remarked, however, that if our statute contained a provision similar to that found in many other states, as, for example, California (Code Civ. Proc. § 1186), it would obviate a very embarrassing question, which might have been raised in this case, and which was somewhat discussed in Finlayson v. Crooks (Minn.) 49 N. W. Rep. 898, 645.

Order reversed, and new trial ordered as to the second claim of Smith & Co., (material for the barn), and also as to the issues between the respondents and the appellant Esther B. Little.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT

GERMAN AMERICAN INSURANCE CO., Appt., v. COMMERCIAL FIRE INSURANCE CO.

(.....Ala.....)

1. The existence of brick partitions extending above the roof and dividing a building into stores or sections will not constitute each section a separate building or the goods therein a separate risk within the meaning of a reinsurance contract limiting the amount of insurance to be placed on any one "building or risk," if all the sections are inclosed by a common exterior wall and are all under one management and devoted to the same use while the floors of the different stories are on the same level and connected by large doors through the partitions.
2. There is no presumption of knowledge on the part of an insurance company doing a general business throughout the United States of a custom or usage as to what constitutes a "building" or "risk" which is peculiar to a city in a state foreign to its domicile, so as to make the custom an element of its contracts relating to property in such city without proof that it had such knowledge.
3. Failure of one insurance company to object to risks contained in schedules sent to it by another company, a certain amount of whose risks it has made a compact to reinsure, will not amount to an acquiescence on which the latter can rely in case they are not covered by the compact, since reliance may be placed on the good faith of the other company and its acting within the contract without the necessity of making a personal investigation of the property covered by each schedule.

NOTE.—For notes on custom as part of contract, see Newhall v. Appleton (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 859; Smith v. Clews (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 302; MacCluskey v. Klosterman (Or.) 10 L. R. A. 755; Conestoga Cigar Co. v. Finke (Pa.) 13 L. R. A. 438, 16 L. R. A.

4. Notice that three stores belonging to the same person are all located at the foot of the same street is not notice that they are all in the same building.
5. Claiming exemption from liability for a loss on one ground will not prevent an insurance company from subsequently setting up another defense based upon facts of which, solely through the negligence of the insured, it was ignorant at the time of making its first defense.

(May 17, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Montgomery City Court in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a contract reinsuring certain fire risks which had been taken by the plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Watts & Son for appellant.

Messrs. Tompkins & Troy, for appellee:

The agent for placing the liability upon the principal owed to that principal the highest degree of good faith. It was the duty of appellant to disclose all of the facts affecting the risk.

Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co. 107 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 387; Morgan v. Hardy, 16 Neb. 427.

Storerooms situate as these were constitute one and the same risk.

Hochstadler v. State, 73 Ala. 24; Carr v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 2 Mo. App. 486; Sampson v. Security Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 49; Cargill v. Millers & Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. 33 Minn. 90; Blake v. Exchange Mut. Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 12 Gray, 265; Fair v. Manhattan Ins. Co. 112 Mass. 320.

The evidence wholly fails to make out a case in which a custom changes the meaning of the word "warehouse" from its ordinary and legal signification:

1st. It does not show how long the alleged custom had existed.

2d. It shows a custom confined to the city of New York.

3d. The intention of the parties to the contract in limiting the risk of appellee to a maximum line of $5,000 on goods in any one warehouse is clear and not indeterminate, therefore there is no need to introduce evidence of such a custom to explain that intention; and

4th. No custom can be established to vary or explain the terms of a contract the effect of which would be to tempt parties to acts of dishonesty, wrong, or bad faith as this would in such a case as the one at bar.

Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Kolb, 73 Ala. 396; Wilkinson v. Williamson, 76 Ala. 163; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 596, 51 Am. Rep. 489; Smith v. Rice, 56 Ala. 417; Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446; Eager v. Atlas Ins. Co. 14 Pick. 141, 25 Am. Dec. 363; Susquehanna F. Co. v. White, 66 Md. 444, 59 Am. Rep. 186; Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 417; Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464; Fuller v. Robinson, 86 N. Y. 806; Bradley v. Wheeler, 44 N. Y. 495; Paine v. Howells, 90 N. Y. 660.

The burden of proving notice was on appellant.

Robinson v. Levi, 81 Ala. 184.

McClellan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by the German American Insurance Company against the Commercial Fire Insurance Company on a contract by which, it is alleged, the defendant reinsured certain risks taken by plaintiff on property in New York city. The property was destroyed by fire, the loss paid by plaintiff, and reimbursement to the pro rata extent of reinsurance is now sought to be enforced from defendant. Trial below was had by agreement without jury, the issues of fact were found for defendant, and judgment went accordingly. This appeal presents for review the conclusions of the city judge on the evidence and the judgment rendered. There is no material controversy as to what the facts are. The contracts of reinsurance sued on were made in this way: The Commercial Fire Insurance Company, on May 26, 1887, signed, and mailed to the German American Insurance Company what is known as a "reinsurance compact," which was duly received and acknowledged by the latter. This compact, with its attached lists and schedules, authorized the German American Company to reinsure itself in the Commercial Company, within certain limitations as to classes and amounts of risks, by entries thereon or therein, followed by certain ad interim and final reports to the reinsuring company, setting forth the term, amount, and class of risk, rate of premium, and location of property insured. Among other risks which the compact, as modified by subsequent correspondence, authorized the German American Company to reinsure in or "cede" to the Commercial Company were nonfiber goods in brick stores or warehouses, in amounts not to exceed $5,000 in any one building or risk. Claiming to proceed under this authorization, and within its limitations, the German American Company made and reported entries on the compact aggregating $12,500 on nonfiber goods stored in Rossiter's stores Nos. 1, 2, and 3, severally. The first entry and report was of $2,000 of reinsurance on goods in "Rossiter's store No. 2, foot W. 60th St., N. Y. city;" the next, of $3,000 on goods in "Rossiter's store No. 1, N. Y. city;" third, of $2,000 on goods in "Rossiter's store No. 1, N. Y. city;" fourth, of $3,000 on goods to "Rossiter's store No. 2, N. Y. city;" and last, of $2,500 on goods in "Rossiter's store No. 3, N. Y. city." Previous to these entries and reports, plaintiff, for the purpose of inducing defendant to increase its maximum limit on amount of reinsurance on storage stores, had sent the latter a schedule showing the amounts of net risks it carried on a number of such stores in New York city and elsewhere, and among the other items in this list is the following: "Rossiter's stores, ft. 60th St., N. Y. city, $30,000."

On proof of loss, defendant paid plaintiff about $5,000, and refused to pay the balance claimed under the reinsurance contracts, amounting to something over $6,000, on the ground that, as it insisted, Rossiter's stores Nos. 1, 2, and 3 constituted but one building or risk, within the meaning of the said reinsurance compact, and, in consequence, plaintiff was without authority to bind defendant beyond the maximum limit of $5,000 on goods stored in said stores, and its entries and reports as to and of all reinsurance in excess of this limitation were abortive and invalid. It cannot be doubted, on the evidence found in this record, consisting of minute descriptions and diagrams of Rossiter's stores Nos. 1, 2, and 3, that they, in the ordinary sense of the term, constituted "one building." It appears that the building was five stories in height; that the outer wall was common to each of the stores; that the several floors were, respectively, on the same level; that, while two partition walls divided the building into three rooms or compartments on each floor, there were doors about eight feet square in each of these walls between the several compartments in each of the five stories; that the whole structure was under one management, and devoted to the same uses, the storage of nonfibrous merchandise; and that the partition doors were used for the purposes of the passage of persons and the removal of goods from one store to another or others on each floor. It was also shown that double iron shutters were provided for closing these apertures in the partition walls; that these were generally closed; and that the partition walls extended five feet above the roof. It is not seriously, and cannot be successfully, contended that, upon this showing the three stores in question were distinct buildings, or that they did not constitute "one" and the same building, as that word is commonly understood. Fair v. Manhattan Ins. Co. 112 Mass. 820; Blake v. Exchange Mut. Ins. Co. 12 Gray, 265; Cargill v. Millers & Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. 88 Minn. 90; Sampson v. Security Ins. Co. 188 Mass. 49; Carr v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 2 Mo. App. 466; Hochstadler v. State, 78 Ala. 24.

It is equally manifest, we think, that these stores, or the goods stored therein, constituted but "one" risk, in the sense of the compact under consideration, unless the word is to take on a different significance from the usage and custom proved in this case, and to be presently considered. It is most clear from the record before us that the Commercial Company conceived it to be of the utmost importance to it that its exposure to loss under the reinsurance compact should in no case exceed $5,000. When the German American Company advised and requested it to raise its maximum list from $2,500 to $7,500 or $10,000 on nonfibrous storage, it replied that "we think that the line suggested by you is rather too large for us. We have, however, concluded to authorize an increase on the 'nonfiber' stores to $5,000; that on 'fiber' to remain $2,500, as heretofore." And the purpose of the company evidently was to guard against the possibility or probability, in case of any loss, of losing in any one fire more than it could afford to lose, having in view its relatively small capitalization and assets. The means adopted to effectuate this purpose was the stipulation of the compact against being bound beyond a stated sum on any one building or risk. How this means could accomplish the end to which it was addressed, if the stipulation be construed so as to admit of reinsurance to three times the maximum limit, upon the mere circumstance that there are three rooms, stores, or compartments in the building proposed to be insured, while the probable consequence of a fire in any one of these stores would be the destruction of the contents of all three of them, and where the risks arising from the possibility of misconduct on the part of the insured would, of course, be equally incident to the goods in all and each one of the stores, it is difficult to perceive. With the probability that a fire starting in either of the stores would consume the contents of the others, and the certainty that incendiarism by the owner for the purpose of collecting insurance money—a risk which must be reckoned in all fire insurance—would go to the destruction of all the property kept by him in the building, there is every reason for the conclusion that the Commercial Fire Insurance Company intended the limitation to $5,000 to obtain with respect to property stored in different compartments, rooms, or stores in the same building, as in the case at bar; and we accordingly hold that plaintiff was without authority to reinsure itself in the defendant corporation on merchandise stored in Rositter's stores in any sum beyond $5,000, if the reinsurance compact is to be interpreted according to the ordinary significance of the term "building or risk."

It is proved in this case, however, that, according to an established and universal usage 16 L. R. A.

or custom of the business of insurance in the city of New York, each one of Rositter's stores, numbered 1, 2, and 3, was a distinct building for all the purposes of insurance, and that risks taken upon goods in them severally are distinct and separate risks. So that, if this usage is to obtain in respect of the compact of reinsurance involved here, as claimed for plaintiff, the several contracts of reinsurance entered and reported to the defendant, being each within the latter's maximum list when measured separately as to each store, are within the limitation of $5,000 stipulated for, and therefore valid and binding on the Commercial Company. While it is well settled at this day that the existence of a usage in respect of the subject-matter of a contract may have the effect of giving to its terms definitions which would not otherwise attach to them, the doctrine rests, except in particular instances, solely upon the theory that the parties in entering into the compact had such usage in mind, stipulated with reference to it, and hence made it a part of their contract; and whether a usage, in a given case, is thus to be taken as a part of the contract, whether the parties had it in view in their negotiations, and intended that their agreement should be read and construed with reference to and in the light of such usage, is always a question of fact. And as, in the nature of things, no man can be said to have contracted with reference to a fact—to have had a fact in mind—of which he was ignorant, usage relied on by one party to give color to the obligations of another, or to impose a liability which does not arise on the ordinary meaning of the terms of their contract, must be shown to have been known to such other party. This is usually done by proof of an established usage, certain, uniform, and reasonable in character, and of such general acceptance, and consequent notoriety, as that a prima facie presumption of knowledge of it on the part of him who is sought to be affected by it arises, and, unrebutted, affords the predicate for the further presumption, of a conclusive nature, that he considered it in the particular dealing to which it is incident, and made it as much a part of his contract as if it had therein been specifically referred to. In the case at bar the onus was on plaintiff to prove, not only that the usage relied on had been established and existed at the time of the contract, but also that the defendant had knowledge of it, and therefore is to be held to have contracted with reference to it. There is no direct evidence of such knowledge. The inference of knowledge is sought to be rested alone on proof of the establishment, existence, and prevalence of the usage in the city of New York. Had both contracting parties been domiciled in that city, and entered into a reinsurance compact solely with reference to risks located there, there would be some ground to say that defendant would be held prima facie to a knowledge of the usage. But the domicile of defendant was in Alabama, and the reinsurance compact contemplated and provided for the taking of risks, not only in the city of New York, but throughout the country. Not only so, but the correspondence between the parties demonstrates that risks were actually incurred under the compact in a number of other towns and titles. It cannot be supposed that the Commercial Company had knowledge of the local usages incident to the business of insurance in each of these numerous localities, and so contracted with reference to them that its obligations, expressed in clear and unambiguous terms, imported a liability for one sum on a given state of facts in New York city, another sum on the same facts in Brooklyn, another in Litchfield, Conn., yet another in Chicago, and so on ad infinitum. The law to the contrary is well settled that proof of such local usages will not raise up a presumption of a knowledge of their existence on the part of one engaged generally in the business to which they pertain in a certain city, at least where the domicile of the party sought to be charged is elsewhere; or, in other words, that, in order to create even a prima facie presumption that a party has knowledge of a usage incident to a particular business about which he is engaged, the usage must be shown to be a general one in that business, in such sort as that it would be unreasonable to suppose he was ignorant of it. This plaintiff has failed to do. No general usage is proved, or attempted to be proved, and the defendant cannot be held beyond the terms of its compact dissociated from any effect the alleged usage is claimed to have upon those terms. Cobb v. Lime Rock F. & M. Ins. Co. 58 Me. 326; Lawson, Usages & Customs, §§ 17, 25-27; Hill v. Hibernia Ins. Co. of Ohio, 10 Hun, 26; East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 598, 51 Am. Rep. 489; Smith v. Rice, 56 Ala. 417; Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446; Bradley v. Wheeler, 44 N. Y. 495; Child v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. 3 Sandf. 26; Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464; Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417.

The presumption of knowledge of an established usage, which arises upon proof of its generality in the business or trade to which it is incident, is, as we have indicated, generally speaking, only prima facie, and hence rebuttable by direct evidence of a want of such knowledge. Walls v. Bailey, supra. With reference to contracts of insurance, there is this exception to the doctrine just stated: that insurance companies are under such a duty to inform themselves of the usages of the particular business insured as that they will not be heard to deny such knowledge. This only means, however, that where a general usage in business is proved, a usage of the character that raises up the prima facie presumption of knowledge in ordinary cases, the insurer, in view of the duty resting on him to acquaint himself with the general usages of the business, will not be let in to rebut the presumption, which, in consequence, becomes a conclusive one as to him. But an insurer is no more bound than any other party by proof of usages obtaining to a greater or less extent, territorially or otherwise, in respect of the business insured, which are not general in their nature, but obtain only in certain localities, or not substantially in all instances of the particular business. So that if it were conceded here that, had the proof established the New York City usage in question as incident to the insurance business generally throughout the territory contemplated in this reinsurance compact, the defendant would not be heard to assert its ignorance of it, or to deny that it contracted with reference to it, yet the predicate for this quasi estoppel is wholly lacking, in that the proof adduced is not of such general usage, but only of one that is local and peculiar to the city of New York,—a particular usage or custom, the existence of which raises no presumption at all that defendant had knowledge of it. Lawson, Usages & Customs, §§ 17, 19, 26.

It is further contended for plaintiff that, conceding the reinsurance compact did not authorize more than $5,000 of insurance on Rossiter's stores, yet the defendant acquiesced in, and thus ratified, plaintiff's entries, involving a risk of $12,500, and thereby validated these entries. Of course, this contention must be rested on the assumption that defendant was advised of the location and character of Rossiter's three stores, and knew or must be held to have known, that they in fact constituted but one building, since acquiescence from which ratification may be inferred can only be predicated of a failure to disaffirm a transaction after the party is advised or put on notice in respect of the facts which entitled him to repudiate it. We do not find from this record that the Commercial Fire Insurance Company had knowledge or notice of the fact that these several stores constituted one and the same building until after the loss had occurred and demand had been made on it for its pro rata of the insurance. The relations existing between the two companies were of a fiduciary character. The German American Company was, in a sense, the agent of the Commercial Company for the purpose of re-insuring itself in the latter. The utmost candor and good faith on the part of the former were of the essence of the relations created by the compact. The Commercial Company was justified in the assumption that the German American Company, in fixing liabilities on the former to insure to its own benefit, would not abuse the confidence incident to the relation existing between them, but would strictly adhere to and be guided by the terms of the compact, and not exceed the limits of liability thereby imposed. It had a right, therefore, to assume that it would not be entered in a sum greater than $5,000 on any one building or risk, and to act upon this assumption until it was advised to the contrary. It was not incumbent on the insurer to seize upon pretexts or slight indications to indulge suspicions leading to inquiries as to the good faith of its quasi agent; and it does not lie in the mouth of the German American Company to say that, "notwithstanding the trust and confidence inherent in our contractual relations, you should have been on the alert, as if anticipating malversation on our part, to institute minute inquiry into the transactions between us, with a view to discovering that we had violated the instructions you had laid down for our guidance." Conceding, therefore, that the Commercial Company must be held to notice that Rossiter's stores Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were located at the foot of Sixtieth street, from the casual mention of them as being there situated in the list of July 31, 1888, (which was forwarded to defendant for a purpose entirely distinct from that of giving advice of the location of any one of the numerous buildings mentioned therein,) and this notwithstanding there is what seems to be a pregnant omission from the reports of reinsurance of all specification as to the location of two of these stores, yet we do not conceive that, under the circumstances, this notice that these stores were at the foot of a certain street carried either constructive or actual knowledge to defendant that the stores were in and constituted a single building. They might well have been the three stores next the end of the street, and yet have also been distinct buildings; and the defendant, in view of the stipulations of the compact which it had a right to suppose plaintiff would observe, was justified in assuming that they were in fact separate buildings and risks, although it may have known they were all at the foot of Sixtieth street. On the same considerations, our further conclusion is that defendant is not prejudiced in this case by the fact that it at first placed its exemption in part from the asserted liability on another ground. This could not have been a waiver of the defense now relied on, because the Commercial Company, at the time of advancing the other defense, was not advised of the facts on which this one depended, and its ignorance of them was due, not to its own negligence, but to that of the plaintiff. We find no error in the record, and the judgment of the City Court is affirmed.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT

MT. MANSFIELD HOTEL CO.

v.

William P. BAILEY.

(.....Vt.....)

The liability of the indorser of a note for annual interest which becomes due before the maturity of the note, is dependent upon a prior demand of the maker.

(March 5, 1892.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Lamoille County Court in favor of defendant in an action brought to compel defendant as indorser of a promissory note to pay annual interest which had accrued and remained unpaid upon the note. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. P. K. Gleed for plaintiff.

Mr. George Wilkins for defendant.

Tyler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears by the statement of facts that George Doolittle and Mrs. E. J. Doolittle promised to pay the defendant, William P. Bailey, or order, $5,000, as their five promissory notes should respectively become due, and the interest thereon annually. The notes are dated April 1, 1886, are for $1,000 each, and payable 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 years from their date. The plaintiff, as the indorsee of the notes, seeks to recover of the defendant, as indorser, the first three years' interest upon them, without demand of the makers, and notice to the defendant of the makers' default of payment. The defendant's counsel contends (1) that the indorser cannot in any event be compelled to pay the interest as it annually falls due; that his conditional liability does not become absolute until the notes respectively mature, and then only after demand and notice; (2) that, if the interest is collectible of the indorser as it annually accrues it is after the usual measures have been taken to make him chargeable. The general rule of law relative to the respective liabilities of the maker and indorser of a promissory note is well defined. The promise of the maker is absolute to pay the note upon presentment at its maturity. The promise of the indorser is conditional that if, when duly presented, it is not paid by the maker, he, the indorser, will, upon due notice given him of the dishonor, pay the same to the indorsee or other holder. It seems clear that the indorser is not liable for the annual payment of the interest without performance of the conditions by the holder. If he were thus liable, his relation to the note would be like that of a surety or a joint maker, and his promise, instead of being conditional, would be absolute as to the payment of the interest. This is contrary to the general statement of the law that his liability is conditional. The relation of principal does not exist between him and the maker. They are not coprincipals. Their contracts are separate, and they must be sued separately, at common law. Randolph, Com. Paper, § 789. The maker has received the money of the indorser, and in consideration thereof promises to repay it according to the terms of the note; and, if he fails to pay, his contract is broken, and he is liable for the breach. The contract of the indorser is a new one, made upon a new consideration moving from the indorsee to himself. His undertaking is in the nature of a guaranty that the maker will pay the principal and interest according to the terms of the note. His liability is fixed upon the maker's default upon demand, and notice to him of such default. This new contract cannot be construed as an absolute one to pay the interest without default of or demand upon the maker. The promise cannot be absolute as to the payment of interest when it is clearly conditional as to the payment of the principal. It is held that, though the annual interest upon a promissory note may be collected of the maker as it falls due, it is not separated from the principal, so that the recovery of it is barred by the Statute of Limitations, until the recovery of the principal is thus barred. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 463, 47

NOTE.—The above decision of an important question in the law of negotiable paper seems to be the first adjudication upon it notwithstanding the 16 L. R. A.

numerable indorsements of negotiable instruments which are annually made. The case must be regarded accordingly as one of leading importance.

See also 35 L. R. A. 381.

Am. Dec. 697. The holder of a note with interest payable annually loses no rights against the parties to it, whether makers or indorsers, by neglecting to demand interest; and he has the election to do so, or wait and collect it with the principal, for it is regarded as an incident of the principal. National Bank of North America v. Kirby, 108 Mass. 497. But it is so far an independent debt that he may maintain an action against the makers for it as it annually accrues, or allow it to accumulate, and remain as a part of the debt until the note matures. Catlin v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 44. In the latter course the makers would be chargeable with interest upon each year's interest from the time it was due until final payment. Rules of the Court, 1 Aiken, 410; Austin v. Imus, 23 Vt. 286. It was said by the court in Taliaferro v. King, 9 Dana, 331: "The interest, by the terms of the covenant, is made payable at the end of each year, and is as much then demandable as if a specific sum equal to the amount of interest had been promised, and, in default of payment, as much entitles the plaintiff to demand interest upon the amount so due and unpaid. The fact that the amount so promised to be paid is described as interest accruing upon a larger sum, which is made payable at a future day, cannot the less entitle the plaintiff to demand interest upon the amount, in default of payment, as a just remuneration in damages for the detention or nonpayment." "It is true that at the maturity of the notes the defendant would be liable, as indorser, for both principal and interest, upon due demand and notice, although these measures had not been taken to make him chargeable as the interest fell due each year. Notice of the maker's default of payment of interest need not be given annually to the indorser in order to charge him with liability for interest when the note matures. This is so stated by the court in National Bank of North America v. Kirby, supra. In Howe v. Bradley, 19 Me. 81, it is held that when a note is made payable at some future period, with interest annually till its maturity, and no demand is made for the annual interest as it becomes due, or, if made, no notice thereof is given, the indorser, if duly notified of the demand and nonpayment when the note falls due is liable for the whole amount due, both principal and interest, that the obligation imposed by the law upon the holder is only to demand payment and give the required notice when the bill or note becomes payable. It is not held in this country that interest is subject to protest and notice, according to the law-merchant, in order to charge indorsers with it when the note matures. The usual consequence of omission to notify the indorser of the maker's default, namely, the release of the indorser, would not follow the omission to give him annual notice of such default. A note is not dishonored by a failure of the maker to pay interest. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Scott County Comrs. 14 Minn. 77 (Gil. 59), 100 Am. Dec. 196. note.

The defendant's counsel argues that it would be inconsistent to hold the indorser liable for interest, which is a mere increment of the principal, until his liability is established to pay the sum out of which the interest springs; that there may be defenses to the note at its maturity which will release the maker, and consequently the indorser, or that the indorser may then be released by neglect of demand and notice. On first impression it might seem inconsistent that the maker should be compelled to pay interest before his liability has been fixed to pay the principal; but that is his contract. It is also argued that the fact that the interest, when uncollected, is an incident of the debt, so that, as it annually falls due, demand and notice are not necessary in order to charge either the maker or the indorser with liability to pay it when the note matures, is ground for holding that the indorser is not liable for interest until he is made liable for the principal. The question is whether the indorser, by the act of indorsement, promises to pay anything on the note till its maturity, at which time he clearly may be made liable for both principal and interest. The note bears upon its face an absolute promise by the maker to pay the principal when it becomes due, and the interest thereon annually. His promise is twofold. It is as absolute to pay the interest at the end of each year as to pay the principal at the end of the time specified. Now, what is the nature of the contract which the indorser makes with the indorsee? His contract is not in writing, like that of the maker, but his name upon the note is evidence that he has received value for it, and also of an undertaking on his part that it shall be paid according to its tenor. When he indorses it and delivers it to the indorsee he directs the payment to be made to the latter, and, in effect, represents that the maker has promised to pay certain sums of money according to the terms of the note,—that is, the principal at maturity and the interest annually; that, if the maker fails to pay on demand, he, the indorser, will pay on due notice. His conditional promise is concurrent with the absolute promise of the maker. His liability to pay interest and principal, as each respectively falls due, arises from his contract. It is his contract that he will make payment whenever the maker is in default, and he, the indorser, is duly notified thereof.

It is true that interest is an incident, an increment of the principal, and that the holder may wait for it until his note matures, and then collect it with the principal. He may, however, by the contract, collect it as it falls due of the maker, and, upon the latter's default, of the indorser. The courts of England have never recognized the American doctrine that interest is a mere incident, an outgrowth of the principal, and in many cases follows and is recoverable as such without an express contract. Until 37 Hen. VIII. chap. 9, it was unlawful to demand interest even upon a contract to pay it. Since the case of De Havilland v. Bouverbank, 1 Campb. 50, interest has been allowed in England upon express contracts therefor, and not otherwise. Where there is such a contract, interest stands like the principal in respect to the rights and liabilities of an indorser. Sedgw. Damages, 283; Selleck v. French, 1 Conn. 32, 6 Am. Dec. 185, note. In Jennings v. Brush Co., reported in 20 Can. L. J. 361, in a learned opinion by McDowgall, J., it was held that, where there was an express contract to pay interest, annually or semi-annually, it was not different from a contract to pay an installment of the principal itself, and that notice to the indorser of the maker's default was necessary to charge the indorser with it. In that case the indorser was released from payment of the first two half-yearly installments of interest for want of demand and notice. While we adhere to the doctrine laid down in Grafton Bank v. Doe, supra, that interest is, in general, an incident of the debt, it is consistent to hold that, where the indorser is himself a party to the original contract to pay interest annually, as in the case at bar, by his indorsement he guarantees the performance of that contract. Any other holding would make the indorser liable for only a part of the maker's contract. The case of Codman v. Vermont & C. R. Co., 16 Blatchf. 165, has been brought to our attention. The trustees and managers of the Vermont Central Railroad Company and the Vermont & Canada Railroad Company issued notes to the amount of $1,000,000, in sums of $1,000 each, payable to the defendant company in twenty years from their date, with interest semi-annually, on presentation of the interest coupons, made payable to bearer and attached to the notes. On each note was this indorsement, signed by the treasurer of the defendant, under its seal: "For value received, the Vermont and Canada Railroad Company hereby guaranty the payment of the within note, principal and interest, according to its tenor, and order the contents thereof to be paid to the bearer." The coupons were not indorsed. The notes were put on the market, and the plaintiff purchased fifty of them, and subsequently, after due demand, notice and protest, brought this suit to recover the amount of two coupons on each of his notes, the notes themselves not having matured. Without passing upon the question whether the guaranty was negotiable and available to the plaintiff as a remote holder, Wheeler, J., among other questions that arose in the case, decided that the indorsement was a contract of indorsement running to the bearer, and that demand, notice and protest fixed the liability of the indorser to pay the coupons, and gave judgment for plaintiff for the amount of the coupons. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that the Statute of Limitations begins to run upon interest coupons payable annually or semi-annually from the time they respectively mature, although they remain attached to the bonds which represent the principal debt. Amy v. Dubuque, 58 U. S. 470, 25 L. ed. 228. Where the indorser is the payee on the note, there would seem to be no difference in his liability in respect to interest, whether the maker's promise to pay it is contained in the body of the note or in interest coupons not indorsed, the notes to which they are attached being indorsed, and the coupons being mentioned in the notes; but it is unnecessary to decide that question here. Upon the facts found by the county court this action cannot be maintained, for the reason that the plaintiff never fixed the defendant's liability to pay the three years' accrued interest. It does not even appear that the makers refused payment of it or that they were requested to pay it before this suit was brought; therefore nothing is due from the defendant to the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

16 L. R. A.

Ross, Ch. J.:

I concur in the disposal made of this case, and in most of the grounds and reasoning of the opinion. But I do not see my way clear to concur in holding that an indorser upon a promissory note, payable on time, with the interest annually, can be made chargeable for the payment of the interest before he can be and is charged with the payment of the principal. By placing his name on the back of the note as an indorser, without making any limitation upon his indorsement, he guarantees its payment upon condition that the indorsee, when the time named in the note for its payment arrives, shall present it to the maker and demand its payment, and, if the maker fails to make payment, shall seasonably notify him of such failure. When this is done, the indorser promises to pay whatever of principal and interest is then due upon the note. This condition attaches primarily to the principal of the note. I think it attaches to the interest only as it becomes a part of the principal. It seems to me to be illogical, and pressing the indorser's conditional undertaking beyond its proper scope and office, to hold that he can have his liability fixed to pay for the use or legal rental of the principal before his liability to pay the principal is fixed. Interest is legal damage, fixed usually by statute, for the detention and use of money. As soon as the money is due and payable the law implies damage for its detention and use. It may also arise from the contract for the detention and use of the principal before it is payable by the terms of the contract. When stipulated to be paid annually, it may be collected from the maker of the note at the end of each year, because such is his contract. It is an incident and outgrowth from the principal. The promise to pay it, whether implied or expressed, is a dependent promise. It is attached to and arises from the promise to pay the principal. When the interest is stipulated to be paid annually, and before the principal is payable, the maker, when sued for the annual interest, because his promise to pay it is dependent upon his promise to pay the interest, may set up any defense to the suit for recovering the annual interest which he could if the suit were for the recovery of the principal, such as fraud in the inception of the note, or want or failure of consideration, or duress, or that his liability for the principal is conditional, the terms of which have not been complied with. If he defeats the action, it will estop the holder from recovering the principal when due, and vice versa. In 1 Herman, Estoppel, 231, it is said: "So, in an action for interest due on a bond, a judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of interest claimed will be conclusive evidence in an action on the bond, and estop the defendant from alleging fraud, for the reason that it was a defense which was available in the former suit and the presumption is that it was so used."—citing French v. Howard, 14 Ind. 455; Van Dolsen v. Abendroth, 11 Jones & S. 470; Preble v. Portage County Suprs. 8 Biss. 358; Edgell v. Sigerson, 26 Mo. 588; Cleveland v. Croviston, 98 Ind. 81, 47 Am. Rep. 387.

The opinion recognizes this intimate, attached, and dependent relation of the promise to pay the interest annually to the promise to pay the principal, from which the interest springs. It recognizes that the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run on such promise to pay interest annually until the principal falls due, in accordance with Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 468. This must be because, until severed by enforced collection or payment, interest is but an incident and dependent of the principal. It also recognizes this relation in holding that the indorsee may allow the interest to accumulate, and may fix the indorser's liability to pay it, by a proper demand, default, and notice in regard to the principal when that falls due. This is because liability for the principal carries its dependencies. I concur in these holdings. They are supported by the decisions cited in the opinion. But they rest, and, in my judgment, can rest, only on the basis that the promise to pay the interest annually, both for its consideration and enforcement, is dependent upon the promise to pay the principal. The opinion also holds that the liability incurred by the indorsement is conditional; that that condition attaches to the entire note; and that the liability of the indorser must be fixed by demand, default, and notice in regard to the interest payable from the maker yearly, as well as in regard to the principal. It then seems to conclude that, because the indorsee can lawfully demand and collect of the maker, whose promise to pay the principal is absolute, upon his dependent but yet absolute promise to pay the interest annually, he can, by proper demand, default, and notice, collect such annual interest of the indorser whose promise and liability to pay the principal is conditional, and cannot as yet be made absolute, and whose promise to pay the annual interest it has already held is dependent upon his promise to pay the principal, and, therefore, in my judgment, takes the condition attached to his liability to pay the principal. It is at this point that I fail to follow the reasoning of my associates. Here they assume—as I think—and proceed upon the basis that the indorser's implied promise to pay the annual interest is not dependent, but independent, like what it would be if it were an installment of the principal. The holdings in the opinion that the indorser's liability for the accrued annual interest may be made absolute by a proper demand, default, and notice in regard to the principal when it falls due, and that it may also be made absolute by a proper demand, default, and notice yearly, result in holding that the maker's promise to pay the interest annually which he indorses is both dependent upon and independent of his promise to pay the principal. I do not think that it has this double and inconsistent character, but only the former. If it be independent, must not demand and default be made, and notice given yearly, or the indorser become discharged? And if demand and default be made, and notice given annually, must not the Statute of Limitations begin to run from date of such demand? I think so. The result of giving this double character to the promise to pay interest annually will lead, I think, to some difficult legal problems. If the note is to mature at the end of twenty years, and the payee holds it, and allows the interest to accumulate for ten years, and then, having indorsed it, sells it, the indorsee must wait for the accumulated interest until the note falls due, because the maker's promise and the indorser's liability in regard to that interest is dependent upon the indorser's liability for the maker's promise to pay the principal, which is still conditional, and for that reason the indorser's liability to pay the accumulated interest is conditional, and will remain so until it is made absolute for the principal; but when the eleventh year's annual interest falls due, the indorsee may at once, by due demand, default, and notice, fix the indorser's liability to pay that year's interest, and may enforce its payment by suit, while the indorser's liability for the payment of the principal from which the year's interest springs, cannot for years be made absolute, and may never be. After the indorser's liability for the payment of the year's interest has thus become fixed by suit, on what legal principles governing res judicata could the indorser defend, in a suit brought, without further demand, default, and notice, at the maturity of the note, for the enforcement of the payment of the principal and the ten years' accumulated interest? The only decision relied upon for the holding of my associates is from 16 Blatchf. supra. I do not regard that in point. The guaranty was written, instead of implied. The relation of the indorser to the obligation was exceptional, it having been given by its receivers and managers. The interest was expressed in separate coupons, which, for some purposes, are treated as independent obligations. The Statute of Limitations runs on them generally from their maturity. Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 25 L. ed. 228. In this respect they are unlike the promise in the note to pay the interest annually, as held in Grafton Bank v. Doe, 19 Vt. 468. I do not think that the indorsee has the election to fix the indorser's liability for and recover of him annually such yearly interest, or to wait and fix it by proper demand, default, and notice in regard to the principal. I think his liability can only become absolute for the payment of the incident or outgrowth of the debt, when it becomes absolute for the payment of the principal from which that incident or outgrowth springs. The opinion on this branch of the case is made to rest upon the ground that the indorser's undertaking, on due demand and notice, is to make good to the indorsee any failure of the maker to perform the contract, and in that the maker has promised to pay the interest at the end of each year the indorser has likewise so undertaken upon proper demand and notice. But his implied contract, being conditional in regard to the payment of the principal, I think is conditional also as to any incident or outgrowth of the principal, so long as it is conditional in regard to the payment of the principal; and that he only becomes absolutely bound to pay the interest at the end of each year when he becomes bound absolutely to pay the principal. When so bound for the payment of the principal, then his obligation to pay the interest at the end of each year attaches, in respect both to the interest then accrued and the interest which may thereafter accrue. I would modify the opinion in the particular indicated.

16 L. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

HENDERSON, HULL & CO., Limited,
v.
PHILADELPHIA & READING R. CO.,
Appt.

(.....Pa.....)

Evidence that fires were repeatedly set out by sparks of unusual size from defendant's engines on that part of the line where the property was situated is admissible in an action to recover the value of property alleged to have been destroyed by fire set out by engines which cannot be identified, as tending to show general carelessness on the part of the company, when it has been shown that from the location of the destroyed property and the circumstances of the case the fire probably originated as alleged; but such proof must be confined to conditions existing at or about the time of the loss.

(October 26, 1891.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 3, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the loss of some of plaintiff's property which was alleged to have been destroyed by fire negligently set out by defendant's engines. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Gavin W. Hart, for appellant:

In order that the case may be given to the jury, there must appear affirmatively at least one of the following facts: (a) that the engine attacked as the cause of the fire threw unusual sparks at the time of passing; (b) such a state of facts in the absence of direct evidence as to its action when passing, that the only reasonable conclusion is that the engine caused the fire; (c) that the engine in fact had no spark-arrester, or one that was defective, such defect causing the fire; (d) there must be evidence, not only of a fire, but that the fire was caused by some negligent act, which act must be shown affirmatively, or be the only reasonable inference from the facts so shown.

Huyett v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 23 Pa. 873; Lackawanna & B. R. Co. v. Doak, 52 Pa. 379, 91 Am. Dec. 166; Frankford & B. Turnp. Co. v. Philadelphia T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 345; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stranahan, 79 Pa. 405; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hendrickson, 80 Pa. 182, 21 Am. Rep. 97; Pennsylvania Co. v. Watson, 81* Pa. 293; Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Lacey, 89 Pa. 458; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 35 Am. Rep. 644; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 341; Albert v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 98 Pa. 316; Gowen v. Glaser (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 109.

When the engines alleged to be in fault are seen, the inquiry is limited to them and them alone. If seen, their actions at any other time are immaterial, and the testimony must be confined to the time in question. Even evidence that the spark arresters are defective is immaterial, if there be no evidence that their action caused the fire.

NOTE.—The extensive review in the opinion of the court of the authorities on the question involved in the above case makes any further examination of them by annotation seem wholly superfluous.

16 L. R. A.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Yeiser, 8 Pa. 386; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Yeager, 73 Pa. 121; Erie R. Co. v. Decker, 78 Pa. 293; Jennings v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 93 Pa. 337; Reading & C. R. Co. v. Latsch, 93 Pa. 449; Albert v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 98 Pa. 318; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Page, 21 W. N. C. 52.

The engines in the present case were identified.

Erie R. Co. v. Decker, supra.

Mr. P. F. Rothermel, Jr., for appellee:

Negligence in the use of defective spark-arresters may be shown by evidence that the sparks thrown or emitted by the engine or engines were unusually large in size, or were the cause of unusual and frequent fires along the line of the road.

Huyett v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 23 Pa. 873; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stranahan, 79 Pa. 405; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hendrickson, 80 Pa. 182, 21 Am. Rep. 97; Pennsylvania Co. v. Watson, 81* Pa. 293; Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Lacey, 89 Pa. 458; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 35 Am. Rep. 644; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 341; Gowen v. Glaser (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 109.

When the identity of the engine which caused the fire is known to the plaintiff, such evidence of negligent construction or management must be confined to the particular engine in question, and no evidence is admissible as to the construction or management of other engines.

Erie R. Co. v. Decker, 78 Pa. 293; Jennings v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 93 Pa. 337; Albert v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 98 Pa. 316.

When the identity of the engine which caused the fire is not known to the plaintiff, and he cannot therefore prove it defective by direct evidence, the negligence of the defendant and inferentially the defect of the locomotive causing the fire may be shown by evidence tending to prove the habitual use of defective spark-arresters on the engines of the defendant road.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stranahan and Gowen v. Glaser, supra.

These last two cases are sustained by rulings in every state of the Union, where the subject has come before the courts for consideration.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 675; Wharton, Neg. § 871; Thomp. Neg. p. 159; Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. ed. 856; Piggot v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 3 C. B. 229; Sheldon v. Hudson River R. Co. 14 N. Y. 218, 67 Am. Dec. 155; Field v. New York Cent. R. Co. 33 N. Y. 389; Webb v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 889; Cleveland v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 42 Vt. 449; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 358; Smith v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 R. I. 22; Longabaugh v. Virginia City & T. R. Co. 9 Nev. 271.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover damages for the destruction by fire of the plaintiff's saw and door mill at Montgomery, in Lycoming county. The mill was situate between the Pennsylvania and Philadelphia & Reading Railroads; the former passing in front, and the latter in the rear, of the mill. The plaintiff alleges that the fire, which occurred on the 10th day of August, 1888, was communicated from sparks emitted by the defendant's engines. The fire was discovered about 6:15 o'clock P. M., in the upper part of the ventilator in the side next the defendant's road. The ventilator was about thirty feet high, and was within twenty-two feet of defendant's road. The watchman testifies that he came on duty that evening about fifteen minutes before shutting down time, and that the mill shut down at about 5:30 P. M. mill time, or 5:15 railroad time; that after he came on duty, and before the fire, two trains passed,—the first a coal train, going north, drawn by an engine which he could not identify; and, about fifteen minutes later, a freight train, drawn by engine No. 72. The defendant's evidence, however, showed that two other engines, drawing passenger trains, passed this point, one at 5:21 and the other at 5:23 P. M., neither of which engines was identified; indeed, it would seem that the plaintiff did not know they had passed the mill until the fact was developed in the defendant's testimony. The watchman testifies, further, that it was his duty to take notice of the engines as they passed, to see whether they threw fire from the stacks; that he did watch the engine in front of the coal train, and also engine No. 72, and that he saw no sparks; but that, as it was only 6 o'clock, and the sun was shining brightly, there may have been sparks emitted which he did not see. The only engine known and identified was No. 72. The defendant's contention was that the fire occurred in the pit containing the shavings and débris of the mill, which was immediately underneath the ventilator, and from which the shavings, etc., were supplied as fuel to the furnace. There is a large volume of testimony bearing upon the origin and cause of the fire, upon consideration of which the jury found the fire to have been caused by sparks from the defendant's locomotive engines.

The Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, at the time of the injury complained of, was an incorporated company, entitled to the right of way for its engines, etc., upon its track, as located in the rear of the plaintiff's mill. The company, in the proper use of its road, was therefore in the lawful pursuit of a legitimate business, and, if injury resulted to the plaintiff, it is damnum absque injuria. The company cannot be mulcted in damages except upon proof of negligence. Frankfort & B. Turnp. Co. v. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 345; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hendrickson, 80 Pa. 182, 21 Am. Rep. 97. No person is answerable in damages for the reasonable exercise of a right, when the act is done with a cautious regard for the rights of others, and where there is no ground for the charge of negligence, unskillfulness, or malice. For the ordinary risks the land-owner is compensated in the damages for right of way. Negligence therefore, is the gist of the action, and the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish it. And as all engines, whether provided with spark-arresters or not, emit sparks, the mere existence of a fire along the line of the road, caused by sparks from the company's engines, is not enough to fasten upon the company the charge either of negligence or want of skill. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Yeiser, 8 Pa. 866.

In Jennings v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 93 Pa. 340, this court, in a per curiam opinion, said: "To hold that the fact of the fire having taken place was prima facie evidence that the spark-arrester was defective, and therefore that the case ought to have been submitted to the jury, would be practically to hold railroad companies liable for all fires; for it is notorious that no spark-arrester has yet been invented to prevent all sparks, and a little spark may kindle as large a conflagration as a large one, it depending very much on the dryness or humidity of the atmosphere whether a spark will go out before reaching the ground, and whether what it reaches is in a condition to be easily ignited." See also Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 344; Reading & O. R. Co. v. Latshaw, 93 Pa. 449. While any ordinary fuel may be used in a locomotive engine for the generation of steam, the exercise of this right is subject to the restriction that the latest improvements in its management in general use shall be applied to it. Frankfort & B. Turnp. Co. v. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 345.

It is the duty of the railroad company in the use of an engine, to use such reasonable precaution as may prevent damage to the property of others. Hence in Lackawanna & B. R. Co. v. Doak, 52 Pa. 379, 91 Am. Dec. 166, where, although there was no direct evidence that the building was fired by the engine, or that sparks were emitted from it at the time, yet the building was near the railroad, and was discovered to be on fire when the train passed and it was shown that the engine had no spark-arrester, it was held the question of negligence was properly submitted to the jury. The effect of this ruling was to establish the principle in Pennsylvania that in case of loss by fire, fairly attributable to sparks from a railroad company's locomotive engine, the absence of a spark-arrester is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company. It is the duty of railroad companies to adopt the best precautions against danger in general use, and which experience has shown to be superior and effectual, and to avail themselves of every such known safeguard or generally approved invention to lessen the danger. But mechanical invention and skill have all provided a merely partial protection against the emission of sparks. The mere fact that sparks are thrown from the stack of an engine is not, therefore, evidence in itself of negligence. Where, however, sparks of large size are emitted, which carried to a long distance set fire to fields, fences, or buildings, it may, in the present condition of this branch of mechanical invention, well be inferred that the engine is not provided with a sufficient spark-arrester. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hendrickson, supra; Pennsylvania Co. v. Watson, 81* Pa. 293; Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Lacey, 89 Pa. 458; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 341. Therefore, in an action for the recovery of damages for the destruction of a dwelling seventy-seven feet distant from the railroad, where it was shown that sparks were seen flying from engines to a distance of more than fifty yards, and fences and fields were set on fire in several places about the same time, and at considerable distance from the road, the question of negligence, it was held, should have been submitted to the jury. Although the company gave evidence to the effect that their engines were in good order, and were all provided with good spark-arresters, the unusual distance to which the sparks were borne and the numerous fires they created, were held to be such evidence to the contrary effect as to have carried the case to the jury. Huyett v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 23 Pa. 378.

Where the injury complained of is shown to have been caused, or, in the nature of the case, could only have been caused, by sparks from an engine which is known and identified the evidence should be confined to the condition of that engine, its management and its practical operation. Evidence tending to prove defects in other engines of the company is irrelevant, and should be excluded. Erie R. Co. v. Decker, 78 Pa. 293. In the case cited, the house of the plaintiff, which stood near the track of the defendants' railroad, was destroyed by fire on the 6th of March, 1872. The plaintiff alleged that the fire originated from sparks thrown from locomotive engine No. 458, belonging to the defendants, which passed his house about the time the fire commenced, and that the throwing of the sparks was from the negligence of the defendants in not having their apparatus in proper order.

Mr. Justice Gordon, in the opinion of the court, says: "It appears from the evidence, and it was conceded in the argument, that the only locomotive that could have fired the premises in question was that numbered 458, in charge of Alfred Carpenter as engineer. It follows, therefore, that the condition of this engine and its management were all that were legitimately before the court. If it was properly constructed as to its furnace and smoke-stack, and was furnished with a spark-arresting grate of the proper character, the company would not be liable, though the building were burned by fire accidentally issuing from it. Lackawanna & B. R. Co. v. Doak, 53 Pa. 379, 91 Am. Dec. 166. If, then, this engine was in a proper condition, it mattered not that every other engine owned by the company was without the proper appliances for preventing the ejection of coals and sparks. On the other hand, if this engine was dangerous in this respect, it was of no consequence that all others upon the road were safe. Such being the case, it is manifest that all evidence going to prove defects in engines belonging to this company, other than the one alleged to have produced the injury complained of, was irrelevant to the issue pending, and should have been excluded."

So, in Albert v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 98 Pa. 316, where it appeared that the plaintiff's loss, if indeed it was caused at all by the defendant's negligence, was attributable entirely to the escape of sparks at a particular time from one of two particular engines, both of which were identified, evidence was held inadmissible on the part of the plaintiff, in order to prove defendant's negligence, to the effect that sparks of unusual size had been emitted for some time prior to the fire by defendant's engines generally. "The evidence below," said our Brother Paxson in that case, "established the fact that, if the plaintiff's property was destroyed by fire communicated by defendant's locomotive, it was done by engine No. 21 or engine No. 126, and by no others. Hence it is entirely clear that evidence that other engines, upon some other day, threw out an unusual amount of large sparks and live coals, was immaterial, and, if received, could only have confused, and might have misled, the jury; nor would it have been evidence to show that the spark-arresters on engines 21 and 126 were out of order." That is to say,—for the last sentence is, perhaps, a little obscure,—the fact that other engines, at other times, threw out an unusual amount of large sparks and live coals, would not have been evidence to show that the spark-arresters on engines 21 and 126 were out of order. To the same effect is Jennings v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 89 Md. 124; and other cases that might be cited.

Of course, the inquiry in all such cases is as to the existence or condition of the spark-arrester at the precise time of the injury; but, in order to make this practicable by proof that it was defective, or threw out sparks of unusual size, a reasonable latitude must be allowed to show its management and operation both before and after. The evidence, however, must be confined to its operation at or about the time of the occurrence. In Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Schultz, supra, it was shown that every day for two weeks a particular engine had been observed to throw out quantities of unusually large sparks, and had fired property along the line of the railroad. In Albert v. Northern Cent. R. Co., supra, it was shown that both engines then in question had done this for some time before the occurrence. To the same effect, also, is Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 85 Am. Rep. 644. Testimony tending to show that other fires were set by the same engine about the same time, however, is the proper rule, and is undoubtedly competent. Boyce v. Cheshire R. Co. 43 N. H. 627; Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. ed. 356. But when the loss or injury is shown to have been caused, or, according to the proof, may have been caused, by sparks from an engine unknown and unidentified, or by one of several engines, some of which are unknown and unidentified, then the rule of evidence is necessarily somewhat enlarged. The burden of proof in all such cases, in the first instance, is upon the plaintiff to show that the fire in question was communicated from the defendant's engines. "It devolves upon the plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the fire was communicated by sparks or cinders from the railway engines. It need not be shown that any particular engine was at fault, but it will be sufficient if the fire is proved to have been set by any engine passing over defendant's railway, and the evidence may be wholly circumstantial; as—First, that it was possible for fire to reach the plaintiff's property from the defendant's engines; and, second, facts tending to show that it probably originated from that cause, and from no other." 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 7. And, although the rule is otherwise in England and in many of the states, in Pennsylvania, as we have said, the additional burden is upon the plaintiff to prove negligence in the construction or management of the engine. It is not required that the fact be established by direct or positive proof. It, like any other fact, may be established by circumstantial evidence; and, on account of the great difficulty in proving negligence in such cases, any proper evidence from which negligence may be inferred is sufficient to throw the burden on the defendant. "A slight presumption of negligence, however, raised by the plaintiff's case," says Mr. Wharton in his Law of Evidence, (sec. 871,) "is sufficient to throw the burden of disproving negligence on the defendant. It is a mistake, as has been elsewhere shown, to suppose that negligence can be only proved by positive and affirmatory evidence. There may be no direct proofs of negligence, yet the way in which an injury is done may be such that negligence is the most probable hypothesis by which it can be explained; and when this is so, the defendant must disprove negligence by showing that he exercised care."

In Thompson on Negligence (p. 159) it is said: "The business of running railroad trains suggests a unity of management, and a general similarity in the construction of the engines. For this reason, and on account of the difficulty of proving negligence in these cases, as before pointed out, the admission of evidence as to other and distinct fires from the one alleged to have caused the injury is permitted. The rule is adopted in England, and prevails in all the states, with one, or possibly two, exceptions. More particularly, it may be stated as follows: That, in actions for damages caused by the negligent escape of fire from locomotive engines, it is competent for the plaintiff to show that, about the time when the fire in question happened, the trains which the company were running past the location of the fire were so managed, in respect to their furnaces, as to be likely to set on fire objects in the position of the property burned, or to show the emission of sparks or ignited matter from other engines of the defendant passing the spot upon other occasions, either before or after the damage occurred, without showing that they were under the charge of the same driver, or were of the same construction as the one occasioning the damage."

The rule is more precisely stated in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, (sec. 675,) as follows: "When the particular engine which caused the fire cannot be fully identified, evidence that sparks and burning coals were frequently dropped by engines passing on the same road upon previous occasions is relevant and competent to show habitual negligence, and to make it probable that the plaintiff's injury proceeded from the same quarter. If the engine which emitted the fire is identified, then evidence on either side as to the condition of other engines, and of their causing fires, has been held irrelevant, but not so if it is not fully identified."

In our own case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stronahan, 79 Pa. 405, the evidence was that, between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the plaintiff's barn, which was about 150 feet from the railroad, was discovered to be on fire. Two trains had passed about noon. The fire appeared to have commenced at the fence on the road, and burned over the field to the barn. The sparks falling set fire in many other places along the road. The engine from which the sparks were alleged to have been thrown was unknown and unidentified, and the plaintiff proposed to show by a witness, who lived nineteen miles distant on the line of the railroad, the extent to which the locomotives on that road going east, on or about the time of the occurrence, threw sparks from the smokestacks. The testimony was admitted. The witness testified that it was "a common occurrence for the engines to throw sparks, and set fire, for rods from the railroad track. They were from a pea to a walnut in size. It appeared worse sometimes than others. They were usually freight trains; sometimes passenger trains," etc. The admission of this testimony was assigned for error here. In a per curiam opinion, this court said: "This was not a case where a certain engine had thrown out the sparks which set fire to plaintiff's barn; but it was where the engine was unknown, yet the cause of the fire was clearly traced to the railroad track, and left the belief that some one of the engines of the defendants had emitted the coals which set the barn on fire. It therefore became necessary to establish the fact by such proof as rendered the belief a certain fact. This could be done, not by the proof that a certain engine emitted the sparks incessantly; for non constat that this particular engine had passed the plaintiff's premises that day. Hence it was necessary to permit the party to show that the emitting of coals and sparks in unusual quantities was frequent, and permitted to be done by a number of engines."

In Gowen v. Glaser (Pa.) 3 Cent. Rep. 109, the action was for damages for the destruction by fire of the plaintiff's rags, which were scattered in a field adjoining the defendant's road. The allegation was that they were set on fire by sparks from the defendant's engines, but it was not known by what engine. The offer made was as follows: To show that several engines on this road had insufficient sparks-catchers; that the engines of this road had repeatedly set fire to property and to vegetation along that part of the track very shortly before and very shortly after this occurrence; that sparks as large as a hickory nut escaped in large quantities from the engines, causing these fires; that, after this fire, what remained of the rags, and what was saved, were spread on the field, and watched day and night, and that they were set on fire repeatedly by the engines passing on this road. This offer was received to show by circumstantial evidence that the damage was done by some engine with an insufficient spark-arrester. The jury were to infer from the fact that many of the company's engines, about the time of this occurrence, shortly before and shortly after, emitted sparks of unusual size and quantity; that they were without sufficient spark-arresters; and that, upon consideration of all the evidence, the injury complained of resulted from some one of the engines thus imperfectly constructed. The offer was subsequently enlarged by adding to it a proposition to prove, not that the whole number of defendant's engines were defective, but that the defendant habitually used engines with defective spark-arresters. The offer, as a whole, was admitted, and in this court was assigned for error. In a per curiam opinion, this court held that there was no error in the admission of this offer.

In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Page (Pa.) 11 Cent. Rep. 424, the action was for burning the plaintiff's barn, 150 feet distant from the track. The evidence was that the company's trains had passed the barn shortly before the fire broke out, emitting cinders, smoke, and small sparks about the size of a pea. There was no evidence, direct or circumstantial, to justify the jury in finding that the sparks were of any larger size. It was further shown that the wind was blowing from the track towards the barn and that sparks had been known to have been blown that distance. It was not shown that any spark-arrester in use would effectually prevent the emission of sparks of this size. While the evidence was, perhaps, sufficient to satisfy the jury that sparks from the engine had caused the fire, there was no proof of any defect in the spark-arresters; on the contrary, it was shown they were in perfect condition. There was therefore no proof of negligence or mismanagement; and it was upon this ground that we said it would have been the duty of the court below, if a proper request had been made, to have instructed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant.

The same rule of evidence is announced in Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. ed. 356. The saw-mill, etc., of Richardson, the plaintiff, was burned on the 7th of June, 1870. The evidence tended to show that the fire was communicated from one of two engine belonging to the company,—the first, drawing a passenger train westerly, passing the mill about half past 1 o'clock in the afternoon; the other drawing a freight train easterly, passing it about 4 o'clock the same afternoon. One half to three fourths of an hour after the last mentioned train passed by the mill, the fire was discovered burning on the westerly end of a covered railroad bridge from which it was communicated to the saw-mill. The evidence of the plaintiff in error tended to show that the fire was not communicated by either of the engines complained of, but, on the contrary, from a constant fire at the end of their tram-way, about 163 feet down the stream, on the same bank of the river, maintained at the westerly end of the railroad bridge for the purpose of burning edgings, sticking, slabs, and other waste material from the saw-mill. After the company had rested its case, Richardson was allowed to prove that at various times during the same summer, before this fire occurred, some of the company's locomotives in an unusual manner scattered fire in passing the mill and bridge, without showing either that those which it was claimed communicated the fire in question were among the number, or that they were similar in their make, state of repair, or management to said locomotives. The engines were unknown and unidentified. Mr. Justice Strong, in ruling upon this question, said: "The third assignment of error is that the plaintiffs were allowed to prove, notwithstanding objection by the defendant, that at various times during the same summer, before the fire occurred some of defendant's locomotives scattered fire when coming past the mill and bridge, without showing that either of those which the plaintiffs claimed communicated the fire was among the number, and without showing that the locomotives were similar in their make, their state of repair, or management to those claimed to have caused the fire complained of. The evidence was admitted after the defendant's case had closed. But whether it was strictly rebutting or not, if it tended to prove the plaintiffs' case, its admission, as rebutting, was within the discretion of the court below, and not reviewable here. The question, therefore, is whether it tended in any degree to show that the burning of the bridge, and the consequent destruction of the plaintiffs' property, were caused by any of defendant's locomotives. The question has often been considered by the courts in this country and in England, and such evidence has, we think, been generally held admissible, as tending to prove the possibility and the consequent probability that some locomotive caused the fire, and as tending to show a negligent habit of the officers and agents of the railroad company;" citing Piggot v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 3 C. B. 229; Sheldon v. Hudson River R. Co. 14 N. Y. 218, 67 Am. Dec. 155; Field v. New York Cent. R. Co. 32 N. Y. 339; Webb v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 389; Cleveland v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 42 Vt. 449; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 358; Smith v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 R. I. 22; Longabaugh v. Virginia City & T. R. Co. 9 Nev. 271.

In Sheldon v. Hudson River R. Co., 14 N. Y. 218, 67 Am. Dec. 155, the plaintiff gave evidence which tended to show that the engines used by the defendants lacked some apparatus which was in use upon some other locomotive engines, and which rendered the latter less liable to communicate fire to substances at the side of the road than those which were without that apparatus; that shortly before the fire, sparks and fire had been thrown from the engines used by the defendants, in running their trains through the witness's premises, a greater distance than this building stood from the track of the railroad; and that he had picked up from the track, after the passage of trains, lighted coals more than two inches in length. It was argued by the defendants' counsel that the evidence was too remote and indefinite; that it did not refer to any particular engine, etc. Chief Justice Denio, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "This argument is not without force, but at the same time I think is met by the peculiar circumstances of this case. These engines run night and day, and with such speed that no particular note can be taken of them as they pass. Moreover, there is such a general resemblance among them that a stranger to the business cannot readily distinguish one from another. It will therefore generally happen that when the property of a person is set on fire by an engine the owner, though he may be perfectly satisfied that it was caused by an engine and may be able to show facts sufficient, legitimately, to establish it, yet may be utterly ignorant what particular engine did the mischief. It would be practically quite impossible, by any inquiries, to find out the offending engine, for a large proportion of those owned by the company are constantly in rapid motion. The business of running the trains on a railroad supposes a unity of management, and a general similarity in the fashion of the engines and the character of operation. I think, therefore, it is competent prima facie evidence for a person, seeking to establish the responsibility of the company for a burning upon the track of the road, after refuting every other probable cause of the fire, to show that, about the time when it happened, the trains which the company was running past the location of the fire were so managed in respect to the furnaces as to be likely to set on fire objects not more remote than the property burned. It is presumed to be in the power of the company which is intimately related with all its engineers and conductors, to controvert the fact sworn to if it is untrue, or, if true in a particular instance, that it was not so in respect to the engines which passed the place at a particular time before the occurrence of the fire. The effect of the evidence would only be to shift the onus probandi upon the company, and that, under the circumstances of this case, seems to me to be unavoidable."

We may also refer to the case of Koontz v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 20 Or. 8, which was an action to recover damages for the destruction of plaintiff's mill by fire falling from one of defendant's locomotives. What particular engine this was the evidence did not disclose, nor was the plaintiff able to ascertain or make proof of its identification from other engines of the company; but, to strengthen the inference that the burning of the mill originated in sparks from this engine, and to show habitual negligence of the officers and agents of the railroad company, he introduced evidence to show that other engines, of like appearance and construction, frequently scattered fire in large quantities, and set other fires along the track, prior and subsequent to the burning complained of. Mr. Justice Lord, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "On account of this difficulty of identifying a passing engine, especially at night-time, so as to make direct proof of such negligence, and also for the reason, as stated by Mr. Thompson, that the business of running railroad trains supposes a unity of management, and a general similarity in the construction of engines, the admission of evidence as to other and distinct fires from the one alleged to have caused the injury is permitted. Nor is it requisite that the testimony must also show that the engine which it is claimed caused the fire was one of those which had previously or subsequently scattered fire along defendant's track, but it is enough, as was shown, that it is similar in appearance and construction, and under the same general management. Hence it is quite generally held that evidence that sparks were frequently ejected from passing engines, causing fire along its track, on other occasions, is relevant and competent to show habitual negligence, and to strengthen and sustain the inference that the fire originated from the cause alleged. As the plaintiff must proceed with his evidence in the first instance, the fact that the defendant may be able to prove the identity of the engine cannot have the effect to make the admission of such evidence error."

In Field v. New York Cent. R. Co., 82 N. Y. 389, the court in speaking of this quality of evidence, says: "At all events, it showed that a practice was indulged in on the part of the company, about the time and near the place, which would have injured the plaintiff's property, rendering it probable, to a certain degree, that the injury was attributable to that cause."

We have quoted extensively from these authorities to show that the rule of evidence referred to, although, perhaps, comparatively new in its application in Pennsylvania, is the rule generally recognized in this country, not only by the text-writers, but by the courts. It may therefore be considered as settled in cases of this kind, where the offending engine is not clearly or satisfactorily identified, that it is competent for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant's locomotives generally, or many of them, at or about the time of the occurrence, threw sparks of unusual size and kindled numerous fires upon that part of their road, to sustain or strengthen the inference that the fire originated from the cause alleged. And as, in the case at bar, it is not definitely ascertained to which of the four engines this fire was attributable, three of them being unknown and unidentified, we cannot see how testimony of this character could be excluded. But the objective point of the inquiry is the condition of the passing engines at the time of the occurrence. It is a matter of little consequence what may have been their condition ten years or two years before that; for their precautions against fire, and the management of their engines, may have been greatly changed within that period. It does not follow because the company, in its official management, may have been negligent in this respect at a time so remote that it still remains so. The habits of individuals may, in some sense, be spoken of as fixed habits; but the official control and management of the affairs of a railroad company, as well as the various devices used as precautions against danger, are liable to frequent and radical changes. The line must be drawn somewhere. This class of testimony is exceptional in character at the best, and is only admissible because the ordinary sources of proof are inaccessible, and direct evidence impracticable. The rule should not, therefore, be carried beyond the necessity which justifies its admission. If at or about the time when fires are alleged to have been set by locomotive engines, unknown by number or other means of identification, the company is shown to have been habitually negligent in the equipment or management of its engines, or of many of them, this is a circumstance to be considered in connection with others, not only in determining the origin of the fire, but in deciding whether or not the company was, at the time, in this as in many other instances, negligent in failing to provide suitable precautions against danger. If many of the company's engines, at or about the time, are without sufficient spark arresters, and frequent fires are kindled in consequence, it may well be inferred, in view of the effectual character of mechanical inventions of its kind, not only that the fire in question originated from this cause, but that it occurred from the habitual negligence of the company in failing to provide sufficient spark-arresters. Reasonable latitude must, of course, be allowed. The purpose of such proofs would be defeated if they were confined to the exact or precise time of the occurrence. In Stranahan's Case the court admitted proof of the extent to which the various locomotives of the company threw sparks on or about the 9th (8th) of November, 1867, when the fire occurred. In Gowen v. Glaser the inquiry was as to sparks thrown and fires set very shortly before and very shortly after the occurrence. In Sheldon v. Hudson River R. Co., supra, the inquiry was restricted to matters occurring about the time and near the place of the fire. In Koontz v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. the offer was somewhat more extended in its effects, but we are of opinion that the rule should not be given greater latitude than we have given it.

In the case at bar, the first offer received, and which is the ground of the first specification of error, was as follows: "Plaintiff offers to prove that the property of persons along the line of defendant's road, which passed the property of plaintiff, destroyed by the fire in question on August 10, 1888, and within twelve miles of plaintiff's said property, was repeatedly set on fire by unknown and unidentified engines of the defendant, and that the sparks causing said fires, emitted by the said engines, exceeded a hickory nut in size, to be accompanied by evidence of experts showing that engines throwing sparks of the size of a hickory nut either did not use the most approved spark-arresters in general use, or if they did, the spark-arresters used were permitted to become defective and out of repair, or were negligently managed by those in charge of them." This offer, it will be seen, was wholly without limit as to time. The testimony received under it was, in some instances, confined to two or three months, in some to six months, and in some the testimony was general, and in such form as not to indicate to what period of time it referred. The second offer was: "To prove that many of the locomotive engines of the defendant, which it cannot identify, and which passed the plaintiff's mill frequently during a period of six months preceding the fire, habitually threw sparks of the size of a hickory nut, or larger," etc. We are of opinion that the admission of these offers was error. The examination should be confined to the negligent operation of the engines of the company at or about the time of the fire, with such reasonable latitude, before and after the occurrence, as is sufficient to enable such proofs to be practicable. What has been said disposes of the first, second, and third assignments of error. The remaining assignments are without merit and are dismissed.

The judgment is reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Bowers H. LEONARD, Appt.,

v.

Robie CLOUGH et al., Resp'ts.

(.....N. Y.)

1. A parol reservation of a barn when conveying the real estate of which it is a part by absolute warranty deed, is ineffectual to retain title in the grantor.

2. A parol gift is ineffectual to transfer title to a barn which is part of the real estate.

3. A remote grantee connected with the immediate grantee by an unbroken chain of warranty deeds has all the rights of the latter to sue the original grantor

NOTE.—In addition to the authorities shown in the report of the above case, we call attention to 16 L. R. A.

the following notes on the general subject of the nature of the fixtures. Binkley v. Forkner (Ind.)

for the removal from the real estate of a barn which passed under the original deed.

4. A barn placed by its owner upon his own land becomes real estate although supported by stones resting upon the surface, and it will pass by any conveyance of the real estate.

(May 24, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment at the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, denying his motion for new trial on case and exceptions heard at General Term in first instance after verdict in favor of defendants, at a Circuit Court for Cayuga County in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful removal of a barn from the plaintiff's real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Amasa J. Parker, for appellant:
The barn was real estate.

The barn was built by the person, who at the time of building the barn, owned the lot on which the whole of the barn stood; on its erection under such circumstances, it became and remained a part of realty.

1 Washb. Real Prop. 5; Voorhees v. McGinnis, 48 N. Y. 283; Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. 63. Between vendor and vendee the mode of annexation is not the controlling test.

McRea v. Central Nat. Bank of Troy, 66 N. Y. 495.

Everything annexed to the realty, whether by physical attachment, or by adaptation of the article to the proper use of the property, becomes a part of it, and cannot be removed without the consent of the owner.

Tyler, Fixtures, 104, 105; McRea v. Central Nat. Bank of Troy, 66 N. Y. 499; Reid v. Kirk, 12 Rich. L. 54; Fisher v. Saffer, 1 E. D. Smith, 611; Ombony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 239.

By the common-law whatever is affixed to the freehold becomes a part of it, and cannot be removed by the vendor.

Gardner v. Finley, 19 Barb. 820; Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N. Y. 170; 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 508, 509.

Every building is an accessory to the soil and is therefore real estate.

1 Cruise, Dig. title I, § 46; 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. 268.

Every grant of land carries by necessary legal construction buildings, houses, and trees standing thereon.

McRea v. Central Nat. Bank of Troy, 66 N. Y. 499; Boone, Real Prop. 306, 307; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 891; 8 Kent, Com. 401; 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 40; Warren v. Leland, 2 Barb. 618; Ombony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 240.

Every grant shall be conclusive against a grantor.

4 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 8th ed. § 143.

A grantor cannot be permitted to limit the effects of his deed by a proof of parol reservation of the fixtures.

Elwes v. Mawc, 3 East, 38, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 9th Am. ed. p. 1463; Noble v. Bosworth, 19 Pick. 814.

A building or permanent fixture attached to the freehold is not the subject of conveyance as personality by the owner of the freehold.

1 Washb. Real Prop. 5, and cases cited.

The parol agreement of reservation was inconsistent with the warranty deed. It must be void.

Taylor v. Millard, 43 Hun, 364, aff'd 28 N. Y. S. R. 694; Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 81, 88 Am. Rep. 479; Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 419, 26 Am. Rep. 612; Huntington v. Asher, 96 N. Y. 604, 48 Am. Rep. 652.

The terms of the deed could not be changed by parol.

Mott v. Palmer, 1 N. Y. 572.

A contract for the sale of any interest in lands is void unless in writing.

4 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 8th ed. p. 2589, § 8.

The word "land" is comprehensive in its import, and includes many things besides the earth we tread on, as water, grass, stones, buildings, fences, trees, and the like.

1 Shep. Touch. by Preston, 91; 1 Inst. 4; 1 Preston, Estates, 8; 2 Bl. Com. 17, 18; 4 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 8th ed. p. 2461, § 10; Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio, 554.

A parol sale or gift of buildings is a mere license.

1 Washb. Real Prop. 632; Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 328; People v. Fields, 1 Lans. 244; Fisher v. Saffer, 1 E. D. Smith, 611; Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 81, 88 Am. Rep. 479.

A man will not be allowed to allege or prove a fact to be different from what he has asserted it to be in his own deed.

The Duchess of Kingston's Case, 3 Smith, Lead. Cas. 9th Am. ed. p. 2107; Huxzey v. Heferman, 3 New Eng. Rep. 325, 148 Mass. 282; Knight v. Thayer, 125 Mass. 25; Russ v. Alpaugh, 118 Mass. 369, 19 Am. Rep. 464; Gregory v. Peoples, 80 Va. 355; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 275; Stephen, Dig. Ev. § 260.

A reservation must be equal to a grant, that is, under the same form and solemnities.

3 Washb. Real Prop. 443.

A parol reservation of any part of the granted premises is void under the Statute of Frauds.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 441.

Messrs. Payne & O'Brien, for respondents:

Parties may, by agreement at the time of annexation, preserve the character of personality to chattels annexed to the land.

Mott v. Palmer, 1 N. Y. 564; Tyft v. Horton, 53 N. Y. 377, 18 Am. Rep. 587; Voorhees v. McGinnis, 48 N. Y. 278.

The question whether property so annexed to the freehold or as under ordinary rules to a part of the realty, may be severed so as to become personality, depends upon the intention of the parties.

Chase, Bl. Com. p. 224, notes; Sheldon v. Edwards, 85 N. Y. 279.

The parties may by agreement at any time re-impress the character of personality on chattels already annexed to the land.

3 L. R. A. 33; Hill v. Munday (Ky.) 4 L. R. A. 674; Collamore v. Gillis (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 150; Hopewell Mills v. Taunton Sav. Bank (Mass.) 6 L. R. A. 249; Overman v. Sasser (N. C.) 10 L. R. A. 722.
16 L. R. A.

As to the effect of an agreement between the parties, see especially the notes to Col'amore v. Gillis and Overman v. Sasser, supra.

Such an agreement if executed is valid, although made by parol, and is binding upon all parties except the bona fide purchaser without notice.

8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, title Fiduciaries, pp. 59-62.

In all cases where courts have held such an agreement void as against a subsequent purchaser the bona fides of such purchaser has clearly appeared.

Stevens v. Rose, 18 West. Rep. 765, 69 Mich. 259; Tyson v. Post, 10 Cent. Rep. 712, 108 N. Y. 217; McLaughlin v. Lester, 4 N. Y. S. R. 852.

Here was a completed gift by Mrs. Gilbert of her two thirds of the barn in question. The gift was executed because there was all the delivery of which the article was capable—a surrender of possession and dominion.

8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, title Gift, p. 1815; 2 Kent, Com. *439.

It was allowed to stand upon the lot in question, first by the license of Mrs. Gilbert and afterwards by the license of subsequent grantees. Under that license they could remove the barn.

Dubois v. Kelly, 10 Barb. 496.

The rule excluding parol evidence to contradict or vary a deed is only applied in controversies between the parties to the deed. It can have no application in suits by or against persons who are not parties to the deed, and in no way connected therewith.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 279, and cases cited; Abbott, Trial Ev. p. 464; Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. 39; McMaster v. North America Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 234; Tyson v. Post, 10 Cent. Rep. 712, 108 N. Y. 217.

Earl, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts in this case are as follows: Prior to March 29, 1884, Adaline Clough owned a lot of land in the city of Auburn, upon which there was a small barn, and on that day she conveyed the lot by an ordinary warranty deed to the defendant Robie Clough, who owned the adjoining lot on the northerly side of the lot thus conveyed. On the 1st day of April, 1884, Robie Clough, by an ordinary warranty deed, conveyed the same lot to her daughter, Mary Gilbert, with the exception of a strip six feet by twelve rods, reserved from the northerly side of the lot. About one third of the barn was upon the strip thus reserved, and thus the dividing line between the two lots after that conveyance ran through the barn, leaving about one third thereof upon the land of Robie Clough and two thirds thereof upon the land of Mary Gilbert. At the time of the execution of the deed by Robie Clough to Mrs. Gilbert, and immediately thereafter, she said to Mrs. Clough and her husband: "Now, pa and ma, the barn is yours. There can nobody interfere with you;" and Robie Clough and her husband have ever since been in the occupancy of the barn. On the 28th day of October, 1886, Mrs. Gilbert, by an ordinary warranty deed, conveyed the lot to Julia M. Sherwood, and at the time of that conveyance Mrs. Sherwood was informed that the barn belonged to Mrs. Clough, and there was a parol reservation of the same. On the 1st day of November, 1886, Mrs. Sherwood, by an ordinary warranty deed, conveyed the lot to Mrs. Eunice Nellis, and at the time of that conveyance Mrs. Nellis was informed by parol that Mrs. Clough owned the barn, and that it did not pass. On the 8th day of November, 1888, Mrs. Nellis, by an ordinary warranty deed, conveyed the lot to the plaintiff, and at the time of that conveyance he was informed by parol that the barn belonged to Mrs. Clough, and did not pass with the conveyance. After he had purchased the lot, Mrs. Clough informed him that she claimed the barn, and intended to move it from the lot, and he told her not to move it. After that the defendants moved the barn from the lot, and then the plaintiff brought this action to recover for the value of so much of the barn as stood upon his lot, and claimed to recover treble damages. The barn was a wooden structure, worth less than $200, and rested upon four large stones at the corners, and smaller stones at other places. Upon the trial the plaintiff objected to the parol evidence given by the defendants to show the parol reservation of the barn at the times of the several conveyances of the lot. But the court overruled the objections, and received the evidence. The court below held that the evidence was competent; that the barn, after the conveyance by Mrs. Clough to her daughter, became and remained personal property, and that she had a lawful right to remove the same, and judgment was entered upon the verdict in favor of the defendants.

We think a few plain principles of law require a reversal of this judgment. This barn, at the time of the conveyance by Mrs. Clough to Mrs. Gilbert, was a part of the realty, and there could be no parol reservation of it. The grantor could no more reserve the barn by parol than she could reserve trees growing upon the land, or a ledge of rocks, or a mine, or a portion of the soil. As between the grantor and grantee, it is very clear that the grantor would not have been permitted to show that the barn was reserved by parol, as that evidence would have contradicted the deed, which was absolute in form. If the grantor had removed the barn, the grantee could have sued her for trespass, and she could not have defended by showing a parol reservation of the barn. If it had been claimed in such a suit that it was part of an oral agreement or reservation that the barn should not pass, that fact could not have been shown, as it would have contradicted the deed. The deed contained covenants of warranty which covered the entire title to the real estate, and the grantor could not in such a suit have shown by parol that any part of the real estate was not covered by the covenants. So, too, if it be claimed that what was said by Mrs. Gilbert to Mrs. Clough immediately after the deed was delivered constituted a parol gift of the barn to her father and mother, the gift could not be operative, because the barn at that time was a part of the realty. It had never been severed from the realty, and had never been, by any acts of the parties or the owners, made personal property; and the parol gift could not be upheld of a portion of the real estate without violating the Statute of Frauds. The one third of the barn which rested upon the lot owned by

Mrs. Clough was and remained realty, and it is impossible to perceive how by mere words the other two thirds could be converted into personality. Can trees and other portions of real estate be converted into personality by a mere parol gift, and without severance? It is clear that, after the conveyance from Mrs. Clough to Mrs. Gilbert, the barn remained a part of the realty, and was covered by the deed and the covenants of warranty therein contained; and so the barn passed to each successive purchaser, and no grantor could dispute that the grantee took title to the barn, and thus the title to so much of the barn as stood upon this lot was finally vested in the plaintiff. All the deeds contained covenants of warranty. Those covenants run with the land, and each successive grantee could have the benefit of all the prior covenants. The plaintiff is in privity of estate with Mrs. Clough, and his rights are the same as they would have been if he had been her immediate grantee. He holds under her deed, and in an action by him for a breach of her covenants she could not dispute that the barn was a part of the realty, and in this action against her for removing the barn she cannot dispute that it passed under her deed. His rights are the same as Mrs. Gilbert's would have been if she had disputed Mrs. Clough's right to the barn, and, before she conveyed, had sued her for removing it. A careful scrutiny of the cases cited on behalf of the defendants shows that there is absolutely no authority for their contention in a case like this. If at the time of the conveyance of Mrs. Clough the barn had been personal property in the ownership of some other person, and the grantees had been notified of that fact, the title to it would not have passed by the successive conveyances. If this barn had been placed upon the lot by some third person with the consent of the owner, and with the understanding that such third person could at any time remove it, it would have remained personal property, and would not have passed to a purchaser under any form of conveyance, providing such purchaser had notice of the fact. But where the land and the buildings thereon belong to the same person, then the buildings are a part of the real estate, and pass with it upon any conveyance thereof. In such a case the grantor can retain title to the buildings only by some reservation in the deed, or by some agreement in writing which will answer the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Any other rule would be exceedingly dangerous, and would enable a grantor, in derogation of his grant, upon oral evidence to reserve buildings and trees and other portions of his real estate, and thus, perhaps, defeat the main purpose of the grant. For these views the case of Noble v. Bosworth, 19 Pick. 314, is a very precise authority.

We are therefore of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted, costs to abide event.

All concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

Noble A. HULL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE of Florida, ex rel. John F. ROLINS.

(.....Fla.....)

The right of a purchaser other than a state or some governmental agency acting as such, at a sale of land for taxes under a statute which provides that the purchaser or his assignee shall have a conveyance of the land, unless the land shall be redeemed within one year next succeeding the sale, is a contract right; and a statute, passed subsequent to such sale, which proposes to extend the period allowed by the former Act for redeeming the land from the sale, is a violation of the contract, and of no effect as to such purchaser or his assignee.

(May 21, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Duval County to review a judgment in favor of relator, in a proceeding by mandamus to compel the issuance of a tax-deed. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

*Head note by RANNEY, Ch. J.

NOTE.—The full and convincing discussion in the above opinion of the authorities on the question involved makes the case an eminently satisfactory one and leaves no need of annotation.

16 L. R. A.

Mr. William B. Lamar, Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Mr. William B. Owen for defendant in error.

Ranney, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The 54th section of the General Revenue Act, approved June 13, 1887, chapter 3681, Laws of Florida, authorized any person claiming land sold for taxes, or any creditor of any such person, to redeem the land, on the terms and in the manner therein stated, "within one year next succeeding the sale;" and the 57th section of the same statute enacted that on the presentation of the certificate of sale to the clerk of the circuit court or his deputy, "after the expiration of time provided by law in this Act for the redemption of land sold as aforesaid, unless the same have been redeemed, he shall execute to the purchaser or his heirs or assigns a deed of the land therein described, unless it shall be shown that the taxes for that year have been paid before the sale."

In the case before us J. C. Greeley bought at a tax-sale made by D. P. Smith, as tax collector of Duval County, on the fifth day of August, 1890, the land mentioned in the proceedings, the same having been sold for the collection of unpaid state and county taxes assessed for the year 1889. Smith, as such collector, issued to Greeley the usual certificate of sale, bearing date August 5, 1890, and afterwards Greeley assigned the certificate to Rollins, who, on the tenth day of November, 1891, presented the certificate to the plaintiff in error, clerk of the circuit court of Duval county, and demanded that he should execute and deliver to him a tax-deed for the land in accordance with law, he at the time tendering to the clerk his lawful fee for such deed. The clerk refused to issue the deed, and thereupon Rollins applied to the judge of the fourth circuit for a writ of mandamus to compel him to issue it.

The provisions of the 7th and 8th sections of a statute approved June 10, 1891, and entitled "An Act to Provide for Certifying Lands to the Comptroller, upon Which Taxes have not been Paid for the Redemption thereof, and for the Forfeiture and Sale of Land not Redeemed," chapter 4011 of the statutes, are the sole defense made by the clerk to the writ of mandamus issued by the judge.

The effect of preceding sections of this statute is: That after the first day of January, 1892, there should be no sales of lands for either state or county taxes; and that the tax collectors of the several counties should open their books for the collection of taxes on the first Monday in November, 1891, and close them on the first Monday in April, 1892, and do likewise for each succeeding year; and when they shall have closed their books "as now or herein provided," it shall not be lawful for them to receive further moneys remaining due for taxes on land. All lands upon which taxes have not been paid are then to be certified to the comptroller, and clerks of the circuit court, and the comptroller is required to make publication within one year of all lands so certified to him, except such as may have been redeemed before such publication or are not subject to taxation. Redemption in the offices of the comptroller and clerks of the circuit court is then provided for, and the state's title to all lands not redeemed at the expiration of two years from such certification becomes absolute, and the lands are to be placed on sale by the state, subject, however, to the right of redemption at any time after the expiration of the two years from the certification, if the land has not been sold by the state.

The 7th and 8th sections are as follows: "Sec. 7. No deeds, as now provided by law, shall issue upon any tax certificates now outstanding, for two years from the passage of this Act; and any person or persons whose lands may have heretofore been sold for taxes, and to which tax-deeds shall not have been issued at the time of the passage of this Act shall, at any time within two years from the passage of this Act, have the right to redeem said lands by taking the steps now provided by law for the redemption of lands from tax sales.

"Sec. 8. Tax deeds to all lands upon which tax certificates may be now outstanding, and which shall not have been redeemed, as provided in section 7, shall, at the expiration of two years from the passage of this Act, issue as provided by law at the time of the passage of this Act."

The 9th section provides for the grading and pricing of all lands to which the state may acquire title under the Act; and the 10th section, for the sale of the same and the deed of conveyance of those sold. The 11th section repeals all laws and parts of laws in so far as they may be in conflict with the Act; and the 12th section is that the Act "shall be construed in connection with the General Revenue Law;" such a statute, chapter 4010, having been passed at the same session of the Legislature and approved on the same day.

The question presented for our decision is the validity of the Act of 1891, chapter 4011, in so far as it proposes to extend the time for redemption of the purchase made by Greeley at the tax sale of August 5, 1890. It is contended by the relator that the statute is, both as to himself and to Greeley, unconstitutional and void for the reason that it violates the contract of the sale.

The rights of Greeley and his assignee are contractual and not, as in Essex Public Road Board v. Skinkle, 140 U. S. 884, 35 L. ed. 446, a matter of mere public regulation or policy, nor a mere matter of law. Greeley's rights arose in a contract of bargain and sale. The land was offered for sale by the state, through its official agent, the tax collector of Duval county, under a statute, the validity of which is not impeached, and a compliance with whose essential provisions as to assessment and sale is not questioned, even if it be that the appellant could raise both or either of such questions in this proceeding. The land was offered for sale under the terms and conditions prescribed by the Act of 1887, (chapter 8681,) and one of these was that he should have a deed of conveyance of the land unless the same should be redeemed within one year next succeeding the sale, by making the payments prescribed. Greeley, on this offer being made at public outcry, bid for the land, and his bid was accepted, and he having paid the amount by law, the formal certificate evidencing the sale to him, and stating that he would be entitled to a deed, if the land should not be redeemed within a year, was issued to him. The entry into the agreement was the act of the parties. The state offered the land for sale, Greeley voluntarily made a lawful bid, and the bid was accepted and then complied with. It was a contract between the state and Greeley, and its terms were embodied in the law then in force. State v. Foley, 30 Minn. 350. The terms of the contract, in so far as the rights of the purchaser, and the duties or obligations of the state are concerned, are to be found in the law authorizing the sale, or under which it was made. "But," says Judge Taney, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, in Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 811, 815, 11 L. ed. 143, 144, "the mortgage given to secure the debt was made in Illinois for real property situated in that state, and the rights which the mortgagee acquired in the premises depended upon the laws of that state. In other words, the existing laws of Illinois created and defined the legal and equitable obligations of the mortgage contract;" and in Cargill v. Power, 1 Mich. 369, the decision was that the law in existence at the time a mortgage was executed and delivered was a part of the contract.

The obligation of a contract consists, observes the Supreme Court of the United States, in its binding force upon the party who makes it. This depends on the laws in existence when it is made; these are necessarily referred to in all contracts and forming a part of them as a measure of the obligation to perform them by the one party, and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by which to ascertain the extent of either than that which the terms of the contract indicate according to their settled legal meaning; when it becomes consummated, the law defines the duty and the right, compels one party to perform the thing contracted for, and gives the other a right to enforce the performance by the remedies then in force. McCracken v. Haywood, 48 U. S. 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 897.

In the case of the sale of land for taxes, which can be authorized only by the state, and to which the right of redemption is a customary, if not inseparable, feature, defining, if not limiting, the rights of the purchaser and continuing those of the defaulting owner, it is to the law existing at the time of the sale that one reasonably must, and to it only that one naturally would, look to ascertain the period of redemption and the rights of the purchaser as to title and possession. The right of redemption from a tax sale is governed by the law in force at the date of the sale. Merrill v. Dearing, 82 Minn. 479. That the obligation of a contract to which the state is a party is protected from violation by the state, is settled law. Cooley, Const. Lim. *274, 275, and note 2; Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87, 8 L. ed. 162; Davis v. Gray, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 208, 21 L. ed. 447.

That the extension of the time for redemption prescribed by the Act of 1887—one year next after the sale—to two years from the passage of the Act of 1891, or, in other words, from a day in August, 1891, to one in June, 1893, is a material impairment of essential rights guaranteed to Greeley by the contract of sale, and a positive diminution of the duty imposed by the contract upon the state, seems to our minds undeniable in the light of natural justice and common reason. By the contract right to a deed it was intended and implied that upon obtaining the deed he should have the immediate right to the ownership and exclusive possession and use of the land, with all the beneficial incidents of such ownership. This right to have a deed after the fifth day of August, 1891, and the rights incident thereto, were obligations of the contract, and to postpone against the will of the purchaser, or of his assignee, the enjoyment of such rights for even a day, or the shortest period, to say nothing of a period of nearly two years, and this too for the purpose of offering to the owner, or a creditor, during the time the privilege of redeeming, if he shall see fit to exercise it, is a vital and patent impairment of such obligation. This view is fully sustained by satisfactory authority. Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, *291, expresses himself as follows: "So a law is void which extends the time for the redemption of lands sold on execution or for delinquent taxes after the sales have been made; for in such a case the contract with the purchaser, and for which he has paid his money, is that he shall have title at the time then provided by law; and to extend the time for redemption is to alter the substance of the contract as much as would be the extension of the time for the payment of a promissory note." And the same author, in his work on Taxation, says, that "if the time to redeem has already expired before the passage of the new law, it is manifest such law can have no effect upon the sale; that, the title having become absolute, the Legislature can no more create rights in the land in favor of the former owner than it can in favor of any other person; but if the time for redemption has not expired, and redemption is still open to the owner, the want of power is not so entirely beyond dispute." Observing that in one case, Gault's Appeal, 83 Pa. 94, it has been held that the time for redemption might be extended from one to two years, its reasoning being based on the liberal construction which should be put upon redemption laws, he still holds that the decisions to the contrary are based on reasons which are conclusive. "They," he says, "plant themselves upon the principle that the obligation of the contract is inviolable. Now the purchase at a tax sale is clearly a contract. It is made under the law as it then exists, and upon the terms prescribed by the law. No subsequent statute can import new terms into the contract, or add to those before expressed. If it could be changed in one particular, it could be in all; if subject to legislative control at all, it is wholly at the legislative mercy." Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 544, 545.

In Robinson v. Howe, 18 Wis. 341, the decision was that where land has been sold for taxes under a law which provided that the owner might redeem it within a specified time after the sale, it is not in the power of the Legislature by a subsequent Act, although passed before the expiration of that time, to extend the privilege of redemption for a longer period; that to extend it would impair the obligation of the contract; and that an Act proposing to extend the time of redemption does not affect the rights of an assignee of a tax certificate issued before the passage of the Act, although the assignment was made and the tax-deed was executed after the passage of the Extending Act and in the form which that Act prescribed.

In State v. McDonald, 26 Minn. 145, land was bought in by the state at a tax sale, and the comptroller, pursuant to the terms of the law under which the sale was made, sold and assigned the certificate of sale. After this assignment was made, the Legislature passed an Act requiring every person holding a tax certificate to present the same to the county auditor at least ninety days before the expiration of the time to redeem, and the auditor to notify the person in whose name the land was assessed of the time when the period of redemption would expire. Hitchings, the assignee of the certificate, did not comply with this Act, and the relator, the administrator of the owner of the land, claimed, as a consequence of this omission, the right to redeem. It was held that legislation could not by any Act subsequent to the assignment, impair to any extent the right acquired by the assignee to the fee simple of the land subject to the redemption provisions of the law under which the sale was made, and that the subsequent Act could not, without violating the Constitution, be applied to a case where the right under the sale had vested in any person other than the state prior to its passage. The doctrine announced in the case of Merrill v. Dearing, 32 Minn. 479, is that the period of redemption can neither be shortened nor extended by legislation subsequent to the sale.

In Forqueran v. Donnelly, 7 W. Va. 114, the decision was that a purchaser of a part of a tract of land at a sheriff's delinquent tax sale made in 1860, acquired by the purchase payment of the purchase money and delivery to the purchaser of the sheriff's receipt therefor, the right, if the land was not redeemed, in the manner prescribed by a designated section of the Virginia Code, within two years from the sale, to obtain a deed in the mode and manner prescribed by other sections, with the further privilege to the owner of redeeming after the expiration of one year from such two years if no deed had been made to the purchaser; that the right so acquired grew directly out of the contract of sale made in pursuance of the law under which it was made; that the right was an equitable right or interest entitled, on the failure to redeem, to ripen into a full legal title, and was secured by the provision of the Constitution securing contracts against violations by legislation.

In Dikeman v. Dikeman, 11 Paige, 484, 5 L. ed. 207, it was held that where lands have been sold for taxes or assessments during the existence of a law which entitled the purchaser to an absolute deed or to a lease for a limited term, in case the premises were not redeemed within a specified time, it is not competent for the Legislature to extend the time for redemption, and thus to deprive the purchaser of the right to the possession and enjoyment of the premises without providing an adequate compensation to the purchaser for his loss of the use of the premises during such extension. "When," says Chancellor Walworth in this case, "Storms became the purchaser of the premises in question, therefore, if these assessments were valid and the sale regular, his contract with the corporation, under the sanction of the law of the state, entitled him to an absolute lease of the premises at the end of the two years, and to the possession and use of the same for the full term mentioned in his certificate of sale; in case the owners of the land, or some person for them, should not redeem the same within two years, as required by the laws then in force. The question then, which arises under the Act of the 25th of May, 1841, is whether it was competent for the Legislature to extend the time for redemption, for six months at least, beyond the two years; and thus to deprive the purchaser of the possession and use of the premises for a part of the term which he had purchased therein, without any compensation whatever. It is true the 5th section of the Act requires an additional percentage to be paid, in case the owners shall elect to redeem within six months after the service of notice upon the occupant. But such owners are under no obligations to redeem. And there is nothing in the Act requiring them to pay the purchaser the rent of the land, or any interest upon the purchase money, during the time he is kept out of possession, where they neglect or refuse to redeem the premises within the six months. It is perfectly evident, therefore, that the effect of such a law upon the rights of a prior purchaser, who had only purchased a term of one year in the land, would be to deprive him of the half of the value of his purchase, in case the land should not be redeemed at the end of six months. . . . But in deciding upon the constitutionality of a law which is general, and which in its operation may totally destroy the vested rights of other persons, I am not at liberty to declare the law to be constitutional, merely because the injury to one of the parties in the particular case under consideration is comparatively small. For if the law is constitutional in reference to this case it is also constitutional in reference to the purchase of a term of two or three years only: where the purchaser would probably lose the entire benefit of his purchase, and the whole amount paid for the term, by the expiration of such term before the termination of the chancery suit."

We do not understand Chancellor Walworth to decide that it would be competent for the Legislature to extend the time for redemption against a purchase made before the passage of the Extending Law, even if such law provided just compensation, but that he was merely pronouncing judgment upon the case before him, including that of the absence from the statute of the specified provision for interest and rental. We fail to perceive the principle upon which the vested right acquired in the property through the contract of purchase could be taken away from one private person and vested in another for his individual use or private purposes, even upon terms of the fullest compensation.

In addition to these tax-sale decisions there are others of convincing analogy. In Bronson v. Kinzie, supra, a mortgage contained a power to a creditor to sell on breach of the condition, and thereby pay the debt. This power when given was valid under the laws of the state, and it was held that laws subsequently passed, giving the mortgagor twelve months to redeem the property from the purchaser at such sale, and prohibiting the sale of the property for less than two thirds of its appraised value, so altered the remedy of the creditor as to impair the obligation of the contract, and hence were void as to such mortgage and a sale and a purchase thereunder. See also McCracken v. Hayward, supra. Greenfield v. Dorris, 1 Sneed, 548, adjudged unconstitutional and void as to sales under prior deeds of trust, a statute which provided that "in all sales of real estate thereafter to be made under execution or deed of trust, which by existing laws is subject to redemption, if the debtor is permitted by the purchaser or his assignee to remain in possession, he shall not be liable for rent from the date of the sale to the time of redemption; and if the purchaser or assignee shall take possession under his purchase, upon the redemption by the debtor, he shall be entitled to a credit for the fair rent of the premises during the time they were in possession of the purchaser." Carroll v. Rossiter, 10 Minn. 174, is a case where, in 1858, and where only one year was allowed to a mortgagor to redeem from a mortgage sale, the plaintiff's grantor mortgaged to the defendant, and in 1861, when a mortgagor was by law allowed three years to redeem from such a sale, the mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement. The sheriff who made the sale gave the mortgagee, who was the purchaser, a certificate stating that the purchaser would be entitled to a conveyance in three years from the date of sale. The court held that right of redemption was governed by the law in force when the mortgage was executed, and that the certificate, nor its acceptance, did not affect the rights of the parties. See also Goenen v. Schroeder, 8 Minn. 887.

In Hillebert v. Porter, 28 Minn. 496, it was held that an Act of 1878, so far as it applied to mortgages executed prior to its passage and required to be paid, for redemption from sales under the powers in such mortgages, a greater rate of interest than that required to be paid on such redemption by the laws in force at the time of the execution of such mortgages, impairs their obligation and is void. It is proper to note here a remark in the opinion of the court in this case as to certain earlier decisions in that state which might be relied on as conflicting with our views: "Stone v. Bassett, 4 Minn. 298, was upon a sale under a decree in an action to foreclose, and the court held the statute regulating redemptions from sales under decrees in force at the time of the sale controlled the right of redemption. . . . The distinction in respect to rights of redemption between sales under decrees and sales under powers are more fully and clearly made by the opinions in Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483. . . . The decision was followed—not because it was approved, but upon the rule of stare decisis—twice; in Bertbold v. Holman, 12 Minn. 335, 98 Am. Dec. 233, and Berthold v. Fox, 13 Minn. 501, 97 Am. Dec. 243. It is impossible that any property rights now depend on that decision, and for that reason we do not hesitate to express our disapproval of it."

16 L. R. A.

In Gault's Appeal, supra, which Judge Cooley refers to in his work on Taxation, as one sustaining the power of the Legislature to extend by subsequent legislation, the period of redemption, the passage of the Extending Act intervened the sale and the execution and acknowledgment of the deed. The sale was made by the sheriff under a leva-ri facias issuing out of a court in which the judgment had been entered for a municipal paving claim, and it was held that until the deed was made and delivered by the sheriff the sale—which was regarded to all intents as a judicial sale—was liable to be set aside by the court issuing the process, and to which it was returnable and in which the deed was to be recorded: and that so long as the sale was in fieri, it could not be called a perfected and completed sale. The court recognizing the rule that the obligation of no contract shall be impaired, whether it be for much or little, yet holds, even conceding there was a contract within the meaning of the Constitution, that the several Acts under consideration constituted a system of remedies for enforcing the taxation power and that the Legislature, whose power to regulate taxation was absolute and exclusive, and extended to seizing and selling to the highest bidder the citizen's property without notice to him, could, in the exercise of this power, and as a part and parcel of such system, pass the Redeeming Act as one of the necessary means to the constitutional end of enforcing the payment of taxes; that the several statutes were the legislative mode of attaining that object, and one of them was as constitutional as the other.

The reasoning of this decision is not satisfactory to our minds. If it be that the judicial feature of the statutory system should distinguish from those in which there is no such feature, then it is only necessary to say that this feature is not a characteristic of our system.

Our conclusion is that the contract rights acquired by Greeley under his purchase would be violated by the extension of the redemption period proposed by the subsequent statute, and that it is not within the power of the Legislature to thus impair them, either as against Greeley or against his assignee, whether such assignment was made before or after the extending statute. This is not a case in which the state was the purchaser at the tax sale and held the certificate at the time of the enactment of the extending statute, and subsequently transferred it. The rule, or the effect of the Statute of 1891, in such a case, or where any governmental agency, as such, holds the certificate at the passage of the statute, is not before us for adjudication. Typpecanos County Comrs. v. Lucas, 98 U. S. 108, 23 L. ed. 822; Lucas v. Tippecanos County Comrs. 44 Ind. 524; Essex Public Road Board v. Skinkle, 140 U. S. 834, 35 L. ed. 446.

The judgment is affirmed.

Dave LOVETT, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF FLORIDA.

(.....Fla.....)

*1. The supreme court entered judgment, on writ of error, reversing a judgment of the circuit court in a capital case and issued its remittitur which was filed in the latter court. Subsequently during the same term of the supreme court it was shown that the transcript upon which it had acted was, on account of a mistake in making such transcript, an entire misrepresentation of the real record of the circuit court, as to the point upon which the judgment of reversal was based, and a motion was made in behalf of the state by the attorney-general, who had relied on the transcript as truthful, and had not participated in the trial in the circuit court, to vacate the entry of the judgment of reversal, and restore the case to the docket of the supreme court. Held, that the supreme court had not lost jurisdiction of the cause, and its entry of judgment should be vacated, and the cause recalled and restored to its docket.

2. The counsel of appellant party is charged with the duty of bringing to the appellate court a correct transcript of the record of the inferior court, and no advantage can be gained from any action of the former court upon a false transcript, however ignorant the appellant party or his counsel may be of the real status of the record of the lower court, or of the incorrectness of the transcript, or however free from blame the clerk may have been as to the mistakes in the transcript.

(June 9, 1892.)

MOTION by the State for the vacation of a judgment heretofore rendered by this court reversing a judgment of conviction rendered by the Circuit Court for Duval County in a capital case, and for a rehearing upon the writ of error in the case on the ground of omissions from the transcript. Motion granted.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. William B. Lamar, Atty-Gen., for the motion.

Raney, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the filing of the former opinion in this cause judgment was entered reversing the judgment of the circuit court of Duval county and remanding the case for a new trial; and our mandate issued, directed to the judge of that court, requiring that such further proceedings be had in the cause as, according to right and justice, the judgment of this court and the laws of the state, ought to be had, and this mandate was filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court on the 18th day of April. On the 31st day of April, the attorney-general moved for a vacation of our judgment, and for a rehearing of the cause, for the reason

*Head notes by RANEY, Ch. J.

NOTE—On the interesting and important question as to loss of the jurisdiction of an appellate court by issuing a remittitur which is filed in the lower court, the above opinion presents an array that what purports to be a transcript of the record of the circuit court on file in this court, and on which we have acted in rendering the preceding decision, is not a true and correct transcript of such record, and that the alleged defects of record upon which the judgment of conviction was reversed by us do not exist, but that the contrary is true; and suggesting a diminution of the record and moving for a certiorari for a return of the entries showing the presence of the accused at the time of the trial, and his arraignment and plea of not guilty. In support of the motion the attorney-general presented and filed a duly certified transcript from the record of the circuit court of Duval county, under the hand and seal of the clerk of that court, which, after showing the presentation of the indictment for murder in the first degree against Lovett in open court, on the 20th day of November, 1891, at the fall term, exhibits also the following entries, of the date indicated at the same term:
16 L. R. A.

November 28, 1891.

State of Florida } Arraignment. Plea of not
v. } guilty.
Dave Lovett.

Comes T. A. MacDonell, who prosecutes for the State of Florida, and the defendant, Dave Lovett, in his own proper person, and being solemnly arraigned, pleaded not guilty to the indictment, whereupon he was remanded to the custody of the sheriff to await the further action of the court.

December 10, 1891.

State of Florida }
v. }
Dave Lovett.

Comes now T. A. MacDonell, who prosecutes for the State of Florida, and the defendant being present at the bar, attended by his counsel, [then follow, in the same entry, two orders: one for a special venire for twelve jurors, the regular venire having been exhausted, and after a recital that the special venire was exhausted, another for a venire for ten jurors].

The entry concludes as follows: "The three jurors necessary to complete the panel for the trial of this cause having been accepted, the following named jurors [their names being stated, and there being twelve of them] were accepted and duly sworn according to law for the trial of this cause. And the evidence having been submitted to the jury aforesaid, and having heard the argument of counsel and charge of the court, and returning into court in due form of law, upon their oaths do say: 'We, the jury, find the prisoner guilty as charged in the indictment. J. C. Andreu, foreman.' It is thereupon considered by the court that the defendant be remanded to the custody of the sheriff, to await the further action of the court."

Then follows the entry of sentence on December 14, in the form shown by the statement preceding the former opinion.

Upon the presentation of the motion we reof authorities, and a discussion of them which are of very great value, and no annotation on the subject will be attempted called our mandate, and caused notice of the hearing of the motion to be given to the accused and to the attorney who represented him both in the circuit court and in this court. This attorney, disclaiming any representation of the accused, as his attorney in this proceeding, has volunteered to file, as amicus curia, a statement, with authorities, upon the motion, which authorities are reviewed, with others, in the subsequent pages of this opinion.

It is apparent that the state's motion is made during the term of court at which the judgment which it is sought to have revoked was pronounced and entered, and it is a general rule of the common law, that courts have power to either modify or vacate their judgments and decrees during the term at which they were rendered, or while they are in fieri. Freem. Judgm. 4th ed. § 90; Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 26 L. ed. 797. If our mandate had not reached the circuit court before the motion was made, and we had recalled it before it was filed with or received by the clerk, the question before us would be of easier solution (Burkle v. Luce, 1 N. Y. 239; Hosack v. Rogers, 7 Paige, 108, 4 L. ed. 85; Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 198); still in our judgment the consummation of the issue of the mandate, by its receipt by the court whose judgment has been under review, is not, under the circumstances of this case, a termination of our jurisdiction. It is true we find in some adjudications a statement, in general terms, that this juncture concludes the jurisdiction of the appellate court. In Martin v. Wilson, 1 N. Y. 240, a motion was made in the court of appeals to open a judgment of affirmance taken by default at a former term, and "the court held that it lost its jurisdiction of the cause when the remittitur was filed in the court below, and on that ground denied the motion;" and in Grogan v. Ruckle, supra, the doctrine announced was that the court may, after its judgment has been pronounced, direct a rehearing at any time before the remittitur has been sent to and filed in the clerk's office of the lower court, but after that has been done the jurisdiction of the appellate court to order a rehearing ceases; but the real fact in the case was that the remittitur was improperly sent down after the entry, at the same term, of the order for a rehearing, and it was held that so doing did not deprive the court of its jurisdiction. Again in Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 388, it is said that the supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction over its own judgments, and cannot review or modify them after the case has once passed, by the issuance of the remittitur, from its control, nor recall the cause and reverse its decision; but the court was speaking of the binding effect of a former decision in the same cause. Martin v. Hunter, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 855, 4 L. ed. 110. The same doctrine was enunciated in Blane v. Bowman, 22 Cal. 28, where a motion was made to set aside an order, made at the same term, affirming a judgment, the ground of the motion being that one of the judges who participated in the decision had not heard the oral argument of the cause. In the decision of this motion, the court, after alluding to the reason of the rule of the court providing that remittitur shall not issue for ten days after judgment, as 16 L. R. A.

being to allow time for applications for rehearings or to modify or set aside the judgment, observes: No excuse is shown why this application was not made within the ten days allowed by the rules of this court, or before the court had lost control of the cause by filing the remittitur in the court below."

The facts of the preceding cases had not called for, it would seem, even an investigation, as to the power of the court to recall the cause under any circumstances after the mandate has been filed in the lower court.

In Rouland v. Kreyenhagen, 24 Cal. 52, appeals in two cases were dismissed, at the October Term, 1863, on motion of appellee, because transcripts had not been filed. The rules of the court provided that if the appeal transcript was not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal might be dismissed ex parte during the first week of the term, and that such dismissal should be final, and a bar to any other appeal in the same case, unless the appeal should be restored during the same term upon good cause shown and upon notice. An order, made as the court was about to adjourn in October, provided that all motions to reinstate causes dismissed under the rules referred to might be made on the first Tuesday in November following, and directed that remittiturs should not issue till after that time. About the last of November, no motion to reinstate having been made, remittiturs were issued in the two causes mentioned, and filed in the lower courts and judgments were entered thereon and executions issued. On December 20, two justices upon representations made by affidavits, signed an order directing a return of the remittiturs, and that the attorneys for respondents show cause before the supreme court why the orders of dismissal should not be vacated and the causes reinstated on the calendar, on the ground that the orders of dismissal were obtained upon false suggestion and mistake, and improvidently granted, and staying further proceedings in the lower court, and the court vacated the dismissals and reinstated the causes. A petition for rehearing was granted. In delivering the opinion of the court and after holding that the dismissal of the appeal, if not reinstated during the term, was, under the above rules, an affirmance of the judgment appealed from as conclusive and binding upon the parties and the court as a direct judgment of affirmance, and after referring to cases mentioned above, and recognizing the general rule to be that stated by them, it is said that this general rule rests upon the supposition that all the proceedings have been regular and that no fraud or imposition has been practiced upon the court or the opposite party; and that if it appears that such has been the case, the court will assert its jurisdiction and recall the case; that against judgments improvidently granted, upon a false suggestion, or under a mistake as to the facts of the case, the court will afford relief after the adjournment of the term, and, if necessary, recall the remittitur and stay proceedings in the court below. That this is not done upon the principle of resumption of jurisdiction, but upon the ground that the jurisdiction of the court has not been devested by an irregular or improvident order; that in contemplation of law an order obtained upon a false suggestion is not the order of the court, and may be treated as a nullity; if, under color of such an order, the proceedings have in part (fact) found their way back to the court below, yet in law they are considered as still pending in the appellate court, and that court may take such steps as may be necessary to make the fact and the law agree. The evidence was held, however, not to show that the dismissals were improvidently or irregularly granted, and the orders recalling the remittiturs were vacated, and a reinstatement of the appeals denied.

In Vance v. Pena, 38 Cal. 328, an order denying a rehearing was entered, through the mistake of the clerk, when in fact the court had granted a rehearing, and the court adjourned and the remittitur was sent down. At the next term a motion was made to recall the remittitur and reinstate the cause and vacate the order mistakenly entered, and for the entry of the order really announced. In affirming the doctrine of Rowland v. Kreyenhagen, it is said: "This must be so or intolerable injustice might result. The principle here announced is broad enough to cover the present case. There has been a false order entered by mistake, . . . and upon this false order the remittitur issued. A mistake of this kind stands upon the same principle as a fraud, for it operates as a fraud upon the rights of the party injured by it." The motion was granted. See also Swaen v. Naglee, 19 Cal. 127.

In Lightstone v. Laurencel, 2 Cal. 106, a judgment of affirmance was entered by the supreme court on motion of the appellee, the appellant not appearing; and at the subsequent term appellant moved to set aside the judgment and restore the cause to the calendar, for the reason that no notice of the argument had been served on him, and the court sustained the motion.

Legg v. Overbagh, 4 Wend. 188, 21 Am. Dec. 115, was a case where the decree appealed from was affirmed for default of counsel of appellants to appear and argue the appeal at the time it was duly set down and noticed for argument, such absence of counsel being attributable to sickness. The remittitur was regularly issued and filed in the lower court, and the court for the correction of errors held, on a motion to reinstate, that it had lost jurisdiction of the cause, and had no power to vacate its decree of affirmance; but the doctrine that jurisdiction is not lost, and the case may be recalled, where either the mandate was issued irregularly, or the order or judgment of the appellate court had been irregularly or improvidently obtained, or its judgment has been misconceived and entered erroneously by its clerk, is recognized in the opinions. "When issued irregularly," says Savage, Ch. J., "in contemplation of law the proceedings remain here, and the order or decree made will of course be suspended; the remittitur issued not being considered the act of the court."

The same court previously, in Waters v. Travis, 8 Johns. 566, where a decree by default for not answering the petition of appeal had been entered reversing the decree appealed from, vacated its decree, after the record had been remitted to the lower court, and for the reason that the required notice to answer the petition had not been served on the appellee; and in Chamberlain v. Fitch, 2 Cow. 248, it set aside a decree of reversal obtained, on default, in violation of verbal stipulations between counsel, and directed the papers in the cause to be returned by the court of chancery, to which they had been remitted.

In the case of The Palmyra, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 581, there had been a decree in the district court acquitting the vessel and denying any damages for her capture or detention, and both parties had appealed to the circuit court, which court affirmed the acquittal of the vessel, but reversed so much of the decree appealed from as denied damages, and then proceeded to award damages to the complainant for a stated sum. From this decree the United States and the captors appealed to the supreme court, and the cause coming on to be heard, that court, upon an inspection of the record, dismissed the appeal because it did not appear that there has been an ascertainment of the amount of the damages, the court being of opinion that in the absence of a decree ascertaining the amount of damages there was no "final decree," within the meaning of the Act of Congress. At a subsequent term of the court it was made to appear that there had been a final award of damages, and that the error was a mere misprision of the clerk of the circuit court in transmitting an imperfect record, and the court, on motion of the appellants, ordered the cause to be reinstated on the docket. See also Vicars v. Haydon, 2 Cowp. 841.

In the case of White v. Tommey, 8 H. L. Cas. 49, there was a final judgment in the House of Lords in the year 1850, reversing a decree rendered by the Irish court of chancery in January, 1835, from which decree a former application to appeal had been refused by the house in 1839; and after such reversal, and at the same sitting of the house of lords there was a petition for rehearing, the ground thereof being that the respondents (petitioners) had been taken by surprise, and had not been heard. The judgment upon the petition was that respondents' failure to be heard in the house of lords was their own fault, and that after a final judgment of the house had been pronounced there could not be a rehearing, nor could its judgment be reversed, except by Act of parliament. Subsequently, however, in the same case in the year 1858 (4 H. L. Cas. 313), it was shown by the respondents, on a further petition, that the decree of January, 1835, had been before the house on an appeal taken in 1846, from an order sustaining a demurrer to a bill of review, calling in question the decree of 1835, and had then been specially complained of in the petition of appeal, and that, on such appeal, there had been in July, 1847, a general dismissal of the appeal, and also a special affirmance of the order on the demurrer, but no special mention of the decree of 1835 had been made in the order of dismissal. In the petition of appeal, upon which the decree of reversal was made in 1850, it was stated that "it appeared by the order of July, 1847, that the decree of January, 1835, had not been complained of, and that their lordships had not made any declaration with respect to it," and that it "had never been adjudicated upon by their lordships." There had been no appearance by respondents since the refusal of an allowance of appeal in 1839, and since then appellant's proceedings had been ex parte. The decision of the house of lords in 1853 on the second petition was that the judgment of reversal of 1850 had been obtained by suppression and misrepresentation, and the order allowing the appeal upon which it was rendered, was vacated; and the Lord Chancellor, in advising the house of lords, makes the following observations: That the quoted words of the second petition of appeal were "a complete misrepresentation, . . . a fencing or quibbling in a way which your lordships will never permit to any suitor at your bar, . . . it is not in any sense true to say that it appears by the order that it,—the decree of 1835,—was not complained of. All that can be said is that the order is silent about it, if you can treat it as being silent when it dismisses in terms the appeal which did in fact include that decree as a subject-matter of complaint. It appears to me it was a statement well calculated to mislead your lordships. . . . Although in any question decided by this house on appeal the matter is finally settled by the litigant parties, it is always subject to this condition, that if one party has by any misrepresentation,—I will not put it so high as to say by fraud, for I do not wish to use harsh terms, but, if by misrepresentation, inadvertently (if you will) introduced, a party has led the house into an error;—has led it to suppose that something is going on irregularly,—all the commonest principles of justice compel this house, as they must compel any other tribunal, to interfere to prevent its own decisions from being made the machinery for effecting fraud, or the machinery for effecting that which, if not done per curiam, would have been a fraud."

Where a case has been heard upon its merits in an appellate court according to its rules of practice, and the judgment of the court has been correctly entered, and the time, if any, allowed by statute or its rules for a rehearing having passed, and, no application for a rehearing having been made, the remittitur issues and is lodged in the lower court, it may well be said that the appellate court has lost its jurisdiction of the cause, and has not power to recall or reconsider it. Under these circumstances it has fairly and duly exercised its appellate functions and exhausted its powers as to the cause. There must be an end of litigation; public policy, as well as the interests of individual litigants, demands it, and the rule just announced is indispensable to such a consummation. There are many such cases: King v. Ruckman, 22 N. J. Eq. 551; Putnam v. Clark, 35 N. J. Eq. 145; Browder v. McArthur, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 58, 5 L. ed. 397; Ex parte Story, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 339, 9 L. ed. 1108; Martin v. Hunter, supra; still they are not in conflict with those in which jurisdiction is held not to have been lost, nor do they fail to recognize this fact or the principles upon which the other decisions are founded.

Illustrative of this is King v. Ruckman, where, at a preceding term, the cause had been argued and decided and the remittitur sent down, and a motion for a rehearing was applied for at a subsequent term. The decision of the court was that after a cause has been heard upon the merits, and the judgment properly entered and the papers remitted to the court below, the court of errors has no further jurisdiction with respect to the case. "It is not pretended," says the opinion, "that the judgment has been taken through deception or mistake, . . ." and, referring to White v. Tommey, supra, as a case in which the final decree had been revoked by the house of lords on the ground that it had been procured by deception, it is said: "In the practice of this court, therefore, it seems clear that an error in a decree or judgment occurring from fraud or mistake will be rectified. . . . I have no doubt that this court has the power at any time to amend its judgment if it is erroneous by reason of a misentry of the clerk, or by reason of any other mistake, or that such judgment may be set aside and treated as a nullity if it has been procured by fraud or is the result of misapprehension."

The case before us is one in which a judgment of reversal has been rendered, and improvidently, through mistake, and has been obtained upon a false suggestion; our decision of it is the result of misapprehension, and of an imposition upon the court. A false representation of the record of an inferior court has been brought here in the form of a transcript, duly certified as a true representation of the original, and we have exercised appellate jurisdiction upon it, believing that it was a correct representation of that record; or, in other words, of the case as it appears in the lower court, but now it is shown that, instead of speaking the truth, it is a falsification, and that no such case is or has been there for review by us. It is not pretended that the attorney-general had any suspicion of the falsehood. It is not required of him that he shall ordinarily regard the mere features of a transcript upon which questions of the legality of procedure may be raised, as grounds of suspicion of the correctness of the transcript, and, in response to such suspicion, to make inquiry of the clerk before submitting the cause. He does not participate, except upon the written request of the governor, in trials à nisi prius, and usually has no source of information except the transcript. It is also immaterial that the counsel for the prisoner is not charged with the duty of seeing that the records of conviction are correctly entered against his client; still where the record has been entered as showing the prisoner's personal presence at the trial, in the manner appearing from the new transcript before us, the prisoner and his attorney are charged with the duty of bringing to the appellate court a correct or truthful transcript of that record (Horne v. Carter, 20 Fla. 45; Ormand v. Barnard, 5 Fla. 528; Bridger v. Thrasher, 22 Fla. 383); and no advantage can be gained from any action of this tribunal upon an untruthful representation of that record, however ignorant the convict or the counsel may be of the real status of the record, or of the incorrectness of the transcript, and however free from blame the clerk may have been in the mistake characterizing his transcript and certificate. It is of no moment that, as is the case here, there has been between the clerk and the prisoner, or the clerk and the prisoner's counsel, no fraud or collusion, nor suspicion, nor suggestion of either, in the preparation of the transcript, or in the certificate thereof; and that neither the prisoner, nor his attorney, nor any representative of the prisoner, had anything to do with the preparation of the transcript, other than to ask for it; and that the issuance of the remittitur was entirely regular. The fact still remains that a false record has been brought here on behalf of the convict and a reversal has been obtained in his behalf on it, such reversal being based solely upon its false feature; and this fact is not changed, nor its result modified, by the innocence of the prisoner, his counsel, and the attorney-general, but the extent of the imposition, and of the mistake, is only made the greater. To attempt to take any advantage from the judgment thus obtained would, in view of the innocence of the state, be an attempt at fraud upon the state, and we do not see that it would not be an imposition upon the court, and a fraud upon its jurisdiction, however innocent the mistake upon the part of each and every person connected with the cause, or the obtaining or preparing of the transcript. The appellate jurisdiction of this court is to be exercised over the tribunals subject thereto, only in the causes actually decided by them, and as such causes are shown by their records to be (Pearce v. Jordan, 9 Fla. 528; Darden v. Lines, 2 Fla. 569; Price v. Sanchez, 8 Fla. 186; Jacksonville v. Lawson, 16 Fla. 321; Irvin v. State, 19 Fla. 872; Zinn v. Dzialynski, 14 Fla. 43); and it will never permit itself to be misled, by mistake or otherwise, into acting upon any of those tribunals except through the very cause as it may have been decided there and is shown by its records; and when it discovers, as here, that it has been thus misled it will not hesitate to undo the improvident work, however innocent all parties interested may be. The anomalous and mischievous conditions which would arise from a departure from this rule are palpable. The consideration, or reversal, or affirmation, of a judgment or decree upon a misrepresentation of the record of the cause, or upon anything else than the true record of that cause, is entirely outside of the functions or purposes of an appellate court.

This case is, in our judgment, clearly within the rule which preserves our jurisdiction of it. We have been misled into reversing a judgment on a false record, into acting in a cause when that cause, as it really is and only can be acted on by us, has not been before us. In law, the writ of error issued in the cause is, in so far as our exercise of our powers is concerned, still before us, and will be until that cause, as it really is, shall be decided, or the writ dismissed on legal grounds. Ostensibly it has passed from use, but only through the means of a misrepresentation, and by the decision of a case which is not shown by the real record, and does not exist; in the eyes of the law, however, decisions or judgments obtained in this manner are not binding on us.

In coming to the above conclusion we have not been unmindful that the state is the actor in the motion, nor failed to ask ourselves if there is in the fact that the cause is criminal in its character, anything which precludes the Commonwealth from making such a motion. We are aware that this court has decided that the state is not entitled to a writ of error to reverse the judgment of the circuit court quashing an indictment and discharging the accused (State v. Burns, 18 Fla. 185); and that the current of authority, in the absence of legislative grant to the contrary, is that the state is not entitled to an appeal or writ of error to a judgment of acquittal in a criminal cause, for even the mere purpose of settling questions of law. The provision of our Constitution, that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, (Declaration of Rights, § 8), does not escape our attention, we also know that it is not the practice for the state to apply for a rehearing here in a criminal cause on account of any error of the court; if any such application has ever been made we are not aware of it; and we certainly assume for the purposes of this decision that such an application is not tenable. Still we find nothing in these considerations that seems to preclude the action now being taken by the state. It is not attempted even to review any judgment on account of an error of the court; for no error has been committed by it; the only thing attempted is to set aside that which, though in the form of a judgment, is, because of the circumstances under which it was obtained, in law, not the judgment of the court upon the true case of the plaintiff in error. It is an entry obtained under circumstances of misrepresentation, for which the plaintiff in error and those acting for him must, in so far as our powers and duties are concerned, be held responsible, and on which the law does not contemplate that we should ever act, and on which we would not have acted had we known of the misrepresentation; and for which blame or laches are not imputable to the state. The state's judgment in criminal causes cannot be the subject of review in this manner; they can be brought in review only upon the records of them, and not upon a falsification of such records; and the state is not prohibited by any principle of law known to us from arresting the reversal which has been made of her judgment upon such false representation. She is entitled to require the party seeking relief from such judgments to bring to the appellate court the record of the cause in which it was obtained, for without this, that cause is not before the appellate tribunal for consideration. Any other doctrine than this must result in the frequent consummation of fraud upon the courts, and its constant encouragement.

Our conclusion is, that the judgment of reversal should be vacated and the cause reinstated on our docket. Whether there may not be cases in which a party would be estopped by his conduct, or by that of his counsel, from claiming benefit from a mistake of this character, is not before us for decision. The circumstances of this case exclude any expression on such point.

The entry of the judgment of reversal heretofore rendered will be vacated, and the cause recalled and restored to our docket for further proceedings, including an application for a certiorari in accordance with the rule of practice governing in such cases.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

GULF, COLORADO & SANTA FÉ R.
CO., Appl.,
v.

Richard HENRY.

(.....Tex.....)

A ticket which is good for a continuous passage only does not entitle a passenger, who voluntarily takes passage upon a train which he must be held to have known would not convey him to his destination and who leaves that train at an intermediate point, to be carried the remainder of the journey on the train which he ought to have taken in the first instance.

(May 20, 1898)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Runnels County, in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Terry, for appellant:

Even in the absence of any stipulation on the ticket it is good only for a continuous passage, and the passenger is not entitled to disembark from a train upon which he has taken passage at an intermediate point and afterwards resume it again upon another train, but he must inform himself as to what trains run through to his destination and take one of such trains, and hence it was certainly competent for the defendant to contract by stipulation on the ticket that it would only be good for continuous passage, and the plaintiff having traveled on the freight train as far as Brownwood, and disembarked there, and afterwards attempting to resume his journey on a regular passenger train, his ticket was properly refused by the conductor.

Thompson, Carr. 69, 70; Hutchinson, Carr. § 575; Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 71 Pa. 484, 10 Am. Rep. 711; Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; McClure v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 34 Md. 582, 6 Am. Rep. 345; Johnson v. Concord R. Corp. 46 N. H. 213, 88 Am. Dec. 199; Petrie v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 42 N. J. L. 450; Wyman v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 34 Minn. 210, 22 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 402; Hatten v. Railroad Co. 89 Ohio St. 375, 13 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 53, and cases cited in note, p. 55. See notes to O'Brien v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 1 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 262; Auerbach v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 6 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 387; Walker v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 16 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 386; Texas & P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 2 Will. C. C. § 163; Pennington v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 62 Md. 95, 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 310, and cases cited in note, p. 312; Little Rock & Ft. S. R.

Co. v. Dean, 43 Ark. 520, 51 Am. Rep. 584; Howard v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 61 Miss. 194; Pennsylvania Co. v. Hine, 41 Ohio St. 276.

It is competent for a carrier, especially in case of an excursion ticket sold at reduced rates, to limit the time in which the ticket shall be used; and in this case it appears, both from the plaintiff's petition and the evidence, that the time limited for the use of his ticket had expired before he presented it for passage to the conductor of the train on leaving Brownwood, and hence the conductor rightfully refused to receive it for passage.

His ticket being invalid for passage upon its face, both on account of the expiration of the time in which it should have been used and the fact that the plaintiff had broken the condition requiring a continuous passage, he was properly expelled by the conductor, and, under such circumstances, it was not proper or competent for the conductor to hear excuses from the plaintiff for his failure to use the ticket in the proper time and in the proper manner.

Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249, 34 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 339, 17 Fed. Rep. 880, 21 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 283; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 43 Am. Rep. 481, 16 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 396; Hall v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 9 Fed. Rep. 585, 9 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 348; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277, 3 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 340; Yorton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23, 6 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 322; Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419; Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 87 Mich. 342, 26 Am. Rep. 531; Shelton v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 29 Ohio St. 214; Doune v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 86 Conn. 287, 4 Am. Rep. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Griffin, 63 Ill. 490.

Nor was the action of any previous conductor in receiving the ticket for passage binding on the conductor who refused plaintiff's ticket.

Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 71 Pa. 484, 10 Am. Rep. 711; Beebe v. Ayres, 28 Barb. 276; Johnson v. Concord R. Corp. 46 N. H. 213; Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; Keely v. Boston & M. R. Co. 67 Me. 163, 24 Am. Rep. 19; Wakefield v. South Boston R. Co. 117 Mass. 544; Sherman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 45; Thorpe v. Concord R. Co. 61 Vt. 378; Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 101.

Messrs. Powell & Smith, for appellee:

A passenger is "a person whom a railway, in the performance of its duty as a common carrier, has contracted to carry from one place to another place for a valuable consideration, and whom the railway, in the course of the performance of that contract, has received at his station, or under its care."

NOTE.—For notes on expulsion of passenger generally, see South Florida R. Co. v. Rhoads (Fla.) 3 L. R. A. 733; McGowen v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. (La.) 5 L. R. A. 817; Carsten v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (Minn.) 9 L. R. A. 638.
16 L. R. A.

For conditions in ticket as to the right to ride upon it, see portion of above note in McGowen Case, on page 819 of 5 L. R. A., also note to Fonseca v. Cunard S. S. Co. (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 340.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 210, and cases cited.

The relation of carrier and passenger having been constituted, continues until the journey, expressly or impliedly contracted for, has been concluded, and the passenger has left the railway's premises; thus, one who has been accepted as a passenger is entitled to protection as such while he is in the railway's station, journeying on its line, in transit from one means of conveyance to another provided by the railway, and while he is temporarily absent from the cars at a way station for a proper purpose.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 220; Clusman v. Long Island R. Co. 73 N. Y. 606; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Riley, 89 Ind. 568.

Appellee, on the morning of the 24th day of May, 1888, having been accepted as a passenger upon the proper cars by the agents of appellant, en route for the place of destination, specified on said ticket, and having prosecuted his journey as diligently, rapidly, and continuously as he was enabled to do by the means of conveyance furnished him by appellant, under its contract, it was compelled to carry him to the end of his said journey, although the time limited in the ticket may have expired long before said journey had been completed, and if appellant, in the operation of its trains, failed to make proper connections, or failed to run on time, or operated and run its cars, upon which passengers were permitted to be carried, from one intermediate point to another intermediate point, and appellee, a passenger there on, was retarded in the progress of his journey by reason of such misconnections, delays or unusual short-line runs, it will not be heard to say that appellee's journey was not continuous, and arbitrarily eject him from its cars upon the pretext that the time limited in said ticket, meanwhile, had expired.

International & G. N. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Tex. 252; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mac'ie, 1 L. R. A. 687, 71 Tex. 491; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, §§ 210-220.

Stayton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee purchased from appellant a round-trip ticket from Ballinger to Austin and return, on May 18, 1888, limited until the expiration of May 24 following, on which he went to Austin by way of Brenham and the Houston & Texas Central Railway. On the morning of May 24, 1888, after having his ticket properly stamped, appellee went by the railway on which he came to Brenham, at which place it was necessary for him to take a train on appellant's road to reach Ballinger. He, however, did not leave Austin in time to make connection with appellant's train that would reach Ballinger on May 24, which left Brenham at 10:35 A. M. on that day, and in consequence of this he remained at Brenham until 11:50 on the night of that day, when he took a train on regular time for Temple, which place he reached at 3:20 on the morning of May 25, and there remained until 10:45 on the same morning, when he boarded a mixed train, which was not going to Ballinger; and when he reached Brownwood, under instructions from the conductor of that train, he left it to wait for the regular train for Ballinger, which he boarded, but on failure to pay fare when demanded he was expelled from the car, and, being without money, had to walk to Ballinger. To have reached Ballinger before the expiration of the time to which his ticket was limited, appellee should have left Austin in time to have taken appellant's train No. 1, leaving Brenham at 10:35 A. M. on May 24, and by that train alone could he make continuous passage from Brenham to Ballinger. The movement of trains on appellant's road is thus stated by appellant's general passenger agent, and there seems to be no controversy as to the correctness of his statement: "May 24 and 25 defendant had trains 1, 8, and 47 between Brenham and Temple, and train 11 between Temple and Ballinger, all allowed to carry passengers. It had also train No. 49, a freight, that was permitted to carry passengers between Temple and Coleman, but between no other points. The schedule time was—No. 1, leave Brenham, 10:35 A. M.; arrive Temple, 2:30 P. M. No. 8, leave Brenham 11:50 P. M.; arrive Temple, 3:20 A. M. No. 47, leave Brenham, 1:05 P. M.; arrive Temple, 10 P. M. No. 11, leave Temple, 5:15 P. M.; arrive Ballinger, 12:55 A. M. On May 24 train No. 1 left Brenham 2 minutes late, and arrived at Temple 8 minutes late; train No. 8 left Brenham 5 minutes late, and arrived at Temple 10 minutes late; train 47 left Brenham 13 minutes late, and arrived in Temple 12 minutes late; train No. 11 left Temple 2 hours and 45 minutes late, and arrived at Ballinger 2 hours and 45 minutes late. On May 25, train No. 1 left Brenham on time, and arrived at Temple 12 minutes late; train No. 8 left Brenham on time and arrived at Temple 6 hours and 42 minutes late; train 47 left Brenham, and arrived at Temple, on time; train No. 11 left Temple 40 minutes late, and arrived at Ballinger 80 minutes late. In order to have made a continuous passage from Brenham to Temple, and from Temple to Ballinger, plaintiff should have taken train No. 1 from Brenham to Temple, and train No. 11 from Temple to Ballinger." It seems to be uncontroverted that the ticket on which appellee was traveling was one that entitled him only to a continuous passage from Brenham to Ballinger, and that it was limited to May 24 is conceded. After boarding the mixed train at Temple, appellee presented his ticket to the conductor of that train, who advised him that it was only good for a continuous passage, and prepared to put him off at Belton without punching his ticket, there to await the passenger train bound for Ballinger, but appellee refused to do this, and said he would remain on the train until it was overtaken by the passenger train bound for Ballinger, whereupon the conductor punched his ticket, and returned it to him, and he remained on that mixed train until it reached Brownwood, where he left it, and soon afterwards entered the train from which he was expelled.

16 L. R. A.

The charge of the court, in effect, informed the jury that appellee was entitled to passage to Ballinger on the ticket held by him, notwithstanding the period limited for its use had expired before he was expelled from the train, unless he had lost that right by breaking the passage. The court, however, instructed the jury as follows: "If plaintiff, when he entered defendant's freight or mixed car at Temple, or soon thereafter, was informed by the conductor that said car did not run to Ballinger, and that said conductor offered to return plaintiff's ticket, and allow plaintiff to ride to Belton without canceling any part of said ticket, and that plaintiff voluntarily remained on said car, and offered his ticket to said conductor for cancellation for so much of said distance from Temple to Ballinger as should be made on said car, and, further, that said conductor punched said ticket, to indicate that said ticket had been used for a part of said distance, and that plaintiff, when said train arrived at Brownwood, voluntarily left said car, then said ticket would not be binding on defendant for any other train, and the conductor of such other train would have a right to eject plaintiff from such train unless plaintiff paid his fare; and if you find the above facts from the evidence you will find for the defendant."

Appellant asked an instruction to the effect that plaintiff was not entitled to passage on the train after the time had expired within which he, by terms of his ticket, was required to use it. The court refused this instruction. Appellant also asked an instruction in reference to the duty of appellee, under the contract, to make a continuous passage from Temple to Ballinger, which, in substance, contained the same matter as that contained in the charge of the court upon that subject, but it was more elaborate and informed the jury that it was the duty of plaintiff to inform himself as to the trains on which he could make continuous passage. That charge also informed the jury that the fact that the conductor on the mixed train between Temple and Brownwood permitted plaintiff to travel on his train from the one place to the other would not entitle him to passage on the train from which he was expelled, if otherwise not entitled. This charge was refused.

If the charge of the court before quoted be the law, a new trial should have been granted, for there was no conflict in the evidence, and every material fact made necessary by that charge to relieve defendant from liability was proved. It must be conceded that plaintiff was not entitled to recover if the facts enumerated in the charge given existed, but the inquiry arises whether that charge did not make the defense to depend too much upon information given by the conductor to plaintiff, and upon his voluntary action based on such information. There can be no pretense that plaintiff was induced to go upon the mixed train, which did not run to his place of destination, by reason of any invitation or representation made by any servant of the company, and we understand it to be the duty of a person, situated as was plaintiff, to inform himself whether or not he could make that continuous passage from Temple to Ballinger, contemplated by his ticket, on any particular train, and the jury should have been so instructed. Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 71 Pa. 483, 10 Am. Rep. 711. We understand the law, further, to be that the act of the conductor on the mixed train running between Temple and Coleman, in permitting plaintiff to have passage from Temple to Brownwood on that train did not confer any right whatever upon him to have passage on the through passenger train from Temple to Ballinger, and the jury should have been so instructed. Ibid.

It being conceded that plaintiff had a right, at most, only to continuous passage over appellant's road, we understand the law to be that he had no right to enter a through train, and thereon have passage for a part of the journey, and then leave it, and again have passage on a following train, by virtue of the original contract and payment. Nor had he any more the right, under the contract for continuous passage, to take a train that could not give him such passage, and this to leave at some intermediate point, and again to enter and have passage on another train that could take him to his destination, even though the latter train may be the one he should have taken in the first instance. Ibid.; Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 85, 29 Am. Rep. 458; McClure v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 34 Md. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 845; Johnson v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 68 Md. 107; Johnson v. Concord R. Corp. 46 N. H. 213, 88 Am. Dec. 199; Petrie v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 43 N. J. L. 450; Wyman v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 34 Minn. 210; Cleveland, O. & C. R. Co. v. Bartram, 11 Ohio St. 457; Oil Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Clark, 72 Pa. 231; Drew v. Central Pac. R. Co. 51 Cal. 425; Cheney v. Boston & M. R. Co. 11 Met. 121; Hatten v. Railroad Co. 39 Ohio St. 375, 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 53.

The contract of the parties must fix their rights, and many reasons are suggested in the cases cited why, in the absence of express contract for continuous passage, such should be presumed to have been within the intent of the parties, and why substantial rights would be denied if such contracts be not enforced. No question arises in this case as to what, within the meaning of such a contract, is continuous passage, when the passenger holds coupon tickets evidencing his right to transit over several roads within the line of an entire journey. The right of plaintiff was to travel, by one continuous journey, from Brenham to Ballinger, on such trains on appellant's road as carried passengers and made connection between these places, and this continuity would not be broken by any delay or change of cars made necessary by the conduct of appellant's business; but when plaintiff voluntarily took passage on a train which he must be held to have known would not convey him to Ballinger, and at a point on the line broke the journey, he must be held to have lost his right to enter another train and to be carried to Ballinger on the original contract, as fully as would he, had he, on the 23d of the month, come to Brownwood on the regular passenger train bound for Ballinger, and stopped over at Brownwood until the next day.

Cases may arise in which, by accident, misfortune, fault of the carrier, or the misconduct of employes of a carrier of passengers, continuous transit may be interrupted without fault on the part of the passenger, and in such cases the passenger may be entitled to resume his journey, and to be transported as though no interruption had occurred; but no such facts exist in this case. It is insisted that the time had expired, when plaintiff was expelled from the train, during which he was entitled to travel on the ticket, and that the jury should have been so instructed and if the continuity of the journey had not been broken it would be necessary to decide whether, if the journey was begun on appellant's road before the close of May 24, 1888, plaintiff was entitled to complete it on the subsequent day. The ticket is not found in the transcript,—of its verbiage we are not advised; and, in view of the fact that the question already considered is decisive of this appeal, we do not now deem it necessary to determine whether the construction of such a contract as the petition describes ought to be as appellant contends, which would require the journey to be ended before the expiration of the day named in the contract as its limit, or whether, if the passage was commenced before the expiration of that day, it might be completed by continuous passage afterwards. There are decisions placing the latter construction on such contracts. Lundy v. Central Pac. R. Co. 66 Cal. 191, 56 Am. Rep. 100; Auerbach v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 281, 42 Am. Rep. 290.

For the errors noticed the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT

Lizzie BINGEL, Appt.,
v.
Frederick H. VOLZ et al.

(.....Ill.....)

1. A court of equity has no jurisdiction to reform a will.
2. A devise of land in the "northwest"

NOTE.—Parol evidence of mistake in description of land devised.

The English authorities from a very early date have given sanction to the principle, that parol evidence is admissible to correct a mistake in the description of either land devised or personal property bequeathed. Seiwood v. Mildmay, 3 Ves. Jr. 206; Doe v. Huthwaite, 3 Barn. & Ald. 632; Mosley v. Massey, 8 East, 149; Thomas v. Thomas, 6 T. R. 671; Doe v. Oxenden, 3 Taunt. 147; Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 Mee. & W. 363; Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing. 244; Goodtitle v. Southern, 1 Maule & S. 290; Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Vern. 564; Lingren v. Lingren, 9 Beav. 358; Beaumont v. Fell, 2 P. Wms. 140; Day v. Trig, 1 P. Wms. 236.

In the Federal courts it is an established canon of interpretation, applicable alike to deeds, written contracts, and testamentary devises, that extrinsic or parol evidence is competent for the purpose of applying the writing to its appropriate subject-matter; and all courts, in the construction of a will, are controlled, as to the admission of evidence, by liberal considerations. Bradley v. Washington A. & G. Steam Packet Co. 38 U. S. 18 Pet. 99, 10 L. ed. 77; Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 Mee. & W. 363; Blake v. Hawkins, 38 U. S. 325, 25 L. ed. 141; Maryland v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 112, 22 L. ed. 714; Blake v. Doherty, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 302, 5 L. ed. 109; Smith v. Bell, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 75, 8 L. ed. 323; Clarke v. Johnston, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 502, 21 L. ed. 906; Atkinson v. Cummins, 50 U. S. 9 How. 485, 13 L. ed. 227; Wilkins v. Allen, 59 U. S. 18 How. 393, 15 L. ed. 399; King v. Ackerman, 67 U. S. 2 Black. 417, 17 L. ed. 298; Reed v. Merchants Mut. Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 95 U. S. 30, 24 L. ed. 349.

16 L. R. A.

quarter of a certain section of 'and cannot be shown by parol evidence to mean land in the southwest quarter, as such a change would amount to a reformation of the will.

(March 23, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Madison County dismissing her cross-bill and granting the relief prayed

Equity has jurisdiction to correct mistakes in wills, only where the error appears upon the face of the will itself, so that both the mistake and the correction can be ascertained and supplied by the context, from a plain interpretation of the terms of the instrument as it stands. A resort to extrinsic evidence is never permitted either to show a mistake or to ascertain the correction. Mistakes which can be thus corrected may be in the names of legatees or devisees, in the description of property, or in other terms. 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 871, citing Re Aird's Estate, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 291; Whitfield v. Langdale, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 61; Barber v. Wood, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 885; Newman v. Piercey, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 41; Wilson v. Morley, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 778; Travers v. Blundell, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 439; Homer v. Homer, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 758; Garland v. Beverley, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 213; Re Nunn's Trusts, L. R. 19 Eq. 331; Farrer v. St. Catharine's College, L. R. 16 Eq. 19; Hardwick v. Hardwick, L. R. 16 Eq. 168; McKechnie v. Vaughan, L. R. 15 Eq. 289; Re Ingles's Trusts, L. R. 11 Eq. 678; Hall v. Litch, L. R. 9 Eq. 376; Box v. Barrett, L. R. 3 Eq. 244; Hart v. Tulk, 2 DeG. M. & G. 300; Campbell v. Rouskell, 27 Beav. 825; Taylor v. Richardson, 2 Drew. 16; Snyder v. Warbasse, 11 N. J. Eq. 463; Wood v. White, 32 Me. 340, 52 Am. Dec. 654; Jackson v. Payne, 2 Met. (Ky.) 567; Goode v. Goode, 22 Mo. 518, 66 Am. Dec. 630; Trexler v. Miller, 41 N. C. 248; Johnson v. Hubbard, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 773; Yates v. Cole, 54 N. C. 110; McAlister v. Butterfield, 31 Ind. 25; Erwin v. Hamner, 27 Ala. 296; Mathem v. Mathem, 28 Ala. 374; Nutt v. Nutt, 1 Freeman. Ch. 123.

A court may look beyond the face of the will for by the bill in a suit to obtain partition of certain land. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Happy & Travous, for appellant:

It is presumed that a testator, when he makes and publishes his will, intends to dispose of his whole estate, unless the presumption is rebutted by its provisions, or evidence to the contrary.

where there is an ambiguity as to the person or property to which it is applicable, but not to enlarge or diminish the estate devised. King v. Ackerman, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 417, 17 L. ed. 298.

"As a latent ambiguity is only disclosed by extrinsic evidence, it may be removed by extrinsic evidence. Such an ambiguity may arise upon a will, either when it names a person as the object of the gift, or a thing as the subject of it, and there are two persons or things that answer such name or description; or, secondly, it may arise when the will contains a misdescription of the object or subject, as where there is no such person or thing in existence, or, if in existence, the person is not the one intended, or the thing does not belong to the testator. The first kind of ambiguity, where there are two persons or things equally answering the description, may be removed by any evidence that will have that effect. 1 Jarman, Wills, 370; Hawkins, 9, 10." Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 240, 29 L. ed. 860.

From the earliest period in the history of testamentary law, there has been manifested a disposition to apply a more favorable construction to wills than to ordinary legal instruments. Regret has sometimes been expressed at the disposition thus manifested, but the courts have nevertheless continued to countenance that line of judicial policy. It must therefore be accepted and acted upon as an established rule of construction at the present time. Cleveland v. Spilman, 25 Ind. 96; Brownfield v. Brownfield, 12 Pa. 136; Wilkins v. Allen, 59 U. S. 18 How. 385, 15 L. ed. 393.

O'Hara, in his work on the Interpretation of Wills, on page 374, concludes his review of void testamentary gifts as follows: "The question whether an uncertainty of the description of the subject or object of a gift by will can be cured or not by parol, resolves itself into the ulterior inquiry, Is the ambiguity so patent as that the testator shows that he was aware of it, and that he was leaving a part of his will undeclared in writing? As this is very rarely the case, it follows that at the present day hardly any case of uncertain or erroneous description in a will can occur which may not be remedied by parol."

Where the description of the subject-matter of the devise is mistaken, parol evidence has been admitted to aid the construction, by showing to what the testator must have referred. As where, on a devise of a house and lot in Fourth street, Philadelphia, it appeared the testator had no property in Fourth street, but did own a house and lot in Third street, in that city, it was held such property passed under the devise. And where the devise was of "thirty-six acres, more or less of lot 37 in the second division in Barnstead," and there was no such lot in the second division in that town, but the testator owned a portion of lot 37 in that division, it was held to pass under the devise. 1 Redfield, Wills, p. 534, citing Allen v. Lyons, 2 Wash. C. C. 476; Riggs v. Myers, 20 Mo. 239; Cleveland v. Spilman, 25 Ind. 96; Winkley v. Kaime, 32 N. H. 238; Redfield, Am. Cases on Wills, 547. See also Jackson v. Goea, 13 Johns. 518, 7 Am. Dec. 399; Pritchard v. Hicks, 1 Paige, 270, 2 L. ed. 643; Pinson v. Ivey, 1 Yerg. 236; Wusthoff v. Dracourt, 3 Watts, 243; Gass v. Ross, 8 Sneed, 211; Doe v. Roe, 1 Wend. 541; 16 L. R. A.

Higgins v. Duen, 100 Ill. 554; Smith v. Smith, 17 Gratt. 268; Irwin v. Zane, 15 W. Va. 646.

When it is shown that the description of the subject of the devise, as it appears on the face of the will, is false in part, courts may look beyond the words of the will,—may place themselves in the position occupied by the testator when he executed the will,—and with the aid of extrinsic evidence, view the testator's

Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 440, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Watson v. Boylston, 5 Mass. 417; Tudor v. Terrel, 2 Dana, 49; Hand v. Hoffman, 8 N. J. L. 86; Breckenridge v. Duncan, 2 A. K. Marsh. 51; Haydon v. Ewing, 1 B. Mon. 113; Capel v. Roberts, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 166.

Elsewhere the same author says: "The admission of parol evidence in regard to wills is essentially the same as that which prevails in regard to contracts generally. It can be received to show the intention of the testator, and especially to enable the court, where the question arises, to give his language such an interpretation as it is reasonable to presume, from the circumstances in which he was placed, he intended it should receive, or to put the court in the place of the testator." 1 Redfield, Wills, 496; Scott v. Neeves, 77 Wis. 305.

"The law is not so unreasonable as to deny to the reader of any instrument the same light which the writer enjoyed." Wigram, Wills, p. 161; Gilmer v. Stone, 120 U. S. 586, 30 L. ed. 734.

The reasoning which sustains the admission of parol evidence to correct a misdescription as to the particular individual intended in a bequest would seem to apply with equal force when such evidence is introduced for the purpose of determining the particular piece of property devised. Thus a mere misdescription of the legatee does not render the legacy void, unless the ambiguity is such as to render it impossible, either from the will or otherwise, to ascertain who was intended as the object of the testator's bounty. Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige, 271, 3 L. ed. 433.

In Button v. American Tract Soc., 23 Vt. 336, neither of the claimants answered the description, and neither came any nearer to it than the other, but the will was construed with the aid of extrinsic circumstances. St. Luke's Home for I. C. F. v. Aged Indigent Females Asso. 52 N. Y. 191.

And it has been held that when the will contains two inconsistent descriptions extrinsic evidence may be resorted to to ascertain which is the true description; and where there is a latent ambiguity, as, if the object of the testator's bounty or subject of disposition is described in terms applicable indifferently to more than one person or thing evidence is admissible to prove which of the persons or things was intended, including declarations of the testator. Gary's Probate Law, § 645, citing Case v. Young, 3 Minn. 209; Morgan v. Burrows, 45 Wis. 211; Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226; 1 Redfield, Wills, chap. 9, § 4; 2 Williams, Exrs. pt. 3, bk. 3, chao. 2, § 1; 2 Jarman, Wills, 762.

The purpose for which extrinsic evidence may be legitimately admitted is not to add to or vary or ordinarily to explain, the literal meaning of the terms of the will, or to give effect to what may be supposed to have been the unexpressed intention of the testator, but to connect the instrument with the extrinsic facts therein referred to, and to place the court, as nearly as may be, in the situation occupied by the testator, so that his intention may be determined from the language of the instrument, as it is explained by the extrinsic facts and circumstances. Dougherty v. Rogers, 3 L. R. A. 847, 119 Ind. 254, citing Greenpoint Sugar Co. v. Whitin, 69 N. Y. 823, 336.

F. S. R.

affairs as he viewed them, in order to determine the intention of the testator from the language of the will, after excluding what is shown to be false.

Decker v. Decker, 10 West. Rep. 844, 121 Ill. 341; Moreland v. Brady, 8 Or. 303, 34 Am. Rep. 581; Morgan v. Burrows, 45 Wis. 211, 30 Am. Rep. 717.

A latent ambiguity may arise when the will contains a misdescription of the subject, as where the subject as literally described does not belong to the testator; and as this ambiguity only appears from extrinsic evidence, it may likewise be removed by extrinsic evidence.

Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 210, 29 L. ed. 860; Decker v. Decker, 10 West. Rep. 344, 121 Ill. 341.

That the court, in construing the will, may occupy the testator's position when he made it, evidence of the state of testator's family; the state of his property; the relations of the testator with those claiming the property, whether friendly or otherwise; the state of his mind and feelings toward them; as to whether reasons existed for preferring some to others; and in short of all collateral facts and circumstances which will enable the court to see and feel as the testator then saw and felt in regard to his affairs and those now claiming his bounty, — is admissible.

Cotton v. Smithwick, 66 Me. 360; Decker v. Decker, 10 West. Rep. 344, 121 Ill. 341; Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige, 271, 3 L. ed. 432; Allen v. Lyons, 2 Wash. C. C. 475; Winkley v. Kaime, 82 N. H. 268; Black v. Richards, 95 Ind. 184; Vernor v. Henry, 3 Watts, 385; Moreland v. Brady, 8 Or. 303, 34 Am. Rep. 581.

Where there is a latent ambiguity in the devise, the descriptive words of the subject of the devise being in part false, if, after striking so much of the description as is false enough remain in the will, interpreted in the light of surrounding circumstances when the will was made, to identify the premises, the devise will be good.

Merrick v. Merrick, 37 Ohio St. 126, 41 Am. Rep. 493; Moreland v. Brady, 8 Or. 303, 34 Am. Rep. 581; Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 210, 29 L. ed. 860; Decker v. Decker, 10 West. Rep. 344, 121 Ill. 341, and authorities there cited.

Messrs. E. F. Springer and Wise & Davis for appellees.

Bailey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 19th day of August, 1887, John Volz died, leaving him surviving his widow and six children, five sons and one daughter, and also leaving a last will and testament, as follows:

"I, John Volz, of Alhambra, county of Madison, and state of Illinois, farmer, being of sound mind, memory, and understanding, do make and publish this, my last will and testament (hereby revoking and making void all former wills by me at any time heretofore made): (1) I wish my funeral expenses and debts, if any, paid at an early day. (2) I give, bequeath, and devise to my wife, Barbara Volz, all my personal estate, of every nature and kind, wherever situated, during her natural lifetime. (3) I give, bequeath, and devise to my oldest son, John Volz, four hundred dollars ($400.00), to him paid by my son Joseph Volz, as hereinafter mentioned. (4) I give and bequeath and devise to my son Peter Volz, one thousand dollars ($1,000), to him paid by my son Joseph Volz, as hereinafter mentioned. (5) I give, bequeath, and devise to my son Fritz Volz five ($5.00) dollars, to him paid by Barbara Volz, his mother, out of the personal property, as hereinafter mentioned. (6) I give, bequeath, and devise to my son Joseph Volz my homestead of ninety (90) acres, described as follows, to wit: The south one half of the northwest quarter, containing eighty acres more or less, and also ten (10) acres off of the north side of the north one half of the southwest quarter, adjoining the south one half of the northwest quarter, all in section No. sixteen (16), township No. five (5), range No. six (6) west of the third principal meridian, Madison county and state of Illinois. My said son Joseph Volz to pay my said son John Volz four hundred dollars, and also my said son Joseph Volz to pay my said son Peter Volz one thousand dollars, within two years after my death and that of my wife, Barbara Volz. (7) I give, bequeath, and devise to my son Adam Volz five dollars ($5.00), to him paid by Barbara Volz, his mother, out of the personal property. (8) I give, bequeath, and devise to my daughter, Elizabeth Bingel, seventy (70) acres off of the south side of the north one half of the northwest quarter of section No. sixteen (16), township No. five (5), range No. six (6) W. of third principal meridian, county of Madison and state of Illinois. (9) My wife, Barbara Volz, to retain or hold her dower in the real estate during her natural lifetime, receiving the rent from said real estate, and to pay the taxes. After her death the before-described real estate to remain as hereinbefore mentioned. In witness whereof I have signed and published and declared this instrument my will, at Alhambra, county of Madison, Illinois, this 13th day of August, A. D. 1887. John Volz. [Seal]"

The testator, at the time of his death, was the owner of 160 acres of land in Madison county, being the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, and the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, of section 16, township 5 N., of range 6 W. At that time he did not own, and so far as appears never had owned, the 70 acres off from the S. side of the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 16, which by said will was devised to his daughter, Elizabeth or Lizzie Bingel. Said daughter now insists that, by mistake of the draughtsman who drew up the will, the word "northwest" was inserted instead of the word "southwest" in the devise to her; and that in view of the remaining language of the will, and of the circumstances surrounding its execution, it should be construed as devising to her the S. 70 acres of the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section.

Three of the brothers of said Lizzie Bingel executed to her a quitclaim deed of the S. 70 acres of the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section, reciting in said deed that it was "made for the purpose of removing the latent ambiguity in said will caused by using the word 'northwest' instead of 'southwest' in describing said land in said will." The widow of the testator having died, the two other brothers, Frederick and Adam Volz, filed their bill against their three brothers and their sister, Lizzie Bingel, for a partition of said S. 70 acres of the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section, alleging that said tract was intestate estate, and that upon the death of their father it descended to his six children as tenants in common.

The three brothers who had quitclaimed to their sister filed a disclaimer. Lizzie Bingel answered, and filed her cross-bill, alleging that said John Volz, being the owner in fee of the 70 acres off from the S. side of the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section, by his last will and testament devised the same to her, by the designation and description of "seventy acres off of the south side of the north one half of the northwest quarter of section number sixteen," etc.; that said John Volz, at the time of making said will, was the owner in fee of the 160 acres of land first above described, and no other real estate, and that by said will he devised all of his real estate, except said 70 acres, to Joseph Volz; that at the time of making said will he did not own, or suppose he owned, or expect to become the owner of, any interest in the tract to which the devise to said Lizzie Bingel, taken literally, would apply, and that he intended, by said will, to dispose of all his estate, real and personal, and supposed he had done so; that during his lifetime he was a farmer, and cultivated said 160 acres of land owned by him; that said Frederick and Adam Volz, long prior to the making of said will, went to do and work for themselves, and refused to stay with or assist their father in the cultivation and management of said land, or otherwise, and were disposed to be disobedient, shiftless, and of unsteady habits, and to act in all things against their father's wishes; that John and Peter Volz, two of the other sons, also left their father a few years prior to his death, and went to do and work for themselves, and were, at the time of making said will residing in and engaged in business in the state of Kansas; that Joseph Volz, the remaining son, and the complainant in the cross-bill, although being past their majority, remained with their father and mother, and assisted, worked, and cared for them up to the time of their respective deaths, and that, for a number of years prior to the death of said John Volz, said Joseph Volz and the complainant were the only children who remained with or did anything for their said parents; that said last will and testament was written by Charles Reudy, as draughtsman, at the request of John Volz, and that, as a part of the instructions from said John Volz, said draughtsman was given the deeds by which said John Volz held the land owned by him, from which to obtain the description of the portions of said land to be devised to Joseph Volz and to said complainant, respectively, in writing said will; that in said deeds said lands were correctly described, but that in copying said description therefrom into said will said draughtsman erroneously and unintentionally wrote the word "northwest" instead of "southwest" in describing the quarter of said section in which the land devised to said complainant lay, which error was overlooked, and the said will was so executed, devising said 70 acres so owned by said John Volz to the complainant by said faulty description; that, while on the face of the will

16 L. R. A.

the subject-matter of the devise is clear, yet, by reason of the premises, there arises a latent ambiguity, and a cloud is thereby cast upon the complainant's title to said land; but that, by construing said will in the light of surrounding circumstances, it will appear that said devise referred to and vested in the complainant the lands owned by said John Volz, and not devised to said Joseph Volz, and had reference to no other land or interest therein. Said cross-bill further represented that, in order to remove any ambiguity or uncertainty, or any cloud upon the complainant's title, arising from the failure of the testator to fully and accurately describe said land devised to the complainant, three of the complainant's brothers had executed to the complainant a quitclaim deed of said land, with the proper description. Said cross-bill prays that evidence be heard touching the matters therein alleged, and in aid of the construction of said will, and that the court examine the language of the devise to the complainant in connection with the facts alleged, and construe and interpret its meaning in the light of surrounding circumstances at the time the will was made, and determine and define what lands, if any, the complainant took by said devise, and what land was referred to and intended by the language there used; and decree that said will, by the language employed, devised to the complainant the said 70 acres off from the S. side of the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section, and that said land is the property of the complainant, and that complainants in the original bill have no interest therein or title thereto.

Frederick and Adam Volz answered denying the equities of the cross-bill; and, the cause coming on to be heard on pleadings and proofs, evidence was introduced by the complainant in the cross-bill substantially supporting the allegations therein contained; and, on consideration of the pleadings and evidence, the court entered a decree dismissing the cross-bill for want of equity, and awarding partition of said 70 acres of land in accordance with the prayer of the original bill. From that decree said Lizzie Bingel now appeals to this court.

The counsel for the appellant, while admitting that equity will not entertain a bill to reform a will, seems to us to be seeking to accomplish essentially the same thing under the guise of an attempt to construe the will. It is admitted that the terms of the devise to the appellant, on their face, are clear and unambiguous, and that they accurately describe a tract of land in existence, and capable of being readily identified, and which, if the testator had owned it, would have passed to the appellant by the terms of the will. But it is insisted that, when extrinsic evidence is applied to the devise, a latent ambiguity is raised, and that such evidence may therefore be resorted to for the purpose of explaining the ambiguity and showing what land the testator intended to devise to the appellant. The purpose of construction, as applied to wills, is unquestionably to arrive, if possible, at the intention of the testator; but the intention to be sought for is not that which existed in the mind of the testator, but that which is expressed by the language of the will. While, in attempting to construe a will, reference may be made to surrounding circumstances, for the purpose of determining the objects of the testator's bounty, or the subject of disposition, and, with that view, to place the court, so far as possible, where it may interpret the language used from the standpoint of the testator at the time he employed it, still the rule is inflexible that surrounding circumstances cannot be resorted to for the purpose of importing into the will any intention which is not there expressed.

On this subject, Mr. Jarman lays down the rule as follows: "As the law requires wills, of both real and personal estate (with an inconsiderable exception), to be in writing, it cannot, consistently with this doctrine, permit parol evidence to be adduced either to contradict, add to, or explain the contents of such will; and the principle of this rule evidently demands an inflexible adherence to it, even where the consequence is a partial or total failure of the testator's intended disposition; for it would have been of little avail to require the will ab origine should be in writing, or to fence a testator around with a guard of attesting witnesses, if, when the written instrument failed to make a full and explicit disclosure of his scheme of disposition, its deficiencies might be supplied, or its inaccuracies corrected, from extrinsic sources." 1 Jarman, Wills, 409.

This court has long been committed to this doctrine. This question arose and was carefully considered in Kurtz v. Hibner, 55 Ill. 514. There a devise to Elizabeth Kurtz described an 80-acre tract in section 32, and a devise to James Kurtz described a 40-acre tract in section 31. Proof was offered that the testator, at the time of his death, owned but one 80-acre tract, that being described precisely as was the devise to Elizabeth Kurtz, except that it was in section 33 instead of section 32; and also that the devisees had been in the actual possession of said tract for a number of years, and, upon the repeated promise of the testator in his lifetime that he would give her said tract, she had made valuable and lasting improvements thereon at her own expense. Evidence was also offered that James Kurtz, at the time of the death of the testator, was in actual possession of the 40-acre tract as the testator's tenant, and that the draughtsman of the will by mistake inserted the word "one" after the word "thirty," instead of the word "two," thus devising to James land in section 31 instead of section 32. This evidence was excluded, and this court, in sustaining said ruling, said: "The law requires that all wills of lands shall be in writing, and extrinsic evidence is never admissible to alter, detract from, or add to the terms of the will. To permit evidence, the effect of which would be to take from a will plain and unambiguous language, and insert other language in lieu thereof, would violate the foregoing well-established rule. For the purpose of determining the object of a testator's bounty, or the subject of disposition, parol evidence may be received, to enable the court to identify the person or thing intended. In this regard, the evidence offered afforded no aid to the court. The devise is certain both as to the object and subject. There are no two objects, no two subjects." The doctrine of this case has been repeatedly approved and reaffirmed in subsequent cases. Thus, in Starkweather v. American Bible Soc., 72 Ill. 50, it was said: "The courts are so strict that they will not permit the terms of a will to be altered, even when the deviser has, by mistake, misdescribed the land in a devise, by substituting that which could be clearly proved to have been intended." In Bishop v. Morgan, 83 Ill. 851, 25 Am. Rep. 827, the testator was the owner of 40 acres of land, being the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of a certain section, and by his will he devised to his son the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section, "containing 40 acres more or less;" and it was held, on the authority of Kurtz v. Hibner, supra, that the mistake in the description could not be corrected by reference to extrinsic evidence, and that such correction could not be made by reference to the words, "containing 40 acres, more or less," used in the will. See also Heslop v. Garton, 71 Ill. 528; Emmert v. Hays, 89 Ill. 11; Bowen v. Allen, 118 Ill. 53, 55 Am. Rep. 898; Bradley v. Rees, 118 Ill. 327, 55 Am. Rep. 422; Decker v. Decker, 121 Ill. 841, 10 West. Rep. 844.

We are aware that other courts whose opinions are entitled to the highest consideration have gone considerably further than we have been disposed to do in holding that mistakes of the character of the one presented here constitute cases of latent ambiguity which may be explained, and, in effect, corrected by extrinsic evidence. It cannot be denied that decisions which so hold are based upon reasons which are at least plausible, and, if the question were a new one in this state, we might feel disposed to give them serious attention. But the contrary rule has long been in force here, and has become a rule of property, and a change now by judicial construction, which must necessarily be given a retroactive operation, would have the effect of unsettling titles of very considerable value, which rest upon the rule which we have heretofore laid down. We must therefore adhere to our former decisions, although, in particular cases, the result may be to defeat the real intentions of testators, which, by mistake of those charged with drafting their wills, they have failed to adequately express.

But it is contended that the real intention of the testator in the present case, as shown by the extrinsic evidence, and his intention as expressed in the language of the devise, may be brought into harmony by rejecting a portion of the description of the land devised as repugnant, as was done in Decker v. Decker, supra. The rule of construction here referred to is the one indicated by the familiar maxim, falsa demonstratio non nocet, and is applicable alike to the construction of deeds and wills. As applied to deeds, it is explained by Mr. Tiedeman in his treatise on Real Property, as follows: "It is a general rule of construction that the deed should be so construed that the whole deed may stand and be enforced. If this is impossible, and the description contains several elements or descriptions, all of which are necessary to the identification of the property intended to be conveyed, the deed will be void if no property of the grantor can be found which will correspond with every part of the description. But if the intention, as gathered from the deed, does not make it necessary to satisfy all the elements of the description, or if parts of the description are inconsistent with the other parts, and enough of them are consistent to identify the property intended by the parties to pass, whatever is repugnant is rejected, and the deed is enforced under this construction." Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 829.

Doubtless if there were repugnant elements in the description employed in the devise in question, and if the description, after rejecting a repugnant element, were complete in itself, so as to accurately and sufficiently describe the land intended to be described, that rule of construction might be adopted. But we are unable to see, and the ingenuity of counsel has been unable to point out, any way in which that rule of construction can be applied, so as to work out the result sought to be attained. The description in the devise, as we have already seen, is in these words: "Seventy acres off of the south side of the north one half of the northwest quarter of section No. sixteen, township No. five, range No. six W. of the third principal meridian, county of Madison and State of Illinois." If it be admitted that there are repugnant elements in this description, it is impossible to see what repugnant element can be rejected so as to leave a description which will apply to the land which the appellant claims. If we reject the words "northwest quarter," or "northwest," or "north," what remains does not apply to the land in question. The difficulty of the description, as it appears in the devise, is that it substitutes "northwest" for "southwest," and the correction of the description, so as to make it apply to the right tract, requires, not only that one of these words should be stricken out, but that the other should be inserted. It involves more than construction; it requires reformation; and in this state, at least, courts of equity have persistently refused to entertain bills to reform wills.

We are of the opinion that the decrees was proper, and it will therefore be affirmed.

Theodore SONTAG et al., Plffs in Err.,
v.

Walter W BIGELOW et al.

(.....III.....)

1. A plaintiff in ejectment cannot rely

NOTE.—Parol partition to give legal title or color of title.

The novel questions presented above as to the effect of a parol partition to give legal title or color of title are more interesting than difficult. A contrary decision on either point would have been surprising. The system of written conveyances and records of land titles would be exceedingly faulty and very poor protection to purchasers if parol agreements could transfer legal title even between co-tenants.

It is different however as to the effect of adverse possession, since possession itself constitutes notice to third persons. In states where color of title is not essential to adverse possession, it would seem clear that a parol partition would be sufficient to initiate the adverse possession of co-tenants as against each other to the shares partitioned to 19 L. R. A.

upon a parol partition to establish his title.

2. A master's deed in partition proceedings is sufficient color of title upon which to found a claim to adverse possession notwithstanding the proceedings which led to the sale did not conform to the law.

3. A parol partition does not constitute color of title for the purpose of adverse possession against the co-tenant.

4. The mere receipt of rents and payment of taxes by a tenant in common is not a sufficient claim of adverse possession as against his co-tenant.

(June 18, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Monroe County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. Clay Horner and George L. Riess, for plaintiffs in error:

As the partition was only by parol, each one on the parol partition's consummation became seized of the legal title to one half of his lotment, and had only the equitable title to the other half. As an equitable title will not support ejectment (Barrett v. Hinckley, 12 West. Rep. 792, 124 Ill. 36), on their own showing, defendants in error would be entitled to judgment for only the undivided one half of the land sued for.

Gage v. Bissell, 8 West. Rep. 54, 119 Ill. 305; Shepard v. Rinks, 78 Ill. 191; Tomlin v. Hilyard, 43 Ill. 302, 92 Am. Dec. 118, and cases there cited as to effect of parol partition; Freem. Co-tenancy & Partition, § 397; Den v. Longstreet, 18 N. J. L. 405; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 71.

In order to support this declaration and judgment, they should have shown "in themselves a fee-simple title at law, as contradistinguished from an equitable fee."

Barrett v. Hinckley, supra.

The legal title remains unaffected by parol division.

Tomlin v. Hilyard, Gage v. Bissell, Shepard v. Rinks, and Den v. Longstreet, supra.

As to the payment of taxes relied on by the defendants in error, it is stated by the widow that her husband paid them until his death and she paid them afterward. The payment of taxes must concur with the color. The them respectively. To hold a parol partition sufficient for this purpose would be the logical effect of the principle by which such a partition when followed by actual possession is held valid as a defense or by way of estoppel.

For note on a conveyance by a co-tenant by metes and bounds, see Benedict v. Torrent (Mich.) 11 L. R. A. 278.

For the effect of an agreement upon a parol partition giving a right of one to enter on the other's portion and take a share of the fruit, see Taylor v. Millard, 6 L. R. A. 687, 118 N. Y. 244.

For notes on color of title, see Gage v. Hamilton (Ill.) 2 L. R. A. 512; Cramer v. Clow (Iowa) 9 L. R. A. 772.

For notes on adverse possession as between co-tenants, see Erok v. Church (Tenn.) 4 L. R. A. 645; Baker v. Oakwood (N. Y.) 10 L. R. A. 337. B. A. B.

color, to the extent it existed, was in the heirs after the father's death. It should have been paid by the heirs or their guardian. The mother is not the custodian of the heirs' estate; she has nothing to do with it.

Perry v. Carmichael, 95 Ill. 530; Holmes v. Field, 12 Ill. 428; Ravson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Chickering v. Pailles, 26 Ill. 507.

Messrs. Hartzell & Sprigg, for defendants in error:

A parol partition of lands between tenants in common, carried into effect by possession taken by each party of his share, is valid and binding on the parties thereto and on those claiming under them.

Tomlin v. Hilyari, 43 Ill. 300, 92 Am. Dec. 118; Gage v. Bissell, 8 West. Rep. 54, 119 Ill. 298; Shepard v. Rinks, 78 Ill. 188; Best v. Jinks, 18 West. Rep. 287, 123 Ill. 447.

As boundary lines can be settled by parol agreement, partition of lands can be so made by tenants in common, as title to land is involved in each instance.

Cutler v. Callison, 72 Ill. 118; Kerr v. Hitt, 75 Ill. 51; Bauer v. Gottmanhausen, 65 Ill. 499; McNamara v. Seaton, 83 Ill. 498; Bloomington v. Bloomington Cemetery Asso. 126 Ill. 221; Fisher v. Bennelhoff, 11 West. Rep. 82, 121 Ill. 426; Grim v. Murphy, 110 Ill. 271.

Color of title, acquired in good faith, and payment of taxes for seven successive years, accompanied with actual possession of the parties, as in this case, is a complete bar.

Bunchman v. Whetstone, 23 Ill. 185; Hale v. Gladfelder, 52 Ill. 91; Riverside Co. v. Townsend, 10 West. Rep. 578, 120 Ill. 9, Ang. Lim. § 331.

A right to land acquired by limitation is affirmative and can be enforced.

Fullin v. Hale, 40 Ill. 274.

The statute of seven years' limitation does not require that the possession under claim and color of title should be continued in one person; nor that the same person shall pay all the taxes for that period; taxes may be paid by the administrator, tenant, trustee of a cestui que trust, or by those having or succeeding to the possession.

Coffeld v. Furry, 19 Ill. 188; Chickering v. Fails, 38 Ill. 345.

Oraig, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of ejectment brought by Walter W. Bigelow and Martha Krueger, heirs-at-law of Walter Bigelow, Sr., deceased, against Theodore Sontag, to recover the W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 8 S., range 11 W., in Monroe county, containing fifty-eight acres. On a trial of the cause in the circuit court the plaintiffs recovered a judgment for the land described in the declaration, and the defendant sued out this writ of error. For the purpose of establishing title, plaintiffs read in evidence a deed dated December 1, 1853, from James Moore and wife to N. B. Harlow, conveying the S. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 8, range 11, Monroe county; also a deed dated January 7, 1857, from N. B. Harlow and wife to Alfred and Walter Bigelow, conveying the same land. The plaintiffs then called as a witness Mrs.

Means, who testified substantially as follows: "Walter Bigelow was my husband, and was the son of Alfred Bigelow, and was the father of plaintiffs. He died before this suit was begun, leaving Ellen and Martha and Walter Bigelow, his children and heirs. Ellen, the oldest, and Martha, were by a former wife. Walter is my child. Ellen is dead. Walter Bigelow, Sr., went into possession of this tract of land in 1857. He paid the taxes till he died, and I paid them after he died till 1868. I then moved to Missouri, and afterwards returned to Randolph county, Ill. Walter Bigelow, plaintiff, was born in 1862, April 15. Alfred Bigelow and Walter, Sr., divided this land shortly after buying from Harlow. I married Walter in 1861, after the land was divided. Walter took the west part, and Alfred took the east part. Walter built house, well, stable, and smokehouse on this land soon after land was bought, and cleared twenty-five acres. There was a dividing fence. Walter and his family occupied this land until 1868, and paid the taxes."

For the purpose, we presume, of proving that plaintiffs and defendant claim title through a common source, plaintiffs read in evidence the following deeds: A deed from Alfred and Walter Bigelow and wives to James Cann, of February 5, 1858, conveying S. E. corner of S. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 8, range 11, containing twenty-nine acres. Also, deed from James Cann to R. L. Bigelow, of October 4, 1858, for twenty-nine acres, in last deed. Also, deed from S. W. Means and wife to Joseph McGregor, of November 16, 1870, for S. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 8, range 11. Also, deed from J. Robinson and wife to R. L. Bigelow of February 6, 1868, for "our interest in" same land as last-mentioned deed. Also, deed from R. L. Bigelow and wife to N. B. Harlow, of August 15, 1863, for the twenty-nine acres bought by him from James Cann, (above); "also, the interest of the above-described land, heired by myself and wife; and also the interest deeded me by John Robinson and wife, being the interest of Alfred Bigelow's estate, being $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres, the last two interests; the whole tract containing 116 acres." Also, deed from Ezra Bigelow and wife to A. T. Cann, of April 26, 1865, for "all my interest in" said S. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$, etc. Also, deed from A. T. Cann and wife to B. F. Masterson, of April 6, 1866, for "all my interest in" said S. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$. "it being my interest, and that I purchased of Ezra Bigelow and wife, being $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres, more or less." Also, deed from N. B. Harlow and wife to B. F. Masterson, of November 4, 1865, for the lands deeded grantors by R. L. Bigelow, (see deed above.) Also deed from B. F. Masterson to Theodore Sontag, (defendant,) of March 1, 1867, for the following described premises: "twenty-nine acres in the southeast corner of the southwest fractional qr. of section No. 4, township No. three south, range No. eleven west, being the same conveyed to James U. Cann by Alfred Bigelow and others on the 15th day of February, 1858; also $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres on the above-described fractional section heired by R. L. Bigelow and John Robinson and wife in the estate of Alfred Bigelow, deceased; and also seven and $\frac{1}{2}$ acres more or less in the above-described fractional qr. of the above-described section heired by Ezra Bigelow and A. T. Cann in the estate of Alfred Bigelow, dec'd; the whole tract containing 116 acres."

It will be observed that the plaintiffs did not establish a chain of title from the United States, but the title under which they claim started with a deed from James Moore to Harlow, and this was followed by a deed from Harlow to Alfred and Walter Bigelow.

While these two conveyances did not establish title in Alfred and Walter Bigelow, they were, however, good color of title, which, if followed with seven successive years' possession, and payment of taxes, would ripen into title to the premises; and, as we understand the position of plaintiffs, this is what they rely upon to sustain the judgment. In order to establish title under the Act of 1839, three things are requisite: Color of title, seven years' possession of the premises, and seven successive years' payment of taxes by the person in whose name the color of title stands. It may be regarded as sufficiently established by the evidence that Walter Bigelow went into possession of the land in controversy in 1857. He continued in possession and paid all taxes until his death, the date of which is not shown. It occurred, however, before the seven years had expired. After his death, his widow and children remained in the possession of the premises, and paid all taxes until 1868, which would make seven years' possession and payment of taxes, and two or three years to spare. But the question arises whether Walter Bigelow and his heirs, while so in possession, and while paying the taxes, had color of title to the entire tract in controversy. Under the deed from Harlow to Alfred and Walter Bigelow, it is plain that Walter Bigelow acquired color of title only to the undivided half of the premises, and upon his death that only descended to his heirs, the plaintiffs, and it nowhere appears that he ever received any other deed of the premises, or any part thereof, from any person. But it is said that, after Alfred and Walter Bigelow received a deed from Harlow, they made a parol partition, under which Walter took the west half and Alfred the east half of the premises conveyed to them, and, under this parol partition, Walter became vested with the color of title to the west half.

It is no doubt true, as held in Tomlin v. Hilyard, 48 Ill. 301, 92 Am. Dec. 118, and the authorities there cited, that a parol partition between tenants in common, when followed by a possession in conformity therewith, will so far bind the possession as to give to each co-tenant the rights and incidents of an exclusive possession of his property. But can a parol partition be treated as a deed, and is it sufficient to pass the legal title or color of title, so as to authorize the party claiming under it to maintain ejectment? In the case last cited, it is said, 16 L. R. A.

while the legal title might not, perhaps, be considered as passing by such parol partition, unless after a possession sufficiently long to justify the presumption of a deed, yet the parol partition, followed by a several possession, would leave each co-tenant seised of the legal title of one half of his allotment, and the equitable title to the other half, and by a bill in chancery he could compel from his co-tenant a conveyance of the legal title according to the terms of the partition.

In Shepard v. Rinks, 78 Ill. 188, a parol partition was held to be binding on the parties, and a possession of premises under a partition of that character was held to be sufficient to defeat an action of ejectment.

In Best v. Jenks, 123 Ill. 447, 18 West. Rep. 281, in a proceeding for partition and assignment of dower, where a parol partition of a certain tract of land had been made between a brother and sister, which had been acquiesced in for a period of thirty five years, it was held that the sister was the owner of the portion allotted to her at her death, and that her husband was entitled to dower therein.

Washburn on Real Property, p. 385, lays down the rule that a parol partition cannot be effectual unless accompanied by deed, on the ground that the Statute of Frauds applies; but the author also says, where a parol partition is followed by a possession in conformity with such partition, it will so far bind the possession as to give each co-tenant the rights and incidents of an exclusive possession of his property. But without citing further authorities we think it is plain, where a parol partition has been made, and the premises occupied according to the partition by the respective parties, the partition will be valid, and such partition may be set up as a defense, should an action be brought to recover the possession, in violation of the parol partition and a bill in equity may be maintained to compel a deed. But in an action of ejectment the plaintiff must recover, if at all, on a legal title, not upon an equity; and we are aware of no case which goes so far as to hold that a plaintiff could treat a parol partition as a deed, and thus recover upon it in an action of ejectment. We entertain no doubt that plaintiffs might maintain a bill in equity for a deed, or, had they been in possession under the partition, they could have relied upon it as a defense; but having lost the possession, we do not think they can in ejectment rely upon a parol partition to establish their title to the premises involved. From what has been said, it follows that plaintiffs recovered the entire premises described in the declaration, when they were only entitled to recover an undivided half.

But it is insisted by the defendant that he established color of title, and possession and payment of taxes for seven successive years before the action was brought, and the title thus established was sufficient to defeat plaintiffs' action. The defendant first offered in evidence the deeds conveying the premises to him, which had been read in evidence by the plaintiffs. The defendant then offered in evidence: A patent from the United States to Porter, Glasgow, and Nervine of May 8, 1824, for W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 3, range 11, signed, "By the President J. M. G. G., Commissioner of the General Land Office." (Objected to because not properly signed. Objection sustained. Exception.) Also, deed from Glasgow and wife (one of patentees) to William Henckler, of April 8, 1878, for patent land above. Also, bill in chancery by Henckler against Porter and Nervine, the other patentees, and others, including defendants and Joseph McGregor, for partition of land in controversy. Decree of March 6, 1874, for partition sale. Also, deed of master in pursuance of said partition decree to defendant, Theodore Sontag, Sr., of April 27, 1874, for W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 3, range 11. The master's deed is relied upon as color of title. Whether the proceedings which led to the sale and execution of the master's deed conformed to the law or not was a question which would properly arise if the deed had been offered as title; but the proceedings, however defective, would not affect the deed as color of title. Mason v. Ayers, 73 Ill. 121; Hardin v. Gouverneur, 69 Ill. 140; Dickenson v. Breeden, 80 Ill. 826. In the last case cited, after referring to several decisions to establish what kind of an instrument constituted color of title, it was said: "The substance of these decisions is that any deed purporting on its face to convey title, no matter on what it may be founded, is color of title." Here the deed contained a grantor and grantee, and purported on its face to convey the land; and under the uniform decisions of this court, it constituted color of title. As to payment of taxes the defendant proved that he had paid for a period of at least ten years from 1875 to 1884, both years included. He also proved possession of the land during the same period.

But while the evidence established color of title, seven years' possession, and payment of taxes, we do not think the possession of the defendant was adverse; and upon that ground he cannot invoke the aid of the Statute of Limitations of 1839. As has been seen, Alfred Bigelow and Walter Bigelow were tenants in common, and on the 1st day of March, 1867, the defendant, Sontag, acquired the title originally held by Alfred Bigelow through deed from B. F. Masterson. Under this title, he went into the possession of the premises. On the trial in 1889, he testified that he had been in possession twenty or twenty-one years. From this testimony, it is manifest that the defendant went into the possession of the premises in 1868, the same year the plaintiffs moved away, and went in under the Bigelow title as he had no other title at that time. He therefore acquired possession of the premises as a tenant in common with the plaintiffs; and, occupying that position, he could not acquire color of title in 1874, and rely upon such title to defeat the plaintiffs. In 1 Washburn on Real Property, p. 656, the author, in speaking in reference to the possession of tenants in common, says: "But their possession being common, and each having a right to occupy, not only will such possession, though held by one alone, be presumed not to be adverse to his co-tenant, but it is ordinarily held to be for the latter's benefit, so far as preserving his title thereto; the possession of one tenant in common being deemed to be the possession of all." In Brown v. Hogle, 80 Ill. 119, it was held that it was fraud for a tenant in common to permit the land he holds in common with others to be sold for taxes, and he himself became the purchaser for his own benefit. In Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 844, this court held, where one tenant in common is in possession of land, it requires clear and satisfactory proof of a subsequent disseisin of a co-tenant to characterize his possession as being adverse, so as by lapse of time to bar a right of entry. It is not sufficient that he continues to occupy the premises, and appropriates to himself the exclusive rents and profits, makes slight improvements on the land, and pays the taxes. The same doctrine was announced in Ball v. Palmer, 81 Ill. 870. Here the defendant did nothing to apprise the plaintiffs that he was claiming to be the absolute owner of the entire premises, except to receive the rents and pay the taxes, which in the case last cited was held to be insufficient. Had the defendant before he went into the possession of the property, acquired title or color of title from a stranger, and entered, claiming the land under such title, then he might properly invoke the Statute of Limitations as a bar; but he does not occupy that position. He acquired the title of the heirs of Alfred Bigelow, who were tenants in common with plaintiffs, and entered into possession under such title, and so far as appears, never gave the plaintiffs notice that he was claiming under any other or different title.

16 L. R. A.

From what has been said, it follows that the decision of the court as to the defense of the Statute of Limitations was correct; but for the error indicated the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

John LARSON, Appt.,
v.
METROPOLITAN STREET R. CO., Respt.

(.....M.....)

1. One who employs a contractor to excavate for a building is not relieved of liability for the fall of a building on adjacent premises caused by digging a trench too long and deep alongside the wall by the fact that the work was done by a contractor where the contract stipulated that the employer's engineer should be in charge of the work, with power to order the discharge of men who refused to obey his orders and where by an authorized assistant he did in fact order the trench to be dug as it was dug.
2. One who promises the adjoining owner that in digging near the wall of the latter's building he will excavate and lay up his wall one section at a time, is liable for the fall of the building where after laying one section of his wall he causes the fall of the building by digging a long and dangerous trench without notice of his change of plan.

(Sherwood, Ch. J., and Gantt, J., dissent.)

(May 9, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the fall of plaintiff's building because of the alleged negligent removal by defendant of its lateral support. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gage, Ladd & Small, for appellant:

A proprietor who makes excavations in his own land, near the premises of his neighbor, in a careless and negligent manner, is liable in damages for injuries to the building of the adjoining owner, which were the consequence of his carelessness and negligence in the work of excavation.

Charles v. Rankin, 22 Mo. 566, 66 Am. Dec. 642; Stevenson v. Wallace, 27 Gratt. 89; Moody v. McClelland, 39 Ala. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 770; Myer v. Hobbs, 57 Ala. 177, 29 Am. Rep. 719; Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 269; Austin v. Hudson River R. Co. 25 N. Y. 384; Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 281, 29 Am. Rep. 243; McMillin v. Staples, 36 Iowa, 532; Dodd v. Holmes, 1 Ad. & El. 493; Foley v. Wyeth, 2 Allen, 181, 79 Am. Dec. 771; Washb. Easem. 4th ed. top p. 582 et seq., *430 et seq.; Thomp. Neg. 276; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. top p. 707, *595; Wood, Nuisances, 2d ed. §§ 189, 190.

Although work has been let to a contractor, this fact will not exonerate a party for whom the work is performed from liability for the negligent acts of the contractor, or his servants, if the right to control or direct the mode or manner of the work in any respect is retained, or if such control be in fact exercised, or such direction assumed.

Speed v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 303; New Orleans, M. & O. R. Co. v. Hanning, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 223; Heffernan v. Benkart, 1 Robt. 432; Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 457, 92 Am. Dec. 227; Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1011; Brophy v. Bartlett, 10 Cent. Rep. 709, 108 N. Y. 632; Jones v. Chantry, 4 Thomp. & C. 61; Whart. Neg. § 181.

It is not only unnecessary, but improper, to plead the evidence of the fact to be established.

It is sufficient in this state to state the act complained of, and allege that it was negligently done.

Under such allegation, all facts and circumstances tending to prove negligence are admissible.

McPheeters v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 45 Mo. 24; Kendig v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 79 Mo. 208; Mack v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 284; Crane v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 922, 87 Mo. 594; Goodwin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 75; Braxton v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 77 Mo. 455; Schneider v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 75 Mo. 296; Robertson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 84 Mo. 121; Judd v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 28 Mo. App. 61; Minter v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 83 Mo. 128.

Defendant failed to take the usual and ordinary precaution, and one imposed upon it by law, to give notice of its intention. The failure to take that precaution was one of the circumstances which made the digging and carrying away of the soil a negligent act.

Schultz v. Byers, 13 L. R. A. 569, 53 N. J. L. 442; Ulrich v. Dakota Loan & T. Co. (S. Dak.) Oct. 20, 1891.

Messrs. Pratt, Ferry & Hagerman for respondent.

Barclay, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff's case is for damages occasioned by the fall of a building, occupied by him as lessee of the Ackerson estate, in Kansas City, Mo. The gist of his petition is that "the defendant wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently dug out and carried away the soil immediately adjoining and under the west wall of said building, by means of which . . . the said west wall was made to fall, . . . thereby destroying and damaging the property of plaintiff therein contained . . . to the extent of $3,000."

The answer is a general denial. The circuit court forced plaintiff to a nonsuit, by giving an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence. It is therefore proper to outline the facts upon which plaintiff relies as constituting his cause of action. In so doing, he is entitled to the benefit of the most favorable view of his case that the evidence warrants, and of every reasonable inference therefrom. So viewed, the substance of his case is this: The plaintiff's building was a two-story brick, in which he carried on business. It stood two inches from the eastern boundary of defendant's property, and extended from the street line some seventy-two feet southward. The excavation to which the damage is ascribed was made upon defendant's lot, close along that boundary line. This line ran at a right angle to Ninth street, on which plaintiff's house fronted. Both the lots reached southward from the street 125 feet, to an alley. The defendant proposed erecting an engine house on its lot, and in prosecuting that purpose contracted in writing with a firm for the necessary excavating and masonry for the foundations. Some of the terms of that contract will be mentioned later. The contractors sublet the excavating to another, who began its performance, having a foreman there in charge of a number of workmen and teams. The defendant's chief engineer occasionally visited the work, but the actual superintendence, under the first contract mentioned, was mainly exercised by Mr. Butts, the engineer's assistant, who remained on the ground. The foreman of the digging party testified that the subcontractor placed him under the orders of Mr. Butts, and that the work was accordingly done as the latter directed. About the time the excavating began, plaintiff had an interview with Mr. Butts, in which he asked "if he thought it was not dangerous to be taking dirt away," (namely, from "alongside of the wall;") to which Mr. Butts replied that "there was not going to be any injury to the building. Of course, he was going to take it out in sections, and wall it up as they went along." Plaintiff says that that "kind of satisfied" him. The house fell about a week later. Plaintiff observed the work meanwhile. A trench some five feet wide and from seven to eleven feet deep was first dug, near defendant's east boundary line, from the street to a point about opposite the south end of plaintiff's building, some seventy-two or seventy-three feet. The foundation of the latter was at a depth of eleven feet from the natural surface. They then began at the street line, and carried the trench to a further depth of about two feet (a total depth of about thirteen feet) for a distance of twenty-five or thirty feet from the street. The concrete and footing stone of defendant's foundation wall were then laid in the space or section. Three days later, according to the testimony of the foreman of the excavators, Mr. Butts directed him to "take out the remainder of the ditch," and he proceeded to do so, excavating to the additional depth of twenty-four to twenty-six inches (to correspond with the level of the first section) along the entire building line opposite plaintiff's house, a stretch of forty odd feet from the end of the first section. Mr. Butts was present while this work was being done. The job was begun at half past 2 o'clock, and was finished about half past 5 o'clock of the same afternoon. That night, about 10 o'clock, a large part of plaintiff's building slipped into the excavation, on account, as it is claimed, of that removal of its lateral support; but that portion of the house which ruined was a two-story brick, in which he carried on business. It stood two inches from the eastern boundary of defendant's property, and extended from the street line some seventy-two feet southward. The excavation to which the damage is ascribed was made upon defendant's lot, close along that boundary line. This line ran at a right angle to Ninth street, on which plaintiff's house fronted. Both the lots reached southward from the street 125 feet, to an alley. The defendant proposed erecting an engine house on its lot, and in prosecuting that purpose contracted in writing with a firm for the necessary excavating and masonry for the foundations. Some of the terms of that contract will be mentioned later. The contractors sublet the excavating to another, who began its performance, having a foreman there in charge of a number of workmen and teams. The defendant's chief engineer occasionally visited the work, but the actual superintendence, under the first contract mentioned, was mainly exercised by Mr. Butts, the engineer's assistant, who remained on the ground. The foreman of the digging party testified that the subcontractor placed him under the orders of Mr. Butts, and that the work was accordingly done as the latter directed. About the time the excavating began, plaintiff had an interview with Mr. Butts, in which he asked "if he thought it was not dangerous to be taking dirt away," (namely, from "alongside of the wall;") to which Mr. Butts replied that "there was not going to be any injury to the building. Of course, he was going to take it out in sections, and wall it up as they went along." Plaintiff says that that "kind of satisfied" him. The house fell about a week later. Plaintiff observed the work meanwhile. A trench some five feet wide and from seven to eleven feet deep was first dug, near defendant's east boundary line, from the street to a point about opposite the south end of plaintiff's building, some seventy-two or seventy-three feet. The foundation of the latter was at a depth of eleven feet from the natural surface. They then began at the street line, and carried the trench to a further depth of about two feet (a total depth of about thirteen feet) for a distance of twenty-five or thirty feet from the street. The concrete and footing stone of defendant's foundation wall were then laid in the space or section. Three days later, according to the testimony of the foreman of the excavators, Mr. Butts directed him to "take out the remainder of the ditch," and he proceeded to do so, excavating to the additional depth of twenty-four to twenty-six inches (to correspond with the level of the first section) along the entire building line opposite plaintiff's house, a stretch of forty odd feet from the end of the first section. Mr. Butts was present while this work was being done. The job was begun at half past 2 o'clock, and was finished about half past 5 o'clock of the same afternoon. That night, about 10 o'clock, a large part of plaintiff's building slipped into the excavation, on account, as it is claimed, of that removal of its lateral support; but that portion of the house which

NOTE.—For note on the exceptions to the rule that an employer is not liable for acts of an independent contractor, see Hawver v. Whalen (Ohio) 14 L. R. A. 823.

For note on duty of owner in making excavations, see Schultz v. Byers (N. J. L.) 13 L. R. A. 569, 16 L. R. A.

See also 19 L. R. A. 240.

1. Before reaching the main issue, it will be well to dispose of a subordinate one, touching the responsible connection between defendant and the digging force, to whose acts the consequences complained of are ascribed. The defendant claims that those acts were done, in effect, by a contractor independent of its control, and that it is not liable on account thereof. It is now an accepted rule that supervision of such work may be retained without interfering with the independent action of liability of contractors who have engaged to perform it or subdivision of it; but in the case at bar the contract under which the work was done goes much further. It declares that "the excavation shall be carried to such general depth as may be indicated by the engineer. Excavations for the trenches and piers will be made as required from time to time in the progress of the work, and to such an extent as may be indicated by the engineer." Along with this language are statements that the engineer was "in charge of the work," and that men who refused or neglected to obey his orders were to be discharged by the contractors. Now, the very act complained of here is the digging of the trench too long and too deep in the circumstances. That act is charged as negligence. It was ordered by defendant's representative on the spot acting for the chief engineer who had express power to direct "by his authorized agents" as well as personally. The work was done precisely as ordered. Thus it was the exercise of the discretion or judgment vested in the supervising authority which caused the catastrophe; and for that exercise of judgment defendant must respond. Lancaster v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 460, 10 West. Rep. 409; Bower v. Peate, (1876) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 321.

2. The chief question in the case is to determine what duty towards plaintiff rested upon defendant in view of the facts. Very much has been written upon the right of lateral support and its limitations under the English law. It will not be necessary to restate the general principles governing that right. They were discussed very lucidly here years ago in Charles v. Rankin. (1856) 22 Mo. 573, 66 Am. Dec. 642, which remains a leading case on that subject. For present purposes it will suffice to say it is settled law that the unquestionable right of a landowner to remove the earth from his own premises, adjacent to another's building, is subject to the qualification that he shall use ordinary care to cause no unnecessary damage to his neighbor's property in so doing. We need not inquire how such a principle became ingrafted upon a system which traces its origin to the English common law; but that it is there is evidenced by abundant decisions, of which a few leaders, besides that above cited, may be mentioned: Foley v. Wyeth, (1861) 2 Allen, 131, 79 Am. Dec. 771; Austin v. Hudson River R. Co. (1862) 25 N. Y. 834; Quincy v. Jones, (1875) 76 Ill. 280, 29 Am. Rep. 243. The underlying principle of legal ethics on which this rule rests is well stated in Charles v. Rankin, above, to be that, "if a man, in the exercise of his own rights of property, do damage to his neighbor, he is liable if it might have been avoided by the use of reasonable care." The reports furnish many illustrations of its application, but we need not stop to emphasize the statement of it by references to them, since its force, in cases of this character, is now fully recognized. What is the standard of ordinary care which one excavating on his own estate must use to avoid damage to his neighbor's building, is a question of some difficulty. In many localities the subject is regulated by statutes defining the reciprocal rights of the parties. It may be stated generally, in the absence of a statutory rule, that the care required of a party so excavating is that of a man of ordinary prudence in the circumstances of the particular situation; but that statement affords meager aid in determining the exact duty imposed by the rule in its practical application to any given case. The fact is that the particular circumstances so largely shape and indicate the duty that any attempt to reduce the rule to greater certainty would probably tend to impede, rather than to promote, the administration of justice. Quite recently it has been definitely held, following supposed indications in earlier cases, that prior notice to the neighbor whose property may be endangered by an excavation is an essential part of the ordinary care referred to.—Schultz v. Byers, (1891) 53 N. J. L. 442, 18 L. R. A. 569; but that ruling was accompanied by a vigorous dissent, and can scarcely be considered as settling the point. It is not necessary to decide it in the case at bar, for it is here conceded that plaintiff had ample notice, in fact, of the intended excavation. He also had notice that it was to be made in a particular manner, namely, by removing the dirt "in sections," and walling "it up as they went along." The defendant's superintendent in charge so stated to him at the outset, when plaintiff suggested the danger of the undertaking; and the former, as a witness in the cause, did not deny the plaintiff's account of that interview. It was in evidence that that course was the one indicated by ordinary prudence, and by the uniform custom of builders in that locality, in view of the nature of the surrounding soil. But for that information as to the mode of excavation and construction to be pursued, the plaintiff might have taken effective steps to shore up and protect his building,—steps which were unnecessary if the work was done in sections. We think that plaintiff had the right to rely upon the statement of the superintendent, made during the progress of the work and of his agency, (and hence res gesta.) as to the care which defendant intended to exercise towards the property of plaintiff, with reference to which that statement was made. He had the right to assume that the course foretold would be followed, at least until he had notice to the contrary, and a reasonable opportunity thereafter to act upon such later notice. We have added this last observation to meet the suggestion of defendant that plaintiff was duly advised that the excavation was not being done in sections. But on this point it appears that one section was first built substantially as promised, and that the long and dangerous excavation later, to which the fall of the building is charged, occurred between half past 2 and 5 o'clock of the afternoon preceding the injury.

16 L. R. A.

On these facts the court cannot justly declare, as a conclusion of law, that plaintiff, in the exercise of reasonable care, was chargeable with notice that the plan of construction previously indicated by the superintendent was not to be followed, and should have taken measures of his own for the protection of his domicile. Nor do we think plaintiff's case concluded by the consideration that the removal of the earth in sections would have involved some additional outlay, and would have lessened, in some slight degree, the strength of its foundation wall. As to the latter fact, it is not claimed that the utility or value of the wall for the purpose of its construction would be in any wise impaired by the building in sections. As to the former fact of extra expense, we regard it immaterial, in view of the other evidence already alluded to, not to mention broader considerations bearing on that point. Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., (1883.) 50 Mich. 163. If defendant notified plaintiff that a certain mode of proceeding was to be pursued, and thus led him to act upon that hypothesis, and refrain from taking steps which would otherwise have been necessary and prudent to insure the safety of his property, the risk of injury to the plaintiff in the premises imposed on defendant the duty towards him of conforming to the plan of work of which it had advised him, or to reasonably notify him of a change in that plan in season to admit of his adopting protective measures of his own. The evidence tends to prove that no such evidence was given, and, in default thereof, the measure of reasonable and proper care on defendant's part, in the circumstances, was that indicated in the statement of the superintendent. As to whether the same measure of care would rest upon defendant in the absence of the peculiar facts here presented we are not called upon to say. In the view we take of the case, the fact that the promised course of construction involved a greater expense than some other one can have no material bearing on the rights of the parties. On the whole case we think it fairly a question of fact whether defendant exercised ordinary care in directing the excavation to be made as it did, in view of the circumstances mentioned, and whether the fall of the building was caused or contributed to by any want of such care. The trial court, we consider, erred in instructing to the contrary.

The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded. It is so ordered.

Black, Brace, MacFarlane, and Thomas, J.J., concur. Sherwood, Ch. J., and Gantt, J., dissent.

Sherwood, Ch. J., dissenting:

Action for damages growing out of the defendant company digging ditches or trenches for the foundations of an engine house, then in process of erection, upon its own lot 13, and along the western line of the building and lot which plaintiff occupied as lessee of the Ackerson estate, in consequence of which digging the west wall of the house—a two-story brick building—in which plaintiff lived, and which he used as a saloon, restaurant, and boarding house, fell, and in its fall carried with it other portions of the building, thereby damaging and destroying the personal property of plaintiff therein, and rendering the building untenable. The petition charges that “the defendant wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently dug and carried away the soil immediately adjoining and under the west wall of said building, by means of which,” etc. The building in question was built within one inch of the division line of the two lots, and had so stood for several years. The ditches for the east line of the engine house were dug quite close to the boundary line between the plaintiff's property and that of the defendant. The soil in the locality—the Missouri river bottom—is a mixture of sand and loam. In doing the work, a trench of sufficient depth and width for the proposed foundation was wholly dug upon respondent's lot near the east line thereof. The trench was first dug out by Collins and his men for a distance of twenty-five feet. The original contractors filled up this space with stone masonry work. Three days thereafter the subcontractor started to dig the remainder of the trench on the east side of the lot, and the night of the day this work was finished the Ackerson building fell and plaintiff's property therein was injured thereby. The evidence shows that the soil of lot 14, in its natural condition, without the additional weight of the Ackerson building, would not have fallen. And the testimony also shows that, so far as the mere fact of excavating was concerned, it was done in the proper way; but, had the work been done in sections, the injury would not have occurred. By doing the work in sections is meant that the excavators would dig 16 feet or less in length of the trench, and then, before proceeding further, wait till the stone masons had walled up that portion of the excavation, and so continue till the work was completed. To have done the work in sections would have increased the cost from 20 to 30 per cent, and would have weakened the foundation. This increased expense would fall upon the contractor. The testimony also shows that the trenches for the foundation were dug to the depth of some thirteen feet, and five feet in width; and the first section of the trench, some twenty-five feet, running backward from Ninth street and along the boundary line, was at once filled in with concrete and footing stones, to a point just below the lower level of the adjoining foundation; but the Ackerson building, when it fell, did not fall beyond the south end of these footing stones of the new foundation wall.

At the close of the testimony the court instructed the jury that upon the pleadings and evidence the plaintiff could not recover, and this action of the court resulted in the plaintiff taking a nonsuit, with leave, etc. The correctness of the instruction thus given to the jury is the only question necessary for consideration, and this involves the salient question in this cause,—whether the plaintiff was guilty of actionable negligence in the circumstances stated. On the point in hand an eminent text-writer observes: “Of a nature somewhat akin to the easement of light connected with the ownership of a house is that of support, or the right of having one's land and the structures erected thereon supported by the land of a neighboring proprietor. The proposition may be stated thus: A, owning a piece of land without any buildings upon it, has a natural right of lateral support for his land from the adjoining land. This right exists independent of grant or prescription, and is also an absolute right; so that, if his neighbor excavates the adjoining land, and in consequence A's land falls, he may have an action, although A's excavation was not carelessly or unskillfully performed. This natural right does not extend to any buildings A may place upon his land; and therefore, if A builds his house upon the verge of his own land, he does not thereby acquire the right to have it derive its support from the land adjoining it until it shall have stood and had the advantage of such support for twenty years. In the meantime such adjacent owner may excavate his own land for such purposes as he sees fit, provided he does not dig carelessly or recklessly; and if, in so doing, the adjacent earth gives way, and the house falls by reason of the additional weight thereby placed upon the natural soil, the owner of the house is without remedy. It was his own folly to place it there. But if it shall have stood for twenty years with the knowledge of the adjacent proprietor, it acquires the easement of a support in the adjacent soil. . . . But this right of a land-owner to support his land against that of the adjacent owner does not, as before stated, extend to the support of any additional weight or structure that he may place thereon. If, therefore, a man erect a house upon his own land, so near the boundary line thereof as to be injured by the adjacent owner excavating his land in a proper manner, and so as not to have caused the soil of the adjacent parcel to fall if it had not been loaded with an additional weight, it would be damnum absque injuria,—a loss for which the person so excavating the land would not be responsible in damages." 2 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. pp. 380-382, and cases cited. In 2 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, 4th ed. § 701, it is stated: "In exercising his rights over his land, the owner is bound to use ordinary care and skill for the purpose of avoiding injury to his neighbor. Thus, while, as a general rule, he is not bound to continue the support which his land gives to a structure upon, or other artificial arrangement of, adjoining land, and is, therefore, not liable for the natural consequences of his withdrawing this support, yet in doing so he must act with such care and caution that (as nearly as by reasonable exertion it is possible to secure such a result) his neighbor shall suffer no more injury than would have accrued if the structure had been put where it is without ever having had the support of his land. One who digs away land which affords support to an adjoining house ought to give the owner reasonable notice of his intention to do so, and he must allow the latter all reasonable facilities for obtaining artificial support, including a temporary privilege of shoring up the house by supports based upon the former owner's land;" and in the next preceding section the rule is laid down that "it is not, therefore necessarily negligence on the part of a landowner to make a use of his land which inevitably produces loss to his neighbor; for, as he may willfully adopt such a course, and yet not be a wrongdoer, much less is he liable for unintentionally doing that which he has a right to do intentionally." In another approved writer on negligence it is stated: "But, whatever may be the right of one landowner to excavate his own soil so as to deprive his neighbor's land of its support, the authorities are agreed that he must exercise what care and skill he can to prevent injury to his neighbor, and if he inflict an unnecessary injury upon his neighbor through negligence, he must pay the damages. Thus the authorities are agreed that one who proposes to excavate, or make other alterations or improvements upon his own land, which may endanger the land or house of his neighbor, is bound to give the latter reasonable notice of what he proposes to do, to enable him to take the necessary measures for the preservation of his own property. But, after giving such notice, he is bound only to reasonable and ordinary care in the prosecution of the work. Where the excavation was of itself lawful, and the gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint was that it was unskillfully done, it was held incumbent on the plaintiff to show negligence by other proof than by the mere fact that the walls of his house cracked and gave way. In the view of the court so deciding, this was not a case for the application of the rule res ipsa loquitur. . . . If the owner of a house, in a compact town finds it necessary to pull it down and remove the foundation of his building, and he gives notice of his intention to the owner of the adjoining house, he is not answerable for the injury which the owner of that house may sustain by the operation, provided he removes his own with reasonable and ordinary care." 1 Thomp. Neg. 276, 278.

The court of appeals of Kentucky says: "The proprietor making the excavation cannot be charged with damages for negligence because he failed to shore up his neighbor's house in a case where the latter has no right of support in the nature of an easement by grant or prescription. In such case his neighbor must shore up his own house." Shrieve v. Stokes, 8 B. Mon. 453, 48 Am. Dec. 401. And there is no obligation on the part of the owner of a building about to be removed to shore up the other buildings. Goddard, Easem. (Bennet's ed.) pp. 43, 44. In Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 268, the same doctrine is distinctly recognized,—that, proper notice being given to the owner of a building on an adjacent lot, it is the duty of the latter, on receiving such notice, to shore up his own building. In Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169, 3 L. ed. 390, the same principle finds recognition. To the same effect, see Peyton v. London, 9 Barn. & C. 725, and other English cases, and 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg., supra, § 701. And the duty of the owner of a building on an adjacent lot which may probably be imperiled by the digging for a foundation on his neighbor's lot, to protect his building, is stated to begin after he has been notified of the intended improvement, and given an opportunity to protect his own interests. But if he has personal knowledge of the progress of the intended improvement, this is tantamount to notice. This is the doctrine, also, of this court in Charles v. Rankin, 22 Mo. 566, 66 Am. Dec. 642.

These cases have been cited and quotations made from them as preliminary to the present investigation. Let us proceed to apply the result of these authorities to the facts in the case at bar. That the plaintiff was aware of the excavation going on, living as he did in the house which fell, and watching the excavation, cannot be questioned; and such actual knowledge has been held to countervail and overthrow the effect of notice when given even under an Act of parliament, and before the time specified in the notice had expired. Peyton v. London, supra. In that case, having such actual knowledge that the adjoining building was being pulled down, it was ruled that it was the duty of the plaintiffs to shore up their building by supports within that building, and, they having failed to do this, a nonsuit was directed; and this was so ruled notwithstanding that the adjoining house, whose removal caused the litigation, had been supported by struts, and that these struts were removed when the house was torn down, it not appearing that any peculiar right or servitude had been acquired by the plaintiffs over the adjoining house or property. The authorities cited also teach the doctrine that ordinary care is the measure of a man's liability, when excavating upon his own lot, which adjoins that of his neighbor, on which a building stands. Such improving owner, assuming that notice of the intended excavation has been given, or that knowledge of it exists, is only responsible for actual or positive negligence in the manner of digging for the foundations of his proposed building. So long as he does not dig carelessly or recklessly, he is free from liability, let the consequences be what they will. 2 Washb. Real Prop. supra. And as the plaintiff here was fully cognizant of what was going on, he was bound properly to shore up, support, or protect his own building against any probable danger. It was his clear duty, under the authorities and upon the evidence, for him to do this. As it was the plaintiff's duty to protect his own property from destruction, it is clear that a concurrent duty to protect the same property could not exist as against the defendant. The bare statement of such a premise announces its own conclusion. But as the measure of the defendant's care was only ordinary care, it did not belong to him, nor was it required of him to use the same care that a prudent man would exercise in similar circumstances. Such a standard of care was held too high a one on the part of an excavating proprietor in Charles v. Rankin, supra. And that case is also authority for the assertion that the owner of the servient tenement owes no duty to the adjoining proprietor to guard the interests of his neighbor, as he would do as the prudent owner of both properties; that he was not bound, for illustration, to go to an increased expense in the progress of excavation, by building his foundation wall in sections, nor to weaken that wall by such a course, and that a failure thus to build and thus to endanger the wall was not negligence. Applying these principles to this case, it becomes wholly immaterial whether or not a representative of the defendant company gave assurances to the plaintiff that he would build the remainder of the wall in sections. Such promise or assurance, if it were not the duty of that company, was but a nuda pact, made without either duty to create, or consideration to support it, and therefore not obligatory on the defendant company, even granting that the party making such promise was in reality the representative of the company. Besides, even after the promise was made, the plaintiff was present, and knew that the promise as to building in sections was not performed, but making no effort to protect his property. In any event, this action is not brought because of any negligent failure of the defendant company to build the wall in sections, or to notify the plaintiff. The very gravamen of the action is the mere negligent manner in which the trenches for the foundations were dug. On such a statement, negligence in any other regard obviously would be excluded. Peyton v. London, supra; Waldhier v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 514; Reed v. Bott, 100 Mo. 62. The judgment should be affirmed.

The foregoing opinion was filed by me in division No. 1 of this court, and I still adhere to the conclusions of fact and of law therein announced. The authorities I have cited fully sustain the positions I have taken, and especially is this true of Peyton v. London, supra, on the question of pleading, in which the opinion was delivered by Lord Tenterden, Ch. J. I am content to err, if err I do, in such good company. Gantt, J., concurs in this dissent.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

James E. GLASS et al., Plffs.,
v.

Nels A. FREEBURG et al., Respts.,

and

Charles K. FULTON et al., Appts.

(.....Minn.....)

Where a building is constructed under one entire contract between the owner and

Head note by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—Relation back of subcontractor's lien to the date of that of original contractor.

Whether or not the subcontractor's lien will relate back so as to become effective from the date when that of the principal contractor attaches depends almost exclusively on the wording of the particular statute under which it is claimed.

Where the statute makes the mechanics' lien effective from the time work on the building is commenced the tendency of the courts is to hold that all liens including those of subcontractors become effective at that time regardless of when the work was done or the material furnished.

Thus, in Montana, mechanics' liens have priority over all other incumbrances put upon the property 16 L. R. A.

the original contractor, the liens of all subcontractors, who furnished material or performed labor for the building at any time during the process of construction attach, by relation, as of the date of the commencement of the work, and are entitled to a preference over a mortgage on the premises, executed by the owner subsequent to that date.

(July 7, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendants, Charles K. Fulton et al., from a judgment of the District after the commencement of the building. Davis v. Bisland, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 659, 21 L. ed. 969.

The language of the statute there is that such liens "shall be prior to, and have precedence over, any mortgage made subsequent to the commencement of work on any contract for the erection of the building," and this is held to carry the lien of the subcontractor back to the date of the commencement of the building, although it is conceded that the rule might be otherwise if the statutes read "subsequent to the commencement of the work," as in some other states. Merrigan v. English, 5 L. R. A. 397, 9 Mont. 113.

The lien of a subcontractor relates back to the date of the commencement of the erection of a Court for Hennepin County postponing their claim to a mechanics' lien on certain real estate, to the lien of a prior mortgage which had been filed after work on the building had been commenced. Modified.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Wilkinson & Traxler for appellants.

Mr. George D. Emery for respondent Pioneer Savings & Loan Co.

Mr. Edson S. Gaylord for defendant Freeburg.

Messrs. Gray & Pulliam for defendants Henry Yost et al.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Counsel for the respondent building association claims that the correct construction of the findings of the trial court is that Nels A. Freeburg, was merely the agent of Olaf A. Freeburg, and as such contracted in the name and behalf of his principal for material and labor for the construction of the buildings referred to. We do not concur with this view. We think the findings are clearly to the effect that Olaf, as owner of the premises, contracted with Nels for the erection by the latter of the buildings, and that the latter, as principal and in his own behalf, purchased and contracted for the material and labor for the construction of the same and that when the court described him as the "agent" (as well as the contractor) of Olaf, "with authority and power to contract for labor and material for the construction of the buildings," it had reference merely to the legal principle upon which it is held that a contractor has authority to charge the land of the owner with debts for labor and material incurred by him in performing his contract. See O'Neil v. St. Olaf's School, 26 Minn. 329; Laird v. Moonan, 32 Minn. 358; Meyer v. Berlandt, 39 Minn. 438; Bardwell v. Mann, 46 Minn. 285.

According to the findings we have, then, this state of facts: The owner of land made one entire contract with another for the erection thereon by the latter of certain buildings; that in the performance of his contract the contractor purchased from plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs furnished to him, certain material for the construction of such buildings on May 17, 1890, so that it must be taken as a fact that the actual work of the construction of the buildings was commenced as early as that date; that subsequently, and while the work was in progress, the owner of the premises executed a mortgage thereon to the respondent building association; that after this mortgage had been executed and recorded, and while the work was still in progress, the appellant, the Fulton & Libby Company, furnished to the original contractor certain material for the construction of the buildings in question. So far as appears, and presumably, the erection of the buildings was one continuous job performed under the original contract between the owner and the original contractor. The original contractor never filed any claim for a lien, but the appellant, not having received its pay, seasonably filed its claim for a lien for the material thus furnished to the contractor.

The sole question on this appeal is whether the lien of the appellant is entitled to a preference over the mortgage of the building association. This question has never before been presented for our consideration.

In Finlayson v. Oroske, 47 Minn. 74, each of the liens arose under a separate and independent contract by the claimant directly with the owner of the property. Moreover, the question of priority between the mortgagee and the lien claimants was not raised.

In Hill v. Aldrich (Minn.) 50 N. W. Rep. 1020, the rights of subcontractors were not involved, and it also appeared that the mortgage was executed and recorded before anything had been done towards the construction of the building.

In Haupt Lumber Co. v. Westman (Minn.) 52 N. W. Rep. 33, the original contractor had not commenced performance of his contract when the mortgage was executed, but it was intimated that possibly a different result might have been reached had the work of the construction of the buildings been commenced before the execution of the mortgage.

We have had occasion recently to refer to the fact that the Mechanics' Lien Law fails building the work upon which has been continuous and has priority over a mortgage placed upon the property after the work was begun. Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Borman, 2 West. Rep. 434, 19 Mo. App. 664.

Although it has been previously held that under the Missouri law relating to St. Louis County, the lien attaches in favor of the subcontractor at the time of performing the work or furnishing the material for which it is claimed. Kuhleman v. Schuler, 35 Mo. 144.

In Denkel's Estate, 1 Pearson, 213, it is stated that claims of all mechanics and materialmen commence at the date of the first stroke of the axe or spade used in making the house, without regard to the time of their being filed or to the doing of the work or furnishing material.

Mellor v. Valentine, 3 Colo. 250, also seems to recognize the rule that the lien relates back to the time the work was commenced or the first of the material furnished.

As intimated above the language of the statute 16 L. R. A.

would change this rule and consequently a different rule is found in other jurisdictions, and the rule has been changed at times in the same state when a change has been made in the language of the statute. Thus an early California case held that the subcontractor's lien attaches at the time of service of notice on the owner. Cahoon v. Levy, 6 Cal. 295, 65 Am. Dec. 515.

But a later case held that the lien relates back to the time the work commenced. Tuttle v. Montford, 7 Cal. 360.

And the authority of Cahoon v. Levy, supra, is apparently recognized again in the later case of Brennan v. Mars, 10 Cal. 435.

Under the Act of 1863 if there is no written contract for the construction of the building the liens do not relate back to the commencement of the building, but each lien takes effect on the day when the particular labor was commenced for which it is claimed. Barber v. Reynolds, 44 Cal. 520. See also Germania Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Wagner, 61 Cal. 355.

H. P. F.

to make any express provision with reference to cases where a mortgage or other incumbrance is placed on the premises after the work of construction has been actually commenced. But we have arrived at the conclusion that, even in the absence of any express provision on the subject, upon certain general equitable principles, and also as a necessary implication from certain provisions of the statute that are expressed, the appellant's lien is entitled to a preference over that of the mortgage. The lien of the original contractor for the entire building, if he had claimed one, would have been held to have attached at the date of the actual commencement of the work or of the furnishing the first material, and no subsequent sale or incumbrance of the land by the owner would have affected this right, and any party purchasing or taking an incumbrance on the property while the buildings were thus in process of erection would have done so subject to it. The contract for the erection of the buildings being an entirety, the contractor, notwithstanding the mortgage to the building association, had a right to go on and finish them, and to insist on the priority of his lien for his entire pay over the lien of the mortgage. A subcontractor comes in by reason of his direct contract relation to the contractor, and the right of lien of the former for his claim is pro tanto, in a certain sense, substitutionary to that of the latter, and by relation is deemed to have attached at the date when the lien of the original contractor attached. The whole work, being done in the performance of one entire contract with the owner, is to be deemed a unit, whether done directly by the contractor himself or by subcontractors, and all liens therefor, without regard to the time in the progress of the work when the labor was done or the material furnished, are co-ordinate, and all attach by relation as of the date of the commencement of the work. The authority of the contractor to charge the land for the purposes of the contract is co-extensive with the necessities of the building, and continues until it is finished, and the commencement of the building is notice to all the world of the existence of the power. Everyone dealing with the property has the means, by ocular examination, of ascertaining whether work has been commenced or materials furnished on the ground. The fact that buildings are in process of erection on premises charges everyone with notice of the rights of the parties doing the work. If a building is being erected under a contract with the owner, any one dealing with the property is bound to take notice of the fact that labor and material for the completion of the building will be required, and that those who perform or furnish it will, under the law, be entitled to a lien therefor; and if they see fit to take a mortgage under such circumstances they assume the risk of its being subordinated to all liens which may attach to the premises for labor or material for the completion of the building in accordance with the contract under which it is being erected. This rule is almost necessarily implied from the provisions of section 10 of the statute regulating the enforcement of such liens as between the contractor and the subcontractors and as between the subcontractors themselves. The incongruities and confusion that would arise in attempting to carry out these provisions upon any other theory will be apparent on a moment's reflection, as, for example, where a lien is given to the contractor as well as to subcontractors, or where, after judgment, the contractor pays off the subcontractors and is subrogated to their rights. Our conclusion is that appellant's lien is entitled to a preference over respondents' mortgage. The cause is remanded, with directions to modify the judgment accordingly.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

JACKSONVILLE, TAMPA & KEY WEST
R. CO., Appt.,

v.

Joseph GALVIN.

(.....Fla.....)

*1. A declaration against a railroad corporation, alleging that the defendant company unsafely and negligently loaded a certain car upon its railroad with railroad iron so that the bars projected a considerable distance over the end of said car, and that it was negligently accepted by defendant company for transportation when in an unsafe condition, and unfit for the purpose of coupling, which was known to defendant, but of which plaintiff, a brakeman employed on defendant's train to couple cars, was ignorant, and by due care could not have known, and by means whereof said plaintiff was injured while attempting to couple said car, is not amenable to a demurrer, on the ground that the injury was caused by the acts of fellow-servants of plaintiff.

2. A brakeman employed by a railroad company to couple cars on its railroad assumes the hazards of the ordinary perils which are incidental to such employment, and in a suit by such brakeman against the company to recover damage for injuries received in attempting to couple cars on account of alleged negligence in loading a car to be

*Head notes by MARRY, J.

NOTE.—In addition to the cases discussed in the opinion which directly touch the subject of a brakeman's assumption of the risks of projecting timbers or other articles over the ends of a loaded car, we call attention to the following notes on the general subject of assumption of risks by employees.
16 L. R. A.

Pidcock v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Utah) 1 L. R. A. 181;
Foley v. Pettee Mach. Works (Mass.) 4 L. R. A. 51;
Howard v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (Vt.), 6 L. R. A. 75.

See also the case next following this one in which on a similar state of facts an opposite conclusion was reached.

coupled, and in negligently accepting a car to be coupled, when the same was in an unsafe condition, a charge of the court to the jury that excludes the right to consider such a coupling as coming within the ordinary hazards and risks of his employment is erroneous.

3. The instructions of the court must be confined to the issues made by the pleading, and it is error for the trial court to instruct the jury that they may base their verdict in favor of plaintiff upon a cause of action however meritorious or satisfactorily proved, that is substantially different from that which he has alleged.

(May 28, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Duval County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Mabry, J.:

The appellee, Galvin, sued the appellant, a railroad corporation, in the Duval circuit court, for personal injuries received by the alleged negligence of said corporation. The allegations of the declaration, as to the cause of action, are as follows: "That the plaintiff (appellee here) was employed by the defendant (appellant) as brakeman, to couple cars for the defendant upon its said railway, and upon the 26th day of November, 1885, at Palatka, in Putnam county, said state, on defendant's said railway being so employed, a certain one of said cars was coupled, or attempted to be coupled, by plaintiff, which, by the negligence and default of defendant, had been loaded unsafely and negligently, and was so received and accepted by defendant for coupling and transportation, and was in an unsafe condition and unfit for the purpose of coupling, which the defendant well knew, but of which the plaintiff was ignorant, and by due care could not have known, and by reason of the premises, whilst the plaintiff was so employed as such brakeman as aforesaid upon said railway at said place, defendant's railroad locomotive engine and train of cars attached thereto, driven and conducted by its servants, was driven to said car to be coupled thereto when the said car so negligently and unsafely loaded as aforesaid, being so negligently and unsafely loaded with railroad iron that the bars projected a considerable distance over the end of said car, thereby leaving so little space between said car sought to be coupled, and the engine and train of cars to which said car was sought to be coupled, that plaintiff was mashed and squeezed between said cars, so sought to be coupled, and said engine and train of cars attached thereto, to which said car was sought to be coupled, and his collar-bone was broken, and one of his hands broken and he was permanently injured and rendered unfit for work, to the damage of plaintiff of $10,000, and therefore he brings suit and claims damages in the sum $10,000." The summons was served upon the superintendent of the defendant company in Duval county, Florida.

The railroad corporation interposed a demurrer to the declaration on the ground that the alleged injury was caused by the acts of fellow-servants of plaintiff, and for which defendant corporation is not liable. The demurrer was overruled, and said defendant plead the general issue, that the alleged injury was caused by the acts of fellow-servants, and that plaintiff by his own carelessness and negligence contributed to said injuries. A trial of the cause resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff below for $2,472, from which an appeal is prosecuted to this court.

The other facts of the case sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. R. Parrot for appellant.

Mr. Frank W. Pope for appellee.

Mabry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first error assigned is the overruling of defendant's demurrer to the declaration. There is no error in the decision of the court overruling this demurrer. The declaration in substance alleges that the defendant corporation unsafely and negligently loaded a certain car upon its railroad with railroad iron so that the bars projected a considerable distance over the end of said car, and that defendant negligently received and accepted said car for coupling and transportation; that said car was in an unsafe condition and unfit for the purpose of coupling, which was well known to said defendant, but of which the plaintiff was ignorant, and by due care could not have known; that plaintiff was employed by defendant to couple cars on its road, and while so employed, at Palatka, in Putnam county, Florida, on the 26th day of November, 1885, coupled, or attempted to couple, said car so negligently and unsafely loaded, and received and accepted by defendant for coupling and transportation; that defendant's locomotive engine, with a train of cars attached thereto, was driven by its servants to said loaded car to be coupled, and that the projection of said railroad iron over the end of said car left so little space between the said car sought to be coupled, and the train of cars attached to the said engine that plaintiff was mashed between said cars and received the alleged injuries. The allegation is that the defendant corporation negligently loaded the car in the manner specified, and negligently accepted it for coupling and transportation when in an unsafe condition, and that in consequence thereof plaintiff was damaged.

The defendant cannot under a demurrer to this declaration avail itself of an exemption from liability on the ground that it is not chargeable with the acts of plaintiff's fellow-servants. The declaration does not disclose what class of servants of defendant performed the acts alleged to have caused the injury. The averment is that the defendant loaded and accepted the car, and not only so, but it is alleged that the defendant negligently loaded and accepted the car for coupling and transportation. The demurrer admits these allegations to be true, and if true, they show a cause of action against the defendant. The demurrer was properly overruled.

Various assignments of error are predicated upon exceptions taken to instructions given for plaintiff, and refused to defendant in the trial court. Before considering these assignments of error we will refer to the testimony on the point of defendant's liability. The plaintiff, at the time of the accident, was employed by the defendant company as brakeman on one of its freight trains. His account of the occurrence is as follows: "On November 26 we were backing down on the side track to get at a car of iron. They gave me the keys and told me to get out that car, and just as he gave me the keys he said 'I will go myself.' I was on one side and he on the other side; we both came down to the switch, and when we came to the switch I jumped off to let the engine in, and we went back by the main line and against the car to couple on. He halloosed to the engineer to come back, and the engineer came back very carefully, but being dark I could not see at all till I got up to the car. When I got up to the car, it came back and crushed me down and I did not know anything more."

